

PERIODICAL

ML5
.M85

V-62
1921

M

No. 935

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1921

Price 6d.

4041.230

Jan 15 1921

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player-Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON · FORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON FOLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON.

PIANOS

BY

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

ALSO

12, Park Row,
LEEDS,

And Branches.

CECILIAN HOUSE.

· 65 · Wigmore Street ·

· LONDON · W.1.

LTD.

Pianos by the World's Best Makers.

“NEW PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID” FOR GRAND PIANOS.

We have already converted over 900 Grand Pianos with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

FOUNDED
1837.
—
AGENTS
THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
—
GRANDS-UPRIGHTS.

AWARDS for Good Tone:

LONDON - - - 1861
PARIS - - - 1867
LIMA - - - 1872
CHRISTCHURCH,
N.Z. 1882
LONDON - - - 1886

PLAYER-PIANOS.

SHOWROOMS:

ALLISON PIANO FACTORY, LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, LONDON, N.W.5

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,

OXFORD STREET,

LONDON, W. 1.

AN IMPORTANT NEW EDUCATIONAL WORK.

101 ORIGINAL STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

G. H. CLUTSAM

Book I. - Nos. 1 to 32

„ II. - „ 33 „ 66

Book III. - Nos. 67 to 92

„ IV. - „ 93 „ 101

PRICE 2/6 NET EACH BOOK.

ENGLISH OR CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

Copyright 1920 by Metzler & Co. (1909), Ltd.

---

THE MUSICAL TIMES

---

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844.

---

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1921

---

VOLUME LXII.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED,
160, WARDOUR STREET, W. 1
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

---

1921

6379

INDEX FOR 1921

MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
The Roseate Hues of Early Dawn (Anthem)	Hugh Blair 935	I will sing unto the Lord (Anthem) ...	Sir John Goss 942
O Sons and Daughters, let us sing (Anthem)	H. A. Chambers 936	Jesus shall reign (Anthem). Adapted to the War Hymn-Anthem "Save them, O Lord" ...	Ferris Tozer 943
Prevent us, O Lord (Anthem) ...	George Rathbone 937	O lovely voices of the sky (Unaccompanied Carol, S.A.T.B.) ...	Cuthbert Harris 945
Let the people praise Thee (Anthem) ...	A. Herbert Brewer 939	God be in my Head (Anthem) ...	R. Walker Robson 946
Very Bread, good Shepherd, tend us (Anthem) ...	Stanley Marchant 940

SECULAR

	No.		No.
Diaphenia (Part-song) ...	John Gerrard Williams 938	I would I were the Glow-worm (Set to "The Londonderry Air" and arranged, S.A.T.B.) ...	Harold Rhodes 944
Fain would I change that note (Unaccompanied four-part song) ...	John Ireland 941

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS.—MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
The strife is o'er (Anthem) ...	George Rathbone 936	Arise, shine, for Thy Light is come (Anthem) ...	H. A. Chambers 945
Peace I leave with you (Anthem for Tenor solo and Chorus) ...	J. Varley Roberts 938	The coming of Christmas (Carol) ...	Sir Frederick Bridge 945
Thus saith the Lord God (Harvest Anthem) ...	George C. Martin 941	Welcome Yule (Ancient Carol, 15th Century) ...	C. Hubert Parry 946
The eyes of all wait upon Thee (Anthem)	J. Barnby 942	This Day (Unaccompanied Carol) ...	John Gerrard Williams 946
		I sing the Birth was born to-night ...	Thomas Adams 946

SECULAR

	No.		No.
London Town (Four-part song) ...	Edward German 935	O Lovely May (Trio for Female Voices)	Edward German 940
Johnnie Cope (Scottish four-part song)...	E. T. Sweeting 937	March of the Cameron Men (Unaccompanied four-part song) ...	Granville Bantock 943
Bushes and Briars (Essex Folk-Song, T.T.B.B.) ...	R. Varghan Williams 937	Orpheus with his Lute (Four-part song)	Edward German 944
Dream-Love (Four-part song) ...	Percy E. Fletcher 939

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

	No.		No.
Gervase Elwes ...	936	Haydn Keeton ...	941

ILLUSTRATIONS, PORTRAITS, ETC.

	Page		Page		Page
Atkins, Sir Ivor ...	693	Royal Albert Hall (From engraving issued in 1867): Exterior ...	230	St. Patrick's (R.C.) Cathedral, Armagh. The Western Towers ...	829
Brewer, Dr. Herbert ...	693	— Interior ...	231	— The Largest and Smallest Bells	830
Heberden, Charles Buller ...	653	Russian Ballet, The: Ernest Ansermet	497	Sibelius ...	268
Hull, Mr. Percy ...	693	— Serge Diaghilev ...	497	Somerville, Col. J. C. ...	784
Johannesburg Philharmonic Society at Bethlehem Railway Station ...	655	— Igor Stravinsky ...	497	Summer School of Church Music: The Committee and Lecturers ...	713
Lopokova, Lydia ...	518	— Serge Prokofiev ...	457	Tuning Contract Written by Father Howe, Reproduction of ...	635
Notre Dame, Paris: Organ Gallery ...	632	St. Etienne Du Mont, Paris: The Organ	632	Widor, Charles-Marie ...	631
Pemberton, Canon ...	271	St. Olave, Tooley Street, Southwark: The Organ ...	573	Wood, Sir Henry ...	349
		St. Patrick's (R.C.) Cathedral, Armagh. Interior: Looking West ...	828

	Page		Page		Page
Aberdeen, Music at ...	48	Bath. Glastonbury Festival Players ...	122	Blom, Eric. A College Concert... ..	485
Ackroyd, William. 'Waltz' (Review)... ..	177	Battersea, Clapham, and Wandsworth		— Festival Week at Bath ... ..	336
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' (see 189, 279, 578)	21, 98, 172, 252, 332, 409, 480, 550, 699	Choral Union ... ..	428	Blomfield, Gertrude. Recitals ... ..	28
Admirable Crichtons: New Style ... ..	845	Baumer, Cecil. 'Danse des Negrillons,'		Bodmin Parish Church. Hymn Festival	505
Albert Hall (see Royal Choral Society).		for Pianoforte (Review)... ..	26	Bonnet, Joseph. American Tour ... ..	501
Alcock, Dr. W. G. Carol: 'O lovely		Bax, Arnold. 'Garden of Fand' ... ..	27, 846	— Recital at Westminster Abbey	575
voices of the sky' (Review) ... ..	842	— 'New Cycle of French Folk-		Borough Road Baptist Church ... ..	355
Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral		Songs' ... ..	183	Borwick, Leonard. Recitals ... ..	183, 270
Society ... ..	32, 191, 428, 797	— 'Tintagel' at Bournemouth ... ..	865	Boughton, Rutland. Early English
Ali Khan. An Indian Tenor ... ..	60	— Reviews: ... ..		Chamber Music ... ..	537, 611
Allied String Quartet ... ..	28, 846	'A Hill Tune' ... ..	104	— 'The Immortal Hour.' By
Amsterdam, Music in 59, 131, 205, 293,		'Burlesque' ... ..	113	Robert Lorenz ... ..	412
— 369, 442, 512, 586, 659, 803, 872		'Folk-Tale' ... ..	265	Boulst, Adrian C. 'A Handbook on the
— Abonnement Concerts ... ..	442	'Green grow the rashies, O!' ... ..	424	Technique of Conducting' (Review)	775
— Beethoven Festival ... ..	59, 131	'Lullaby' ... ..	104	Boulton, Cecil D. 'Water Idyls,' for
Bloch, Ernest. 'Trois poèmes		'Mater ora filium' ... ..	784	Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	628
Juifs' ... ..	293	'November Woods' ... ..	27	Bournemouth, Music in ... ..	49, 123, 195,
— Dvorák. 'The Golden Spinning-		'Of a rose I sing a song' ... ..	784	— 283, 362, 436, 508, 725, 797, 864
Wheel' ... ..	659	Sonata in E, for Violin and Piano-		— Bainton, Edgar L. 'Concerto
— Opera Season ... ..	131, 205, 513	forte ... ..	782	Fantasia' ... ..	123
— R. C. Oratorio Society ... ..	205, 513	Toccata ... ..	104	Boyle, Ina. 'The Magic Harp' ... ..	123
— Röntgen, Julius. 'Boorish		Bakendale, Christabel. Recital... ..	29	Braithwaite, S. H. 'A Night
Suite' ... ..	293	Bedford Free Church Choral Union ... ..	723	by Dalegarth Bridge' ... ..	123
— Overture to an Old Dutch		Bedford Musical Society... ..	499, 723	— Forthcoming season ... ..	725
Comedy ... ..	293	Beecham Symphony Orchestra, The ... ..	269	— Sibelius ... ..	283
— Schönberg's 'Gurre-Lieder' ... ..	369	Beethoven and Knitting (Correspondence)		— Van Someren-Godfery.
Anderson, W. R. Lectures ... ..	771	(see 249) ... ..	357	Rhapsody (No. 2), 'From the
Andover Parish Church. Musical		Beethoven Biography, A ... ..	336	Hebrides' ... ..	362
Service ... ..	187	Beethoven Commemoration Festivals		— Williams, Vaughan. 'London'
Anston Musical Society ... ..	271	(see 731) 27, 59, 61, 123, 128, 130, 131, 133, 199		Symphony ... ..	49
Answers to Correspondents 134, 208, 295,		Beethoven: 'Greatest Composer' ... ..	649	Boyce, Ethel. Cantata, 'The Vision of
— 374, 662, 734, 808		Beethoven, Pianoforte Concertos, edited		the Simple' (Review) ... ..	703
Antcliffe, Herbert. Facts in Science and		by Dunhill (Review) ... ..	264	Boyle, Ina. 'The Magic Harp' ... ..	123
Art ... ..	482	Beggar's Opera, The. By Frank Kidson		Bradford, Music in 58, 131, 204, 291, 369, 871
— 'How to Enjoy Music' (Review)		(see 496) ... ..	18, 166	— Permanent Orchestra's Beet-
Appointments, Organist and Choir-		Belfast, Music at ... ..	48, 122, 194, 282, 864	hoven Celebration ... ..	131
master 43, 119, 187, 278, 356, 433, 506,		— Brennan, C. J. 'Glendalough'		— Subscription Concerts ... ..	58, 369, 871
— 577, 648, 718, 792, 856		— Kay, Edward Norman. 'Dun-		— 205, 259, 495, 788
Archer, J. Stuart. New Organ for		luche' ... ..	194	Braithwaite, S. H. 'A Night by Dale-
Westminster Cathedral ... ..	353	— Reynolds, W. B. 'Deirdre's		garth Bridge' ... ..	123
Art of Chaliapin, The. By Herman		Lament' ... ..	49	Brash, James. Appointment ... ..	647
Klein (see 787) ... ..	785	— Trowell, Arnold. 'The Waters		Braunfels, Walter. Five Preludes and
Art of Patti, The (Lecture). By Herman		of Peneios' ... ..	48	Interludes, for Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	701
Klein ... ..	483	(see 114) ... ..	267	Brechin Amateur Musical Association... ..	351
Ashton, Algernon. Eight Studies for the		Benfieldside Choral Society ... ..	500	Brennan, C. J. 'Glendalough' ... ..	49
Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	26	Benham, Victor. Recitals ... ..	348, 427	Brewer, A. Herbert. Song, 'On Wings
— Schumann's homage to Beel-		Bennett, George J. Elegiac Prelude for		of Delight' (Review) ... ..	25
hoven (Correspondence) ... ..	357	Organ (Review) ... ..	26	— Song-Cycle, 'Jillian of Berry'
— Who is the Greatest Composer		(Review) ... ..	418	(Review) ... ..	783
(Correspondence) ... ..	357	Berger, Francesco. 'Musical Expres-		Brewer, John Francis (Obituary) ... ..	654
Ashton Hall, Lancaster. Organ Music		sions, Phrases, and Sentences' (Review)		Bridge, Frank. 'A Prayer' ... ..	366
Ashton, Leopold. Recital ... ..	28	— (Review) ... ..	775	— Sextet (Review) ... ..	629
Ashton-under-Lyne. Albion Congrega-		Berkshire Organists' Association. Lec-		— Suite for Strings (Review) ... ..	177
tional Church ... ..	647	ture by H. C. Colles, 'Church Music		— 'The Hour Glass,' for Piano-
Atkins, Sir Ivor. Knighthood ... ..	113	from the Free Seats' ... ..	572	forte (Review) ... ..	175
Auer, Prof. 'Violin Playing as I teach		— Summer Meeting ... ..	572	— Three Miniature Pastorals, for it' (Review) (see 842) ... ..	479	Berlin, Music in 443, 513, 587, 659, 731,		Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	840
Augener Pianoforte Albums (Duets).		— 805, 873		Bridge, Sir Frederick. Carols, 'Green
'Celebrated Ballet Music of the 17th		— Bach Festivals ... ..	659	grows the Holly Tree'; 'The Coming and 18th Centuries' (Review)... ..	840	— Beethoven Festival ... ..	731	of Christmas' ... ..	842
Aussenac, Marie Louise. Pianoforte		— d'Albert, Engen. 'Scirocco' ... ..	513	— Three Kings' (Review) ... ..
Recital ... ..	566	— Jubilee of 'Der Freischütz' ... ..	659	— Lecture, 'The Cryes of
Austin, Ernest. 'An Indian Pipe Dance,'		Strauss, Richard. 'Joseph's		London ... ..	282
for Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	840	Legende' ... ..	443	— Resignation from Royal Choral — Narrative Poem, 'The Pil-		Bernard, Anthony. 'Hill Tune with		Society ... ..	758
grim's Progress' (Review) ... ..	176	Variations,' for Pianoforte (Review)		Bristol, Music in ... ..	50, 124, 196, 284,
— Second Sonata, for Pianoforte		Berners, Lord. 'Fantaisie Espagnole'		— 362, 437, 508, 725, 798, 855
(Review) ... ..	781	(Review) ... ..	782	— Choral Society—100th perform-
Author and Reviewer (Correspondence)		— Trois Chansons' (Review) ... ..	841	ance ... ..	865
(see 622) ... ..	719	Biggleswade Choral Society ... ..	271	— Glastonbury Festival Players
Babbacombe Museum Hall Chamber		Biggs, Allan. Festival of British Music		— 124, 437
Concerts ... ..	62	at Hastings ... ..	169	— Morley, Louis J. 'The Prince
Bach, Five Albums of Songs (Review)		Binyon, Bertram. Recital ... ..	269	of Kulav' ... ..	284
— The Organ Works of. By		Birmingham, Music in 49, 133, 194, 282,		— New Philharmonic ... ..	185
Harvey Grace 12, 88, 161, 240, 326, 405,		— 361, 436, 508, 585, 653, 725, 797, 864		British Association. Sir Henry Hadow's
— 472, 544		— Bantock Vocal Recital... ..	282	address: 'The Place of Music in a
Bach Choir, The ... ..	27, 796	— Barry Jackson. Month's Re-		Liberal Education' ... ..	697
— 'Parry' Concert ... ..	426	pertory of Operatic Works ... ..	585	British Music in Paris ... ..	282
Bach Choir of Bethlehem, U.S.A. ... ..	506	— Beethoven Commemoration		British Music at the 'Proms' (Corre-
Baines, William. Four Poems for Piano-		Festival ... ..	123	spondence)... ..	651
forte (Review) ... ..	701	— Forthcoming Season ... ..	655, 725	British Music at the Queen's Hall Sym-
Bainton, Edgar L. 'Before Sunrise' ... ..	367	— Glasgow Orpheus Choir ... ..	361	phony Concerts ... ..	630
— 'Concerto-Fantasia' ... ..	123, 195	— Royal Institution. New Organ		British Music in Zurich (Correspondence)
Baird, Edward C. Song, 'When I		— Sibelius at ... ..	282	(see 349) ... ..	580
heard the learned astronomer' (Review)		Bishop, William Josiah (Obituary) ... ..	795	British Music Society 42, 61, 198, 207,
— 295, 360, 490, 622		Bishopgate Institute Concerts ... ..	733, 862	— 295, 360, 490, 622
Baker, A. E. Anthem, 'At the Cross'		— Recitals ... ..	355	— at University College School ... ..	295
(Review) ... ..	783	Blackburn, Music in ... ..	121, 283	— Congress ... ..	484, 490
Baltic Exchange Choir ... ..	338	— Ladies' Choir ... ..	121	— Blackheath Branch ... ..	207
'Barbellion' on Music. By Harold		— New Organ for the Public Hall		— Hampstead Centre ... ..	857
Rawlinson ... ..	247	(see 657) 354, 575		Scheme of Organ Recitals ... ..	42
Barclay Squire, W. Lost Handel		Blake, Hilda. Vocal Recital ... ..	183	Sydney, N.S.W. Branch ... ..	198
Manuscript, A ... ..	690	Blank, Jenny. Début ... ..	270	British Symphony Orchestra ... ..	27, 178, 846
Barrett, Francis E. Opera in London		Blind Musicians and their Work (Cor-		British Violin Music (Correspondence)
— 30, 115, 183, 270, 427, 496, 848		respondence) (see 253) ... ..	279	(see 173) ... ..	119
— 497, 851		Bliss, Arthur. 'Concerto' ... ..	490	Brodsky String Quartet ... ..	132
Bartók, Béla. Three Etudes, for Piano-		— Pianoforte Duet, 'Rout'		Bromley Choral Society ... ..	350
forte (Review) ... ..	701	(Review) ... ..	701	Bromley District Organists and Choir-
Basingstoke Victory Choir ... ..	351	— Song, 'Madame Noy' (Review)		masters' Association ... ..	505
Bath, Hubert. 'The Island of Heart's		— Storm Music' ... ..	784	Bruckshaw, Kathleen (Obituary) ... ..	795
Desire,' for Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	264	— Jewish Rhapsody, 'Schelomo'		'Bulletin de la Société Française de
Bath, Music at ... ..	48, 122, 186	— Trois poèmes Juifs' ... ..	293	Musilogie' (Review) ... ..	661
— Gerrard Williams's Concert ... ..	186			Bullock, Dr. Ernest. Summer Recitals
				Burmester, Willy. Recital (Amsterdam)
				Busch, Adolf. Recital (Amsterdam) ... ..	131

	Page		Page		Page
Busoni, ... ..	268	Church Music Society. Lectures (see 577) ... ..	431, 503	Davies, Prof. Walford. Lecture, 'Chanting' ... ..	431
— 'Rondeau Arlequinésque' ... ..	340	— Summer School of. Diary of a Member ... ..	706	Davies, Giovanni, of Rome (Obituary) ... ..	661
Busser, Henri. 'Colomba' at Nice ... ..	206	Church Organ, The. An Introduction to the study of Modern Organ-Building. By the Rev. Noel A. Bonavia Hunt (Review) ... ..	40	Davis, F. Halland. The Music of Thomas Hardy (see 434) ... ..	255
Butt, Dame Clara, and the Handel Festival Choir ... ..	499	City Temple Choral Society 42, 277, 355, 432, 791 ... ..	196	Dawber, Harold M. Hallé Organist ... ..	869
— at the Albert Hall ... ..	269, 566	Clapton Park Congregational Church ... ..	196	— Recitals ... ..	647, 869
Butterworth, George. 'Requiescat' (Review) ... ..	783	Clark, Edward. Orchestral Concerts ... ..	295, 339, 424, 495	Dawson, Michael. Lecture-Recitals ... ..	868
Calvocoressi, M.-D. Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. The 320, 400, 466, 542, 613 ... ..	613	Clarke, J. C. Appointment ... ..	730	Debussy Memorial Number of Revue Musicale ... ..	97
— Kœchlin, Charles ... ..	759, 830	Clutsam, G. H. 'Original Cinema Music' (Review) ... ..	264	Decentralization: An Experience. By C. A. Beckett Williams ... ..	411
— Magnard, Albéric ... ..	683	Coates, Albert ... ..	27, 29, 178, 371	De Falla, Manuel. 'El amor Brujo,' for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	423
— Modern French Composers: How they are encouraged ... ..	239	— 'Suite Ancienne' (d'après les vieux Maitres) (Review) ... ..	701	— 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain' ... ..	495
— Music in the Foreign Press 334, 416, 486, 558, 625, 694, 775, 839 ... ..	839	— Suite for Strings, by Henry Purcell (Review) ... ..	177	— 'The Three-Cornered Hat,' for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	423
Cambridge, Music at ... ..	124, 365	Coates, John. Concerts ... ..	183, 490, 566, 847	De Greef, Arthur. 'Etudes de Concert' (Review) ... ..	175
— Jesus College Chapel Recitals ... ..	505	Coleridge, Arthur. 'Reminiscences' (Review) ... ..	415	De Jong, Edward (Obituary) ... ..	47
Campbell, H. A. J. (Obituary) ... ..	795	Coleridge-Taylor, 'Eleanore' (Review) ... ..	265	Delius. Double Concerto, for Violin and Violoncello ... ..	183
Canadian College of Organists ... ..	791	College Concert, A. By Eric Blom ... ..	485	Delmas, Marc. Opera, 'Camille' ... ..	876
Canadian Copyright Act, The New ... ..	497	Colles, H. C. Lecture: 'Church Music from the Free Seats' ... ..	572	De Maleingreau, Paul. 'Offrande Musicale' (Review) ... ..	265, 418
Canon Pemberton. By J. A. Fuller-Maitland ... ..	371	— Parry as song-writer ... ..	82, 155, 235	— 'Opus Sacrum' (Review) ... ..	418
Capell, Richard. English Folk-Song ... ..	174	Collingwood, L. A. 'Excerpts from Macbeth' ... ..	29	De Manziarly, Marcelle. 'Trois atmosphères slaves' (Review) ... ..	423
Carabella, Ezio. Seven Symphonic Variations ... ..	295	— Symphonic Poem ... ..	268	Derby, St. Werburgh. Hymn Festival ... ..	791
Carelli, Benjamin (Obituary) ... ..	289	Competitions. Coolidge, Mrs. ... ..	796	De St. André, Yvonne. Recital ... ..	427
Carl Rosa Opera Company ... ..	30, 427, 496, 789, 848	— Kneller Hall ... ..	199	Devon, Music in (see 190) 51, 125, 197, 285, 364, 437, 656, 726, 798, 866 ... ..	866
— at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith ... ..	427	— Musical Times and School Music Review ... ..	24	De Vries, H. Recitals ... ..	576
— 'Carmen' ... ..	30	— 'Comus,' Milton's, A Village Performance of ... ..	651	Dictionary of Organs and Organists, A (Review) (see 792) ... ..	717
— 'Dante and Beatrice' (Stephen Philpot) ... ..	30	Concert Pitch and the Diapason Normal (Correspondence) ... ..	359	Discovery of an Ancient Hebrew Manuscript containing Neums. By Arthur M. Friedländer ... ..	170
— David Garrick' (Reginald Somerville) ... ..	31	Concert-Room Song, The. By Arthur L. Salmon ... ..	11	Dixon, Claiborne. Chamber Concert ... ..	581
— 'Faust' ... ..	30	Concerts and Critics. By Thomas Moulton ... ..	20	Donald, Madame. Recital ... ..	788
— 'Il Trovatore' ... ..	30	Concerts for Young People (see Lotus Ladies' Orchestra) ... ..	11	Donaudy, Stefano. 'Ramuntcho' ... ..	370
— 'Jewels of the Madonna' ... ..	30	Cook, Charles S. 'Good Times,' for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	628	Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy, The. By M.-D. Calvocoressi 320, 400, 466, 542, 613 ... ..	613
— 'Lohengrin' ... ..	30	Co-operative Opera: A New Experiment ... ..	568	Dublin, Music in 52, 125, 198, 286, 364, 438, 559, 586, 656, 727, 799, 867 ... ..	867
— 'Samson and Delilah' ... ..	31, 427	Copeland, Charles. Recital ... ..	270	Dukas, Paul. 'La plainte, au loin, du Faune' ... ..	423
— 'Secret of Suzanne' ... ..	30	Coppola, M. 'Poema Triste,' for Violin (Review) ... ..	842	Dulwich Philharmonic Society ... ..	32
— 'Tales of Hoffmann' ... ..	30	Corelli Forgery, A (Correspondence) (see 652) ... ..	720, 861	Dumay, Ernest. Appointment ... ..	807
— 'Tannhäuser' ... ..	30	Cornet Wanted, A (Correspondence) ... ..	46	Dumaries and Maxwelltown Choral and Orchestral Society ... ..	190, 351, 865
— 'Tristan and Isolde' ... ..	30	Cornwall, Music in 50, 124, 197, 284, 363, 437, 656, 726, 798, 867 ... ..	426	Duncan-Jones, A. S. 'Church Music' (Review) ... ..	274
— Wagner Operas ... ..	848	Corrado, Giorgio. Recital ... ..	567	Dunedin (New Zealand), Choral Society ... ..	271
Carlisle Choral Society ... ..	191, 864	Cortot, M. Recitals ... ..	29, 848	— Returned Soldiers' Choir ... ..	582
Carmine, Olga. Recitals ... ..	269, 848	Couperin Album. Ed. by Alex. Roloff (Review) ... ..	123	Dunhill, Thomas F. Sonata in F, for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	338
Carnegie Public Library, Seven Kings' Carnegie Trust, Annual Report of the ... ..	281	Coventry and District, Music in 50, 124, 197, 285, 363, 437, 509, 585, 726, 798, 866 ... ..	113	Dunk, John L. 'Hyperacoustics' (Review) ... ..	775
— Music Publication Scheme. Adjudicators' Report ... ..	445, 771	Cras, Jean. 'Champêtre' (Review) ... ..	113	Dunn, John. Violin Recital ... ..	183
Carse, Adam. Five Pieces for Chamber Music (Review) ... ..	842	— 'Maritime' (Review) ... ..	113	Dupont. Opera, 'Antar' ... ..	371
— 'Sheaf of Little Dances,' for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	26	Craven Arms Choral Society ... ..	428	Dupré, Marcel. At the Albert Hall (see 410) ... ..	29, 274
— Sonata in C minor, for Violin and Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	782	Craxton, Harold. Recitals ... ..	28, 847	— Fifteen Versets (Review) ... ..	176
Caruso, Enrico (Obituary) (see 661) ... ..	625	Crimp, Herbert E. Song, 'The Vine' (Review) ... ..	423	— Recitals 355, 500, 504, 509, 510, 791 ... ..	791
Casella, Alfredo. 'Italia' ... ..	28	Cross, Joan. Vocal Recital ... ..	285	— Three Preludes and Fugues (Review) ... ..	264
— Song, 'L'Adieu à la Vie' (Review) ... ..	781	Cross-Tremolo Effect (Correspondence) (see 358) ... ..	338	Dyffryn Chapel Choir ... ..	430
Castle Cary Choral Society ... ..	428	Croydon Philharmonic Society ... ..	434	Dyke, Spencer. Recital ... ..	847
Catterall Quartet ... ..	846	Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society ... ..	32, 271, 350, 723	Ealing Philharmonic Society 32, 191, 428, 723 ... ..	723
Cazabon, Albert. Recital ... ..	28	Cunningham, G. D. Recitals ... ..	555	Early English Chamber Music. By Rutland Boughton (see 718) ... ..	537, 611
Celtic Congress in the Isle of Man, The. By Rosaleen Graves ... ..	583	Curwen, Mrs. 'Psychology applied to Music Teaching' (Review) ... ..	32	Easts Herts Musical Society ... ..	428
Central London Choral and Orchestral Society ... ..	121, 428, 723	Czapliniskv, M. Recital ... ..	427	Eastbourne. All Souls' ... ..	432
Chalapien. Recitals (see 785) ... ..	787	d'Albert, Eugen. 'Sirocco' ... ..	513	— 'Red Triangle' Choir ... ..	428
Chalapien. The Art of. By Herman Klein (see 787) ... ..	785	d'Alvarez, Madame. Recital ... ..	788	Edinburgh, Music in 52, 126, 199, 286, 439, 510, 727, 867 ... ..	867
Chamber Music for Amateurs 42, 118, 186, 272, 351, 429, 500, 571, 648, 794, 789 ... ..	853	Dalcroze (see Jacques-Dalcroze). Dale, B. J. 'Before the Paling of the Stars' ... ..	127	— Beethoven Celebrations ... ..	199
Chamber Music Players 114, 270, 340, 567, 46 ... ..	46	— Delius's Orchestral Ballad, 'Eventyr' (arr for piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	782	— St. John the Evangelist, Recitals ... ..	646
Chambers, H. A. Anthem, 'Arise, shine, for thy Light is come' (Review) ... ..	843	Dambosi, Maurice. Recital ... ..	347	Edmonds, Paul. Song, 'The Pegasus' (Review) ... ..	783
Chaminade. 'Chanson d'Orient,' for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	264	Damrosch, Mr. Walter, and 'Groveling in Ugliness' (Correspondence) ... ..	793	Egan, Katharine. The Subconscious Mind and the Musical Faculty ... ..	193
— 'Danse Païenne' (Review) ... ..	264	Darke, Dr. Harold. Bach Recitals ... ..	717	Electric Organ at Lollingen, Germany. The ... ..	46
Chapel Royal, St. James's. Memorial Tablet ... ..	855	— Recitals ... ..	42	Elgar's Orchestral Version of Bach's C minor Organ Fugue. First performance ... ..	846
Chapuis, Auguste. Piano (Review) ... ..	629	Darlington and District, Music in 51, 197, 363, 866 ... ..	730	Elkin, Robert. Gavotte Classique (Review) ... ..	701
Chatham and District, Music in 196, 798, 866 ... ..	866	Darlington Operatic Quartet ... ..	866	— Sarabande Pensive, for Piano (Review) (Review) ... ..	840
Chaumont, M. Emile. 'Trente-six Etudes de Technique' (Review) ... ..	629	Dauben, Ulric. The Gramophone—Present and Future ... ..	477	Ellingford, Herbert F. 'The Organ' (Review) ... ..	418
Cherniavsky, Mischel. Orchestral Concert ... ..	29	Davey, Henry. 'History of English Music' (Review) ... ..	772	Elwes, Gervase. Memorial ... ..	278, 839
Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society ... ..	191	Davies, Fanny. Schumann Recital ... ..	495	— (Obituary) (see 29, 169, 278) ... ..	81
Choral Notes and News 32, 121, 191, 270, 350, 428, 499 ... ..	723, 796	Davies, J. D. 'Four Little pieces for Young Players' (Review) ... ..	26	'Emperor' Concerto, Blind adulation of (Correspondence) ... ..	357
Choral Society Programmes ... ..	723, 796	— Melody, for 'Cello and Piano-forte' (Review) (Review) ... ..	620	Enfield (Christ Church) Musical Society ... ..	590
Christ Church, Blackfriars Road. Brahms's 'Requiem' ... ..	855			English Folk-Song. By Richard Capell ... ..	174
Christie, Winifred. Recitals ... ..	29, 348, 495			English Folk-Song and Dance Festival at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith ... ..	560
Church Music Conference in the Transvaal ... ..	647
Church Music (Correspondence) ... ..	649, 718
Church Music Society ... ..	118, 431, 576
— Bristol Branch ... ..	791

	Page		Page		Page
English Folk-Song and Dance Society	122, 516	Gatti, Guido M. ( contd. )		Hambourg, Boris. Recitals	495
— Summer School at Cheltenham	624	V. Vincenzo Davico	403	Hambourg, Mark. Recitals	427, 848
Evans, Amy. Recital	495	VI. Alfredo Casella	468	Hamilton (Canada). Music in	351, 500
Evans, Edwin. Pianola Music	761	VII. Vittorio Gui	685	Hand Development for the Performer
Ewell Choral Society	271, 428	VIII. Vincenzo Tommasini	767	(Correspondence) ( see 582)	860
Exeter and District Organists' Association	790	— Postludium	833	Handel Collection, A (Correspondence)	358, 434
Exeter Choristers' School	277	Gatty, Nicholas. 'Prince Ferelon' at the Old Vic.	496	Handel Festival Choir Concert	499
'Extremists versus the Rest' (Correspondence)	45	Geel, H. E. Twenty-one Studies in Rhythm and Expression (Review)	628	Handel Society, The	121
Facer, Thomas (Obituary)	872	German, Edward. 'Orpheus with his Lute' (Review)	703	Hansen, M. Recitals	348
Facts in Science and Art. By Herbert Antcliffe	482	Gervase Elwes ( see Elwes).		Harlech, Music at	590
False Masterpieces of Music, The. By Camille Saint-Saëns	687	Gibbs, C. Armstrong. Songs, 'As I lay in the early sun,' 'For Remembrance,' and 'The fields are full' (Review)	113	Harlech Musical Festival	590
Fanfare, a new Musical Magazine	630	Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Season	733, 789, 848	Harmonic Trio, The	847
Farrar, Ernest. Song, 'Diaphenia' (Review)	265	Girl Guides' Concert at the Albert Hall	566	Harmony Glee Singers	428
— Song, 'O Mistress Mine' (Review)	265	Girton College, Cambridge, Musical Scholarship	877	Harrison, Beatrice	114
— Song, 'The Lover's Appeal' (Review)	265	Glasgow, Music in 52, 126, 199, 286, 365, 727, 799, 867		Harrison, Julius. 'Foc'sle Jack' (Review)	25
Father Howe, an Old-Time Maker of Organs. By Andrew Freeman	633	— Coming Season	727	Harrison, Margaret. Recital	426
Faulkes, William. Holy Communion in E (Review)	267	— Orpheus Choir. Visit to London	281, 349	Harrogate, St. Peter's Church	355
Faure, Gabriel. Second Quintet (Review)	841	Glastonbury Festival	436, 508, 582	Harrow School Memorial Organ. By W. W. Starmer	430
'Faust,' The Manuscript Libretto of. By Camille Saint-Saëns	553	Glastonbury Festival Play: 'Bethlehem'	62, 122, 125	Hart, F. Benicke. 'The Shepherd' (Review) ( see 719)	25
Faversham Parish Church Choir	355	Glastonbury Festival School	295	Harty, Hamilton	27
Federation of British Music Industries. The ( see 72)	87, 374	Glastonbury Players at Bath ( see 437)	336	— Fantasy Scenes from an Eastern Romance	55
Ferrari, Gustave. Intermezzo, Solemn March, and Fantasy on French Folk-Songs (Review)	26	Glère. Pianoforte Album (Review)	26	— Violin Concerto	178, 287, 288
Festival of British Music at Hastings. By Allan Biggs	160	Gloucester, Music at	286	Harvard Glee Club	441
Festival Week at Bath. By Eric Blom	336	Godley, Eric. Concert	348	Harwood, Basil. Holy Communion, in E flat (Review)	267
Fiddles, the Price of Classic (Correspondence)	47	Godowsky, Louis. Recitals	29	Hastings, Music in 53, 126, 199, 287, 586, 709, 868
Fidler, Florence. A Handbook of Orchestration (Review)	486	Godstone Choral Society	878	Hatton, J. L. MS. of 'The Queen of the Thames' presented to Liverpool Public Library	275
Fletcher, Percy. Part-Songs, 'A Lullaby of Love,' 'Dream of Love,' 'Folly's Song,' and 'Vision of Belshazzar' (Review)	703	Gold, Maud. Brussels Conservatoire	622	Haydn Keeton ( see Keeton).
Flood, W. H. Gratton. 'John Field, of Dublin' (Review)	621	Grand Prix	788, 848	Hayes, Roland. Recital	426
— New Light on Early Tudor Composers:		Goodson, Katherine. Recitals	295	Heath, John K. Macedonian Sketches	567
XIV. Richard Bramston	17	Goodwin & Tabb. The Robert Goodwin Library of Manuscripts	295	— Song, 'Cherry Time' (Review)	25
XV. Richard Hygons	166	Goossens, Eugène. Concerts at Queen's Hall	489, 566	— Songs, 'Three Welsh Landscapes' (Review)	113
XVI. William Whybroke	246	— 'Le Sacre du Printemps' for Piano-forte (Review)	104	— Suite for Piano-forte, 'A Child's Night' (Review)	628
XVII. Thomas Knight	331	— Sonata, for Violin and Piano-forte (Review)	207, 338	Heberden, Dr. C. B. (Obituary)	653
XVIII. Thomas Ashwell	458	— Songs, 'Philomel,' 'Melancholy,' 'The Appeal' (Review)	783	Heifetz	28
XIX. Richard Davy	502	Goss, Julia (Obituary)	791	Henderson, A. M. Organs and Organists at Paris	631
XX. John Redford	617	Grace, Harvey. The Complete Organist's Organ Works of Bach ( see 188)	12, 88, 161, 240, 326, 405, 472, 544	— Piano-forte Album, Set of Transcriptions (Review)	782
XXI. Robert Jones	689	Grainger, Percy. Suite, 'In a Nut-shell'	178	Henderson, W. J. Early History of Singing (Review)	621
'XXII. Nicholas Ludford	837	Gramophone as an Aid in Teaching Orchestration, The (Correspondence)	650, 721	Henschel, George. 'Gavotte,' for Violoncello (Review)	265
Fogg, Eric. 'Phantasy,' for 'Cello and Piano-forte	177	Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' 40, 117, 184, 274, 352, 429, 571, 630, 852		Hereford Musical Festival, The	508
Forth, T. Francis. 'What is Antiphonal Singing?'	645	Gramophone Records (Correspondence)	579, 650, 721, 794	— By Herbert Thompson	692
Foster, Myles B. Anthem, 'Our God shall come' (Review)	630	Gramophone, The: Present and Future. By Ulric Daubeny ( see 650, 721)	477	Hertford East Herts Musical Society	428
Fouldhouse (Linthgow) Choral Society	191	Grantham Philharmonic Society	271	Hess, Myra. Recitals	29, 131
Frank, Ethel. Concerts	262, 340, 427	Gaves, Rosaleen. The Celtic Congress in the Isle of Man	583	Heyman, Katherine Ruth. Lecture	587
Fraser, Duncan, of Edinburgh (Obituary)	126	Great Eastern Railway Musical Society	185	Higgins, Ethel. Lecture	589
Freay, Emile. Recital	495	Green, Plunket. Recitals	178, 269	Hippodrome. 'The Peep-Show'	360
Freeman, Andrew. Father Howe, an Old-Time Maker of Organs	633	Grétry. Gigue, 'Denys le tyran' (Review)	265	Hodge, Herbert. Recitals	791
— Organs and Organists of St. Olave's, Tooley Street, Southwark	573	(Review) 'Reflexions d'un Solitaire'	273	Hoffman. Recitals	29, 848
Friedländer, Arthur M. Discovery of an Ancient Hebrew Manuscript containing News	170	— Tambourin 'Aspie' (Review)	265	Holbrook, Josef, and his Work' (Review). By George Lowe	40
Frisca, Alice. Orchestral Concert	340	Greville, Ursula. Recital	348	— Come not when I am dead' (Review)	25
Friskin, James. 'The Principles of Piano-forte Practice' (Review)	487	Grew, Sydney. Mutual Error	19	— Concerts at Mortimer Hall	348
Froggatt, Arthur T. The Union of Graduates in Music	582	Grimson, Samuel B., and Cecil Forsyth. 'Modern Violin-playing' (Review)	177	— Miniature Scores, Overture, 'Bronwen'; 'The Wild Fowl' (Review)	627
Fryer, Herbert. 'Country Life,' for Piano-forte (Review)	628	Grosz, Wilhelm. Symphonic Variations on an Original Theme (Review)	701	— Value, 'Cromanthe' (Review)	26
— Recital	848	Grove, Gabriel. 'Petites Litanies de Jésus' (Review)	628	Hollis, Alfred. Recitals	186, 355
Fuller-Maitland, J. A. Canon Pemberton	271	Guild of Singers and Players	349, 352, 847	Hollins, Bertram. Recitals	355, 718
— 'Contemporaries of Purcell' (Review)	701	Guilmant Memorial, A	427, 446, 807	Holst, Gustav. Four Songs, for Voice and Violin (Review)	176
Future of Church Music, The (Correspondence) ( see 503)	577	Gurney, Ivor. Five Elizabethan Songs (Review)	113	— 'Hymns from the Rig Veda' (Review)	628
Gailhard, André. 'Arlequin'	371	Haba, Alois. Sonata, for Piano-forte (Review)	701	— 'Hymn of Jesus'	292
Gamblin, Charles (Obituary)	191	Hadow, Sir Henry. 'The Place of Music in a Liberal Education.' Address to the British Association	697	— Opera, 'Savitrì'	570
Gange, Fraser. Recital	495	Hailing, R. G. 'Cradle Song' (Review)	205	Homage to Debussy ( see Debussy).
Gardiner, Balfour. 'Salamanca' (Review)	113	Halifax Chamber Concert	176	Honegger, Arthur. Two Pieces, for Organ (Review)	265
Garard, Dom. Plainchant (Review)	775	Halifax Choral Society	293, 803	How not to write a School-Song. By W. McNaught	101
Gatti, Guido M. Some Italian Composers of To-day. Introduction	10	Hall, Dr. W. G. Lecture	295	Howard, Paul. Programme Notes	23
I. Mario Castelnuovo Tedesco	93	Hallé Society Annual Meeting and Balance Sheet, The	440	Howard-Jones, Evelyn, at Amsterdam	131
II. Franco Alfano	158	Ham, Dr. Albert. 'The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony' (Review)	486	Howells, Herbert. 'Sarum' Sketches (Review)	840
III. Victor de Sabata	244			— Three Psalm-Preludes (Review)	702
IV. Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli	333			Huberman. Recitals	131, 183, 270, 495

	Page		Page		Page
Ibis Musical Society	32	Korngold, 'Die Tote Stadt'	207	Lorenz, Robert. Rutland Boughton's
Il Pianoforte (Turin)	335	Koussevitzky, Sergio	29, 114, 132, 178, 495	'The Immortal Hour'	412
Importance of Correct Placing of the		Kreisler. Concerts	424, 495	Losowsky, Isaac. Recitals	427, 495, 847
Voice. The. By Charles Tree	258	Quartet	424	Lost Handel Manuscript, A. By W.
(Correspondence) (see 433,		Kubelik. Recitals	788	Barclay Squire	690
578, 649, 720, 793)				Lotus Ladies' Orchestra	114
Incorporated Society of Musicians (see				Low Fell Presbyterian Church. New
98)		'La Chauve-Souris'	722	Organ	791
Inghelbrecht, D. E. Paysages	48, 120	Labe, Marcel. Lied, for Violoncello		Lowe, George. 'Josef Holbrooke and
(Review)	113	and Pianoforte (Review)	842	His Work' (Review)	40
International Chamber Music Compe-		Lambert, Murray	29, 178	Lucas Quartet	29
tition, An	723	Lamond, Frederic. Recitals, &c.	29	Luckstone, Isadore. Song, 'Where be
Inverness, Music in	668		114, 340, 427	ye going?' (Review)	113
Ireland, John. Reviews:		Lancaster, St. Luke's, Slynce-with-Hest.		Lyne, Felice. Recital	788
'Amberley Wild Brooks' (Pianoforte)	781	Varley Roberts's 'The Passion'	355	Lyons, Dr. 'The Elements of
'East Riding, The' (Song)	123	Landi, Claude. Appointment	807	Harmony' (Review)	486
'Fain would I change that note' (Part-		Lane, George. Municipal Concerts in song)	703	London	479
'For Remembrance' (Pianoforte)	781	— Presentation	733	McConachie, Alexander. Recitals	647, 791
'Journey, The' (Song)	783	Langham Choral and Orchestral Society	428	MacCunn, Hamish. 'Border Ballads'	441
'Love is a sickness full of woe' (Song)	841	Lassere, Pierre. 'The Spirit of French		MacDowell. 'From the 18th Century,
'Merry Month of May, The' (Song)	841	Music' (Translated by Denis Turner)		for Pianoforte (Review) (see 358)	264
'My true love hath my heart' (Song)	176	(Review)	416	MacHardy, Robert (Obituary)	654
'Three Ravens, The' (Song)	25	Lavender Hill Choral Society	723	MacKenzie, Duncan. Appointment	807
'Trellis, The' (Song)	25	League of Arts, The. Autumn Scheme	624	Maclean, Alice. 'The Annunciation'	121
Irwell Springs Band, The	366	Hyde Park Performances	426, 567	— 'The Hunchback of Cremona'	121
Islington Choral Society's Orchestra	136	Leeds, Music in 57, 130, 204, 292, 368, 803, 871		Maclean, Quentin Morvaren. Two
It really was Loelily (Correspondence)		Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus'	292	Pieces, for Violoncello (Review)	177
(see 264)	358, 434	— London String Quartet, Beet-		Macmillan, E. C. 'England'	369
It was Read, not Reed (Correspondence)		hoven Concert	130	McNaught, W. 'How not to write a
(see 53)	120	— Parish Church Patronal Festival	647	School-song	101
James, Roland. Recital	29	Leicester City Orchestra	133	— Song, 'Dancing at the Lurgan'
James, Ivor. Recital	847	Leighton Primitive Methodist Church		(Review)	25
Jaques-Dalcroze Eurhythmics Demon-		(Newcastle-on-Tyne), New Organ at	277	'Magic Flute,' Jubilee of the. By F.
stration	122	Leinster Society of Organists and		Eckmann	766
— Rhythm, Music, and Educa-		Choirmasters	277	Magnard, Aléberic. By M.-D. Calvotion' (Review)	273	Lemare, E. H. Appointment	576	coreossi	683
— Rhythmic Movement' (Review)	273	Leon, Mischa. Recital	788	Maldstone Orchestral Society	446
'Twenty Caprices and Rhythmic		Letters of Great Composers (Corre-		Malden and Coombe Choral Society	428
Studies' (Review)	26	spondence)	45	Malipiero. 'I Poemi Asolani'	370
— Twenty Caprices and Rhythmic		Levy, Dr. H. G. Lecture, 'The Hymn-		— 'Panthea, Duét (Review)	175
Studies,' 2nd set (Review)	175	'Tune in Organ Music'	504	Manchester and District, Music in 55,
Jay, J. H. M. Some Notable English		Leyburn (Wensleydale) Wesleyan		128, 207, 288, 366, 440, 510, 657, 728, 800, 869
Organs (see 570).		Chapel	730	— Beethoven Celebration	128
'Jean-Christophe' and the Musical		Liddle, J. S. (Obituary)	359	— Cathedral Carol Service	118
Novel. By W. Wright Roberts	539	Lincoln Musical Society	428	— Dr. Brodsky's Farewell	128
Jenkins, Cyril. 'The Magic Cauldron'	82	Liszt Edition of Schubert's Dances		— Forthcoming Season	657, 728
Jenner, Winifred. Recital	495	(Review)	840	— Hallé Society, Annual Meeting	440
Jennings, W. Ernest. Holy Communion		Liszt. 'Rhapsodie Espagnole' (Review)	26	— Sixty-fourth Season	510
in G minor (Review)	338	Liszt the Pianist. By Camille Saint-		— Harty, Hamilton. Fantasy,
Jervis-road, H. V. Song, 'Day		Saëns	623	'Scenes from an Eastern Romance'	55
Dream' (Review)	25	Litane, Judith. Recitals	29, 348	— Municipal Orchestra	201
Johannesburg Philharmonic Society	655	Littleton, Augustus. President of		— Opera Festival Week	869
Jommelli, Niccolò. By Claude Trevor	723	the Livery Club of the Worshipful		Mancinelli, Luigi (Obituary)	190
Jongen, Joseph. Suite en forme de		Company of Musicians	851	Mansion, Horace, and Anne Anderson,
Sonate (Review) (see Holbrooke).	26	— Resignation from Royal Choral		'Old English Nursery Songs'
Josef Holbrooke (see Holbrooke).		Society Committee	758	(Review)	843
Jubilee of the 'Magic Flute,' The. By		Liverpool, Music in 54, 126, 200, 287,		Manuelli, Doris. Recital	847
F. Eckmann	767	365, 439, 510, 656, 727, 790, 868		Manuscript Libretto of 'Faust,' The.
Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall and the		— Bridge, Frank. 'A Prayer'	366	By Camille Saint-Saëns	553
Royal Choral Society. By Herman		British Music Society 127, 200, 656		Marshall, M. E. Pianoforte Album
Klein (see 358, 485, 507)	229, 313, 393	— Church Choir Association	855	(Review)	175
Kaas, Munthe	269	— Festival Music Book	504	Martin, Easthope. Five Songs (Review)	783
Kalisch, Alfred. Modesty or Arrogance?	696	— Coming Season	727	Mason, Daniel Gregory. Sonata, for — National Eisteddfod, The	618	Dale, B. J. Before the		Pianoforte and Violin (Review)	782
Karjinsky, 'Chant Slave,' for Strings		paling of the stars	127	Mason, Gwendolen. Recital	183
(Review)	177	Dupré Recital	512	Matter of Gender, A. (Correspondence)	358
Karshinsky, Jack. Recital	785	Masonic Festival Concerts	200	Matthews, James (Obituary)	722
Kay, Edward Norman. 'Dunluce'	191	— Newman, Ernest. Address to		Mayfair Trio. Warrior's Day Concert	366
Keaton, Haydn (Obituary)	405	British Music Society	200	Medina, Señor. Recital	348
Kennedy, Daisy. Recitals	427, 567	Organ Recitals	646	Megane, Leila. Recital	20
Kent, Music in	53, 287, 365, 439	Philharmonic Concert of		McLartin. 'Chips' and 'Intermezzi'
— Association of Change-Ringers	305	French Music	54	(Review)	175
Kettering Gleemen Concerts	351	Rachmaninov. 'The Bells'	365	Melba (see 410)	426
— Parish Church	653	Welsh Operatic Society	439	Melbourne Mewton Choir	873
Kidson, Frank. 'The Beggar's Opera' 18,	166	Llandudno, Music in	728	Melchior. Recital	348
King's College. Lectures on Ecclesiastical		— Autumn Choral Society	271	Meredyl Quartet	28
Music	118	Locke, Arthur Ware. 'Music and the		Merikanto, O. Songs, 'Evening,'
Kingston and Surbiton District Choral		Romantic Movement in France'		'Merella' (Review)	628
Society	428	(Review)	40	Messenger. 'La Petite Fonctionnaire'	515
Kingston String Quartet (see 438) 194, 332, 878		Lohengrin.' (How 'Lohengrin' came		'Messiah, The.' Missing parts of,
Kingsway Hall Symphony Concerts 114, 181		to Italy—see Rome.)		at the Foundling (Correspondence)	507
Kirkcaldy Musical Society	351	Lomas, John. Recital	43	Milan, Music in 131, 294, 370, 513, 805, 874
Kitson, Dr. 'Elementary Harmony'		London Baptist Association Festival		— Concerts at the Teatro del
(Review)	486	Choir	277	Popolo	294, 371
(Correspondence)	650	— Chamber Concert Society	28,	de Vecsey, Ferenc. Recital	294
Klein, Herman Art of Chaliapin, The		270, 295, 340, 722		Opera Season	132, 370, 805, 874
(see 787)	785	— Choral Society	32, 339, 796	Pietro Mascagni and his visit to — Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall		— Church Choir Association	855	a Leghorn Factory	132 and the Royal Choral Society (see 358,		— Classical Quintet	495	— The Puccini Family	132
485, 507)	229, 313, 393	— Concert Season, The	722	Theatrical Performance Tax	370
— Lecture. 'Art of Patti, The'	483	Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch		Milhaud, M. 'Le Printemps,' for Violin
— Reign of Patti, The' (Review)	115	27, 114, 177, 267, 338, 424, 488, 566, 626		(Review)	842
Kneller Hall	784, 861	— Society of Organists	277, 354,	Military Band Music	508
Kobbé, Gustav. 'The Complete Opera		Battersea and Clapham Branch	505, 572	Miniature Scores. (Review)	627
Book' (Review)	621	Epping Forest Branch	576, 855	Mitchell, Edward. Recital	348
Kochanski, M. Recital	29	West, John E. Lecture	354	— Réverie' and 'Dance Scherzo'
Charles Kachlin. By M.-D. Calvo-		String Quartet	424, 426	(Review)	781
coreossi	759, 830	Sunday School Choir	123, 434	— 'Valse Sérieuse' (Review)	702
Koenen, Tilly. Recitals	566, 788, 847	Symphony Orchestra	27, 28,	Modern Classicist, A: Roger-Ducas.
Kontorovich, Lena. Recitals	427, 495	29, 114, 178, 183, 268, 270, 338, 425, 722, 846		By Alfred J. Swan	250
Kordy, Dezso. 'Menuet Antique,' for		Bach-Beethoven-Brahms Concert	270, 339	Modern French Composers: How they
Violoncello and Pianoforte (Review)	628	B minor Mass Concert	339	are encouraged, By M.-D. Calvo-
		Balance Sheet	339	coreossi	239
		— Trio	29	Modern Music (Correspondence) 434,
				506, 580, 651, 719
				Modern Scales and Acoustics (Correspondence)	859

	Page		Page		Page
Modesty or Arrogance? By Alfred Kalisch ...	696	Newcastle ( contd. )		Paris, Music in ( contd. )
Moffatt, Alfred, 'Four' old French Harpsichord Pieces' (Review) ...	26	Dunhill, T. Lecture, 'Modern British Chamber Music' ...	367	Open-air Opera and Concerts ...	588, 661
(Review) Welsh Airs and Dances ...	841	Leighton Primitive Methodist Church ...	277	Opéra ...	660, 806
Moldeswitsch, M. Orchestral Concerts ...	788	Williams, Dr. Vaughan ...	441	Opéra-Comique ...	660
Mold Parish Church, New Organ at ...	751, 858	Lecture, 'A Musical Nation' ...	441	Opera in the Provinces ...	206
Monte Carlo, Opera Season at ...	206	Newman, Ernest, 'The Piano-Player and its Music' (Review) ( see Correspondence, 44) ...	273	Opera v. Cinema ...	515
Moody, Charles H. Lecture, 'The Future of Church Music' ( see 577) ...	503	Newman, Robert, Annual Concert ...	28	Representative Concerts ...	443
Moorat, Joseph, 'Humpty Dumpty,' and other Songs (Review) ...	25	Newton, Ernest, 'Robin Hood' (Review) ...	628	Revivals ...	61
Moore, Harold, Cantata, 'The Darkest Hour' ...	355	Nicholson, Sydney H., 'The Relation of Church Music to the Musical Life of the Nation' ...	359	Teaching in Public ...	206
Morley College Students, Purcell's 'Masque of Dioclesian' ...	426	Nikisch, Arthur ...	131, 372	The Coming Season ...	806
Morley, Louis J., 'The Prince of Kulav' ...	284	Noceti, Jean, 'Summary of Daily Technique' (Review) ...	700	Parry as Song-writer. By H. C. Colles ...	82, 155, 235
Morris, Herbert C., Appointment ...	791	Norman-Parker, Phyllis, Three Songs (Review) ...	628	Parry, Hubert English Lyrics, 11th and 12th Sets (Review) ...	25
Morris, Rev. W., Meredith (Obituary) ...	280	North Devon Choral Union ...	505	— Toccata and Fugue, 'The Wanderer' (Review) ...	175
Moult, Thomas, Concerts and Critics ...	230	Northampton, Primrose Hill Choir ...	807	Pascal, André, 'Pastorale,' for Violin and Pianoforte (Review) ...	265
Moulton, Dorothy, Recitals ...	566, 847	Northcott, Richard, 'The Life of Sir Henry Bishop' (Review) ...	621	Patron's Fund, Royal College of Music ...	29, 269, 863
Muck, Karl ...	131, 309	Norwich, Music in ...	61, 590	— List of Works performed ...	567
Municipal Concerts in London, By George Lane ...	479	— Handel Society ...	61, 590	Patti, The Reign of. By Herman Klein (Review) ( see 483) ...	115
Murdoch, William, and Albert Sammons Murgrove, Cyril F. (Obituary) ...	770, 722	Note on Rameau, A. By Camille Saint-Saëns ...	771	Patti, The Art of. Lecture by Herman Klein ...	483
Music and Letters ...	373, 775	Notice to Secretaries of Choral Societies ...	61	Payling, Madame Lily. At the Royal Albert Hall ...	295
Music and the Romantic Movement in France, By Arthur Ware Locke ...	40	Nottingham and District, Music in ...	56	Pearce, Dr. C. W., M.A., honoris causa , conferred on ...	647
Music at the Cinema (Correspondence) ...	120, 190	— 129, 202, 290, 367, 441, 511, 729, 801, 870		Pemberton, Canon (Obituary) ...	271
Music Club Meeting ...	183	— Choral and Orchestral Societies ...	290	People's Palace Symphony Concerts ...	796, 847
Music Clubs in France ...	206	— Coming Season ...	729	Performing Fees ...	9
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi 334, 416, 487, 558, 625, 694, ...	775, 838	— Derby Road, Baptist Church, Choir Festival Services ...	42	Permanent Opera in English (Correspondence) ...	46, 119
Music of the 16th Century and To-day, By C. M. Smith-Dodsworth ...	620	— High Pavement Chapel ...	355	Perth Choral Society ...	271
Music of Thomas Hardy. By F. Hadland Davis ...	255	Novak, 'In the Tatra Mountains' ...	178	Peterborough Cathedral—Post of Organist ...	718
— (Correspondence) ...	434	Novello Choir 121, 351, 435, 627, 789, 853, 877		— Choral Union and Orchestral Society ...	430
Music Society, The ...	733	Novello Songs—Vol. IV. (Review) ...	176	Petersfield, Literary and Debating Society ...	295
Musical Association, The, Papers at: 'A Corelli Forgery' ( see 720, 86r) ...	652	Okehampton Choral Society ...	351	Petherick, Leila, Concert ...	435
Eggar, Katharine, 'The Subconscious Mind and the Musical Faculty' ...	193	Old Italian Music at the British Museum ...	414	Petryrek, Felix, Cramer, Eight Studies (Review) ...	701
Nicholson, Sydney H., 'The Relation of Church Music to the Musical Life of the Nation' ...	359	'Old Vic.' The ... 31, 115, 184, 496, 789		Philharmonic Choir 27, 178, 183, 267, ...	723
Pitcher, R. J., 'Hand Development for the Performer' ( see 860) ...	582	— An Appeal ...	836	— Scriabin, 'Prometheus' ...	267
Pulver, Jeffrey, 'The Viols in England' ...	58	— 'Elijah' ...	184	Philharmonic Orchestra 27, 29, 114, 178, ...	183, 267
Stanford, Sir Charles Villiers, 'Some Recent Tendencies in Composition' ...	280	— Prince Ferelon' (Nicholas Gatty) ...	496	Philharmonic Quartet ...	343
Van den Borren, Charles, 'The Genius of Dunstable' ...	654	— 'Traviata' ...	184	Phillips, Montague, Four Salon Pieces, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	840
Musical Press, The ...	705	— 'Tristan' ...	175	— Romantic Light Opera, 'The Rebel Maid' ...	270
— (Correspondence) ...	856	Ongar Congregational Church ...	355	Pianola Music, By Edwin Evans ...	761
Musical Times, 1922, Editorial Note ...	827	Opera, Co-operative ...	568	Pianomaker, The, 'A Personal Note' ...	661
— Competition Result ...	24	Opera in London, By Francis E. Barrett ...	30, 115, 183, 270, 427, 496, 848	Pitcher, R. J., 'Hand Development for the Performer' ...	582
Musicians' Bookshelf, The 32, 115, 273, ...	415, 621	Opera, Provincial, in France ...	569	— Lectures ...	207, 807
Musicians' Company and The Royal Albert Hall Jubilee, The ...	475	Operas of Balfe, The (Correspondence) ...	793	Pizzetti, Sonata in A, for Pianoforte and Violin (Review) ...	338
Mutual Error, By Sydney Grew ...	19	Orchestral arrangement of Bach's Organ Sonatas (Correspondence) ( see 89) ...	188	'Place of Music in a Liberal Education. The.' Lecture by Sir Henry Hadow ...	697
Mylchreest, Mrs. Recital ...	495	Orchestral Music in East London ...	794	Plea for Cathedral Lay-Clerks, A (Correspondence) ...	189
Namara, Madame, at the Albert Hall ...	566	Orfèbre, 'Laudi Francescane' ...	206	Pollitt, Arthur W., 'The Enjoyment of Music' (Review) ...	416
National Council for Music in Wales, Second Annual Conference ...	652	Organ Recitals ( see Recitals).		Port Talbot, Dyffryn Chapel Choir ...	430
National Eisteddfod, The, By Alfred Kalisch ...	618	Organ, The, New Quarterly ...	576, 791	Porte, J. F., 'Sir Charles Stanford' (Review) ...	844
National Institute for the Blind, Recitals ...	355	Organ Works of Bach, The, By Harvey Grace ...	12, 88, 161, 240, 326, 405, 472, 544	— 'Sir Edward Elgar' (Review) ...	622
National Union of Organists' Associations: Annual Congress ...	705	— (Correspondence, 279) ...		Portsmouth, Music in 129, 202, 291, 368, ...	511, 586, 658, 729, 801, 870
Neville, Charles, Recital at Manchester New Light on Early Tudor Composers, By W. H. Grattan Flood: ...	366	Organists' Benevolent League, Eleventh Annual Report ...	354	— Coming Season ...	729, 801
XIV. Richard Bramston ...	17	Organists of St. Olave's, Southwark (Correspondence) ...	651	Potter, J. C., Appointment ...	130
XV. Richard Hygons ...	166	Organists on Holiday (Correspondence) ...	579	Poussinov, M. Lef., 'Quand il pleut' (Review) ...	781
XVI. William Whytbrooke ...	246	Organs and Organists at Paris, By A. M. Henderson ...	631	— Recitals 183, 269, 346, 495, 788, 848
XVII. Thomas Knight ...	331	Organs and Organists of St. Olave's, Tooley Street, Southwark, By Andrew Freeman ( see 651) ...	573	— The Pilgrims' (Review) ...	622
XVIII. Thomas Ashwell ...	408	Organs at Farm Street Church, The (Correspondence) ( see 50r) ...	579	Present Place of Musical Theory, The, By Arthur L. Salmon ...	165
XIX. Richard Davy ...	552	Oriana Madrigal Society's Concerts 114, 121, 350, 566		Preston Choral Society ...	121
XX. John Redford ...	617	Orton, Albert, Presentation ...	576	Programme Notes: Paul Howard, Adelaide, Australia ...	23
XXI. Robert Jones ...	689	Ottawa Oratorio Society ...	351	Prokofiev ...	29
XXII. Nicholas Ludford ...	837	Oxford, Music in ...	57, 290, 511	— 'Chout' ...	499
New Organ for Westminster Cathedral, The, By J. Stuart Archer ...	353	Pachulski, H. Seven selected pieces, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	840	'Psychology applied to Music Teaching,' By Mrs. Curwen (Review) ...	32
New Queen's Hall Orchestra ...	270	Palace Theatre, Swedish Ballet ...	31	Puccini, Giacomo, Family History ...	132
New Translation of Forkel's 'Bach,' By Prof. Sanford Terry (Review) ...	40	Palestrina Memorial, The ...	877	Pulver, Jeffrey, 'The Viols in England,' Musical Association Lecture ...	59
New York, Music in ...	874	Par and District Choral Society ...	355, 500	Purcell, 'Masque of Dioclesian' at Brook Green ...	426
— Bach Choir, The, ...	56, 128, 202, 289, 367, 441, 657, 801, 869	Paris, Music in 60, 205, 294, 371, 443, 515, ...	588, 660, 732, 806, 875	— Suite for Strings, Edited by Albert Cates (Review) ...	177
— Bainton, Edgar L., 'Before Sunrise' ...	367	Ali Khan, the Indian Tenor ...	60	Quarry, W. Edmund, Dictionary of Musical Compositions and Composers (Review) ...	775
Newcastle, Cathedral Congregational Hymn Practices ...	791	Assorted Concerts ...	205	Queen's Cross Church ...	42
		Cercle Interallié, 'Tacful Concerts' ...	205	Queen's Hall, Eugène Goossens's Concerts ...	846
		Cercle Musical Universitaire, 'Lully' Concert ...	294
		Dupont's 'Antar' ...	371
		Gailhard, André, 'Arlequin' ...	371
		Grovez, Gabriel, 'Maimouna' ...	444
		Jean Rioux's 'Le Cocq a chanté' ...	732
		Lamoureux Concerts ...	206, 876
		Margaret d'Alvarez's Article, 'English v. Foreign names' ...	60
		Messenger, 'La Petite Fonctionnaire' ...	515, 660

	Page		Page		Page
Queen's Hall Orchestra, New ...	270	Rome, Music in ( contd. ) ...		'St. Matthew' Passion in Spanish, The
—Promenade Concerts. Orchestral		Caseella. 'Pupazzetti' ...	444	(Correspondence)...	356
Pieces:		Coates, Albert, at the Augesteum ...	371	St. Michael's, Cornhill. Bach Recital
'Coronach' (Santolico) ...	626	Commemoration of the sixth Anni-		and a Musical Festival ...	854
'Crepusculo sul Mare' (Santolico)	626	versary of Dante's Death ...	589	Choral Society ...	42
Elgar programme ...	703	Costanzi, The ...	132, 444	Recitals ...	42
Fantasy for Strings on a Theme of		Ernest Bloch. Biographical Note ...	61	St. Michael's, Croydon. Patronal
Tallis' (Vaughan Williams)...	703	Folk-Songs of Sardinia ...	372	Festival ...	855
Impressions of a Windy Day' (Dr. Malcolm Sargent) ...	789	Holy Week ...	372	St. Patrick's (R.C.) Cathedral, Armagh.
'Les Propous des Beuveurs' (Van Dieren) ...	703	How 'Lohengrin' came to Italy ...	60	By W. Wooding Starnmer ...	827
'Mélée Fantastique' (Arthur Bliss) ...	789	Mascagni, Pietro. 'Piccolo Marat'	444	St. Stephen's, Bow. Dedication of
Orchestral Overture: 'Love and Light' (Rutland Boughton) ...	788	Nikisch, Arthur ...	372	Organ ...	355
'Paracelsus' (Edgar Bainton)...	703	Opera at the Stadium ...	589	St. Stephen's-in-Brannell. Choir Festi-
'Perfume of the Oasis in the Sahara, The' (Santolico) ...	789	Orefice. 'Laudi Francescane' ...	206	tival ...	505
Pianoforte Concerto in E flat (Ysáye)	626	Philharmonic Society ...	207	Saint-Saëns, Camille. False Master-
'Planets, The' (Three movements)...	626	Popular Opera at the Stadium ...	589	pieces of Music, The ...	687
'Prelude and Call' from 'Mary Rose' (Norman O'Neill) ...	788	Rabaud, Henri. 'Maruf' ...	132	Liszt, the Pianist...	623
'Promised Land, The' (Jarnéfelt) ...	626	Setaccioli. New Clarinet Sonata ...	294	The ...	553
Second Pianoforte Concerto (Montague Phillips) ...	703	Steffani, Augustus. 'Stabat Mater' ...	372	Musical Memories (Review) ...	415
Violin Concerto (O'Connor Morris) ...	788	Strauss. 'Alpine Symphony' ...	132	Note on Rameau, A ...	771
Symphony Concerts 27, 114, 177, 178, 268, 340, 425, 489, 722, 789, 846		Toscanini Orchestral Concerts ...	61	'Samson and Delilah' ...	31, 191
British Music ...	630, 722	Trucchi, Luigi. Solo violinist with an artificial arm ...	514	Salisbury Cathedral. Eleventh Festival of
Coming Season ...	722	Vittadini, Franco. 'Anima Allegra' ('A Happy Soul') ...	444	of Salisbury, Winchester, and
Russian Music ( see 566) ...	489	Winter Concert Season ...	133	Chichester Cathedral Choirs ( see 855)	790
Schreker, Franz. 'Prelude to a Drama' ...	265	Ronald, Landon. 'The Garden of Allah' Röntgen, Julius. 'Boorish' Suite ...	293	Salmon, Arthur L. Concert-Room
Sibelius. Fifth Symphony ...	177	Overture to an Old Dutch Comedy ...	293	Song, The ...	11
Sibelius. Third Symphony ...	268	Rosénbloom, Sydney. Four Songs (Review) ...	25	Present Place of Musical
Quef, Charles. 'Désespoir,' for Organ (Review) ...	418	Postlude, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	840	Theory, The ...	165
Quilter, Roger. 'Children's Overture,' for Pianoforte (Review) ...	113	Serenade, 'Sous le Beau Ciel' (Review) ...	740	Salmon, Doris. Recital ...	29
'Moonlight on the Lake,' for Pianoforte (Review) ...	423	Rosenstock, Josef. Sonata (Review) ...	801	Salmon, Joseph. Recitals ...	28, 427
Songs:		Rosenthal, Moritz. Recitals, &c. 114, 132, 183, 788, 848		Salmond, Felix ...	28, 183
'Barbara Allen' (Review) ...	841	Rosing, Recitals ...	183, 269, 847	Salteni-Mochi, Madame. Recital ...	29
'Drink to me only with thine eyes' (Review) ...	783	Ross-on-Wye Parish Church. New Organ at ...	277	Sammons, Albert ...	183, 466
'Jolly Miller, The' (Review) ...	841	Rosse, Madame Jennie Quinton, of Dublin (Obituary) ...	126	and William Murdoch ...	270
'Over the Mountains' (Review) ...	783	Rotterdam Carillon, The ...	723	Samuel, Harold. Recitals ( see 495)	495, 847
'Three Pastoral Songs' (Review) ...	628	Roussel, Albert. 'L'accueil de Muses' (Review) ...	423	Sapellnikov, W. Gavotte, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	840
'We be three poor Mariners' (Review) ...	783	Rovelli. 'Classical Studies' (Review) ...	177	Sardinia, Songs and Singers of (Lecture). By Prof. Gabriel ...	372
Quinlan Symphony Concerts ...	114, 269	Rowley, Alec. 'Andante Religioso' (Review) ...	418	Sauret, Emile, Rovelli, Classical Studies (Review) ...	177
Rabaud, Henri. 'Maruf' ...	133	'Kew Gardens Scenes' (Review) (Review) ...	630	Veracini, Sonata in B minor (Review) ...	177
Rachmaninov. 'The Bells' ...	365	Royal Academy of Music 47, 191, 281, 429, 507, 581, 652, 795, 862		Wieniawski, Polonaise in A (Review) ...	177
Railway Clearing House Musical Society	350	Awards ...	48, 287, 429	Scales and Tonality (Correspondence)	859
Ramblers' Club in Wardour Street, A	191	Mendelssohn Scholarship ...	446	Scarborough Festival, The ...	61, 121
Rare Instrument, A (Correspondence) 651, 721		Royal Albert Hall ...	29, 114	Seceats, Godfrey. Edition of Merbecke and Dumont (Review) ...	843
Ravel, Fantasia, 'La Valse' ...	425	and the Royal Choral Society		Schäfer, Dirk. Chopin Interpreter 131, 369
Poème Chorégraphique, 'La Valse' (Review) ...	175	Jubilee. By Herman Klein ( see 358, 485, 507) ...	229, 313, 393	Scharrer, Irene. Recitals ...	29, 269
Rawlins, Bessie. Recital ...	847	Programme of Jubilee Concert ...	399	Schmitt, Florent. New Violin Sonata
Rawlinson, Harold. 'Barbellion' on Music ...	247	Royal Amateur Orchestral Society (Correspondence) ...	358	A la Mémoire de Claude Debussy' (Review) ...	423
Recitals 42, 118, 187, 278, 355, 432, 505, 577, 647, 718, 791, 855		Royal Choral Society:		Scholes, Percy. 'Learning to listen by means of the Gramophone' (Review) ...	845
Reed, W. H. Quartet No. 5 (Review) ...	627	Carol Concert ...	121	Schreker, Franz. 'Prelude to a Drama,' at Queen's Hall ...	268
Rees, Llewellyn (Obituary) ...	507	Forthcoming Season ...	723	Schubert. 'Wanderer Fantasia' (Liszt's Edition) (Review) ...	175
Reiser, Alois. Quartet (Review) ...	627	Jubilee ( see 358, 485, 507) ...	229, 313, 393	Schumann's Eulogy of Beethoven (Correspondence)...	357
Renoir, Auguste. By Ambroise Vollard (Review) ...	570	Jubilee Concert programme ...	399	Scott, Cyril. American Tour ...	202
'Répertoire Collignon' (Review) ...	176	Resignation of Sir Frederick Bridge...	757	Pianoforte works by:
Respighi, Ottorino. Fountains of Rome ...	178	Resignation of Mr. Augustus Littleton from the Committee ...	758	'Ballad' (Review) ...	264
Reynolds, W. B. 'Deirdre's Lament' Rhéné-Baton. Sonata, for Pianoforte and Violin, in G (Review) ...	49	'Samson and Delilah' ...	191	'Young Hearts,' 2nd Book (Review) ...	26
Three Pianoforte Pieces (Review) ...	423	Stanford's 'At the Abbey Gate' ...	270	Songs:
Rhythm in Hymn-Tunes. By C. F. Abdy Williams ...	275	Royal College of Music ...	508, 581, 851, 863	'Have ye seen him pass by?' (Review) ...	841
Rhythm of the Chant, The (Correspondence)...	188	Awards ...	508	'Huckster, The' (Review) ...	841
Rimsky-Korsakov. Ballet, 'Scheherazade' ...	295	Royal College of Organists ...	275, 572, 641	'Immortality' (Review) ...	113
Rivarde, Achille. The Violin and its Technique' (Review) ...	265	Royal Corps of Signals March Competition (Correspondence) ...	580	'Watchman, The' (Review) ...	113
Robert Fairfax (Correspondence) ...	580	Royal Philharmonic Society. 110th Season ( see 27, 114, 178, 183, 267)	846	'Water-Lilies' (Review) ...	113
Celebration at St. Albans Cathedral ...	853	Presentation of Gold Medal to Sir Henry Wood ...	851	Scott, Kennedy ...	27
Robert, Vivian ...	269	Rubinstein. Recitals ...	29, 495	Seattle Amphion Society ...	516
Roberts, Varley. 'The Passion' (Review) ...	267	Rummel, Walter Morse. Recitals ...	566, 569	Seidel, Toscha. Recitals...	495, 567
Roberts, W. Wright. 'Jean-Christophe' and the Musical Novel ...	539	Russian Ballet, The. By Francis E. Barrett ( see 568) ...	497, 851	Setaccioli. New Clarinet Sonata ...	295
Robinson, William. Violins ...	877	Russian Song Book (Review) ...	841	Sevick Quartet ...	348
Roger-Ducasse. A modern Classicist. By Alfred J. Swann ...	250	Rutland Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour.' By Robert Lorenz ...	412	Seven Kings Baptist Church Choir ...	187
Barcarolle, 'No. 2' (Review)...	113	Sackbut, The, &c. (Correspondence) ( see 101, 172) ...	189, 279, 357	Sharp, Cecil. Folk-Songs of English origin collected in the Appalachian Mountains' (Review) ...	842
Rome, Music in 60, 132, 206, 294, 371, 444, 514, 568, 661, 733, 806, 876		New Editor ...	630	Sharps and Flats 359, 435, 507, 581, 795, 862
American Academy ...	877	St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Blackhill. New Organ ...	791	Shaw, J. B. (Obituary) ...	722
Amica della Musica Society ...	207	St. Anne's, Soho. Christmas Oratorio ...	855	Shaw, Martin. 'The Principles of English Church Music Composition' (Review) ...	844
Augustine, The 61, 132, 206, 295, 371, 541		St. Chad's, Far Headingley. Recitals... St. Clement Dames Church. Recitals ...	432, 791	Sheeles, John. Hymn, 'The Spacious Firmament' (Review) ...	338
Carabella, Ezio. Seven Symphonic Variations ...	295	St. John's, Hammersmith. Recitals ... St. Mary's-in-the-Wood, Morley. New Organ ...	42, 505	Sheffield, Music in 58, 130, 204, 292, 366, 441, 512, 730, 803, 871
		St. Mary's, Primrose Hill. Recitals ... St. Mary's, Widnes, Choral Society ...	187, 855	British Music Society ...	513, 872
				Coming Season ...	730
				MacCunn, Hamish. 'Border Ballads' ...	441
				MacMillan, E. C. 'England' ...	369
				Subscription Concerts ...	58, 369
				Shore, Royle. 'Cathedral Series of Church Service Music, The' (Review) ...	266
				Magnificat (Fairfax) (Review) ...	629
				Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Review) ...	629, 842
				Lecture ...	791
				Sibelius, Jean ...	268, 282, 283
				Fifth Symphony ( see 268) ...	114, 177

Sibelius, Jean. Ten Pianoforte Pieces (Review) .....	629	Swedish Ballet, The at the Palace Theatre .....	31	Was it really Loellie? (Correspondence) (see 264, 358) .....	434
Twelve Selected Pieces (Review) .....	781	Switzerland. St. John's, Territet .....	42	Webster, Sydney H. 'Recitals' .....	855
Sidgwick, A. H. 'The Promenade Ticket' (Review) .....	622	System in Musical Notation (Correspondence) .....	45, 119, 188	Webster, Eric. 'Vignette' for Pianoforte (Review) .....	423
Siloti, M., at Queen's Hall .....	339	Szegedi, Joseph .....	206	Welbeck Abbey Chapel Choir .....	355
Sixty Years Ago 47, 120, 190, 279, 359, 435, 507, 581, 652, 722, .....	862	Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay (Correspondence) (see 99, 179, 361) .....	189, 279, 357	Welsh Musical Festival at Mountain Ash (see 870) .....	863
Slivinsky, M. Recital .....	495	Technique, The .....	661	Welsh National Eisteddfod, The Reform of the .....	442
Sloane, Dr. E. J. Presentation .....	567	Teignmouth Choral Festival .....	646	Wemyss Select Choir .....	42
Smirnov, M. Recital .....	426	Tenby Oratorio Choir .....	647	Wesley, Rev. Francis Gwynne (Obituary) .....	122
Smith, Dale. Recital at Manchester .....	366	Tenby Parish Church. Welsh Regiment Parade .....	647	West, John E. 'Arrangement of Mendelssohn's 'O for the wings of a dove' (Review) .....	267
Smith, Howard (Obituary) .....	359	Terry, Dr. R. R. Lecture on Old English Music .....	431	Holy Communion in E flat (Review) .....	33
Smith-Dodsworth, C. M. Music of the 16th Century and To-Day .....	620	The Shanty Book (Review) .....	843	Lecture, 'Old English' Organ Music .....	354
Smithsonian Institute, Annual Report of the (Review) .....	40	Terry, Prof. Sanford. New Translation of Forkel's Bach (Review) .....	40	Westbury, George H. 'Twelve Nursery Rhymes and Little Songs' (Review) .....	842
Smyth, Ethel. 'Streaks of Life' (Review) .....	416	The Hymns and Hymn Melodies of the Organ Works, Part 3 of 'Bach's Chorals' (Review) .....	843	Westminster Abbey Choral Society 32, 198, 270, 350, 618 .....	350
Solomon, Recital .....	788	Tetrazzini, Madame. Concert .....	773	What is Antiphonal Singing? By T. Francis Forth .....	645
Some Italian Composers of To-day. By Guido M. Gatti .....	10	Thain, J. O. A Two-Stave Music Ruler, and How to Make it .....	192	White, Felix, Compositions by: Pianoforte: 'Dickens Note Book, A' (Review) .....	423
I. Mario Castelnovo Tedesco .....	93	Thatcher, Reginald S. Four Miniatures, for Pianoforte (Review) .....	175	'Nursery Secrets' (Review) .....	175
II. Franco Alfano .....	158	Thibaud, M. Recitals .....	205	'Golden Slumbers' (Review) .....	424
III. Victor de Sabata .....	244	Thompson, Herbert. Hereford Musical Festival, The .....	847	'Sing, care away' (Review) .....	265
IV. Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli .....	393	Thursfield, Anne. Recitals .....	692	'Thou hast left me ever, Jamie' (Review) .....	424
V. Vincenzo Davella .....	403	Ticerati, Signor. Recital .....	567	Whittaker, W. G. Three Mood Pictures, for Pianoforte (Review) .....	781
VI. Alfredo Casella .....	685	Tilly, Marguerite. Recital .....	848	Who is the greatest Composer? (Correspondence) (see 480) .....	649
VII. Vittorio Gui .....	767	Timaru Orpheus, The (New Zealand) .....	121, 726	Why use Words? (see 861) .....	770
VIII. Vincenzo Tommasini .....	833	Tomblin, Ronald G. Te Deum in A flat (Review) .....	267	Widow Recitals (Correspondence) .....	651
Postludium .....	486	Toronto, Music at .....	806, 877	Wieniawski, Polonaise in A. Ed. by Emil Saurer (Review) .....	177
Some Musical Text-Books (Review) .....	486	Toscanini .....	513	Wilks, Norman. Recitals .....	269
Some Notable English Organs. By J. H. M. Jay (see 579) .....	501	at the Augusteo, Rome .....	61	Williams, C. A. Becket. Decentralisation: An Experience .....	411
Somerville, Reginald. 'David Garrick' .....	31	Tozer, Dr. Ferris. 'Balaam and Balak' .....	438	Williams, C. F. Abdy. 'Rhythm in Hymn Tunes' .....	27
Songs and Song-Translations .....	483	Training School for Music Teachers .....	514	Williams, Gerrard. Concert at Bath, A .....	187
Sonnenberg, Miss. Recital .....	495	Tree, Charles. 'The Importance of Correct Placing of the Voice' (see 433, 578, 649, 720, 693) .....	258	Pot-Pourri' .....	183, 269
Sorabji, Kaikhosru. Sonata No. 1 (Review) .....	788	Tremolo and Ta-ra-ra (Correspondence) (see 434) .....	358	Songs: 'Absence' (Review) .....	113
South London Orchestra, The .....	203	Trevor, Claude. 'Niccolò Jommelli' .....	723	'Aubade' (Review) .....	265
South London Philharmonic Society, The .....	500, 569, 723	Trickett, Sir H. W., Ltd., Choral Society .....	878	'Crooning from Innisfail, The' (Review) .....	265
South Place Institute Chamber Concerts .....	784	Trinity College of Music .....	789, 796, 863	'Dilemma, The' (Review) .....	265
South Staffordshire Musical Festival .....	786	Trowell, Arnold. 'The Waters of Penios' .....	48	'Irish Peasant Love-Song' (Review) .....	424
South Wales, Music in 51, 129, 203, 291, 368, 442, 512, 658, 730, 802, 870 .....	588, 730	Truman, Una. Recital .....	567	'Inconsequent Ballad, An' (Review) .....	265
Coming season .....	588, 730	Tscherepne, N. Eight Selected Pianoforte Pieces (Review) .....	423	'Reflection' (Review) .....	265
Reform of the Welsh National Eisteddfod .....	442	Turret Green Baptist Church .....	355	'Song in Autumn, A' (Review) .....	424
South West Choral Society .....	32, 626	Two-Stave Music Ruler, A, and How to make it. By J. O. Thain .....	192	'Serenade' (Review) .....	113
Southwark Cathedral. Musical Services, &c. .....	118, 187, 277, 790, 855	Unimportance of Incorrect Placing of the Voice, The (Correspondence) .....	720	'This Day, Carol (Review) .....	843
Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association .....	855	Union of Graduates in Music, The. By Arthur T. Froggatt .....	582	'Three Preludes', for Pianoforte (Review) .....	423
Sowerbutts, J. A. 'Caprice', for Organ (Review) .....	418	Van Dresser, Marcia. Recitals 495, 788, 847 .....	495, 788, 847	Williams, Harold. 'Recital .....	183
'Lament', for Organ (Review) .....	26	Vaughan Williams (see Williams). Veracini, J. E. In B minor (Review) .....	177	Williams, Vaughan, and the Bach Choir .....	426
Spain, Music in .....	733	Vernham, J. E. In Memoriam .....	354	English Folk-Songs .....	27
Spanner, H. V. Organ Recitals .....	855	Obituary .....	280	'Lark Ascending', for Violin and Orchestra .....	490
Spanner Dyke Quartet .....	29, 847	Vienna 61, 133, 207, 295, 373, 445, 515, 589, 806 .....	133	Lecture: 'A Musical Nation' .....	441
Spivakovsky, Jascha. Recitals .....	427, 495	Beethoven Festival .....	133	'London' Symphony 27, 49, 114, 194, 287, 436 .....	237
Squire, W. Barclay. 'A Lost Handel Manuscript' .....	690	Bittner, Julius. 'Die Kohlharmerin' .....	445	Wilson, Philip. Recitals .....	847
Stanford, Sir Charles Villiers. 'At the Abbey Gate' .....	270	Korngold. 'Die Tote Stadt' 207, 373 .....	373	Wilson, Stuart. Recital .....	788
Hon. degree, Mus. Doc. Dublin .....	364	Opera Season. List of Works .....	589	Winter, W. J. (Obituary) .....	647
'In modo Dorico' (Review) .....	26	Rimsky-Korsakov. Ballet. 'Scheherazade' .....	295	Wolf-Ferrari. 'The Jewels of the Madonna' .....	31
Lecture. 'Some Recent Tendencies in Composition' .....	280	Village Concerts .....	185	Wombwell and District Choral Society .....	351
Mr. J. F. Porte's Book on .....	844	Village Performance. A. Milton's 'Comus' (Correspondence) .....	651	Wood, Charles. The Passion of our Lord according to St. Mark (Review) .....	267
Starmer, W. Wooding. St. Patrick's (R.C.) Cathedral, Armagh .....	827	Vincent d'Indy's View of Harmony (Correspondence) .....	45	Wood, Sir Henry. International Music Festival at Zurich (see 580) .....	349
Stegall, Reginald. Song, 'Lullaby' (Review) .....	25	Vinden, Maurice. 'If we believe that Jesus died' (Review) .....	662	Presentation of Royal Philharmonic Society's Gold Medal to .....	851
Stein, Leon, of Rome (Obituary) .....	661	Volland, Ambrose. 'Renoir' (Review) .....	570	Woodhouse, George. 'Creative Technique' (Review) .....	795
'Stephenson the Banker, Mr.' (Correspondence) .....	46	Vreuls, Victor. Caprice and Prélude Elégiaque, for Pianoforte (Review) .....	840	Woodhouse, Mrs. Gordon .....	490
Stewart, D. M. Song, 'The West Wind' (Review) .....	628	Walker, Leonard J. Song, 'There's a pathway through the heather' (Review) .....	25	Woodman, Flora. Orchestral Recital .....	426
Stockport Vocal Union, The .....	123, 351, 723, 873	Wallace, James E. Chorale Fantasia, for Organ (Review) .....	176	Woods, W. Smith. Retirement .....	61
Stohr, Richard. 'Profils de jeunes filles' (Review) .....	701	Walshe, The Most Rev. Dr., of Dublin (Obituary) .....	364	Would you like the post? (Correspondence) .....	794
Stoke-on-Trent Choral Society .....	723	Walton, Herbert. Recitals .....	791	Wright, Frank. 'Musical Examination' (Review) .....	486
Stralia .....	176	Wanted: A Musical Club (Correspondence) .....	580	Wrightson, H. J. Elements of the Theory of Music' (Review) .....	486
Strauss. 'Alpine' Symphony .....	133	Ward, William (Obituary) .....	191	Yorkshire, Music in 57, 58, 130, 204, 291, 368, 803, 871 .....	871
Tour .....	133	Warning to London Organists, A (Correspondence) .....	721
Stravinsky, 'Le Sacre du Printemps' (see 566) .....	489	Warring Schools (Correspondence) (see 263) .....	263
Pulcinella 'd'après Giambattista Pergolesi' (Review) .....	704	in France (see 358) .....	721
Strolling Players' Orchestra .....	28, 723
Study of Church Music, The (Correspondence) (see 717) .....	792
Subject-Index to Periodicals—Music Section .....	557
Suggia, Madame .....	27
Summer School of Church Music, The .....	277
Diary of a Member (see 858) 706, 793 .....	355, 372
Sutton, Francis W. Recitals .....	355, 372
Swan, Alfred J. A Modern Classicist: Roger-Ducasce .....	250

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 935.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JANUARY 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTIETH SEASON, 1920-1921.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, AT 2.30.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, AT 2.30 P.M.

SAMSON AND DELILAH - SAINT-SAËNS

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. EDWARD HALLAND.
MR. EDMUND BURKE

At the Organ ... MR. H. L. BALFOUR.
Full Chorus and Orchestra.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

LENT-TERM begins Monday, January 10.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, January 22, at 3.

ORGAN RECITAL, Monday, January 31, at 3.

LECTURES by Dr. H. W. RICHARDS, on "Musical History from 1650 to 1750, including the Life Works of Henry Purcell," will be given on Wednesdays, January 26, February 2, 9, and 16, at 3.15.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London." Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The EASTER TERM will commence on MONDAY, JANUARY 10, 1921.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 9th, 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 2nd, 1921.

Written papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or "School") can be obtained on application. Price 1s. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,
14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

New Term begins MONDAY, 10th JANUARY.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students. Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BACH'S CHRISTMAS ORATORIO. Parts I, II, III, at St. Anne's, Soho, with full Orchestra and Organ Saturday afternoon, January 8, at 3.30. Tickets for Nave and West Galleries can be obtained by sending stamped addressed envelope to The Rector, 28, Soho Square, W. 1. (North and South Galleries free.)

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... .. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.)

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS. LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Extracts from Eminent Opinions:

A great pianoforte teacher, OSCAR BERINGER, Esq., Hon. R.A.M.

"Will materially help students and save much time."

The world-renowned pianist, FREDERIC LAMOND, Esq.

"Especially useful for flexibility and development of finger muscles."

A great organist, HERBERT ELLINGFORD, Esq., Mus. Bac., Liverpool Town Hall.

"Invaluable to organists."

The eminent violin teacher, KALMAN RONAY, Esq.

"A great asset to violinists."

The great violinist, M. ZACHAREWITSCH, Esq.

"A great help to me, am never without it."

The renowned 'cellist and teacher, HERBERT WALENN, Esq., F.R.A.M.

"Of value and benefit to students of the 'cello.'"

Send for full particulars.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

Y.M.C.A. MUSIC SECTION.

Chairman: SIR JOHN D. McCURE, LL.D., D. Mus.

Committee: Prof. Percy C. Buck, M.A., D. Mus.; Prof. H. Walford Davies, LL.D., D. Mus.; A. A. Fitzsimmons; Harvey Grace, F.R.C.O.; J. T. Lightwood; Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A., B. Mus.; Percy A. Scholes, B. Mus.; A.R.C.M.; Miss Phoebe M. Walters, A.R.C.M.; Mrs. Z. F. Willis. Secretary: Major J. T. Bavin.

All information regarding its aims and plans for the introduction and maintenance of good music in the Y.M.C.A. as an educational and recreational feature, may be obtained from The Secretary, Y.M.C.A. Music Section, Shakespeare Hut, Malet Street, W.C. 1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition. Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxx. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.

THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.

THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ANNUAL BANQUET, Holborn Restaurant, and INDUCTION SERVICE, St. Dunstan's in the West, Monday, January 31st, 1921.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM, TE DEUM, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

ÆOLIAN HALL.

MISS ALISON KING (SOPRANO).

VOCAL RECITAL, FEBRUARY 22ND, 1921, AT 8.15.

Assisted by Mr. DETTMAR DRESSEL.

At the Piano ... Mr. MANOLIO DI VEROLI.

For terms and vacant dates, please write—

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

Phone: Mayfair 4123. 324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

A. E. MILGROM'S

CONCERT AGENCY.

Recitals, Concerts, &amp;c., arranged. Over 400 artists for Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, &amp;c.

Orchestral Conductors, Instrumentalists, Accompanists, Entertainers, Concert Parties in Costume.

For terms, please write—

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

Phone: Mayfair 4123. 324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

SOUTHERN COUNTIES'
SECOND GRAND SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

EXETER.

MAY 16th to 21st, inclusive (Whitsun Week), 1921.

£450 IN PRIZES. OVER EIGHTY COMPETITIONS.

Chief Event: MALE-VOICE (Whit-Monday),
£100 PRIZE."BOOK OF EVENTS," ready about January 10th.
Post free, 7d.

From Mr. D. CONNIF, 1, Exwick Road, Exeter.

GLASGOW
MUSICAL (COMPETITION) FESTIVAL.

MAY 4TH TO 14TH.

Syllabus, price 6d.; post free, 7d.

From Festival Office, 187, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow.

THREE ARTS CLUB BUREAU.
CONCERT DIRECTION.RELIABLE ARTISTS FOR ORATORIO AND BALLAD CONCERTS.

19a, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.

Mayfair 2000.

THE IDEAL METHOD
OF
MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Berlioz's "Faust," Yorkshire Post, November 5, 1920.—"He enters thoroughly into the part of Mephisto. The keen quality of his voice is so effective that he might almost dispense with the sardonic laughter he frequently interpolates." (Why dispense with a so highly effective and legitimate bit of "painting"?)

AVERAGE LIFE OF SINGING VOICE, 5-10 YEARS.

Mr. Tree in his Lecture-Recitals shows definitely

Why the majority of voices are so soon hors de combat.

The means to 40 or 50 years of vocal life.

Southend "Society," 1920, says:—"The Lecture-Recital was one of the outstanding features of the session, an entertainment replete with instruction and enjoyment. It is of an absolutely unique character, illustrating every phase of articulation, enunciation, expression, and tone.Harrods, Ltd., London, November 16, 1920.—"You not only pulled the biggest audience we have had at any lecture, but you succeeded in justifying such by the intense interest you created."Mr. Huddart, Cockermouth, writes, November 30, 1920.—"As an amateur vocalist of over 30 years' experience, I can testify that although a week has not elapsed since your lecture I have benefited to such an extent that I am amazed at the ease with which I now sing."Mr. Carside, Brighton, writes, December 3, 1920.—"It is difficult to find words enough to express my gratitude for the benefit I have derived from your method."Cockermouth, November 24, 1920. A packed audience.—"The eminent baritone is rendering a great service to the vast army of singers by his lecture-recitals on the art of voice-production. The almost pristine quality of his voice after 30 years' hard work bespeaks for his methods very careful attention."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.).

(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &amp;c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

THE LONDON OPERATIC QUARTET.

MARY ARMSTRONG. WINIFRED WILLIAMSON.

HARRY EDMONDS. CHARLES ROLFE.

OPERA, ORATORIO, AND BALLADS.

Forthcoming Engagements include:"Messiah," "Faust," "Cavalleria Rusticana," and NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE CONCERTS.

All communications to 70, Brentham Way, Ealing, W.

Phone: Purley 91.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIR,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal :

MR. A. MCALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MUS. BAC. ONE FEE MATRIC.
1st M.B. Ex. Final.

COMBINED Guarantee Courses.

1. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
2. A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M.
3. A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
4. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L.
5. B.A. and Mus. Bac.

JOIN THE M.C.C. AND SAVE

TIME AND MONEY

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.)

DIPLOMA PAPER WORK.

Mus.Doc., Mus.Bac., A. and F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. and L.T.C.L.

COURSES ALSO IN

MUSICAL APPRECIATION,
GENERAL MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE,
SINGLE SUBJECTS
(HARMONY, FORM, TEACHING, Etc.).

For Terms, List of Successes, &c.—

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF CAPE-TOWN.

MUNICIPAL ORCHESTRA.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSICAL DIRECTOR AND CONDUCTOR.

The undersigned are authorized to receive applications for this appointment from competent musicians.

Candidates must possess the requisite technical knowledge for the training and conducting of an Orchestra of about fifty performers in the rendering of Symphonies and other Classical Works, and also be able and willing to organize and direct Musical Festivals and Popular Concerts, not only in Capetown but also at the neighbouring Marine resorts, and generally to assist and advise the Council in all musical matters.

The successful candidate will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the Office.

Salary £900 per annum, rising by annual increments of £50, subject to satisfactory service.

First-class passage paid outwards. Three years' agreement. Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, and accompanied by copies of not more than three testimonials of recent date, must be forwarded to the undersigned not later than the 15th January, 1921.

DAVIS & SOPER, LIMITED,

Agents of the Corporation of the City of Capetown.

54, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C. 3.

15th December, 1920.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SOUTHPORT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUSIC MISTRESS REQUIRED in large Girls' Council School. Good executant, voice and pianoforte, desired. Commencing salary according to qualifications and experience, rising by annual increments of £10 to a maximum of £280 per annum. Form of application may be obtained from the undersigned.

WM. ALLANACH, Director of Education.

Education Offices: 2, Church Street, Southport.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.
COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE :—
Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.
"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).
Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

RALPH WILLIAMS (L.R.A.M.)

(TENOR).
Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

WILLIAM BARRAND

BASS (ETON COLLEGE).
Oratorio, Ballads, Lessons.
35, Ragstone Road, Slough; or usual Agents.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.
For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).
8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.
ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.
Pupil of Bachhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.
Lesson in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

DOUGLAS STEVENS (L.R.A.M.)

(TEACHER) ELOCUTION.

"An elocutionist of marked ability and considerable range."—
Morning Post

Terms for Recitals or tuition from—85, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C. 1.
Tel.: Museum 1785.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.
"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.
"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.
"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.
"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.
"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.
"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.
"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.
"Is an acknowledged authority."...—Western Morning News.
"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.
Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

45, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

CH. KENNEDY SCOTT (Conductor of Oriana Madrigal Choir and Philharmonic Choir), says in Musical Times, October, 1920:

"One feature of our study at Brussels I have found of utmost value ever since—Plain-song. . . . It was always important, but it was never more so than to-day, when composers are seeing the beauty of free rhythm and the old modes."

G. HUBI-NEWCORBE

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart"
(Trotière), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti),
"A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" (Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize), "Pedlar of Dreams" (Dr. Herbert Brewer).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS. 1,300 Songs sold.—350 Adaptations.
Librett for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &c.
"OVERBURY," FURZE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-five. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-20 ... 160 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-20 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.

Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Correspond. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

L ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA gives LESSONS IN

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING. Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals. Address 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8 Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 380 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),

specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab. ; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

MEMORY—Miss LILIAS MACKINNON undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.

EXETER CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS' SCHOOL.

There are Vacancies for One CHORISTER and Two PROBATIONERS in the Choir. A trial will be held the first week in January. Prospectuses and form of application to be obtained from The Rev. R. W. B. Langhorne, Choristers' School, Exeter.

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL—Alto Lay-Clerk VACANCY. Stipend £80, plus £20 bonus. Special consideration will be given to ex-Choristers who have served in H.M. Forces, and to any candidate who desires to prepare for Holy Orders. Apply for full particulars to Chapter Clerk, Edgar Tower, Worcester.

TENOR SINGERS WANTED, also leading Lady Soprano. Good sight-readers. Fee paid. Qualifications to "E. M. H.," 22, Sangley Road, South Norwood, S.E. 25.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL—Tenor Lay-Vicar required. Salary £115. Candidates under 30 preferred, and must be Communicants. Copies only, of not more than three testimonials as to character and musical ability, to be sent to The Chapter Clerk, The Close, Salisbury.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER wanted for Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate, N. Very fine modern two-Manual Walker organ. Apply, stating age, experience, qualifications, and salary required, with copies of testimonials, not later than January 8, to the Rev. A. W. Harrison, 13, Jackson's Lane, Highgate, N.6.

ORGANIST required for Congregational Church, Weston-super-Mare. Three-manual organ, electric motor. Apply, stating qualifications, experience, and salary required, to A. H. Hunt, 70, Clifton Road, Weston-super-Mare.

STUDENT of the Royal College of Music desires a POSITION as ASSISTANT CHURCH ORGANIST. Please apply to St. Elmo Selfridge, 84, Guilford Street, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

YOUNG LADY requires position as PIANIST in an Orchestra, or as Accompanist at Dances or Concerts. Miss R. Farman, 72, Rylston Road, Fulham, S.W.6.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE—ORGAN. Very sweet tone. Two manuals, pedals, 4 stops and couplers. Best spotted-metal pipes. Self-contained case. Built by Harrison, Durham. Cost nov. £600. Complete with Hydraulic Engine, £350. Purchaser to remove? Trial, 3, Cambridge Gate, N.W.1, by appointment with Mrs. Fowleraker.

CHAMBER ORGAN, Two-manual, by Monk. Built to specification of late Jas. Higgs, Mus. Bac. 3 stops on Swell, 2 on Great, octave-coupler to pedals, separate pedal couplers to each manual. Pitch-pine case, decorated front. Blown by small motor or hand. To be viewed by appointment. C. H. Watson, 313, High Holborn, London, W.C.1.

FOR SALE—Grand Piano by Erard. Full size. Good as new. Rosewood case. Accept 100 guineas for immediate sale. May be seen by appointment. Apply, by letter in first instance, to "M.," 49, Bellingham Road, S.E.6.

NORMAN & BEARD'S PNEUMATIC ACTION with trackers for pedal attachment to piano, but without pedals. Equal new. £3 accepted. On view, by appointment, at 37, Trevor Square, S.W.7.

FOR SALE—Musical Educator, 5 volumes. New. Edited by John Greig, M.A., Mus. Doc. What offers? 15, Milton Road, Little Ilchester, Wellingborough.

VIOLONCELLO FOR SALE, complete with bow and case. £15. Write "S.," 92, King's Rd., Kingston-on-Thames.

HANDEL—WANTED Letters, early Copies of Works, or authenticated relics of the composer. Flower, Idehurst, Sevenoaks.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (Oakley). Two sets: Nos. 1 to 4 and 5 to 7. Price 2s, each set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

COSMOS CHORAL LEAFLETS.

NEW AND ATTRACTIVE CHURCH CHOIR MUSIC. COMPOSED BY A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS. Tonic Sol-fa and Old Notation combined.

REST AT EVENTIDE (Vesper). "Very Tuneful" ... 1d. each.
GRANT, WE BESEECH THEE (Introit). "Most inspiring" ... 1d. each.
FOURFOLD AMEN. "Charmingly original" ... 1d. each.
THE LORD'S PRAYER (Not a Chant). "Very Devotional" 1½d. each.
Specimens sent post free for three penny stamps. Mention this paper.

A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

GLENHOLME, THE COMMON, HESSLE, E. YORKS.
Publisher of the "Cosmos Series" S. S. Anniversary Music.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

BY
JAMES LYON, MUS. D. (OXON.).

CHAPTERS: I. Introductory; II. Primary Triads, Major or Minor; III. The Secondary Triads; IV. General Information; V. The Inversions of the Diatonic Triads; VI. Sequences; VII. The Dominant Seventh; VIII. Cadences; IX. Modulation Part 1; X. Chromatic Triads; XI. Unessential Notes; XII. Suspensions; XIII. Secondary Chords of the Seventh; XIV. The Dominant Ninth; XV. The Dominant Eleventh; XVI. The Dominant Thirteenth; XVII. Chromatic Fundamental Discords; XVIII. The Augmented Sixth; XIX. Chromatically Altered Chords; XX. Modulation, Part 2; XXI. Pedals; XXII. General Hints.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY
CECIL J. SHARP.

---

SELECTED EDITION.

---

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

---

Price      ...      ...      ...      Eighteen Shillings each.

---

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

January 10th.—Lent Term begins.

January 12th, at 3 p.m.—Inaugural Address will be delivered by the Vice-Chancellor of the University of London, Russell Wells, Esq., M.D., B.Sc. Subject: "Song as a force in History."

January 19th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

January 26th, at 3 p.m.—Prof. SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., will deliver a Lecture on "The Music of the Cries of London in Shakespeare's Time," with illustrations.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CYRIL SCOTT

STRING QUARTET

(SUITE)

1. PRELUDE.      2. PASTORALE.
3. SCHERZO.      4. ELEGY.
5. RONDO RETROSPECTIVO.

(Produced last year by the PHILHARMONIC STRING QUARTET.)

PARTS ONLY, TWELVE SHILLINGS NET.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

STUDENTS' DAILY BREAD

A SERIES OF USEFUL HANDBOOKS FOR ALL
KEEN STUDENTS OF MUSIC.

SECRET OF SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE (SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIQUE). TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF ACQUIRING A BEAUTIFUL VOICE.

LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

HOW TO SING A SONG. LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION. TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF OBTAINING A BEAUTIFUL TONE ON THE VIOLIN. SASS. 9d.

WHAT VIOLINISTS OUGHT TO KNOW. STOEVIING. 9d.

VIOLIN TEXT-BOOK. WICKINS. 9d.

HOW TO LEARN TO READ MUSIC. SEPPINGS. 1s. 3d.

COLLEGIATE MUSIC DICTIONARY. MOORE. 3d.

EXAMINATION TEST-QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. MARCHANT. 9d.

SIMPLE THEORY OF MUSIC. PATES. 6d.

RUDIMENTS AND THEORY OF MUSIC. WICKINS. 9d.

RUDIMENTS OF MUSICAL NOTATION. WESTBROOK. 6d.

MUSICAL SOUND. EDWARD WATSON. 1s. 3d.

SKETCHES OF THE LIVES OF GREAT MUSICIANS. KRAUSS. 6d.

FREE! 100 GRADED VIOLIN PIECES. POSTAGE 2d.

Of any Music Seller.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAPID TUTOR,' GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES'

Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH HARPSICHORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)

2. Petit air tendre ... L. J. Saint-Amans

3. La Bourrée de Vincent ... J. P. Rameau

4. Tambourin Chinois ... E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JANUARY 1 1921

PERFORMING FEES

Why are the greater Elgar works so lacking in the Queen's Hall [Promenade] scheme? Is it a case of high performing fees? I do not know, but if it is, I think Mr. Newman and Sir Henry Wood and Messrs. Chappell should, in the interest of their own reputation, tell us so.

The work [Elgar's Violin Concerto] does not appear at our concerts as often as it should do, mainly, I think, because of the performing fee that is charged. So, at any rate, I was recently told by one of the half-dozen greatest of living violinists, who assured me that he loved the Concerto and would be glad to play it everywhere, but that it was simply impossible for him to pay a fee for the privilege of doing so.

The above extracts from recent articles by well-known musical journalists call for discussion. The conclusions affirmed or implied are (a) that certain of Elgar's orchestral works are neglected; (b) that this neglect is due to the publishers demanding a fee for performance; and (c) that a performing fee is an unjustifiable barrier erected by the publisher between composer and public.

That the works in question receive a good deal less than their due in the way of performance is true enough. (In this they share the fate of some other notable orchestral compositions of native origin.) We may ascribe the neglect to a variety of causes, but the performing fee is not one of them, as can easily be shown. Did any symphony ever receive so many performances within two years of its publication as Elgar's No. 1? Clearly, then, a fee is no obstacle to popularity. It may be argued that the cost of orchestral concerts has more than doubled since that time, and that a fee willingly paid in 1913 is withheld in 1920 on the ground of economy. There is something in this, but not much. That the removal of a fee does not solve the question is proved by the case of Elgar's Violin Concerto. Before the performing fee was taken off in 1914 the work had been very frequently played. It has been rarely heard since. We refrain from arguing on the lines of the quotations at the head of this article, because such argument would lead to the entertaining conclusion that a performing fee increases a work's popularity! We are quite content with being able to show (1) that a fee does not prevent frequent performance, and (2) that its removal does not necessarily increase the vogue of a composition.

And what of the composer's chamber works? No fee has ever been charged for their performance, yet they are not often played.

Comments such as those quoted (and they are frequent, in print and otherwise) clearly suggest that the fee is a kind of unprincipled exaction, whereas it is merely a matter of fair play. The publication of a big orchestral work is a costly affair. When the music is of a degree of difficulty that places it beyond the power of all but our few first-class orchestras, how are composer and publisher to be recouped? Clearly the mere sale of a dozen full scores and sets of band parts will leave them heavy losers. Nobody expects a composer to work for nothing, though he often does so. Nor is it fair to ask publishers to sink capital in a production the sale of which is bound to be negligible, though as a matter of fact they do occasionally act in this unbusinesslike and disinterested way. Obviously the only fair method of paying composer and publisher—or at least of reducing their loss—is that of the performing fee. Nobody objects to the principle when applied in the cases of plays and operas. And in the matter of orchestral music we have not so far heard that Richard Strauss' works have suffered, or are likely to suffer, from the fact that heavy expenses were, and no doubt still are, attached to performances of most of his important works. Perhaps if he and his publishers were British . . .

The publishers concerned in the paragraphs quoted are Messrs. Novello. They therefore ask us to make known the following facts:

- (1.) As Messrs. Novello are not members of the Performing Rights Society, the purchase of new copies of a full score and band parts gives the original purchaser the perpetual right to perform any of their publications, with these exceptions—Elgar's two Symphonies, 'Falstaff,' and the Violoncello Concerto.
- (2.) The performing fee for these four works is on a sliding scale varying with the circumstances of the proposed performance—size of hall, frequency of performance, &c.
- (3.) The fee includes the hire of score and parts.

By the way, we note some slight inconsistency in the writer of the second of the paragraphs quoted. After ascribing the recent neglect of the Violin Concerto to the performing fee (which he mistakenly imagines is still imposed) he says:

I should not be at all surprised, however, if the result of this episode [the performance by Heifetz at the Philharmonic Concert] is a revival of the Concerto.

Nor shall we be surprised. But the revival will be independent of any question of fee, for (we repeat) the restriction was taken off six years ago. Any immediate increase in the number of performances will be due chiefly to the fact of Heifetz having renewed our interest in a work that was unavoidably laid aside during the war. Its re-appearance is somewhat belated, but we know that even in the case of a masterpiece it is far easier to drop out of the repertory than to get back again.

Finally, we are glad to see that the neglect of Elgar's orchestral works is being discussed. As the performing fee cannot well be blamed, there must be other reasons. We have heard two put forward:

- (1.) Audiences don't want them;
- (2.) Conductors won't play them.

The writers quoted above will be doing a real service to British music by pursuing an inquiry along these lines,—especially the second.

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

BY GUIDO M. GATTI (Turin)

INTRODUCTION

I am glad of this opportunity for presenting to the English public a series of sketches of the more important of Italy's contemporary composers. The opportunity is the more welcome because, in addition to explaining some of the features of our musical life, such articles will, I hope, help English readers to a juster estimation of Italian composers. At present the tendency everywhere outside Italy is to attach undue importance to the writers of a few phenomenally successful operas.

The future of Italian music is in the hands of a large group of composers, each with his own ideals, and in some cases with an outlook antipathetic to that of his fellows. For this reason it would be misleading to regard them as a school. And to call them 'the Italian School' would be specially unfortunate, in that it would perpetuate a memory we desire to efface—that of the melodramatists, who for a good many years unworthily represented Italian music to the rest of Europe. Above all, however, such wholesale classification would do a good deal less than justice to composers whose outlook is so strongly personal. The Latin individualism is much more lively in Italy than elsewhere, and Italian artists are as a rule disinclined to group themselves in little coteries. Moreover, our decentralisation prevents our musical activities from being an affair chiefly of the capital, as is the case in France, for instance. Many of the important Italian towns are centres of more or less intensive musical life, with certain characteristics that are reflected in the works of the composers who live there, and who are often the animating force behind local activities.

Thanks to these men, we have reached a stage already rich in results, and even richer in promise. The process has not been sudden or dramatic; it owes much to a little band of patient forerunners, and much also to the revival and strengthening of the national consciousness. Last, but far from least, we have to thank the awakened interest in, and study of, the musical past of Italy—a past whose glory is fully revealed only when fetishism is thrust aside and calm valuation put in its place.

Until lately our true musical tradition has been forgotten—the expressive and melodious song of Monteverde, the purity of Caldara, the infinite variety of Scarlatti and Corelli, the unrestrainable liveliness of the Neapolitan comic opera; of Cavazzoni, Michelangelo Rossi, and Frescobaldi; of the divine Palestrina, who from the arid stone of Flemish polyphony built and raised skywards his shining and living cathedrals of sound. These glories were forgotten when, for a variety of causes, social and political, as well as artistic, Italy suddenly confined her musical activities to the theatre and left all the other fields to the foreigner.

During the eighty years that elapsed between the French Revolution and the proclamation of Rome as the capital of the kingdom (1789-1870) not one important musical work outside the field of opera was produced in Italy. (Cherubini and Clementi at first sight appear to disprove this statement. Rather do they prove it, for the greater part of their work was done in France and England respectively.)

Then came the Verdian melodrama, in which all is vocalisation and gesture, and in which the development of dramatic action, the delineation of character, and the quest for the musical value of the text are sacrificed to the impetuous lyrical impulse. But the melodrama of Verdi speedily exhausted itself in sterile recapitulation. After the historic cycle of the Italian risorgimento it declined rapidly. Of little service, too, was the Wagnerian parenthesis (fortunately brief)—a parenthesis which comprised the last survivors of the Romantic period.

In the closing years of the century came the first gleams of the dawn. The sense of spiritual uneasiness and the desire for more breathing space expressed itself in symphonic efforts—often formal and technical. Soon, however, the pioneers began to throw off the German tradition—the first of our foreign musical tyrannies, endured as an escape from the not less heavy tyranny of our operatic convention.

Sgambati (1843), fired by Liszt, resisted the call of the opera-house and devoted himself to abstract music; but neither he nor Martucci (who may be called the Italian Brahms), nor M. E. Bossi, nor G. Orefice, nor L. Sinigaglia escaped northern influence. Their numerous and often admirable compositions have been useful mainly in leading a somewhat reluctant public towards an appreciation of pure music—not a light task, in view of the hold obtained by the bourgeois melodrama of Mascagni and Puccini.

With the end of the 19th century arose a new star in Debussy, followed by a number of composers skilful and cultivated to a degree hitherto rare among musicians. This group influenced all Europe more or less—Italy decidedly more. But our young Italian composers, though they were perhaps the first to be fascinated by the new light from France, were also the first to shake off anything like undue influence.

Nevertheless the Italian composers of fifteen or twenty years ago derived great benefit from Debussy's work. It opened the window of the heavily romantic 18th century musical edifice, substituting new tonalities for the chromatic-diatonic unimodality, and injecting a new rhythmic sense. But through the open window entered, with these invigorating novelties, the heavy scent of the epicurean and restless cities, and much of this impressionism soon found opponents among the young composers who were striving for the liberation of Italian music.

Such liberation can be brought about only by simultaneous negation and construction—negation of all that is foreign to the spirit and genius of our race; construction of an idiom new, but yet deriving from the voices and æsthetics of our past.

During the last ten years we have seen arise in our midst a group of composers who have no cause to fear comparison with those of other countries. A few are already mature; others are as yet in the stages of development, but already showing strong personal characteristics. We may at last claim that Italy is cultivating all the forms of music. Chamber and orchestral music have now as many adherents as the opera. If the public at home and abroad does not yet know and appreciate the works of these men, it is because our organizations for the performance of such compositions are few and imperfect. Moreover, the publishers (especially those whose interest it is to prolong the operatic phase of our musical history) do little to help these disinterested composers. This is a practical difficulty that we hope will soon be overcome. At present we must look to the small and discerning public that in this as in all movements is as a leaven slowly working in the mass.

So much by way of prelude. When we have passed in review our group of composers, we shall, I hope, perceive that, despite the fact of their being strongly individualistic rather than members of a school, they nevertheless show sufficient traits in common to enable us to grasp the general physiognomy of contemporary Italian music.

(To be continued.)

THE CONCERT-ROOM SONG

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON

It cannot be denied that the kind of song now popular in concert-room and drawing-room is in some respects an advance on that which was loved by our parents and grandparents; and yet it must be deplored that the popular taste still runs to the inartistic. The old song, with its usually unvaried three stanzas of psalm-tune type, was too subservient to its words and yet not sufficiently interpretative. It clung to its verses almost as rigidly as the common congregational hymn, which, of necessity perhaps, pursues its way stolidly through five or six stanzas of fluctuating and changing emotion. Even with this stereotyped form we know that something can be done when the emotion and sentiment are genuine, when there is sincerity behind it; and while we do not call it artistic, we may be almost tempted to say that it can rise to something greater than art. Similarly it was possible for the conventional song to accomplish great things at times. Perhaps the folk-song and its congeners must stand in a different class; such songs, let us say, as 'Annie Laurie' or the 'Banks of Allan Water' have a permanent appeal, and never grow old. They are pure lyric, and do not seem to be hampered by the restrictions of their form. The change of emotion that the actual notes do not supply has to be given by the singer; in 'Allan Water,' for instance, the first verse is entirely gay, the last utterly sad, but the music is the same. This song, however, and many others that could be quoted, are in a class by themselves, like the popular ballads of a countryside, and do not call for criticism; we need not say they are above it, but they are outside of it—they are humanly true, authentic, enduring. They seem to have been born rather than made. With the made song on similar lines the case is different; we have a right to criticise it, as we may criticise all conscious and deliberate art or artifice. And we recognise gladly enough that this pattern has almost entirely been abandoned of late years. Its prevalence was perhaps chiefly broken by Sullivan, though something must be said for the work of such earlier song-writers as Bishop, Balfe, and Hatton. Sullivan himself, in some of his first efforts, was guilty of the 'psalm-tune' method, but he broke loose from it, largely by introducing variety in his accompaniments. In his immensely successful 'Lost Chord' it will be noticed that the change from verse to verse is rather in the accompaniment than in the melody; and this song, not absolutely without merit, is a standing example of what the public loves. It is written to sentimental clap-trap that means nothing or anything, but there is just enough definite emotion to make the average listener feel devout and good, and its meaning or lack of meaning could be grasped by the utterly unmusical—that is to say, by the vast majority of hearers. Such was the taste of an age that loved the compositions of 'Claribel,' Virginia Gabriel, Blockley, and that was raised to pious ecstasy by 'The Better Land.' These things are 'back numbers' now. Sullivan survives, of course, though with dwindling reputation; there was certainly some real genius behind the immense bulk of often second-rate stuff that he produced. But the song-writer of to-day has passed on to other methods, and in many instances to a fuller realisation of what the art of song-writing demands.

Such changes begin at the top and work downwards. Composers, and the better class of listener, were greatly influenced by the songs that came to us from the Continent. It was wholly impossible to compare such work as that of Schubert and Schumann, Robert Franz, Brahms, Loewe, Wolf, Reger, with the product that had satisfied the English concert-goer; Germany was putting us to shame. For one thing, the words were different, and the words of a song are mainly important, not for their literary value, but as setting the key, prompting the sentiment. Thought-laden poetry is not desirable, nor is perfection of form a necessity; but lyrics such as Goethe, Heine, Lenau, could give alike perfection of form and perfection of emotion—the one desirable thing. They did not gush with false or shoddy sentimentality; their emotion was true and pure. Even this would not have been enough, but the musicians who handled them were artists of equal sincerity. The song was no longer subservient to its words, but was interpretative of them; the two things became as one—the emotion of the poet was the emotion of the composer, and the scope of the music was limited not by the external form but by the inward feeling. A real lyric should suggest and intimate, not describe; these lyrics suggested an authentic emotion and then became more or less negligible because they had done their work.

We must not suppose that a good song should be simply a rendering or interpretation of the verses; in a certain sense it must pass beyond this, using the words as stepping-stones. It must carry on the words' suggestiveness into that region which transcends the articulate. Admitting that music at its highest is wordless, the verse has still its vital use as a sign-post, an indication. Yet this same sign-post followed by different temperaments, may lead in directions that appear widely unlike, as we find in settings of the same lyric by different composers. For instance, we may compare Loewe's version of the 'Erl-King' with that of Schubert; the latter is almost purely lyrical, Loewe's is essentially dramatic. In both we get the emotion, the idea that the words have suggested; and in listening the actual words do not matter much, as they matter when we read them quietly as a poem. But we shall find that they matter more in the dramatic rendering than in the lyrical. An entirely lyric song passes almost into wordlessness; as we find in Grieg's familiar Solveig's Song, where at the most poignant moment the music actually becomes wordless. May we not say that this manner of treatment, where the composer is inspired but not enslaved by his words, is distinctive of the truly artistic song, and that it has not often been attained by English song-writers? It would be invidious to particularise the successful songs that at this moment hold the ears of the British public; it would be unwise to speak too critically of the novelties that are ordinarily presented at the popular ballad-concerts. We can frankly recognise that many of these reach a higher level than was common half-a-century since; many reveal a transitional groping towards a more pure artistic expression. But the song that is really popular, that wins a circulation of hundreds of thousands, that brings a fortune to its composer or its publisher, is a song whose human appeal may be genuine enough but whose artistic value is actually nil. We must not sneer at those who enjoy these songs as adequately interpretative of their own emotions; just as we should not sneer at those readers who prefer Ella Wilcox to Wordsworth. The demand is there; it will be satisfied whether we like it or not—and in fact it has every right to be satisfied. But we ourselves have also every right to judge its product by a standard other than that of the million; and we have every right to hope that some day the public will reach higher perceptions of pure musical utterance. There are necessarily many gradations of taste, all with their legitimate demand—except where that demand is absolutely vicious and hurtful; and it is probably useless to expect that the general taste will reach the standard that we term classical. But surely the present level is a little lower than it need be. It is not that the British composer cannot write good songs, though his main tendencies have not been in that direction; there are many songs of genuine artistic quality that have been published but remain comparatively unknown, and many others, we may be sure, that find no chance of publication because publishers are business-men who will not sink money in a non-paying investment. In the book-world at this moment we hear that the new writer has no chance, because, with costs so high as they are now, publishers will venture only on the known author whose name itself will ensure remunerative sale. This has always been the case with the composer, and to-day it is more so than ever. Thus that which should be a purely artistic question becomes hopelessly involved with matters of finance; and it is undeniable that under existing conditions the artistic song does not pay. Even if published, it has little opportunity for being heard; the popular singers prefer songs that bring fees and royalties. There is a constant temptation to those who know and can do better, to provide what is likely to find a market. We have to fall back on the consoling thought that only the weaker-kneed will yield to this lower lure, and that the ultimate loss to music may not be great. The true writer, the true composer, thinks of himself first; he has the sublime egotism that demands its own expression, its own utterance; any question of listeners or readers is really secondary. That is an entire truth, and all good work brings its reward to him who does it. But when the production is achieved, why should those who might appreciate and love it be deprived of their enrichment?

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from December number, page 810)

BY HARVEY GRACE

IV.—THE LATER WEIMAR PRELUDES AND FUGUES—continued.

The Toccata in F is one of the finest of the big preludial movements. Like the Dorian work it has neither the brilliance nor the rhapsodical quality we usually associate with the title. Instead there is immense and unflagging vigour, a spacious design, and a power of development that even Bach himself rarely if ever exceeded.

Continuous as the work is, one thinks of it as being in two parts. The canonic sections and the pedal solos fill 168 bars, the remaining 270 being concerned with development. We are apt to overlook the daring shown in the long introduction. It is a bold step to open a work with a long canon (55 bars) over a pedal point, followed by a pedal solo of 25 bars. Even bolder is the immediate repetition of both canon and solo. But there is no impression of things being at a standstill: the effect is that of a preamble, and one so spacious that we know it must be followed by something even bigger. Bach's method of leading into the main body of the work is worth noting. The second pedal solo ended, we expect the full close with which the first solo was clinched. We get it too, but half a dozen bars later, the cadence being held off by this splendid series of chords:

EX. 1.

With the full close in C major the pedal leads off with what is sometimes described as a new subject. But its opening figure has already been anticipated by the arpeggio in bar 10 of the pedal solo:

The only new matter is the simple descending bass, but the ear is hardly conscious of this, owing to a close imitation of the arpeggio in the manual part:

EX. 3.

The manual has even less new material, for the last three chords are merely the cadence used at the end of the pedal solos. Even that was but a more concise and emphatic form of the treble in bar 4:

As the arpeggio figure (Ex. 3) is clearly a derivative of:

used in the opening bar of the movement, we see that the greater part of this gigantic work of 438 bars is developed from an arpeggio of the common chord and a simple cadence, alternated with fugal treatment of the opening bars of the canon theme. In the whole range of music there are few if any more striking examples of steady and easily followed growth. It is a musical illustration of the parable of the grain of mustard seed. How the tiny shoot becomes the twig, and the twig the branch, is shown over and over again, as thus:

EX. 6. (Bar 155.)

Another example: we have seen how the simple cadence at the close of the first pedal solo was developed into a striking series of chords. With Bach it is never too late to amplify, so in the last page we find these chords given a new aspect by being threaded on a long manual note:

And observe how, as a result of the interrupted cadence:

yet another limb is thrown out—a new member, but in its chords, arpeggio figure, and in the semi-quaver passages of the right hand and pedal later, showing its relation to the main stem. So close is this logical method throughout that we are hardly conscious of the fact that the movement contains a good deal of repetition. The repeated matter is usually in a fresh key, and there is almost always some slight change in the way it is approached, or in the disposition of its parts. One might easily give a course of lessons on development from this movement. Let the student go carefully through it away from the keyboard. He will see (if he never saw before) that this is one of the considerable number of Bach's works of which it is difficult to speak without seeming to indulge in hyperbole.

A few words on the method of performance. Owing to the numerous rests in both manual and pedal parts, there is abundant opportunity for changes of registration. Nevertheless we shall do well to adopt a straightforward scheme. All the component parts of the work are of a vigorous type, and the use of delicate stops is unsuitable. As Widor and Schweitzer say: 'The performance of the Toccata requires classic simplicity in both technical execution and registration. It tolerates no "modernizing" whatsoever. In particular, all effects to be brought out by the alternation of the manuals should be eschewed. The style of Bach's writing, and the uninterrupted employment of the pedal, show clearly that he wished only the great manual to be used. Why act contrary to his intention?'

If we confine ourselves to the Great, we must avoid too continuous a use of heavy tone. We may well dispense with 16-ft. pedal stops for an occasional spell, if we have a good supply of strong and characteristic 8-ft. pedal tone available. But here as usual each player must decide on a scheme best suited to his organ and building. Widor and Schweitzer point out that as the two-measure group forms the rhythmic unit, the movement is really in 6-8 time. Here are three suggestions as to pace: Bridge and Higgs,  $\text{♩} = 120$ ; Best-Hull,  $\text{♩} = 132$ ; Griepenkerl,  $\text{♩} = 76$ . The last is surely not much more than half the right pace.

There is general agreement on textual details, though Griepenkerl tells us that as the autograph was lost, it was necessary to collate no less than seven manuscripts in order to arrive at the work as we know it. The chief differences were found in the pedal solos, which had evidently been cut down by various players whose pedal organs stopped at D above middle C. Very few organs at that time had the top F in the pedals. Among them was the Cöthen instrument, so we may assume that Bach either wrote the work there or amplified the pedal passages so as to include the unusual high notes.

A foot-note in the Best-Hull edition says that 'some players (Guilmant amongst others) hold that such passages as:

were produced by the limitations of Bach's footing technique, and should be played as straightforward scales.' But what of the Prelude in D major, written some years earlier? That work opens with three scales much more difficult than this passage would have been. And we have seen

Bach going on tour with the C major Toccata, which contains the most difficult of his pedal solos. It was probably his playing of this solo that drew from the Crown Prince Friedrich a ring set in precious stones. An eyewitness of the performance (at Cassel, in 1714) says: 'His feet flew over the pedal-board as if they had wings.' Are we to imagine that some years later Bach shied at such a simple matter as a rising scale of c, d, e, f, g, a? We must find another explanation, if an explanation be necessary. Probably Bach wrote the passage in its somewhat uncouth form because he felt that the rough vigour of the big zigzagging bass was in keeping, just as at the end of the short E minor Prelude he makes the pedals stride in 10ths instead of 3rds. An even more likely explanation is that he carried on the idea of descending 7ths from the preceding passage. We know his weakness for this progression. If we take the whole passage, and phrase it as a succession of 7ths, it is not only logical, but much less clumsy:

The low E is sometimes flattened, but both here and in the corresponding passage in D minor (page 183, bar 2), the so-called melodic form of the rising minor scale seems more natural.

Speaking of this Toccata, Pirro says ('L'Orgue de Jean-Sebastien Bach'): 'Though remarkably brilliant, it is marked by a certain dryness, at least, in its opening; it is rather too much of a bravura type—perhaps the last Bach wrote.' This is surely not the general opinion. 'Remarkable brilliance' is not the prime characteristic of the work, nor is the canonic portion dry. The pedal solos are not showily difficult, and have none of the futility common to their class, because they take up and carry on the argument started by the manuals. The right adjective for the work is Parry's—'colossal.' And Mendelssohn hit the nail, when, writing from Sargans in 1831, describing a recital he had given there, he said that 'the Toccata in F, with the modulation at the end, sounded as if it would bring the church down,' adding: 'He was a tremendous Cantor.' Tremendous, indeed! It would be interesting to know what Bach's contemporaries thought of some of the more daring passages in the Toccata. Probably not many swallowed them without some straining, and we may be sure that a few bewigged heads were shaken over the grinding final cadence!:

After these gigantic goings on, the fugue, with its slow, brief, and plain subject, seems, as Parry says, 'almost superfluous.' It is undervalued because most of us compare it with the Toccata, whereas it is so widely different in style and mood that we may imagine Bach deliberately doing his best to make comparison impossible. But the fact is that after so lengthy and exuberant a work as the Toccata there is a call for nothing else save a few minutes' rest for both player and hearer. We must use the Fugue as a separate work, and judge it on its merits. These are so considerable that had it not been so completely overshadowed by the Toccata it would have been among the most justly esteemed of the fugues just below the handful of masterpieces.

When, some years before, Bach essayed to write a double fugue (on a theme of Legrenzi) he failed badly. The result was too long, and it sounded even longer than it was because he adopted the mechanical plan of giving out the second subject solus, afterwards making a further hold-up by resting two parts while the pair of subjects were shown in combination.

In the F major Fugue the method is far less leisurely. The subjects are short, the second is brought on accompanied, and the combination is managed in such a way that instead of making things hang fire it increases the interest and animation. There are three fairly defined sections, of course, but they run into one another so naturally that there is no effect of scrappiness. And the contrast is admirable—first the thoughtful four-part treatment of:

Ex. 12.

leading straight into three-part working, for manuals only, of the well-contrasted second subject:

Ex. 13.

The third section (wisely the shortest) maintains the quaver movement set up by the second subject and gives us some delightful three- and four-part writing, with the two themes worked together. A curious point is that the first subject makes one entry as an inner part before being combined with the second. Works in this form are so scarce that few rules exist, but obviously it is desirable that the first subject should not be heard in the final section—especially at its return—save in combination with the second. Perhaps this little irregularity puts the fugue out of court so far as Prout was concerned. In his 'Fugue,' speaking of examples on more than one subject, he ignores the F major, but analyses the C minor, describing it as 'masterly,' and 'one of the most perfect examples, as regards its form.' This may be so, but on purely musical grounds the F major is immeasurably superior. The gravity of its opening, and the sober cheerfulness of the remainder, make it an admirable voluntary. Though probably earlier in date than the Toccata, its harmony and the freedom of its counterpoint show the almost—if not quite—mature Bach.

By the by, the harsh, simultaneous use of B flat and B natural in the eighth bar from the end is easily explainable, the B flat being an auxiliary note. Widor and Schweitzer suggest D instead of B flat in the tenor, but most of us will prefer the passage as Bach evidently wrote it.

The G minor Fantasia and Fugue is perhaps the latest of the Weimar works. There is general agreement as to its having been written for performance at Hamburg when Bach went there in 1720. This explains the reversion in the Fantasia to a style of writing which he had more or less discarded for some years. We have seen that the other Preludes written at this time usually consist of close development of one or two ideas. In the Fantasia he takes up again the free rhapsodical methods of the Northern composers. As Spitta says, 'Bach seems to have wished to meet the Hamburg organists on their own peculiar ground.' The result is the finest of all his essays in the quasi-improvisation form. If some of its transports now strike us as being a little on the conventional side, it is because they are expressed in terms that Bach's imitators have worn threadbare. You have only to give most German organ composers a sheet of music paper with 'Fantasia' written at the top, and they will with fatal readiness fill it with demisemiquaver recitative passages punctuated with big chords. The device is one well suited to the organ, but it has the defect of not wearing well, and it too often leads to incoherence.

The G minor Fantasia leaves other works of the type far behind, because its passage-writing is expressive and full of harmonic suggestion, and even more because of the skill with which these passages are balanced and contrasted by fine polyphony, chains of suspensions, and daring modulations, with a fine pedal part as basis. In Bach's earlier essays in this field we frequently find such contrasting passages almost if not quite as loose in texture as the recitative passages to which they act as foil.

Compare such easy-going methods with that employed here. Note how, the opening flourish over, Bach applies a corrective in the shape of a brief section in which the three-manual parts discuss very closely a figure based on the diminished 5th, while the pedal in a more deliberate way deals with a similar motive. Violent as is the contrast between these two sections, the second seems to grow out of the first quite naturally, and its persistent dissonance maintains the emotional note struck by the opening. It reappears after another free passage, this time with changes both in the key and in the order of entry of the voices. It leads into some new material, with a bass that makes us long for a pedal-board of four octaves, so that we might carry the splendid scale down in one sweep instead of coming up for three fresh starts.

The demisemiquaver passages in this work seem to call for a more measured style of playing than similar flights of Bach's earlier period. They are far more definite in rhythm and harmonic feeling, and in some cases a kind of check is placed on them by accompanying parts. The phrasing implied in Bach's grouping, plus some of the elasticity of a cadenza, will be more satisfactory than eccentric rushings and haltings. Some editions suggest quiet Swell stops for these passages, but the character of the movement as a whole seems to call for a good deal of tone, if it can be employed with clearness. By the by, the unusual progression :

is watered down in the Best-Hull edition by a  $\sharp$  before the alto E. Bach was always rather daring in his use of the augmented 6th, so we have no grounds for doubt about the flat.

This work and the Chromatic Fantasia may be regarded as companions. Perhaps the organ piece is the superior, partly because it contains more contrast, and also because it is shorter and less diffuse.

Griepenkerl tells us that in no manuscripts were the Fantasia and Fugue found together. However, on the back of an old copy of the Fantasia the theme of the Fugue was written, with an indication that it should follow the Fantasia. On this authority Griepenkerl printed them together for the first time. In one MS. of the Fugue the work is in F minor, but this was evidently a transposition, judging from the alterations in the pedal part, where the CC of the original becomes B $\flat$  and the copyist had to dodge up an octave.

A good deal of interest is attached to the subject. There seems to be no doubt that Bach played the work to Reinken during the Hamburg visit, and that he went prepared to please the old man, for the theme is obviously based on the opening of Reinken's fifth Sonata in his 'Hortus Musicus' :

Mattheson tells us in his 'Generalbasschule' that at an organ examination in 1725 he gave the candidates the following subject for the extempore fugue test :

Ex. 16.

He does not mention the source, but says that he knows well who was the first to work it out artistically. He adds that he chose so familiar a subject in order that the candidates might come well through the ordeal—a method of conducting examinations that is not yet so dead as might be imagined, for I remember a child receiving a sight-reading certificate from a college that shall be nameless, the test being one of Schumann's 'Scenes of Childhood,' which, like most of her fellow aspirants, she knew well! But if Mattheson was so familiar with the theme, why did he give it in such a miserably pruned form? Schweitzer says that Herr Keller, of Stuttgart, explains the discrepancy thus: Mattheson could not give the subject to the candidate in its original form, 'because according to the rules of the fugue it was incorrect. It is laid down in the rules that a fugue theme shall not extend over an octave. The Hamburg examiner therefore thought it necessary to alter Bach's theme in order to bring it into conformity with the eternal laws of the art.' In this case the law has proved to be a good deal less eternal than Mattheson thought it to be.

The popularity of the fugue (even in the most unlikely quarters) is easily understood. In melody and rhythm the subject is one of the most attractive ever devised, and its treatment is marked by a clarity and finish that defy criticism. It is not the greatest of Bach's fugues—at least three others show no less technical mastery combined with greater depth and power—but it is a unique example of his ability to carry through a long and elaborate scheme without a hint of failure either in deftness or spontaneity. The latter quality is the more notable because Bach handicaps himself by a regular counter-subject—indeed, we may say there are two, for the treble of bars 10-12 so frequently accompanies the subject and counter-subject that it is hardly less important. The three are used in triple counterpoint, five of the six possible combinations being used. The fugue is rich in episodes, the most notable being that which introduces the little figure c, f, e $\sharp$ , f—probably a derivative of the j, b, b, a, with which the third episode opens (see Ex. 18). It is nothing in itself, but see how Bach plays with it from time to time until the end. There is no need to dwell on the numerous enjoyable features of so familiar a work, but mention may be made of the long series of chords of the 6th with which bar 61 opens—there are nearly forty of them, and they provide a very jolly way of going down the keyboards—and the way the rather old-fashioned Alberti passage is made tremendously alive by being immediately caught up and repeated by the treble and alto.

The registration presents few problems. We shall naturally go over to a second manual for the middle section, the most convenient point being :

The next entry of the subject may easily be soloed on the Choir or Great, mf, the right hand coming back to the Swell at the second semi-quaver of the fourth beat in bar 46. We may drop on to the Great for the last note in bar 50, and solo the subject, the right hand following at the last note of bar 53. The two-part passage from the end of bar 93 to the middle of bar 103 goes well on the full Choir. The left hand should of course complete the descending scale in bar 94 before being transferred. The effect of this is so good that we need not mind if the Choir entry is temporarily killed. The full Swell passage may begin with the left hand at the last note in bar 100, the right hand going over with the seventh note in bar 103. Both go on to the full Great immediately after the pedal entry in bar 110. These changes are legitimate, because they can all be carried out without breaking the flow. The general scheme should be on the loud side. Widor and Schweitzer say: 'Inconceivable it is that there have been "virtuosi" who so far misunderstood the proud, vigorous character of this theme as to let it enter, at the outset, in piano on the second manual.'

This brings us to the end of Bach's second period—or, as some prefer to call it, his first master-period. There remain to be considered three groups of works: (a) the Trio-sonatas and a few pieces written, like the sonatas, for pedal-cembalo; (b) the eighteen choral preludes collected by Bach himself, the six arranged for Schübler, the preludes in the 'Clavierübung,' and the canonic variations on 'Vom Himmel hoch'; and (c) the four great preludes and fugues written in his closing years at Leipsic.

(To be continued.)

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XIV.—RICHARD BRAMSTON

Just as in the case of Thomas Farthing, whose name was included in Morley's Valhalla of 16th century English composers, so also in the case of Richard Bramston, praised by Morley in his 'Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Musicke' in 1597, we have had no exact biographical data hitherto. 'Master Bramston,' so far as English musical historians are concerned, has remained a ghost-like figure, of whom nothing has been chronicled by Burney, Hawkins, Chappell, Davey, or Grove, save an incidental reference to some of his compositions. Even Mr. Cecil Forsyth, in the chapter on 'The Golden Age,' in the recent 'History of Music' by Sir Charles Stanford and Forsyth (1916), merely includes the name of Bramston in a foot-note as an English composer whose works are to be met with in manuscript. But though many of Bramston's compositions have disappeared, the few that remain give ample evidence of his abilities as a polyphonic composer. Dr. Ernest Walker says that his works deserve mention, yet from a cursory examination I would be inclined to place Bramston's Motet, 'Recordare, Domine, testamenti' as evidencing potential powers quite equal to those of Taverner, Redford, Cowper, or Johnson. In this MS., which will be found among the Add. MSS. 17802-17805 of the British Museum, his name appears as 'Master Bramston.' Another beautiful Motet, 'Mariæ Virgini,' is in Peterhouse College, Cambridge.*

It is only fair to state that a brief reference to Bramston is given by Mr. John E. West in his excellent book on 'Cathedral Organists' (Novello, 1899)—a book that ought to be revised and reissued—under date of 1507, when he was appointed deputy-organist of Wells Cathedral in place of 'Richard Hugo.' Mr. West, however, did not identify Hugo, and it may be added that the name conceals the identity of Richard Hygons—the composer of a beautiful five-part 'Salve Regina' in the famous Eton MS.—of whom I purpose treating in my next article.

Of Richard Bramston's birth and education there is no evidence forthcoming, but he was a chorister of Wells Cathedral under Henry Abyndon, Robert Wydow, Mus. Bac., and Richard Hygons, between the years 1480 and 1500. Wells at this time was distinguished for its musical traditions, traditions that were carefully fostered by Wydow (who was sub-Dean), Thomas Cornish, Bishop of Tinos (the Precentor), and Hugh Inge (Succentor) in 1500-07. The choirboys were so good that two of them were impressed for the Chapel Royal, and in the account book of William Capron, who was Communar from 1504 to 1505, there is an entry of ten shillings paid to the royal commissioner who had come 'to take choristers for the King's chapel.'

On January 23, 1507, as appears from the Chapter Acts, Richard Bramston was admitted, on probation, as a vicar-choral of Wells. Six months later, on July 23, he undertook to deputise as organist for Richard Hygons, for which he was to be paid 5s. for the half-quarter at Michaelmas, and from that day at the rate of '40s. a year.' He was also employed to teach the choristers. It appears from the Chapter Acts that Bramston was not only to play the organ 'in the great choir and the chapel of the Blessed Virgin Mary,' but had to act as 'keeper of the organs.'

* See Dr. Jebbs's Catalogue in the Ecclesiologist for 1859.

So highly-esteemed were the services of Bramston as temporary organist and master of the choristers, that the Chapter unanimously voted for his retention as vicar-choral in perpetuity, or 'perpetual vicar,' provided that he was diligent in pursuing his musical studies during the following year. This appointment is dated January 25, 1508. It is of interest to note that another vicar who had been on probation was not given the post of perpetual vicar, because it had been testified by John Aleyn and fourteen other vicars-choral that 'he had not a competent voice and was of evil conversation.'

Bramston resigned his post as deputy-organist in May, 1508, and was succeeded by John Clawys, who graduated Mus. Bac. at Oxford in the following year. Naturally, Bramston preferred his assured Vicar-choralship, and with a view to qualifying for it, he studied for sub-deaconship. This we learn from a Chapter Act dated September 4, 1509, in which Bramston was warned that he must take sub-deacon's orders before the ensuing Christmas, 'on pain of privation.'

On February 16, 1510, a letter was written to two canons of Wells to petition King Henry VIII. against the not infrequent practice of taking up the Wells choristers, and citing the recent case of Richard Bramston, who had lately taken away 'one of our best queresters, that is to say, Farr'; also to petition the King that the Wells Chapter might have permission to impress any boys in monastic or other churches in the diocese to serve Wells Cathedral choir.

Unfortunately there is a lacuna in the Chapter Acts from 1513 to 1534, but there is preserved a charter of the year 1530-31, in which Richard Bramston, vicar-choral, had 'leave of absence from Matins during his lifetime, and two months' leave in each year,' and was confirmed in his 'annuity of 7*d.* a week as Clerk of Works of the Cathedral Church.' On the same day (January 31, 1530-31) he was granted by the Dean and Chapter of Wells an annuity of £4 in consideration of surrendering his office as Clerk of Works, and 'of his surrender of the office of Master of the Choristers, for which he was paid 26*s.* 8*d.* a year.' Both of these interesting documents are signed by 'Ryc. Bramston,' and sealed with his seal, 'a girl's head in profile, to the dexter.' ('MSS. of the Dean and Chapter of Wells,' vol. ii., p. 701.)

Bramston's successor as Master of the Choristers was John Smith, jun., in 1536. Nevertheless, the composer was somewhat of a pluralist, because owing to the favour of Thomas Lord Cromwell, he was a prebendary of the College of Crediton, and duly received a pension after the dissolution of the collegiate church of 40*s.* annually, from 1540 till his death some years later.

THE 'BEGGAR'S OPERA'

BY FRANK KIDSON

Writers, both early and late, lay a great deal of stress upon the political motives and satire which underlie the 'Beggars' Opera.' Sir John Hawkins, in his 'History of Music,' 1776, accuses John Gay, the author, in no measured terms, stating that 'his acrimonious expressions and bitter invectives against statesmen, lawyers, priests, and others' contained in the piece were due to Gay's disappointment in his application for preferment at Court. Hawkins further delivers the extraordinary dictum that owing to the performance of the opera

Rapine and violence have been gradually increasing ever since its first representation. The rights of property, and the obligation of the laws that guard it, are disputed upon principle. . . . Young men, apprentices, clerks in public offices, and others, disdaining the arts of honest industry and captivated with the charms of idleness and criminal pleasure, now betake themselves to the road, affect politeness in the very act of robbery, and in the end become victims to the justice of their country. . . . and not a few of those who during the last fifty years have paid to the law the forfeit of their lives have in the course of their pursuits been emulous to imitate the manners and general character of Macheath.

Dr. Burney, with a number of other contemporary writers, appears to be of a like manner of thinking, and misses in a very obtuse way the whole point of Gay's brilliant satire.

Dr. Johnson was wiser than his friends. He says:

I do not believe that any man was ever made a rogue by being present at its representation.

He, however, admits that it 'may have some influence by making the character of a rogue familiar, and in some degrees pleasing.'

Another set of writers claim that its chief purpose was to ridicule the Italian opera, and that it drove this off the stage with 'Lumps of Pudding'—the last tune in Gay's opera.

How far this notion is correct or not is questionable. The fact is that the Italian opera practically expired about the time the 'Beggars' Opera' was put upon the stage. It had had a run of more than twenty years, and, while it had captivated the dilettanti, it had never been popular with the ordinary English citizen. The political allusions in the 'Beggars' Opera' are feeble, and more general than personal, but the whole is a poignant exposure of the corrupt prison system and of the vile creatures in whose management it lay. The wonder is that those who so smugly denounced its morality were not roused to protest against the real evil that Gay so strongly paints. There is any amount of evidence that the picture he presents is not an exaggerated one. Peachum may be a reflection of Jonathan Wild, and Lockit of the usual type of prison-keeper; and it is quite obvious that these were not merely representative of Newgate but must have had prototypes all over the country.

It is not the purpose of this article to discuss the moral or political side of the 'Beggars' Opera,' but to deal with it in its musical aspect. As all musicians know, the country had been flooded with operas of Italian origin, theme, or influence. The more sturdy productions to which Henry Purcell had supplied the music had passed from the stage, and had been replaced by songs with Italian words rendered by imported musicians, male and female, who demanded and received great sums in salaries. These introduced a new system of singing and stage-craft. The subjects of the operas were unfamiliar to the average person, and the whole became a 'cult' for a class who pretended delight rather than felt it.

It was then that the 'Beggars' Opera' struck a new note, a note that could be understood and enjoyed by a sane Englishman. Handel's Italian operas were in full swing, and his 'Admetus' and 'Richard I.' were being performed, when on the night of January 29, 1728, the Newgate pastoral first appeared on the boards. Gay probably felt that some explanation was due, so he prefaced it by a scene between the Beggar—the reputed author—and a Player. The Beggar states that it was ‘originally writ for celebrating the marriage of James Chanter and Moll Lay, two most excellent ballad-singers.’ By this the author prepares the audience for the popular song tunes and ballad airs which make up the musical portion of the piece.

It is quite true that Gay intended us to believe that he was having a ‘touch’ on the Italian opera, for the Beggar tells the Player that he has introduced certain similes ‘that are in all your celebrated operas . . . besides I have a prison scene, which the ladies always reckon charmingly pathetic. As to the parts I have observed such a nice impartiality to our two ladies that it is impossible for either of them to take offence.’ This is evidently a good-natured hit at the quarrels between Faustina and Cuzzoni, the former having made her appearance as a rival to Cuzzoni in 1726. The allusion to ‘the prison scene,’ which the ladies find so ‘pathetic,’ is evidently based on a prison scene in Attilio’s ‘Coriolanus,’ produced in 1723.

The immediate success and the lasting popularity of the ‘Beggar’s Opera’ were due neither to political nor musical satire, but to the fact that it provided something that the ordinary person found he had long been deprived of—simple tunes that were familiar and agreeable to him, besides a sparkling and true picture of life. From time to time managers have had to prune some of its plain-speaking, but its essentials must have always remained. Almost every singer of note has from its first appearance in 1728 to the last (before the present revival) in 1886, studied one or other of the principal characters.

In modern remembrance Sims Reeves, in taking the part of Captain Macheath, would introduce such songs as ‘Tom Bowling’ and similar old English ditties—anachronisms justified only by Reeves’ inimitable singing of such lyrics.

Gay sold the copyright of his ‘Fables’ and the ‘Beggar’s Opera’ for something under a hundred pounds to John Watts and Jacob Tonson, the booksellers. John Watts was a printer of plays and minor works near Lincoln’s Inn Fields, with whom Benjamin Franklin had worked as journeyman. The press that in all probability struck off the sheets of the first edition may be seen in the South Kensington Museum.

My own copy of this scarce first edition now lies before me. It is an unpretentious little pamphlet in octavo of 58 pages, with an additional 16 pages of rudely-engraved music, being the treble of the airs. The printed date of the book is 1728.

The second edition, also dated 1728, has this music cut on wood blocks and inserted in the text, while for the first time the Overture is added. The third edition, dated 1729, is in quarto, with the music beautifully engraved on copper plates. After this editions of all dates are to be found with or without the music. A very notable edition of the music is ‘The Excellent Choice,’ being a ‘Collection of the most Favourite Old Song-Tunes in the Beggar’s Opera, set for 3 voices in the manner of Catches.’ This was published by Walsh about 1740-50 in oblong folio.

At a later date Dr. Arne arranged the ‘Beggar’s Opera’ for performance at the theatres, and set ‘new basses to the songs.’ This was published in oblong folio for the harpsichord by Longman & Broderip about 1780.

Dr. Pepusch probably had no hand in the selection of the tunes, but he set basses to them (which appeared in the third edition), and Dr. Burney remarks that he ‘furnished the rude, wild, and often vulgar melodies with basses so excellent that no sound contrapuntist will ever attempt to alter them.’ The Overture, which Pepusch composed, is upon the old air ‘The Happy Clown’:

One evening having lost my way,
which Lucy sings to words beginning:

I’m like a skiff on the ocean tost.

As to the sixty-nine tunes that were selected for Gay’s verses—verses often rather puerile—a very great deal of interesting matter is available. I hope to deal with this in a second article.

MUTUAL ERROR

BY SYDNEY GREW

For fifty years past writers on musical matters have occupied their leisure in collecting mistakes made about music by novelists, poets, and non-musicians in general. The articles resulting from this have been mildly amusing, but rarely instructive; and I think the time would have been better employed if the plan had been to collect, not foolish things, but evidences of wisdom. In one unanticipated respect, however, this phase of musical criticism has been both amusing and instructive. It has demonstrated that writers may be ignorant even of matters strictly within their own province, and that musicians may accuse a non-musician of error which is no error.

I have not observed in general periodical literature any parallel writings on such a subject as ‘Musicians and General Knowledge.’ Were such work undertaken, those occupied in it would have a more ample supply of errors than musical writers have discerned: for it is a notable fact that the average musician is not well-informed concerning science, history, philosophy, and the rest, and that the average musical critic is on dangerous ground the moment he moves out of the path of his own art.

I give here a few instances of the errors of writers on music which parallel the errors made by novelists and poets. Several of these are errors within errors—errors made in correcting the (apparent) errors of others. My object is to afford consolation to non-musicians, and to assist the development of a desirable modesty in musical critics.

Milton is constantly chastised for his:

There let the pealing organ blow
To the full-voiced quire below.

This, says the musician, is wrong; the organ is blown, but it certainly does not blow, and Milton was nodding Homerically. If, however, Milton is wrong, wrong also is Pope in his:

While in more lengthen’d notes and slow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow;

and many other 17th and 18th century writers; also such highly-cultured 19th century men as Hawthorne, one of whose characters once ‘blew a fitful note upon the organ.’

But there is no error here. Obeying a ceaseless law of language—the law of change—the word blow has lost certain significances, and we cannot now use it in Milton’s way. Yet this is no excuse for the musical critic who pillories as error a contemporary use of a word. His only excuse is ignorance, which is a poor plea, especially in the circumstances.

There are two explanations of this use of blow—one direct, the other indirect. The latter is that the word has the sense of breathe. Hear Pope again :

Descend, ye nine, descend and sing,
The breathing instruments inspire :

these instruments being trumpets and the like. The direct explanation is that formerly the word had the pure and compact significance of 'to sound with being blown.' In 'Paradise Lost' comes :

Nor with less dread the loud
Ethereal trumpet from on high 'gan blow.

We are told in Joshua (vi. 4) that 'the priests shall blow with the trumpets.' We still say poetically, 'Let the trumpets sound,' and our expression is only one remove from the older, 'Let the trumpets blow.' What is right for the trumpet is right for the organ. Milton knew both English and music.

Another word which has been the cause of mistakes within mistake is quaver. I have seen instances of the 'misuse' of this word quoted from writers ranging from Addison to Thackeray. In every case, it seems to me, the context intimates a special meaning in the word, and a meaning no less concrete than that which attaches to it as a term of musical notation. Addison, for example, says: 'Whether we consider the instrument itself, or the several quavers and graces which are thrown into the playing of it.' And Lamb says that after practising 'God save the King' all his life, he had still not 'arrived within many quavers' of it. There is no need to analyse this 'error.' A use of the word by Bacon which I have noticed gives the clearest explanation: 'The division and quavering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave.' (This dictum of Bacon's, by the by, is an argument of use to musical pictorialists.) In former times, the florid vocalists in Italian opera were called quaverers. Even to-day we say we are 'all of a quiver and quaver.'

After these two examples we can allow Charles Reade to describe a typical slow movement of the early 18th century as 'a sparkling adagio.' And when we learn that pre-Bach fugues often had a double-bar with repeat at the close of the first section of the piece (as is the case with a familiar canzona of Kerl), we can excuse Browning's :

Where is our gain at the Two-bars?

in his poem on the fugue ('Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha'), and cease to charge him with perverting fact for sake of rhyme.

In 1917, the editor of a musical periodical organized a competition on the subject 'Novelists' Blunders in Music.' He gave the prize to a competitor who attributed the forty-year old 'Mr. Barnes of New York' to 'Ouida.' If the competitor or the editor had been wiser than the novelists they laughed at, they would either have read this book first or have discovered that it was by A. C. Gunter. This slip would amuse literary readers of my imaginary essay on 'Musicians and their Blunders.' And medical readers would be interested in the pathological ideas of the musical critic who in 1920, out of an ardent desire to advocate the new music of to-day, brought out the sentence :

As Germany has become synonymous with a sterile tradition which I view as an artistic cancer . . .

There is honour for the man who can bring sterility and cancer together. This instance of the ignorance of musicians would appear twice in my supposed essay, the second time in the section devoted to mistakes about the simple meanings of words; because it presents the error that things can be synonymous, and not (as the non-musical would understand) words only.

But the finest catch of all which this literary fisherman might hope to get from the waters of musical criticism is the following (also written in 1920):

. . . ordinary language is a fixed thing . . .
a word is always the same word, and always means the same thing . . . whereas the same chord means a hundred different things according to how it is approached and quitted, and what its function is in a series of ideas.

There are some words with meanings so diverse as to become contradictory; all but simple concrete terms change in meaning generation by generation; language, and literature also, may remain fixed in form, but never in significance, which is why religious texts and creeds suffer fresh interpretations from time to time; and the same word will mean a hundred different things according to how the writer uses it, and according to its function in varying series of ideas. So little is the meaning of words fixed, that we have to read the old masters with a glossary, and a new master of unusual type of mind with a dictionary or analytical explanation.

Everything has its complements. There is no musical blunder made by the literary man but has its counterpart in a general blunder made by the musical man. Yet neither need be discouraged: the fact proves their humanity.

CONCERTS AND CRITICS

BY THOMAS MOULT

It is our custom, if we live away from a city, or from a capital, to envy our more fortunate cousins and sigh for the time when we too shall be able to have at our beck and call all the arts and all the artists. But there is at least one critical observer freshly come to town who has very quickly realised that in music, at any rate, the fact of being able to choose between, say, half a dozen concerts in a single evening is not altogether an unmixed blessing. To bundle his invitation tickets into a hat and draw one of them out at random, this to suffice for a single evening, is to make a drastic clean-cut through the bewilderment; but it is the only method if he is to make any headway at all. Even then a large proportion of concerts worth attending is bound to be neglected, the odds being that important musical events will have clashed; but it is a better method than any other. For if on the one evening he is confronted by the announcement of half a dozen recitals whose principals are quite unknown to him, and he dares to make a choice on the strength of the programme (his only method), he is pretty certain to find himself at a performance by one of those charmingly accomplished young soloists whose only ambition is to make at least one public appearance in the metropolis. It may matter a good deal to the critic with very little time to waste, but it matters nothing to these young soloists that their success is restricted to a sheaf of generous and unexacting press paragraphs so long as they get them. And if only their concerts are advertised in certain of the morning papers, get them they will, as surely as they will receive during the actual performance the several bouquets of hot-house flowers presented ostentatiously by their admirers—or by themselves!

There has been a good deal of talk and protest of late in connection with this superabundance of recitals. One critic alleged that innumerable people who have no qualification whatever are appearing on the concert-platform, and he distributes blame heavily on agents, teachers, performers, and press alike. Another simplified the indictment by levelling his charge against the press alone, that refuses to condemn bad work. A third cast ridicule on the whole practice, remarking that though it was easy enough for the young recitalist to 'come out,' it was generally impossible for him to stay out, so that the position resolved itself! There was hardly one, however, who made the search, Herbert Spencer-like, for the grain of virtue in an admitted evil, which must always be our primary aim in any sort of search. The discovery or non-discovery of any such virtue at the moment does not of itself invalidate or justify the Spencerian method. Should we not, for instance, regard these concerts as essential, forming the preliminary rounds of the competition for the favour of the more soundly musical parts of the country, the provinces? Are not Manchester and Birmingham, for instance, or Pittsburg and Boston, to be envied in that London and New York can make sure for them that only those performers will travel so far whose appearances signify the survival of the very fit?

Let us for a moment compare the position with that of literary criticism. If a critic of books were to spend whole columns nowadays in deploring the continued publication of fiction by certain popular illiterates, he would very justly be pilloried for his critical futility. Even were he to bewail the appearance of a huge mass of third- or fourth-rate novels, season after season since Fielding and Richardson set the fashion of novel-publication, those of his fellows who possessed only the rudiments of an historical sense would regard him as a critical ostrich. The presence of inferior work has long been accepted as an inevitable part of book-publication, and similarly if there is to be any representative public interpretation of music at all we must submit to this appalling multiplicity of concerts, and rely upon the continued operation of the law of survival.

Such a policy does not exclude, of course, the recognition of those various forms of abuse in the concert-world which are rightly being deplored. That there are agents whose one concern is to arrange concerts solely for their own twenty per cent., regardless of any artistic worth in their clients, and caring not at all whether that commission is filched from the public or the young performer; that there are unscrupulous teachers who use their pupils for advertising purposes of their own, and nothing else; that there are musicians who give a concert simply that they might gather together a few indiscriminating press cuttings and rush back to their native town—which is generally so proud of them that they never need to leave it again for the rest of their lives; and that there are newspapers which give a good notice to any recital advertised in their columns—all these abuses are only too apparent. But to condemn the whole recital system for such abuses is to condemn the whole system of book-publishing because there are unscrupulous and tenth-rate publishers and writers.

There lies before us at this moment an accumulation of the programmes of concerts given in London during the first half of the present season. Admittedly they represent an appalling number. But it is plainly our duty to deal with them, so far as criticism is concerned, exactly as one would deal with a collection of new novels sent for review—mentioning those which are considered to have achieved a certain musical and artistic standard. Experience in criticism and innate generosity cause us to pass over the remainder in silence. And, taking it for granted that the critics already referred to will agree that concerts are not given merely for critics—in spite of many an appearance to the contrary—and that the comfort and convenience of critics are not necessarily the first consideration of concert performers and agents, we may justifiably ask by what alternative method can the younger and unknown artists show their capabilities before the music public? How else than by persuading a publisher to issue their novels can young writers make their work known at all?

And surely the means are justification of the end. However distasteful the admission may seem, it is through the effort of the despised agents that musicians have the opportunity for giving us that music which otherwise can only be heard by—duplicating the already existing organizations! The real fault of the agents is, of course, that they run their business on commercial lines, and that their discrimination is consequently a commercial one. Having experienced the irritation of it ourselves, we can enter into and sympathise with the feeling of the critic who spends half an evening crossing a city to a worthless but financially successful concert and half an evening in getting back again. But it is only through such arduous and endurances on his part that we are able to prove the worthlessness. The winnowing process is necessary, and why not in London and New York? Nor should the critic forget that however great his own worries might be, the young artist has undergone infinitely greater, and that the performance is the artist's critical moment, not the critic's. The remedy is that which has been applied through force of similar circumstances to book-reviewing: the number of reviewers was increased. But in the matter of music-criticism we touch now upon a much deeper problem—that of making music-education as universal and compulsory in its rudiments as reading has been these many years.

Ad Libitum

BY FESTE

A few months ago, discussing the question of popular music, I expressed the opinion that composers such as Bax, Ireland, Frank Bridge, and a dozen more of our representative men could turn out far better tunes and light music generally than do the little group of writers who seem to have the monopoly of that kind of work. The need for some fresh hands is glaringly obvious to those who care to sit through the music of an average revue, or who will examine any of the song annuals and other vocal works intended for consumption by the crowd. Not only are the tunes feeble and reminiscent; their harmonization and the laying out of the accompaniment is often ludicrously inept. I return to the subject because a particularly flagrant example has just appeared. If the composer were a beginner I should refrain from mentioning his name. But as he is an old hand, and has received so much adulation as a writer of popular music, I see no reason why he should not be given a little frank criticism as a wholesome change. Indeed, he may welcome it. An excellent judge of publicity, he knows well that a slating is by no means a bad advertisement, especially as it is free.

I have long wondered at the vogue of Mr. Herman Darewski's music. After an examination of his latest song, 'The Return,' I marvel more than ever. He has so often given would-be composers of popular music advice as to song-writing that we may presume he knows what the public wants. It wants tune, swing, and rhythm, he tells us, and we agree. But in 'The Return' he gives the public neither. Instead he puts them off with a series of notes from which I quote the first few groups (I refrain from the use of such words as melody and phrases, for obvious reasons):

Ex. 1.

There are four more such groups before we reach the refrain, and every one consists almost entirely of repeated quavers, with a rhythm exactly the same as in the quotation.

Many a song has achieved success solely by means of a catchy chorus. So generally recognised is the fact, that songwriters of this type often save themselves for the chorus, merely marking time during the song proper. So we approach Mr. Darewski's refrain with hope, almost with confidence, knowing that his hand is ever on the pulse of popular taste. But he is so sure that the public wants still more repeated quavers and a square-toed rhythm that he gives them another dose. There are six groups of notes here, two are exactly the same as the third and fourth in the quotation, and the rest are so like as to be hardly distinguishable. The refrain is ended with this graceful melodic sweep:

The second verse is an exact repetition, and by way of giving the alleged tune a good chance of soaking in, the refrain is sung twice. The accompaniment, both in harmonization and keyboard writing, is as bad as the voice part.

I may add that this is not a comic song—save unintentionally. On the contrary, it is a setting of some verses dealing with no less a topic than life beyond the grave. I do not quote the wishy-washy jingle because of the nature of the subject.

Now, there are some musical questions on which there can never be agreement. Because of this, we too easily yield to folk who tell us that it is impossible to label music as good or bad. It is, they say, largely a matter of taste. The fact is, of course, we can almost as easily distinguish between good and bad tunes as between good and bad eggs. Sometimes, it is true, we come across a tune that is on the border line, just as we may meet with an egg that does nothing more than raise doubts. The only difference between the two commodities is that a tune may be good in parts, whereas a bad egg is bad all over—pace the hedging curate. As for the matter of taste, we know that a good many Londoners prefer an egg that has been in stock for some time—it is full-flavoured, whereas the egg that has newly come to town strikes them as tame and insipid. This does not prove that an elderly egg is good; it merely shows that as a result of being cut off from regular supplies of fresh eggs their palate has become accustomed to the bad, and has lost its taste for the good.

Looking at the sample quoted above, and bearing in mind that the rest is well up—or rather, down—to it, would you suppose that anybody could be found to say a good word for such a song? Of course you wouldn't. Nevertheless, such an one has been found, and her testimony is set forth prominently on the cover, so that he who reads may run and buy yet more copies.

Here we will pause for a moment and consider viscountesses. Run over in your mind all the viscountesses in your circle, take any fair average specimen and ask yourself a few questions. What kind of pictures does she hang on the walls of her drawing-room? Only the best, or good copies of the best. Her library? The shelves are full of good books, with perhaps a few that are at all events not bad. If she indulges in 'Heartsalve Novelettes' we may be sure that she does not advertise the fact. Rather does she read them privily, as the secret drinker takes his nip, both novelette and bottle being kept out of sight. Her furniture is good to the eye, and you may sit on it and in all other ways use it with comfort and safety. And so on; in all the things that really matter—cookery, dress, and what not—you look to your viscountess to show good sense and good taste. Only when you come to music do you feel that anything may happen, and that the art may be found among the what nots.

Now we get back to the song. The cover bears the following pæan:

This beautiful song is undoubtedly an inspiration. It touches the heart at once with its tender words and appealing melody, breathing hope and consolation to all humanity in its mighty declaration. . . . It is undoubtedly destined to become an anthem of joy to many. . . .

It may or may not surprise you to hear that this considered opinion is signed by a viscountess. There in a nutshell is the reason why the musical life of our happy land is so chaotic. We have no standard. The lady who wrote the above would be horrified if asked to publish her approval of a book, or picture, or play, or fur coat, or patent food so poor in idea and workmanship as Mr. Darewski's song. The book would go into the waste-paper basket, the coat back to the maker with a note very much to the point, and the patent food would find its way down the drain. But the song—ah! 'beautiful,' 'undoubtedly an inspiration,' 'appealing melody,' 'touches the heart,' 'an anthem of joy,' and so on, past all whooping.

I have taken up all this space dealing with a footling song and a no less footling judgment because it is high time we had a little plain speaking on the subject. Just lately the Daily News has been giving us a liberal dose of matter about Mr. Darewski, but it can rarely find space for more than a dozen lines concerning even the most important concerts. In no other matter does it regard its readers as semi-barbarians. Its literary columns, for example, are quite first-rate. I can count on almost daily reviews of the best new books—reviews which are well worth reading for their own sake, written as they are by such brilliant people as Rebecca West, Rose Macaulay, Robert Lynd, &c. Yet the public interested in good music is almost if not quite as large as that interested in good literature. So long as we musicians take no strong line in the matter, so long will our art be cold-shouldered and chivied by most of the press and made to look ridiculous by such people as Mr. Darewski and the Viscountess Molesworth. (I see no reason for withholding the lady's name. If she publishes abroad her judgment on a musical matter she cannot complain if it is reproduced in a musical journal.)

Have you noticed how some of these popular composers are lately giving themselves, and a certain patent medicine, a good deal of joint advertisement? Thus Mr. Horatio Nicholls, 'the famous composer,' tells us in large type that 'two numbers were desired by my publishers that would go one better than my successes, "The Kingdom within your Eyes" and "The Heart of a Rose." I was feeling equal to nothing, but through taking' [let us call it Ju-Jah] 'the old inspiration returned with renewed health. The songs that I finished easily when'—[now, then, altogether, JU-JAH!]'—'had re-established me are: "I'd just Paint the Leaf of the Shamrock," and "That Old-fashioned Mother of Mine."' Then comes a list of some of 'the famous composer's' successes.

I mention this cure because, looking again at 'The Return,' it seems to suggest that when Mr. Darewski wrote it he was feeling like Mr. Nicholls, 'equal to nothing.' Perhaps when he sees what it has done for another famous and jaded composer, he may try a few doses, and so induce the old inspiration to return.

I make haste to add that since the above was written the Daily News has given us a pleasant shock. As a result, no doubt, of due prodding by its excellent music critic, it celebrated the 150th anniversary of Beethoven's birth by giving us a leading article on the composer, and, on the same page, a symposium on his present position as a musical influence.

Does any reader know of a fairly recent book giving the specifications and other particulars of the principal organs in the British Isles—something after the style of the old Hopkins and Rimbault? A correspondent is anxious to obtain such a book. In view of recent developments in organ-building, a work of the kind is due, if not already in being.

One has to go away from home to hear news. I read in an American musical journal, dated November 13, an interview with Mr. Cecil Fanning, the excellent baritone who gave us so much pleasure during the summer. Mr. Fanning, describing his London experience, says:

And German music! Why, the people are simply hungry for it. Two groups—and even whole programmes—of Lieder in the German language, are the rule on many London programmes.

I seem to remember that at the time of Mr. Fanning's visit an attempt to sing some German songs in the original language caused 'a certain liveliness' at a West End concert-hall. And 'two groups' and 'whole programmes' of such songs are not the rule even now, six months since Mr. Fanning's visit. I myself have been bursting to celebrate the Beethoven centenary by hearing my favourite 'Adelaide' sung in her own tongue wherein she was born; but so far no singer seems ready to oblige.

I wish Mr. Paul Howard would leave Adelaide and come to London. I am moved to this wish by a perusal of a set of programmes of fifteen pianoforte recitals he has recently given at the Town Hall of that lucky city. All the programmes are different, and they contain a lot of fine stuff we rarely or never hear in London. Moreover Mr. Howard writes some of the most enjoyable programme notes I have ever read. He is not pontifical or platitudinous, or any other of the things that programme annotators should not be but generally are. He simply talks to us about the music in an intimate and unconventional way. Here are a few plums:

I confess I don't care for Ravel's 'Barque on the Ocean,' but I continue with it because I have found so many who admire it.

The Pavane for a little girl is one of the immortals, the grief becoming gradually tinged with lofty resignation which is more elevated and healthy than the Marche Funèbre, which concludes with 'nevertheless he is dead.'

This Pavane was written for pianoforte, as I remarked to Mr. Verbruggen, who gave it here, but, as he said, it is a way these French composers have of arranging their compositions in a lot of different ways—for pianoforte, for violin and pianoforte, orchestra, &c. Franck, too, has done the same thing.

Friends Piasro and Mirovitch recommended to me Balakirev's 'Islamey' as the most difficult work in existence for pianoforte. This Eastern piece of fanaticism, crazy hysteria, and smouldering Oriental passions certainly is a tyrant, but it is mostly only the madness of the pace that kills, and this can be met by direct action. Responding to the red-rag challenge of its impregnability I made a wild onslaught, got it down, and tried it off on visitors without copy within three weeks, although somewhat convulsed myself afterwards by its delirium. (Poor Balakirev—he finished up working in his old age as a railway clerk for 15s. per week.)

The 'Walzermasken,' however, defied conquest even after two years of daily battlement, and it is now nearly four years before I can claim maturity and pleasure in performance. Put against this the fact that I worked at Beethoven's Op. 2, No. 3, for the first time recently, memorized and polished it in a week, and achieved the same with 'Pathétique' in two days. That gives you just the ratio. . . .

And now 'Satire,' of what? The spirit of satire and in the next 'Karikatur,' assail pedantry and everything else, and yet make beautiful music. 'Oh, well, of course,' you may say. Not so fast, however; look at the score and see what is there and how it is handled to make it what it is instead of a sepulchre. If old Albrechtsberger might rise to hear them he would doubtless drop dead again. . . .

Schumann must have been an awfully jolly German. He facetiously introduces a few bars of the 'Marseillaise' in his bantering Carnival Prank from Vienna, composed about 1839, when the tune was forbidden in Berlin.

Many years ago, when I had long been using this Fugue [one in A minor, by Bach] as a daily exercise without producing the liquid effect I desired, one night in my sleep, or on the borderland thereof, ghostly hands appeared before me on a keyboard and played the Fugue with inexpressible facility, like a murmuring of spring breezes, with nuances caressing and softening its fugal lines, and making it a thing of beauty, most ineffably sweet. After this one lesson which I shall never forget, the hands appeared no more.

Rachmaninoff's Preludes are very beautiful, and many of them very advanced. There is one book alone containing twenty-four masterpieces by this title, but the public have got hold of the first one in C sharp minor, and they can't see past it. They call it 'Rachmaninoff's Prelude.' Every Russian composer writes a prelude every five minutes, just as in our land we read a tract, have an ice cream or liqueur, or smoke a cigar.

Liadow's Biroulki are most exquisitely sweet, seemingly a succession of children's little games, each one quite naive and entrancing—I have five beautiful children, so of course I ought to know.

Scriabin, who by the stupid mismanagement of fate died in 1915 from the results of a wasp bite on the nose, was a leading light of the great Russian school. He started at about the age of twelve composing books of Etudes (Op. 8) that are now standard repertoire of great artists, being then Chopin and Schumannesque: about the age of nineteen he was passing through his Lisztian influences (Allegro de concert epoch), and in his Olympian stride walked right into to-morrow, and beyond the comprehension of any living creature. Goodness knows where he would be now if that wasp had not got him.

In a letter accompanying these programmes Mr. Howard tells me that Godowsky's works are wonderful and ought to be better known. It's up to our pianoforte recitalists to follow the gallant lead of the Antipodes.

Mr. Howard's business circular contains a delightful touch. A long list of newspaper eulogies is headed 'Press Admissions.' Admissions! But I have a crow to pluck with him on another matter. Elsewhere in this circular the Musical Times is quoted, and described as 'probably the oldest and most conservative musical journal in the world.' To the charge of great age we plead guilty (we hope Paul will himself be as old and hearty some day), but we try to be no more than reasonably conservative. After all, we show distinct symptoms of radicalism by approving of Paul's programmes, and even more by refusing to be shocked at his annotations.

As a study in contrasts, read Mr. Howard's notes and go straight on to this extract from a concert notice in the Chicago Tribune:

THE SPLENDOUR THAT IS MARY GARDEN REVEALED AGAIN

BY RUTH MILLER

Mary Garden's art is like a tongue of flame upleaping, hypnotic in its thousand tantalizing, shifting values, perfect in its gorgeous, flaunting beauty, and superb in the breathtaking way it catches those puny ineffectual souls near it in its inescapable fire, and in passing leaves them vivid tinder, glowing with a reflected brilliance. Her tone is like that, too, changing from the thrill of tortured passion to the gentle cooing of a lullaby, even as the deep, ruddy heart of burning slips into the vague, tenuous smoke mist which clings about its iridescent, quivering edges.

Yesterday at the Auditorium Miss Garden was more than a slim, beautiful woman in a startling dress of violet greenness with a scarlet flower caught like some strange, monstrous butterfly on the hip; more than a daring, charming personality whose adorable friendliness years of artistic supremacy and adulation have failed to tarnish with smugness or condescension; and more than an audacious, shrewd show-woman; she was a great musician, earnest, sincere, and absolute in her amazing artistry.

Incidentally, Miss Garden was in unusually good voice, and sang the Gismonda air in a manner to satisfy even the determined vocal quibblers. And no matter what one's operatic affiliations may be, one never leaves a performance of that lovable woman, great mind, and uncanny understanding that is Miss Garden without thinking that either this vivid artist never does anything she cannot do or else there is nothing impossible to her accomplishment.

Stout work with a fountpen, this, though at first sight I was not sure whether the strange monstrous butterfly was caught on its own hip (as any one of us is likely to be in an unguarded moment) or on somebody else's. Still, I prefer Paul to Ruth all the time, though (or because) he is far, far less eloquent.

I am asked to announce that the Contemporary music centre of the British Music Society will hold its first meeting on January 28, when some new and unfamiliar native works will be performed. The committee is ready to consider MSS. with a view to performance at such meetings. The hon. secretary is Mr. Philip Wilson, 19, Berners Street, W.1. MSS. for possible performance on January 28 should reach Mr. Wilson before January 5.

Mr. John Gerrard Williams has scored his delightful pianoforte suite, 'Pot-Pourri,' for full orchestra. I am glad to hear that there is a likelihood of its being played at Queen's Hall by the L.S.O. early in the year.

It is officially announced that the Three Choirs Festival next year will be held at Hereford on September 4, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

PRIZE COMPETITIONS

The proprietors of the School Music Review and the Musical Times announce that the two prizes of twelve guineas each for the best unison school song and the best two-part school song have been awarded respectively to Mr. A. Rowley, 11, St. Paul's Road, Richmond, and to Dr. G. Tootell, 59, Avenue Parade, Accrington.

The judges report that the 'standard of the competition was very disappointing, very few of the 153 songs submitted revealing any knowledge of the requirements of a school song or any skill in the composition of music.'

New Music.

BY WILLIAM CHILD

SONGS

The eleventh and twelfth sets of Parry's 'English Lyrics' (Novello) have just been issued. The whole collection comprises seventy songs. Is there any other set in the language of the same size and excellence? Thinking of the best of them, such as 'Love is a Bable,' 'And yet I love her,' 'Proud Maisie,' 'From a City Window,' and about a dozen others, one feels that here, and in the pick of the choral works, is the stuff that will endure. At present, Parry the composer is perhaps under a shadow—a shadow partly cast by Parry the man. It needs no great daring to prophesy that in ten years' time some of the best of his choral works will be rediscovered—in a few cases we may drop the 're'—and the cream of the 'English Lyrics' once more appear on the programmes of singers who just now are apparently able to discover merit in nothing but the very new or the very old. As I understand Parry's work in this field will shortly be discussed at length in the Musical Times, I need do no more now than merely draw attention to the publication of his last efforts.

Sydney Rosenbloom has shown such pronounced talent as a composer for pianoforte that I took up his 'Four Songs' (Winthrop Rogers) with keen interest. Let the unpleasant truth be told at once: I laid them down with disappointment. The composer gives us a jar at the very beginning. He writes a simple diatonic introduction to Drayton's 'Daffadill,' and spoils it by dragging in a hackneyed minor 9th cadence that is quite out of the picture. Later in the song he repeats words for no other reason, apparently, than to make things eke out. 'Give a man a horse he can ride' pulls up badly at the start by an inane repetition—'And his rank and wealth, his strength and health, his strength and his health'—a passage even worse treated when it recurs in the unnecessary harking back to the first verse at the end of the song. Mr. Rosenbloom must try again. There is a good deal more in song-writing than giving the voice a tune and backing it up with a pianoforte part. And if the text is short, we must be careful how we lay hands on it for the purpose of making a fairly long song of it. In ninety-nine times out of a hundred it is best left short.

A good example of a brief song is H. V. Jervis-Read's 'Day Dream' (Winthrop Rogers), a setting of a nine-lined poem of Shelley. Not a word is repeated, yet there is no feeling of insignificance. Short as the song is the composer contrives to give us a melodic line both broad and expressive, though simple. The accompaniment is mainly chordal, and the harmony of appropriate warmth. This is one of the most immediately attractive little songs I have seen for some time. In style it recalls Quilter's 'Now sleeps the crimson petal.'

Another excellent little song is W. McNaught's 'Dancing at the Lurgan' (Novello). The words have a quasi-humorous flavour, and Mr. McNaught handles them with the right light touch. The rhythmic scheme is refreshingly free, and there are some effective harmonic strokes.

Regarding the ballad as the vocal equivalent of instrumental light music, we need not affect a superior air in dealing with it. It is a pity, however, that composers so frequently reproduce in their music the jog trot of the verses turned out for songs of the kind. A simple, even reminiscent, melody and the plainest of accompaniments can be made tolerable, if not enjoyable, by the lengthening of an occasional note or by the use of an extra bar. Here, for example, is Leonard J. Walker's 'There's a pathway through the heather' (Novello), with a nice singable tune of a familiar type and a rhythm that from the first bar to the last is as unenterprising as the pattern on a wall-paper. The weakness is emphasised by the accompaniment, which consists almost entirely of repeated chords. It may be argued that the large public that likes this sort of song will not worry in the least about these deficiencies; they will enjoy the tune and the sentiment of the words. True, but they would enjoy both not a scrap less if the composer had not been afraid of adding a few musicianly and original touches, and the song would have appealed to a wider public. Why not tap two sets of customers when it can be done by a little forethought? A. Herbert Brewer's 'On wings of delight' (Novello) also belongs to the ballad family. The words are typical Locktonese, the melody does nothing unexpected, and the key scheme oscillates mainly between tonic and dominant. Yet the neatly written accompaniment contains sufficient individuality to lift the song on to a higher plane than that of the average ballad.

A good example of what can be done with a simple melody and a few bold progressions is Julius Harrison's 'Foc'sle Jack' (Enoch), a capital song that has the directness the subject demands, plus an amount of musical interest that a few years ago would have been regarded as out of place in a song of the type. This upward tendency is even more marked in John R. Heath's 'Cherry Time' (Enoch). Here is a delightful song, full of point and interest, and yet readily grasped by the average hearer. The accompaniment calls for neat playing.

Reginald Steggall's 'Lullaby' (Novello) is a trifle longer than a lullaby should be, and is perhaps over-elaborate in its pianoforte part—which is a pity, for it contains some beautiful music. F. Bennicke Hart's setting of Blake's 'The Shepherd' (Elkin) is another example of a song just missing the spot through lack of simplicity. The composer's name is new to me. Judging from this effort he (or she) will do some notable song-writing. The simple parts of 'The Shepherd,' especially the closing bars, are charming. Even the most experienced of composers err sometimes in this matter of being sophisticated in the wrong place. How came John Ireland to lay such violent hands on the beautiful old ballad of 'The Three Ravens'? (Winthrop Rogers). On the credit side may be set his setting of Aldous Huxley's 'The Trellis' (Augener), a beautiful piece of work, with a warmth of expression that Mr. Ireland uses rather too sparingly as a rule. Another convincing song of a very different type is Josef Holbrooke's 'Come not when I am dead' (Enoch). It is finely dramatic—one of the best of modern lyrics. If I were an American I should say it was a song with a punch to it.

'Humpty Dumpty and other Songs' with music by Joseph Moorat, and some delightful drawings by Paul Woodroffe (Oxford: Basil Blackwell), is rather out of our reviewing beat, but so excellent a gift-book having been sent for notice, cannot fairly be passed over, especially during the festive season.

PIANOFORTE

The child of to-day is well looked after in the way of pianoforte music. In place of the dry sonatinas with which most of us wrestled he is given well-written little pieces with an attractive title or programme. Moreover, whereas you and I were kept in a very narrow harmonic path, with plain chords and inversions, our progeny may enjoy such luxuries as unresolved dissonances, and a good many of the fashionable chords with pimples on them. Here for example is the second book of Cyril Scott's 'Young Hearts' (Elkin), five little pieces besprinkled with Cyrilscotticisms in tabloid form. There is a good deal to be said in favour of thus training the young mind to follow music in which the unexpected is likely to happen. It need hardly be said that from a finger technique point of view Mr. Scott's pieces are excellent. Less eccentric, but containing a good deal of harmonic interest, and also well written, are J. D. Davis' 'Four Little Pieces for Young Players' (Novello). There is some capital work for the left hand in various ways, though the fact is well-disguised by the attractiveness of the music. That Adam Carse also has the knack of turning out good material of this kind is shown by his 'Sheaf of Little Dances' (Augener), though the harmonic interest is less than in the Scott and Davis' pieces.

A very attractive work for good players is Anthony Bernard's 'Hill Tune with Variations' (Winthrop Rogers). The tune is in folk-song style, but the treatment is modern. Its alternation of simplicity, intimate feeling, and rough vigour, as well as the unconventional treatment of the theme, make it a refreshing change from the usual run of works in variation form. It is to be hoped that one of our recitalists will discover it.

Cecil Baumer's 'Danse des Negrellons' (Elkin) is a good example of salon music, brilliant and not distressingly original. Nor do Algernon Ashton's Eight Studies (Augener) say anything that has not been said by the study-writers of long ago, though the fact will be a recommendation to some teachers who prefer that technical material shall more or less stick to its job, and not go running after such strange gods as novelty or emotion. From Augener's comes a fingered and well-printed edition of Liszt's 'Rhapsodie Espagnole.' Glière, like most Russians, has the knack of writing short pieces. His set of ten, Op. 31, have been published in album form by Chester—a very attractive collection, of moderate difficulty.

Jacques-Dalcroze is so associated with a kind of glorified musical drill that his gifts as a composer are perhaps overlooked. His Twenty Caprices and Rhythmic Studies (Augener) show his ability to handle with ease and effect all kinds of harmonic and rhythmic complexities. Not often do we find the modern idiom so well used in pianoforte writing as here. A footnote says: 'These pieces require an interpretation strictly in conformity with the composer's precise indications. The performer is therefore requested to abandon in this special case the rubato so dear to pianists.' Can you see that rubato being abandoned? The composer gives us something new in the way of time-signature. Instead of inserting figures in the stave, he puts above the beginning of the bar a number and the unit, thus: 10/♩. As changes of time are frequent, this method is rather bothering, though it has the advantage of saving the notation from a good many interruptions.

Joseph Jongen has many admirers in this country, and his latest work for pianoforte, a 'Suite en forme de Sonate' (Chester), should increase the number. There are four movements, 'Sonatine,' 'La Nieve sur la fagne,' 'Menuet-Danse,' and 'Rondeau.' Particularly attractive are the third and fourth, but the whole is a happy example of the composer's blend of intimate feeling, delicate colour, and admirable keyboard writing.

Josef Holbrooke's Valse 'Coromanthe,' for pianoforte duet (Chester), is a moderately difficult go-ahead affair. It is marked Opus 18. According to Mr. Lowe's book on the composer, Op. 18 is a pair of Suites for pianoforte solo, none of the items bearing the title of this duet—so where are we? Its early date is shown by its comparatively simple character.

The editing or arranging of old keyboard music calls for a good deal of courage as well as taste. It is so easy to leave the text alone, and perhaps even easier to overdo the amplifying. Alfred Moffatt has shown a judicious hand in his treatment of 'Four old French Harpsichord Pieces' (Novello). The composers drawn on are Saint-Amans, Rameau, Chedeville, and our old friend 'Anon.' Mr. Moffatt has managed to make the music pianistic without destroying the slight texture of the original, the result being a set of pieces of unusual charm. He has wisely added fingering, so that they may well be given to fairly advanced pupils.

ORGAN

Two pieces similar in title but widely different in method are J. A. Sowerbutts' 'Lament' and George J. Bennett's Elegiac Prelude (Novello). Mr. Sowerbutts expresses himself by means of a cantilène piece, a type that has its pitfalls, because of the ease with which the modern organ can be made to disguise poor accompanimental writing and other forms of debility. This 'Lament' needs the minimum of help from the organ-builder, because it has a real well-sustained tune and an accompaniment full of interest both in texture and harmony. Especially effective is the return of the main theme in the tenor. Modern organ music that is expressive without sloppiness and original without eccentricity is not so common as it ought to be, so Mr. Sowerbutts' piece is the more welcome.

Dr. Bennett's Elegiac Prelude is in a broader and more markedly funereal style, and therefore well fitted for use as a voluntary on any solemn occasion. It has an effective quicker section half-way through, with a good climax, and a very expressive close. Another piece of a serious cast is C. Villiers Stanford's 'In Modo Dorico' (Stainer & Bell), arranged from a pianoforte piece, and containing material used also in the Prelude to the composer's opera, 'The Travelling Companion.' The mode is strictly adhered to save for a few bars, and even then the character of the piece is not materially affected. The movement begins quietly, and gradually works up to an imposing end.

Gustave Ferrari's Intermezzo (Musette), Solemn March, and Fantasy on French Folk-Songs (H. W. Gray: Novello) are three excellent works. The Fantasy is especially attractive, despite the fact of the composer treating so many themes that he has no time to develop them sufficiently, the result being slightly disjunct. But the subjects are so delightful, and so well treated, that nobody is likely to be bothered by considerations of structure. The folk-song with which the piece ends—'En passant par la Lorraine'—quite takes one captive, especially when the drums (low 4ths on the pedal 32-ft.) are added.

Marcel Dupré's Three Preludes and Fugues (Leduc), Scherzo (Leduc), and Fifteen Versets (Novello), call for more space than is now at my disposal, so a review of them must be deferred till next month.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

It has so happened that during the last few weeks we have had exceptional opportunities for making up our minds concerning two of our most prominent composers. The London Symphony Orchestra played Dr. Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony on December 6, and the Bach Choir played and sang his 'Sea' Symphony on December 14. We heard Mr. Arnold Bax's 'Garden of Fand' played by the British Symphony Orchestra on December 11, and on December 16 his 'November Woods.' Both were new to London.

It is characteristic of things in general in this country that neither of Dr. Vaughan Williams' works had before this been included in any regular series of concerts, though both had been heard on special occasions. It was a little unfortunate that the 'London' Symphony should have appeared in the same programme as Brahms' Violin Concerto. The musical digestion that can assimilate both in one evening is of abnormal strength.

The two Symphonies taken together reveal Dr. Vaughan Williams as a composer of great mastery in dealing with larger forms, with a dignified style and lofty ideals, and a certain vein of austerity which might lead him to undervalue the quality of charm were it not for the Celtic blood in him. All this we knew before.

Comparisons are odious, but to the present writer the 'Sea' Symphony appeals more strongly, for it makes a more decided impression of going on in obedience to an inner impulse. The massive climax of the first movement, the energy of the Scherzo—in places it stings like hail driven by a North-Easter—and the variety of choral effects will make the work memorable. The 'London' Symphony represents the views of a Londoner more intellectual and less emotional than the types imagined by other composers who have tried to illustrate the life of the great city in music. Though intellectual, it is not by any means cerebral. There is a fine vein of high emotion running through it all. Here, too, the Scherzo is the movement which at first makes the strongest impression, but the effect of the poetical and meditative endings of more than one of the movements makes a most lasting impression. It is a pity that our language has no terser way of expressing the distinction between the German momentary 'Effekt' and the lasting 'Wirkung.'

Mr. Bax is a musician of a totally different type. He is, above all, a poet whose mind revels in fantastic and romantic images. If we may call Dr. Vaughan Williams' music intellectual with a vein of poetry running through it, we may say of Mr. Bax's that we have poetry restrained from fantastic excess by a strong intelligence. His orchestral colour is always rich and vivid even when the music is expressive of the darker feeling. 'The Garden of Fand' is a comparatively early work; that is to say—for we move rapidly nowadays—it is about eight years old. Since then Mr. Bax's personality has developed, and with it, a gift of saying what he means more clearly and with apparently less expenditure of effort. Fand is, in Celtic legend, the Queen of the Sea, who, like Circe, lured mortals to their doom. The central section, which describes the revels of the Queen's Court, has some fine moments, and the suggestion of the undulating rhythm of the sea is very imaginatively brought home to us. At the same time a little pruning would benefit the work.

His orchestral tone-poem, 'November Woods,' which was heard at the Hallé concert on November 18, was played for the first time in London at the Philharmonic concert under Mr. Hamilton Harty on December 16.

'November Woods' dates about five years later than 'The Garden of Fand,' and shows the composer to have reached a further stage in his development. It is more closely knit, more lucid, and has less trace of effort. It seems to be more inevitably right. The climaxes and contrasts are more effective, because they seem to come from within. The programme is a psychological one, dealing with inner experiences which all of us may share. There is great mastery of orchestral colour, and it is highly individual. In the middle section, where happy memories contrast with the gloom of the November wood, the composer reaches a high level of imagination and inspiration, and there is a bigness in the music which he does not always achieve.

Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted with sympathy and enthusiasm, and the Philharmonic Orchestra played very finely. Excellent, too, was its playing of Mr. Harty's own skilful and discreet arrangement of Handel's 'Water Music' and of Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. December 16 was the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Beethoven's birth, so the 'Coriolan' Overture was included in the programme—a not too generous tribute to Beethoven.

The rest of the programme was devoted to unaccompanied singing by the Philharmonic Choir, under Mr. Kennedy Scott. The Choir has made great strides since last year. In quality of tone, cleanness of attack, and variety of expression the difference is remarkable. The singing of the music of Sweelinck, Praetorius, Calvisius, and Orlando Gibbons was very human and expressive, and the cleanness of the part-singing was admirable. Equally good was the singing of Dr. Vaughan Williams' five arrangements of English Folk-Songs. They are exceedingly clever, and only a few times does the composer allow his skill in the making of choral effect to obscure the simple beauty of the tunes. The Wassail Song, humorous both in words and music, is the happiest of all, and it had to be repeated.

At the third of the concerts of the London Symphony Orchestra, on November 29, the programme contained an unfamiliar but very charming 'Suite Française' of Roger Ducasse, Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' in which Mr. Coates scored one of his sensational successes, and d'Albert's Violoncello Concerto, which we could well have spared. If it were a really fine work, the composer's hobby of belching forth abuse upon this country would not matter, but as it is particularly dull, even Madame Suggia's magnificent playing could not redeem it. She is a very great artist, but she sometimes comports herself rather as if she were Madame Karsavina miming the actions of a 'cellist. When she was playing Saint-Saëns' Concerto at the British Symphony Orchestra referred to above, her exuberance of gesture resulted in her dropping her bow at a crucial moment. She would be a still greater artist if she did not do these things.

The novelty at the London Symphony Orchestra was the 'Magic Cauldron' by Mr. Cyril Jenkins, a symphonic poem based on a Welsh legend full of love and hate and lust of battle. Mr. Jenkins writes fluently and easily, with a keen sense of picturesque orchestral colour and a knack of inventing well-marked themes. He has a dramatic sense which is characteristic of his native country. It is satisfactory to find at least one composer from Wales whose works do not date from 1860 or thereabouts, and one who is able to be an effectual propagandist for his advanced views.

At the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on November 20 the novelty was Casella's symphonic poem 'Italia.' It falls into two parts, the first inspired by gloomy existence in the sulphur mines of Sicily, the second by popular merry-making at Naples. The composer extracts the last ounce of effect out of the contrast, and makes good use of a popular tune with a strange Oriental flavour. There are many orchestral pictures of Southern gaiety, but this is distinctive by reason of the added note of brutality. Like Strauss in the last movement of 'Aus Italien' he makes use of Denza's tune 'Funiculi funicula.' The music is modern, but not so aggressively dissonant as that of Malipiero and his followers, and its extraordinary vitality makes it good to hear.

To the record of the fourth London Symphony concert on December 6, must be added a few words of praise of Mr. Kochanski's manly yet sensitive playing of Brahms' Concerto. Mr. Coates, however, seemed anxious to make it more romantic than the soloist, and they did not appear to be altogether comfortable with each other.

At the second Philharmonic Concert, on November 25, the principal interest centred round Heifetz's playing of Elgar's Violin Concerto. It was not surprising that technically it should have been a marvellous achievement: one cannot recall a performance more consistently beautiful in tone and more facile. What did surprise us somewhat was the keenness of musical intelligence which the artist displayed; but nevertheless he fell short in the emotional and imaginative side of the interpretation. The slow movement in particular suffered from this defect. The interesting suggestion was made that the fault lay in M. Heifetz's un-English outlook on music. A comparison with Mr. Albert Sammons' performance of the same work supports this view: but the ideal playing of Kreisler pleads strongly on the other side. The performance aroused enormous enthusiasm, and Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. Coates, and M. Heifetz had to bow their acknowledgments many times. On December 4 Mr. Robert Newman gave his annual concert at Queen's Hall. The programme was entirely familiar, the most memorable moments being when M. Cortôt played some of Debussy's Etudes.

Before leaving orchestral concerts, a few words should be spared to record the successful start made on December 9 by the Strolling Players' Orchestra, now said to be the largest amateur orchestra in England. Mr. Joseph Ivimey has worked it up to a high pitch of excellence.

CHAMBER MUSIC

At the concert of the London Chamber Concert Society on November 23, Mr. Florent Schmitt played the pianoforte part of his new Violin Sonata with Mr. Defauw at Wigmore Hall. The title of the Sonata is curious, 'Sonate Libre en deux parties enchaînées.' One might begin by questioning whether a 'Sonata' could be 'free,' because the very word 'sonata' suggests obedience to certain rules. This does not imply any question of a composer's right to employ any kind of form he likes, only, if he does do so, why call it a Sonata in this case? There is another reason for the use of the title, which is explained by the Latin motto following them, Ad modum clementis aquæ, which being interpreted is 'After the manner of gently flowing water.' Now, the Sonata is, if anything, rather turbulent, but the key to the riddle is that Clementis aquæ is the translation of the name of M. Clémenceau. M. Clémenceau edited a paper called L'Homme Libre, and when that was suppressed started another which was called L'Homme Enchaîné. Whether the Sonata has or has not been inspired by the character of the 'Tiger' Mr. Schmitt has not divulged. This however is by the way. The Sonata is a very long and involved work. Its principal themes promise well, but in treating them the composer relapses into violence and obscurity. There is a constant feeling that the two instruments, instead of working harmoniously to a common end, are desperately fighting for supremacy all the time. Perhaps this is Clémenceau. It could not be said that the Sonata gained more than a 'succès d'estime.' At the same concert the Allied String Quartet gave an excellent performance of Ravel's String Quartet.

At Steinway Hall, on November 29, Mr. Leopold Ashton and Mr. Albert Cazabon gave a refined and thoughtful performance of Pierre de Bréville's Violin Sonata in C sharp minor. It is a scholarly but not striking work. The whole programme was un-hackneyed and interesting.

The most notable feature of the other concert of the same Society was the performance of Mr. Felix Salmond and Mr. Harold Craxton of the Violoncello Sonata of Jean Huré. This is a remarkably distinguished piece of work. It is melodious and lucid, it has a modern spirit, and its atmosphere is one of great charm. It should become the most popular of recent 'cello sonatas. The same two artists played at the concert of Miss Gertrude Blomfield (who still further established her claim to be one of our best concert singers) the Violoncello Concerto of Rachmaninov, an effective and agreeable work, but without the distinctive qualities of the French example.

An interesting feature of the autumn has been the violoncello recitals of Mr. Joseph Salmon, who drew exclusively on his own arrangements of the music of old masters. He has disinterred much music of great value; his arrangements are singularly skilful and tasteful, and his playing of music of these styles is full of vitality while maintaining the dignity of the classical manner. He does, however, now and then bring a little modern sentiment into his interpretations of some of the slow movements.

There has been a good deal of activity in quartet playing. The work done by the Meredyll Quartet is notably musicianly and refined. The Lucas Quartet (also a quartet of ladies) has intimate charm, and the Spencer Dyke Quartet and the London Trio have also done good work.

PIANISTS AND VIOLINISTS

In the sphere of pianoforte playing the outstanding events have been the Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt recitals of M. Cortôt, the only regrettable feature, about which is that Wigmore Hall is really too small for the audiences. Nothing new can with advantage be said about his remarkable playing, nor need anything be added to what has been said so often about Mr. Lamond's Beethoven recitals. Mr. Hoffmann's popularity is speedily growing, and it is satisfactory to know that when he returns to us in the summer he will be heard with orchestra. Mr. Rubinstein has continued to gain favour, and his playing of sonatas with M. Kochanski showed that he has deeper musical qualities than those required of a brilliant soloist. One of the most interesting pianoforte recitals has been that of music for two pianofortes given on December 4 by Miss Irene Scharrer and Miss Myra Hess, whose unanimity of style is remarkable. They played among other things an arrangement of 'Après-midi d'un Faune,' an interesting experiment, not altogether successful in spite of the excellence of the performance. As I was at Kingsway Hall at that moment, I have to rely on the authority of a trustworthy friend. Miss Winifred Christie has earned a high place for herself among pianists in the United States. She has given an orchestral concert and a recital, and her well-balanced lucid style and finished technique should make a wide appeal. There should always be room for such musicianly playing.

Among many violinists who have given recitals, the most interesting, perhaps, has been M. Kochanski, whose sterling musical qualities and absence of sensational methods deserve very high praise. The new pieces of Szymanowski, which he played, are full of charm. Mr. Louis Godowsky is a young violinist whose great promise has many times been mentioned. His performance of the Elgar Concerto at his own recital is the best thing he has done so far. He also played some graceful and effective little pieces of his own.

At their recital on November 26, Misses Christabel Baxendale and Doris Salmon gave a thoughtful and sensitive performance of Elgar's Sonata, and both played solos in a very musicianly way.

M. Mischel Cherniavsky, who was once a prodigy, is now a mature artist. He gave an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on December 15, and played the Concerto in D of Haydn and Saint-Saëns' Concerto in D minor. He is a 'cellist of distinction, with a natural style and broad technique, and a singularly sympathetic if not powerful tone.

SINGERS AND SINGING

The most interesting of the new singers who have appeared is Madame Salteni-Mochi. She is as good an example as has been heard for some time of real bel canto. With her, vocal technique is not an end in itself, but a means to an end, that end being variety of expression. Her Bach singing is remarkable not only for its accuracy in florid passages, but for her sense of style, and her interpretation of Lieder is excellent. We have heard in the past so much declamatory singing of Hugo Wolf, that it is a comfort to hear his songs really sung. I was particularly interested in her singing of 'Tre Giorni son che Nina.' There are two ways of reading it: the grimly humorous and melancholy. I have always thought the first way the right one, but Madame Salteni-Mochi's singing of it in an almost tragic vein nearly converted me to the other view. Mr. Gervase Elwes gave a notable recital previous to his departure for America.

Miss Leila Megane, who made a successful first appearance at Covent Garden in 1919 and has since then been singing in opera at Paris, has given a vocal recital which augurs well for her future. She has quite exceptional gifts of voice with the temperament expected from a Welsh singer. In the present dearth of contraltos of the first rank she should have an admirable chance of going very far. Miss Judith Litante's vocal recital should also be mentioned, as she is making rapid progress.

After a considerable interval Mr. Roland Jackson was heard again at Wigmore Hall. His pleasing voice and refined style are as good to listen to as ever; and he has a nice taste in the making of a programme.

There have been two more public rehearsals of the R.C.M. Patron's Fund. The most interesting of the works heard was L. A. Collingwood's 'Excerpts from "Macbeth," for mezzo-soprano, baritone, and orchestra.'

SOME NOTES FOR JANUARY

At the time of writing it seems as though the Christmas lull would last a little longer than usual, at any rate so far as important series of concerts are concerned. At the Philharmonic concert on January 27, with Mr. Albert Coates conducting, Miss Murray Lambert will play Mr. Hamilton Harty's Violin Concerto, and Respighi's 'The Fountain of Rome' will be in the programme. The first appearance here of M. Prokofiev, who will play the solo part in his own Pianoforte Concerto at the London Symphony concert on January 17, should cause some sensation if preliminary reports on the work are to be believed.

We are also promised a series of orchestral concerts conducted by M. Kussevitzy. He will be remembered as the pioneer conductor who gave a series of concerts on house-boats on the rivers of Russia, and thus made orchestral music accessible in places where it had never been heard before.

MARCEL DUPRÉ'S CONCERT

The Albert Hall was crowded on December 9, when this well-known organist gave a concert with the London Gregorian Association, in aid of the funds of the Officers' Association. Among the audience were the Prince of Wales, Princess Mary, and Earl Haig. Captain Francis Burgess conducted, and Mr. Herrick Edwards accompanied on a Positif organ. M. Dupré played Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, d'Aquin's 'Noël' with variations, the first movement of Widor's fifth Symphony, his own Prelude and Fugue in G minor, and Fifteen Versets. He also improvised between portions of psalms and hymns sung by the choir. A player of great brilliance and resource, M. Dupré was heard at his best in the Bach fugue and in the more dashing of his own versets and improvisations. He was strangely slow in the Bach Fantasia and, apparently, far too fast in his own Prelude and Fugue. Both in the style of the improvisation and in the registration schemes as a whole, there was a good deal that jarred with English ideas as to what is fitting at a Church service. Those of the audience who wisely began by accepting the necessary new point of view found the performance thoroughly stimulating. One unfortunate result of the prevailing brilliance and frequent bizarrie of the organ playing was to make the choir sound dull. A little dynamic variety on their part would have been a great relief. Is there any sound reason why plainsong should be sung mezzo-forte all the time, regardless of the varying sentiment of the psalm or hymn? If such a level style is the correct tradition, so much the worse for tradition. However, perhaps the method had hardly a fair chance on this occasion, owing to the character of the organ interludes. We hope M. Dupré will visit us again. Perhaps he might be induced to show us that the Queen's Hall organ is worth listening to as a solo instrument. We know already what it can do as a religious 'also ran' to Handel's 'Largo,' the Bach-Gounod 'Ave Maria,' and other battle-horses. A recital by Dupré should convince the authorities that there is a public for fine organ music well played. When they see us coming in crowds to hear the brilliant Frenchman, they may give us a chance of hearing one of our brilliant Englishmen. We have a few.

H. G.

Opera in London

By FRANCIS E. BARRETT

THE CARL ROSA SEASON: A NEW WORK

Although it came late and was all too brief, the London autumn opera season was remarkably successful. The wisdom of the arrangement made by the Carl Rosa Company to give a season at Covent Garden proved to be fully justified. Large audiences were the rule throughout the four weeks, and on several occasions the attendance constituted a record. This was especially the case with respect to 'Carmen.' This favourite opera had not been seen at Covent Garden for many a day—a fact that made it a strong attraction. The other performances were all well attended, and I did not see one really 'thin' house throughout the season. Everybody was surprised by the fact, with the exception of myself. Close observation of the operatic needs of London has enabled me to make the deduction that given the examples it wants to see the Metropolitan public is always ready to patronise performances of opera in English. I need scarcely add that the performances must be of good level and the conditions generally as perfect as possible. All these requirements were met by the Carl Rosa Company, with the result that it has received ample compensation for its trouble. And as the outcome of such attraction the public responded royally when a new work was put on, the attendance at the first performance of 'David Garrick'—Mr. Reginald Somerville's latest opera—being in every way remarkable if only because of the interest shown by the occupants of the cheaper seats, who filled them as they have never been filled before for the production of a new British work.

A POPULAR RÉPERTOIRE

If familiar, the répertoire was certainly popular. London has had so little opportunity of becoming acquainted with the standard works that it was only too pleased to see and hear 'Lohengrin,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'Carmen,' 'Faust,' 'Tannhäuser,' and the other examples that in the minds of so many constitute due representation of the form. Then, having given the public opportunities for testing its qualities, the Company proceeded judiciously to vary and expand the scheme. This was done by adding in turn Saint-Saëns' 'Samson and Delilah' and Wolf-Ferrari's 'The Jewels of the Madonna' and 'The Secret of Suzanne,' and 'Tristan and Isolde' from known matter; with Mr. Somerville's work and Mr. Stephen Philpot's 'Dante and Beatrice' as novelty and semi-novelty. The least popular proved—curiously enough—to be 'The Tales of Hoffmann,' which is explained by the fact that it has been given so frequently and so badly in recent years that the public is shy of it. But the approval extended to certain examples was so remarkable, especially in the case of 'Carmen,' 'Samson,' and the novelty, that more performances of them would have 'gone,' as the term is. Unfortunately the management set out the whole répertoire beforehand, so that it was not possible to arrange for repeats of operas for which there was a demand. However, it is satisfactory to know that the Company intends to return to Covent Garden next autumn, when it will stay for a longer time.

A VERSATILE COMPANY

The individual work done by the members of the Company has been of extraordinary versatility. Nothing seems to come amiss to Miss Beatrice Miranda. She has sung Elsa, Gioletta, Aïda, Cho-Cho-San, Tosca, Malibella, and finally she created the chief soprano part in the new opera. And she has done it all with conviction, never failing to give well-defined characterisation and to sing with great wealth of beautiful tone. Miss Doris Woodall has displayed similar pliancy of gift. Ortrud on Monday, she was Carmen on Saturday, with an outstanding Amneris thrown in, and all done with marked effect. The male members have displayed equal diversity of ability. Mr. William Boland has revealed himself as an operatic tenor of a calibre not met with in recent years, and has shown gifts as an actor never before associated with a like amount of vocal power. The experienced hands like Mr. Frederick Clendon and Mr. Harry Brindle have done sterling work, never failing to rise to the occasion. This versatility, let me remark in passing, is one of the striking characteristics of the British operatic artist, but in the case of the operatic soprano has not been met with since the days of that wonderfully gifted singer Fanny Moody, to whom 'The Bohemian Girl' and Isolde came with equal ease.

Much promise has been shown by the younger members of the Company. Miss Gladys Seager gave us a pleasing, though not powerful, Marguerite; Miss Ethel Austin, as Elizabeth, displayed a voice of the real operatic quality; Miss Gladys Cranston made a charming Nedda, and was one of the most vocally graceful Mimis I have heard on the British stage; Miss Eva Turner, like Miss Elspeth Wakefield and Miss Gladys Parr, has demonstrated how good is the material in our midst. The tenors have by no means shown themselves inferior. With reservations I can prophesy a future for Mr. John Perry, and Mr. Parry Jones makes up in temperament for what he may lack in voice. Of the baritones Mr. Kingsley Lark has made it clear that he is an uncommonly good and intelligent actor who compels regret that his voice is not heavier and rather better produced. Mr. Booth Hichen should come to the fore; his Silvio was as good as one could wish, and his other work was of high promise.

THE GENERAL ENSEMBLE

All attention was paid to the general ensemble of the Company, and with good results. The plan of employing a large chorus of a hundred and fifty voices in the choral operas—so often advocated and practised by Charles Manners—was followed in this season. The effect was not quite what was anticipated, for the fact seemed to be overlooked that so large a body requires special stage rehearsing if it is to move with any effect, and has to be coached in the work generally. As it was, the volume of tone was not so great as it might have been, and the effect was disappointing. On the other hand, where the Company's chorus appeared in normal numbers the effect was entirely satisfactory. The playing of the orchestra was excellent, and the skill of its directors, M. Henriquez de la Fuente and Mr. Charles Webber, has been very marked.

THE NEW ADDITIONS

As I have already stated, several additions to the repertoire were made. The first was Saint-Saëns' popular 'Samson and Delilah.' It is no stranger either to the English repertoire or to Covent Garden, but it has certainly never before been so well given in English. There was no attempt to imitate foreign representations. The Company's presentation was its own, and it was unquestionably effective. There was no forcing the pace, and there were no idiotic 'pictures' to bring down the curtain—and execrations—at the end of each Act. Miss Doris Woodall added considerably to her reputation by her impersonation of Delilah, and Mr. Boland's Samson was one of the best I have seen. It had vigour and character, and was finely sung. The other parts were ably given, and the chorus singing was remarkable in point of tone and tune. M. Fuente's reading of the score was most musicianly.

It was the late Mr. Walter van Noorden, so long associated with the Company—the brother of the present proprietor—who acquired the English rights of M. Wolf-Ferrari's blood-thirsty opera, 'The Jewels of the Madonna' as soon as it was produced in this country. There must have been a certain amount of prescience in the matter, for the representation the Company gave was decidedly good. It is this fact, in conjunction with the tuneful and novel nature of the music, that will gain popularity for the work; its story will never be attractive, no matter of what religious persuasion one may be, including 'Jew, Infidel, or Turk.' But there is some very skilful music, and Miss Miranda, Mr. Hebden Foster, and Mr. William Boland gave it splendidly. The singing of Miss Miranda and Mr. Boland in the climax-making scene of the theft of the jewels was some of the finest I have heard on the English stage. The audience took very kindly to the work, and cheered the representation to the echo. The other additions, 'The Secret of Suzanne' and 'Tristan,' came too late to permit of notice this month.

'DAVID GARRICK'

The new opera by Mr. Reginald Somerville, commissioned by the Company and based on Robertson's famous play of 'David Garrick,' pleased everyone. Its success was assured from the first when it became clear that the composer had treated his subject in the form of a light opera, lyrical in design and tuneful in expression. No one can deny that this is the best treatment for the subject. The vein is duly thickened or reduced to suit the occasion, and the way he meets those situations without ever becoming involved or obscure testified to the clarity of the composer's vision. The music is one long tune—a thing rather lacking in English operatic music, in spite of the fact that tune is the one thing the average musical person admires. Mr. Somerville's melody ebbs and flows throughout the score, but never slackens. The music has a pleasant character of its own, and owes very little to outside influences. At the same time it is catchy, with the result that I heard some humming of one of the duet themes as the audience left the theatre. The various duets between Garrick and Ada are remarkable for their vocal quality, and for the fact that they are so contrived that the melodic outline is never abandoned for a more complicated style. The whole is a pleasant and pleasing light opera, and one well calculated to draw attention to native effort in the theatre where it is so much needed. It was well done in every way. Mr. Boland made an excellent Garrick, singing and acting with greater effect than one expects on the operatic stage. Miss Miranda was a charming Ada, and her fine voice was of immense service in giving special import to her share of the music. Mr. Brindle as Ingot, Mr. Kingsley Lark as Chivy, and Mr. Clendon and Miss Parr as Mr. and Mrs. Smith, all helped in a well-prepared, well-mounted, and wholly worthy production which the composer directed.

AT THE OLD VIC.

The latest and most daring addition to the operatic attractions at the Old Vic. has been 'Tristan and Isolde,' which however came at a date that precludes notice this month. But the fact remains, and the approval was very sincere. For the more familiar 'Magic Flute' of Mozart there was cordial welcome. It was carefully given as last year with all desire to preserve the spirit of Mozart along with the best possible representation. In the performance Misses Muriel Gough and Winifred Kennard, Messrs. Tudor Davies, Clive Carey, and Derwood distinguished themselves.

THE SWEDISH BALLET

A new dancing force was suddenly sprung upon London in the middle of the month in the shape of the Swedish Ballet, which appeared at the Palace Theatre. Quite a different phase of the dancer's art is represented by this organization. It has a character of its own. The technique is free and exceedingly graceful, and the designing distinguished by great imagination. What is so pleasing a feature of the work is that many of the numbers have a national foundation. Examples may be cited in the 'Nuit de St. Jean' number, with its quaint observance of that significant event, and in 'Les Vierges Folles,' a version of the Wise and Foolish Virgins presented as a Swedish allegory of rather humorous turn. In both of these Swedish folk-music is used with uncommonly good effect, showing what can be done in that direction by ourselves when eventually we have the British ballet. The other numbers at the first performance were a fascinating illustration of Ravel's pieces 'Le Tombeau de Couperin,' here styled 'Au Temps Jadis,' and a miming scene, 'El Greco,' with some remarkable music by M. Ingelbrecht, the orchestral conductor. All the Company display much individuality, and the efforts of Mlle. Jenny Hasselquist and M. Jean Borlin, both as dancers and mimes, are of special distinction for their legitimacy, fidelity, and grace. The accompanying music, which includes some of the inevitable Chopin, is of high value and admirably performed.

Choral Notes and News

By W. McNAUGHT

To keep up a recurrent commentary on choral music in and around London is not an easy task. There is none of that steady flow of stimulating 'copy' enjoyed by a writer on London's orchestral music, or chamber music, or opera. Even ex opera semper aliquid novi. Our source of excitement in choral matters during the last month or two (allowing for the fact that the Bach Choir and Philharmonic Choir have been snapped up by 'London Concerts,' and that the Oriana concerts occurred too late) consists of one performance of the Mass in B minor, and one of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' works that ought to be taken for granted in a self-respecting choral existence. Of course the chief trouble of choral societies is finance, although most of the people taking part in a choral concert do so for nothing, and even pay a subscription for the privilege. But even if there came a wave of enthusiasm which brought in hundreds of singers and sight-readers clamouring for four rehearsals a week and new works to study, the expense of engaging a large orchestra would remain, as it is now, an obstacle of huge proportions. Present-day composers are much to blame, not only in the way they ignore the essentials of choral style, but in the persistent hankering after subsidiary orchestral effects. They must have tubas, cor anglais, bass clarinet, glockenspiel, and the like, and divide their strings into sixteen parts. There is a whole world of unwritten choral music—capable of plumbing any depths, and soaring to any heights—in which the chorus parts are chiefly diatonic, and the accompaniment is for 'theatre' orchestra, or even for strings only. Considering how subtle and telling choral music can be without any accompaniment at all, it is rather surprising that composers, when they want instruments to join in, insist on having about sixty.

But lest this ramble should contradict the plea that choral affairs offer no 'copy,' we must come back to our record. As suggested above, the season has been one of inspiring activity, for it included a performance of the Mass in B minor and one of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The Mass was given at the Northern Polytechnic Hall on November 27 by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society under Mr. Allen Gill. This choir is in a peculiar position. Originally designed to fit the huge platform of the Palace, it can only accommodate itself to the next-best hall by a limitation of membership, and at every concert it views the sad spectacle of money being turned away at the doors. One is genuinely sorry for this plight of a Society to whose spirited work we owe so much. Even now it is unsurpassed in achievement and enterprise—with 'The Apostles' in its spring programme. Its singing in the choruses of the Mass needs no detailed description, being always weighty, buoyant in rhythm, resourceful in the long phrase and in climax. The Sanctus was given as if the choir came fresh to the task and not as if (as often happens) the Resurrexit and Confiteor had sapped the energy of the singers.

No better choice than 'The Dream of Gerontius' could have been made for the revival of the London Choral Society, for it was to this body that London owed its first opportunity for hearing the work in 1904. The performance at Queen's Hall on December 1 under Mr. Arthur Fagge was more than creditable to a choir which, in everything that makes for cohesion and interpretative power, was newly-formed. The singers showed a good deal of the quality that used to carry the old London Choral Society through its ambitious tasks—a certain vivacity and directness, and a clear suggestion of good musicianship in the average. With Miss Olga Haley, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Robert Radford as the solo-singers the performance was well worth hearing.

Only one concert of the Royal Choral Society comes into this month's account, the annual festival of carols being too late for inclusion. The performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' on November 27 is said to have been well worthy of the traditions of the Society in its breadth and sonosity, and great praise was given to the singing of 'Hail, Judea,' 'Ah, wretched Israel,' 'Sing unto God,' and other choruses. The solos were sung by Madame Elsa Stralia, Miss Margaret Balfour, Miss Millicent Russell, Mr. William Boland and Mr. Graham Smart, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

According to reliable information the performance of 'King Olaf' given by the Ealing Philharmonic Society on November 27, was the highest achievement in the Society's record, the vitality and technical certainty of the singing being of a degree rarely obtained. Great credit for this advancing capacity of a local organization is due to the conductor, Mr. E. Victor Williams. The solo parts were taken by Miss May Kearney, Mr. Sidney Pointer, and Mr. Edward Dykes.

The Ibis Musical Society, now in its second season, was heard at Queen's Hall, on November 26, in a capital performance of 'The Golden Legend,' preceded by the 'In Memoriam' Overture. The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors and Miss Gladys Palmer, and Messrs. John Adams, Esmond Bristol, and Edgar Archer. The orchestra and choir numbered about five hundred. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted. This is an excellent example of business-house music-making, the performers being employees of the Prudential Assurance Company.

Other London events that claim to be mentioned with approval are the performance of a selection from Purcell's 'King Arthur' by the Westminster Choral Society, under Mr. Vincent Thomas, on November 30; of 'The Golden Legend' by the Dulwich Philharmonic Society at the Crystal Palace, on November 20, under Mr. Martin Kingslake; of 'Merrie England' by the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on November 27, under Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock; and the concert of the South West Choral Society under Mr. A. R. Saunders at Battersea Town Hall on December 1, when the programme included 'A Tale of Old Japan,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah.'

The Musician's Bookshelf

By 'FESTE'

The day of the lengthy review in a journal such as this is gone, at all events for a time. Among the volumes awaiting consideration are at least half a dozen that years ago, when books on music were few, would have called for and received at least a page. At present, with publishers falling over one another in their haste to meet the increased public interest in the art, only brief notice is possible.

In the case of such a book as Mrs. Curwen's 'Psychology applied to Music Teaching' (Curwen, 15s.), the only review that can do the work justice is one

(Continued on page 40.)

ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE.

Words by Mrs. C. F. ALEXANDER (1852).

Composed by HUGH BLAIR.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Larghetto.

OPRANO. The ro - seate hues of ALTO. The ro - seate hues of TENOR. The ro - seate hues of

BASS. The ro - seate hues of

Larghetto. ♩ = 76.
Solo.
p
Ch.
Ped.
- Ch. to Ped.

Voices alone. (ad lib.)

ear - ly dawn, The bright - ness of the day, The crim - son of the ear - ly dawn, The bright - ness of the day, . . The crim - son of the ear - ly dawn, The bright - ness of the day, The crim - son of the ear - ly dawn, The bright - ness of the day, The crim - son of the Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

mf

sun - set sky, How fast they fade a - way! . . . Oh, for the pear - ly

mf

sun - set sky, How fast they fade a - way! . . . Oh, for the pear - ly

mf

sun - set sky, How fast they fade a - way! . . . Oh, for the pear - ly

mf

sun - set sky, How fast they fade a - way! . . . Oh, for the pear - ly

p Sw. mf

f

gates of Heaven, Oh, for the gold - en floor, . . . Oh, for the Sun of

f gates of Heaven, . . . Oh, for the gold - en floor, . . . Oh, for the Sun of

cres. f

gates of Heaven, Oh, for the gold - en floor, Oh, for the Sun of

cres. f

gates of Heaven, Oh, for the gold - en floor, Oh, for the Sun . . . of

Gt. f

Gt. cres. f

Ped. Gt. to Ped.

Right - eous - ness That set - teth nev - er - more! . . .

Right - eous - ness That set - teth nev - er - more! . . .

Right - eous - ness That set - teth nev - er - more! . . .

Right - eous - ness That set - teth nev - er - more! . . .

dim.

Gt. to Ped. in.

mf SOPRANO SOLO.

Here faith is ours, and Heaven - ly hope, And

p Sw. mf

Sw. to Ped. senza Ped.

grace to lead us higher; But there are per - fect - ness and peace, Be - p p Ped.

rall. Lento. pp

- yond our best de - sire. . . Oh, by Thy love and an - guish,

Lento.  $\text{♩} = 60$  pp

rall. pp

cres.

Lord, Oh, by Thy life laid down, Grant that we fall not

cres.

from . . Thy grace, Nor cast a - way . . our crown.

Chorus.

Oh, by Thy love and an - guish, Lord, Oh, by Thy life laid

Oh, by Thy love and an - guish, Lord, Oh, by Thy life laid

Oh, by Thy love and an - guish, Lord, Oh, by Thy life laid

Oh, by Thine an - guish, Lord, Oh, by Thy life laid pp cres. pp cres. pp cres. pp cres.

down, Grant that we fall not from Thy grace, Nor cast a - way our down, Grant that we fall not from Thy grace, Nor cast a - way our down, Grant that we fall not from Thy grace, Nor cast a - way our down, Grant that we fall not from Thy grace, Nor cast a - way our mp p rit. mp p rit. mp p rit. mp p rit.

Tempo 1mo.

crown. The crown. The crown. The crown. The

mp mp mp mp

Tempo 1mo.

p Sw.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

1	Our Native Land ...	Reichardt	2d.	87	A Finland love song...	H. Hiles	1rd.	173	The Moon ...	H. Smart	3d.
2	Cricketers' Song (T.T.B.)	Macfarren	2d.	88	Evening ...	"	1rd.	174	A Spring Song ...	Ciro Pinsuti	3d.
3	Boating Song ...	Monk	2d.	89	To the Morning Wind	"	3d.	175	An Autumn Song ...	"	3d.
4	Song of the Railroads ...	Macfarren	3d.	90	To Daffodils ...	"	3d.	176	The Two Spirits ...	"	3d.
5	Good-morrow, fair ladies	Morley	2d.	91	Summer longings ...	"	3d.	177	The Crusaders...	"	1rd.
6	Home Fairy (T.T.B.B.) ...	Winter	2d.	92	Night, lovely Night ...	F. Berger	1rd.	178	The Caravan ...	"	1rd.
7	The Wreath ...	Benedict	2d.	93	Essay, my Heart ...	"	3d.	179	Stradella ...	"	3d.
8	Countryman's Song ...	Rimbault	3d.	94	Childhood's melody	"	1rd.	180	When evening's twilight	Hatton	1rd.
9	Student's Greeting (T.T.B.B.)	Berner	2d.	95	Now ...	"	3d.	181	Absence ...	"	1rd.
10	Magdalen College Song ...	Monk	2d.	96	Sunset ...	"	1rd.	182	April showers ...	"	1rd.
11	Integer Vitæ (T.T.B.B.)	Flemming	4d.	97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	"	3d.	183	The red, red rose ...	"	1rd.
12	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren	4d.	98	Night winds that ...	J. B. Calkin	1rd.	184	Beware, beware ...	"	1rd.
13	Harvest Song ...	Macfarren	2d.	99	Breathe soft, ye Winds	"	1rd.	185	The Sailor's Song ...	"	1rd.
14	Come, heavy sleep ...	Doulard	2d.	100	My lady is so wondrous fair	"	1rd.	186	Good-Night ...	"	1rd.
15	Fisherman's Song ...	Rimbault	2d.	101	Chivalry of Labour (S.A.T.B.)	"	4d.	187	Blythe is the bird ...	"	2d.
16	In all thy need ...	Doulard	2d.	102	Come, fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	"	3d.	188	Stars of the summer night	"	1rd.
17	All among the barley ...	Stirling	2d.	103	Echoes ...	"	1rd.	189	The hemlock-tree ...	"	4d.
18	When icicles hang ...	Macfarren	2d.	104	Phœbus ...	J. Barnby	1rd.	190	Jack Frost ...	"	1rd.
19	Jolly Cricket Ball ...	Monk	2d.	105	Luna ...	"	1rd.	191	I loved her ...	"	3d.
20	Emigrant's Song ...	Macfarren	2d.	106	A Wife's Song ...	"	1rd.	192	The Village Blacksmith	"	1rd.
21	Shepherd's Song ...	Brewer	3d.	107	Home they brought...	"	1rd.	193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	"	1rd.
22	Pedlar's Song ...	Doulard	3d.	108	Annie Lee ...	"	1rd.	194	Softly fall the shades of	"	3d.
23	Fairies' Song (S.S.S.S.)	Bishop	6d.	109	Starry Crowns of Heaven	"	1rd.	195	Auburn (Sweet village)	"	3d.
24	June (S.S.A.) ...	F. Dun	2d.	110	The Wind ...	"	3d.	196	Bird of the wilderness	"	3d.
25	Awake! the starry ...	Mendelssohn	2d.	111	The Skylark ...	"	1rd.	197	The Summer gale ...	"	2d.
26	Fair Flower ...	Rimbault	2d.	112	The Sands of Dee	G.A. Macfarren	1rd.	198	I met her in the quiet lane	"	2d.
27	O happy he who ...	Gastoldi	2d.	113	Alton Locke's Song ...	"	1rd.	199	If thou art sleeping ...	"	3d.
28	Green Leaves ...	Taylor	2d.	114	The Starlings ...	"	1rd.	200	Spring Song ...	"	3d.
29	Dirge ...	S. Wesley	3d.	115	The Three Fishers ...	"	1rd.	201	Good wishes ...	"	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting Tree ...	Corfe	3d.	116	The World's Age ...	"	1rd.	202	Parting and Meeting	"	2d.
31	The Dream ...	Stewart	2d.	117	Sing high ho! ...	"	1rd.	203	Whether kissed by sunbeams,	"	3d.
32	God speed the Plough ...	Richter	2d.	118	Fairy Song ...	A. Zimmermann	1rd.	204	The roses are blushing	"	1rd.
33	There is a ladie sweete ...	Ford	2d.	119	Good-Night ...	"	1rd.	205	The Rivals ...	"	3d.
34	Football Song ...	Monk	3d.	120	Gone for ever ...	"	3d.	206	The village dance ...	"	1rd.
35	Haymakers' Song ...	Stewart	3d.	121	Flowers ...	"	1rd.	207	Song of the Gipsy maidens	"	3d.
36	Come away, Death ...	Macfarren	3d.	122	To Daffodils ...	"	3d.	208	The Waterfall ...	"	3d.
37	Old May-day, in A ...	Benedict	1rd.	123	Good Morrow ...	"	1rd.	209	Over hill, over dale ...	"	3d.
38	Invocation to Sleep ...	"	3d.	124	Sigh no more, ladies	Macfarren	1rd.	210	Love me little, love me long	"	3d.
39	A Night Song ...	"	3d.	125	You spotted snakes (S.S.A.A.)	"	1rd.	211	Going a-maying ...	"	3d.
40	Dirge for the faithful lover	"	1rd.	126	Take, oh take those lips away	"	4d.	212	See, the rooks are homeward	"	3d.
41	A Drinking Song (T.T.B.B.)	"	3d.	127	It was a lover and his lass	"	1rd.	213	Sweet Lady Moon ...	"	3d.
42	Sylvan pleasures ...	"	4d.	128	O mistress mine ...	"	1rd.	214	Hark, the Convent bells are	"	1rd.
43	Consolation ...	H. Smart	1rd.	129	Under the greenwood tree	"	3d.	215	When evening's (male voices),	"	3d.
44	Good-night, thou glorious Sun	"	1rd.	130	Hark, the lark ...	"	3d.	216	Warrior's Song ...	"	2d.
45	Hunting Song ...	"	1rd.	131	Tell me where's fancy bred	"	1rd.	217	Absence ...	"	1rd.
46	Lady, rise, sweet Morn's	"	1rd.	132	The Violet ...	H. Leslie	3d.	218	April showers ...	"	3d.
47	Summer Morning ...	"	1rd.	133	One morning sweet in May	"	1rd.	219	The red, red rose ...	"	1rd.
48	The Sea King ...	"	1rd.	134	Daylight is fading ...	"	1rd.	220	Beware, beware ...	"	1rd.
49	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren	1rd.	135	Down in a pretty valley	"	1rd.	221	The happiest land ...	"	3d.
50	When Icicles hang ...	"	1rd.	136	The Primrose ...	"	1rd.	222	The Sailor's Song ...	"	2d.
51	Come away, Death (S.A.T.T.B.)	"	3d.	137	Arise, sweet love ...	"	1rd.	223	Busy, curious fly ...	"	2d.
52	When Daisies pied ...	"	3d.	138	'Tis break of day ...	H. Smart	2d.	224	Good-night, beloved ...	"	3d.
53	Who is Sylvia ...	"	1rd.	139	My true love hath my heart	"	2d.	225	Bacchanalian Song ...	"	1rd.
54	Fear no more the heat ...	"	3d.	140	Doth not my lady come	"	1rd.	226	Stars of the summer,	"	3d.
55	Blow, blow, thou winter wind	"	1rd.	141	Spring Song ...	"	1rd.	227	King Witlaf's Song ...	"	3d.
56	The Belfry Tower ...	J.L. Hatton	1rd.	142	The Curfew ...	"	1rd.	228	Tars' Song ...	"	4d.
57	England ...	"	1rd.	143	Hear, sweet spirit ...	"	1rd.	229	The hemlock-tree ...	"	3d.
58	Come, celebrate the May ...	"	1rd.	144	Spring Voices ...	S. Reay	3d.	230	Jack Frost ...	"	3d.
59	Song to Pan ...	"	1rd.	145	Waken, lords and ladies gay	"	3d.	231	The Lye ...	"	3d.
60	The Indian Maid...	"	1rd.	146	As it fell upon a day...	"	3d.	232	I loved her ...	"	3d.
61	The Pearl Divers ...	"	4d.	147	Huntsman, rest ...	"	3d.	233	Village Blacksmith ...	"	3d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G.A. Macfarren	1rd.	148	'Tis May upon the mountain	"	1rd.	234	The Letter ...	"	3d.
63	Break, break on thy cold grey	"	1rd.	149	Take, oh take those lips away	"	1rd.	235	Shall I wasting in ...	"	4d.
64	Echoes (The Splendour falls)	"	1rd.	150	The Rainy Day...	A. Sullivan	1rd.	236	Way to build a boat ...	"	4d.
65	Song of the Railroads	"	1rd.	151	Oh, hush thee, my babe	"	3d.	237	I loved a lass ...	"	3d.
66	Christmas ...	"	1rd.	152	Evening ...	"	1rd.	238	The Lifeboat ...	"	1rd.
67	Adieu, Love, Adieu ...	"	3d.	153	Joy to the Victors ...	"	2d.	239	Shepherd's farewell...	H. Smart	1rd.
68	Sir Knight, Sir Knight	Macfarren	1rd.	154	Parting gleams ...	"	1rd.	240	The waves' reproof ...	"	3d.
69	The Wounded Cupid	"	1rd.	155	Echoes ...	"	1rd.	241	Ave Maria ...	"	1rd.
70	Woman's smile ...	"	3d.	156	Spring ...	W. Macfarren	1rd.	242	Spring ...	"	2d.
71	Autolycus' Song ...	"	1rd.	157	Summer ...	"	1rd.	243	Morning ...	"	3d.
72	Footsteps of Angels ...	"	3d.	158	Autumn ...	"	1rd.	244	Hymn to Cynthia ...	"	1rd.
73	The Sun shines fair ...	"	1rd.	159	Winter ...	"	3d.	245	Cradle Song ...	"	3d.
74	The Pilgrims ...	H. Leslie	1rd.	160	You stole my love ...	"	1rd.	246	The joys of Spring ...	"	1rd.
75	My soul to God ...	"	3d.	161	Dainty love...	"	1rd.	247	Dream, baby, dream ...	"	3d.
76	Awake, the flow'rs unfold	"	1rd.	162	Drops of Rain ...	J. Lemmens	1rd.	248	A song for the Seasons	"	2d.
77	How sweet the moonlight	"	1rd.	163	The Fairy Ring...	"	3d.	249	O say not that my heart	"	3d.
78	Land, Ho! ...	"	1rd.	164	The Light of Life	"	3d.	250	Love and mirth...	"	3d.
79	Up, up, ye Dames ...	"	1rd.	165	Oh, welcome him	"	3d.	251	Sweet Vesper hymn	"	1rd.
80	Thine eyes so bright ...	"	4d.	166	Sunshine through the	"	3d.	252	Crocuses and Snowdrops	"	1rd.
81	All is not gold ...	Westbrook	3d.	167	The Corn Field...	"	3d.	253	Stars of the summer night	"	3d.
82	Hark how the birds ...	H. Lahee	3d.	168	Wake! to the hunting	H. Smart	1rd.	254	Wind thy horn...	"	3d.
83	All ye woods (S.A.T.B.)	"	1rd.	169	Dost thou idly ask ...	"	3d.	255	The land of wonder...	"	2d.
84	My love is fair (S.A.T.B.B.)	H. Leslie	1rd.	170	A Psalm of Life	"	1rd.	256	Yell little birds that sit and sing	"	1rd.
85	Charm me asleep (S.A.T.B.B.)	"	3d.	171	Only Thou ...	"	1rd.	257	How soft the shades of	"	2d.
86	When twilight dew ...	H. Hiles	1rd.	172	I prithee send me back	"	1rd.	258	How sweet is summer	"	2d.

LONDON TOWN

A FOUR-PART SONG

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY JOHN MASEFIELD

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro moderato. (con spirito.)

SOPRANO.

ALTO.

TENOR.

BASS.

ACCOMP.
(For practice only.)

f O Lon - don Town's a fine town, and Lon - don sights are rare, And

f O Lon - don Town's a fine town, and Lon - don sights are rare, And

f O Lon - don Town's a fine town, and Lon - don sights are rare, And

f O Lon - don Town's a fine town, and Lon - don sights are rare, And

f O Lon - don Town's a fine town, and Lon - don sights are rare, And

Allegro moderato. (con spirito.) ♩ = 104.

f

*Ped. ** *Ped. ** *Ped. **

mf Lon - don ale is right ale, and brisk's the Lon - don air, And

mf Lon - don ale is right ale, and brisk's the Lon - don air, And

mf Lon - don ale is right ale, and brisk's the Lon - don air, And

mf Lon - don ale is right ale, and brisk's the Lon - don air, And bus-i-ly goes the

mf

*Ped. ** *Ped. **

LONDON TOWN.

bus-i-ly goes the world there, but craft-y grows the mind, .. And Lon-don Town of bus-i-ly goes the world there, but craft-y grows the mind, .. And Lon-don Town of bus-i-ly goes the world there, but craft-y grows the mind, .. And Lon-don Town of world there, . . . but craft-y grows the mind, .. And Lon-don Town of all towns I'm glad to leave be-hind. Then hey, . . .

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

all towns I'm glad to leave be-hind. Then all towns I'm glad to leave be-hind. Then hey, . . . then all towns I'm glad to leave be-hind.

Ped. *

then hey, then

hey for croft and hop-yard, and hill, field and pond, then

hey for croft and hop-yard, and hill, field and pond, then

Then hey,

Ped. * Ped. *

Gioioso.

LONDON TOWN.

hey, then hey for the croft and hop - yard, and hill and field and

hey, then hey for the croft and hop - yard, and hill and field and hey, then hey for croft and hop - yard, . . .

hey, hey for hop - yard, field and

Gioioso.

Ped. * Ped. *

pond, With Bre - don Hill be - fore me and Mal - vern Hill be - yond.

pond, With Bre - don Hill be - fore me and Mal - vern Hill be - yond. And

. . . With Bre - don Hill be - fore me and Mal - vern Hill be - yond. And pond, With Bre - don Hill be - fore . . . me And

Ped. *

And . . . haw - thorn white i' the hedge - row, and all the spring's at - haw - thorn white i' the hedge - row, and all the spring's at - haw - thorn white, and haw - thorn white i' the hedge - row, haw - thorn white i' the hedge - row, and all the spring's at -

Ped. * Ped. *

LONDON TOWN.

- tire, In the come - ly land of Teme and Lugg, and Clent and Clee . . . and
 - tire, In the come - ly land of Teme and Lugg, and Clent and Clee . . . and
 In the come - ly land of Teme and Lugg, and Clent and Clee . . . and
 - tire, In the come - ly land of Teme and Lugg, and Clent and Clee . . . and

f Ped. *

Wyre, Then hey, . . . then hey, . . . then hey for Clent and Clee and Wyre.
 Wyre, Then hey, then hey for Clent and Clee and Wyre.
 Wyre, hey for Clent and Clee and Wyre.
 Wyre, Then hey, then hey for Clent and Clee and Wyre.

p mf rit. Ped. *

Tempo 1mo.

Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And
 Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And

f Ped. *

Tempo 1mo.

Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And
 Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And Lon - don girls are brave girls, in silk and cloth o' gold, And

f Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

LONDON TOWN.

Lon - don shops are rare shops, where gal - lant things are sold, mf And

Lon - don shops are rare shops, where gal - lant things are sold, mf And

Lon - don shops are rare shops, where gal - lant things are sold, mf And

Lon - don shops are rare shops, where gal - lant things are sold, mf And bon - ni - ly clinks the

Ped. * Ped. *

bon - ni - ly clinks the gold there, but drow - si - ly blinks the eye, . . . f And

bon - ni - ly clinks the gold there, but drow - si - ly blinks the eye, . . . f And bon - ni - ly clinks the gold there, but drow - si - ly blinks the eye, . . . f And gold there, . . . but drow - si - ly blinks the eye, . . . f And

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

sf Lon - don Town of all towns I'm glad to hur - ry by. Then sf Lon - don Town of all towns I'm glad to hur - ry by.

sf Lon - don Town of all towns I'm glad to hur - ry by. Then hey, . . . . .

sf Lon - don Town of all towns I'm glad to hur - ry by.

Ped.

LONDON TOWN.

Musical score for 'London Town' in 2/4 time, featuring a piano introduction and a vocal melody. The score is written for voice and piano. The piano introduction consists of a series of chords in the right hand and a single note in the left hand. The vocal melody is in the right hand, with lyrics underneath. The piano accompaniment is in the left hand, with chords and single notes. The score includes dynamic markings such as p (piano) and f (forte), and articulation markings such as accents and slurs. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor). The tempo is marked 'Moderato'. The score is for a single system, with a repeat sign at the end.

hey, then hey, Then
 Then hey for covert and wood-land, and ash, elm and oak, Then
 Then hey for covert and wood-land, and ash, elm and oak, Then
 Then hey,

* Ped. * Ped. *

Giacoso.

sf mf

hey, then hey for the co-vert and wood-land, and ash and elm and

sf mf

hey, then hey for the co-vert and wood-land, and ash and elm and

sf mf

hey, then hey for the co-vert and wood-land, . . .

sf mf

hey, hey for ash and elm and Giacoso.

sf mf

Ped. * Ped. *

oak, And Tewkes-bu-ry inns, and Mal-vern roofs, and Worces-ter chim-ney smoke, And oak, And Tewkes-bu-ry inns, and Mal-vern roofs, and Worces-ter chim-ney smoke, And

And Tewkes-bu-ry inns, and Mal-vern roofs, and Worces-ter chim-ney smoke, And oak, And Tewkes - - bu - ry inns, and Mal - vern roofs, And

And Tewkes - - bu - ry inns, and Mal - vern roofs, And ( 7 )

LONDON TOWN.

And the ap - ple trees in the or - chard, the cat - tle in the ap - ple trees in the or - chard, the cat - tle in the ap - ple trees, and ap - ple trees in the or - chard, ap - ple trees in the or - chard, the cat - tle in the cres. cres. cres. cres.

Ped. *

byre, And all the land from Lud - low town to Bre - don church - - - 's
 byre, And all the land from Lud - low town to Bre - don church - - - 's
 And all the land from Lud - low town to Bre - don church - - - 's byre, And the land . . . from Lud - low town to Bre - don church - - - 's

f f f f

Ped. *

spire. Then hey, . . . then hey, . . . then hey, to Bre - don church-'s spire.
 spire. Then hey, then hey, to Bre - don church-'s spire.
 spire. hey, . . . to Bre - don church-'s spire.
 spire. Then hey, then hey, to Bre - don church-'s spire.

p mf rit. mf rit. mf rit. mf rit.

Ped. *

LONDON TOWN

Meno mosso (only slightly slower).

O Lon - don tunes are new tunes, and Lon - don books are wise, And

O Lon - don tunes are new tunes, and Lon - don books are wise, And

O Lon - don tunes are new tunes, and Lon - don books are wise, And

O Lon - don tunes are new tunes, and Lon - don books are wise, And

Meno mosso (only slightly slower). ♩ = 92.

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

Lon - don plays are rare plays, and fine to coun - try eyes, But

Lon - don plays are rare plays, and fine to coun - try eyes, But craft - i - ly fares the

Lon - don plays are rare plays, and fine to coun - try eyes, But

Lon - don plays are rare plays, and fine to coun - try eyes, But

Ped. * Ped. *

Tempo 1mo.

craft-i - ly fares the knave there, and wick-ed-ly fares the Jew, . . And London Town of knave, the knave there, and wick-ed-ly fares the Jew, . . And London Town of craft-i - ly fares the knave there, and wick-ed-ly fares the Jew, . . And London Town of craft-i - ly fares the knave there, and wick-ed-ly fares the Jew, . . And London Town of

Tempo 1mo. ♩ = 104.

Ped. * Ped. *

LONDON TOWN.

all towns I'm glad to hur - ry through. So hey, . . . .

all towns I'm glad to hur - ry through. So all towns I'm glad to hur - ry through.

all towns I'm glad to hur - ry through. So hey, . . . . so

Ped. *

so hey,

hey for the road, the west road, by mill and forge and fold, hey for the road, by forge and . . fold, so hey,

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

Gioioso.

hey, so hey for the road, the west road, by mill and forge and

hey, so hey for the road, the west road, by mill and forge and hey, so hey for the road, the west road, hey, Gioioso. hey for the west road, by forge and

Ped. * Ped. *

LONDON TOWN.

fold, And scent of the fern and song of the lark by brook and field and wold, fold, And scent of fern and song of lark by brook and field and wold, To the
 And scent of fern and song of lark by brook and field and wold, To the fold, And scent of fern and song of lark, To the

cres.
 To the come - ly folk at the hearth-stone, and the talk be - side the
cres.
 come - ly folk at the hearth-stone, the talk be - side the
cres.
 come - ly folk, the come - ly folk at the hearth-stone,
cres.
 come - ly folk at the hearth-stone, the talk be - side the
cres.
 Ped. * Ped. *

f
 fire, In the heart-y land, where I was bred, my land of heart's . . de -
f
 fire, In the heart-y land, where I was bred, my land of heart's . . de -
f
 in the heart-y land, where I was bred, my land of heart's . . de -
f
 fire, . . In the heart-y land, where I was bred, my land of heart's . . de -

LONDON TOWN.

delicato. pp mf rit.

- sire. So hey, . . . so hey, . . . so hey, my land of . . heart's de - delicato. pp mf rit.

- sire. So hey, so hey, my land of heart's de -

delicato. pp mf rit.

- sire. hey, . . . . my land of . . heart's de -

delicato. pp mf rit.

- sire. So hey, so hey, my land of heart's de - pp delicato. mf rit.

a tempo. marcato. ff

- sire, my land of heart's . . . de - sire.

a tempo. marcato. ff

- sire, my land of heart's . . . de - sire.

a tempo. marcato. ff

- sire, my land of heart's . . . de - sire.

a tempo. marcato. ff

- sire, my land of heart's . . . de - sire.

a tempo. marcato. ff

- sire, my land of heart's . . . de - sire.

a tempo. ff

*Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. **

high - est hopes we cher - ish here, How fast they tire and faint; How high - est hopes we cher - ish here, How fast they tire and faint; . . . How high - est hopes we cher - ish here, How fast they tire and faint; How high - est hopes we cher - ish here, How fast they tire and faint; How

mp

ma - ny a spot de - files the robe That wraps an earth - ly saint! . .
ma - ny a spot de - files the robe That wraps an earth - ly saint! . .
ma - ny a spot de - files the robe That wraps an earth - ly saint! . .
ma - ny a spot de - files the robe That wraps an earth - ly saint! . .

mf cres.
Oh, for a heart that nev - er sins, . . Oh, for a soul wash'd white,
mf cres.
Oh, for a heart that nev - er sins, . . Oh, for a soul wash'd white,
mf cres.
Oh, for a heart that nev - er sins, . . Oh, for a soul wash'd white,
mf cres.
Oh, for a heart that nev - er sins, . . Oh, for a soul wash'd white,

mf cres. mf Gt.
Gt. to Ped.

( 5 )

Poco animato.

Oh, for a voice to

Oh, for a voice to praise . . our KING, a voice . . to

Poco animato. ♩ = 100.

Oh, for a

Oh, for a voice to praise . . our KING, Nor praise . . our KING, a . . voice . . to praise . . our KING, Nor praise our KING, Nor wea - ry

Ped.

voice to praise . . our KING, a voice . . to praise . . our wea - ry day or night! Oh, for a voice to praise our wea - ry day . . or night! a voice . . to praise . . our day or night! . . Oh, for a voice to praise . . our

cres.

KING, Nor wea - ry . . day or . . night, to praise, . . .

KING, Nor wea - ry . . day . . or . . night,

KING, Nor wea - ry day or night, to praise, . . .

KING, Nor wea - ry day or night,

ff marcato.

rit.

to . . praise . . . our KING! . . .

rit.

to . . praise . . . our KING! . . .

rit.

to . . praise . . . our KING! . . .

rit.

to . . praise . . . our KING! . . .

rit.

(Continued from page 32.)

containing liberal quotations. As such a notice appeared in the December issue of our companion journal, the School Music Review, there is no need to do more in this place than to urge teachers to make an early acquaintance with the book. It deals with a subject of prime importance to all interested in educational matters, and it has the great merit of being practical and clearly written. The latter point is worth special mention, because we know but too well the verbal and mental fog that usually results from an attempt to discuss such subjects as psychology.

Musical historians are apt to regard the progress of the art as a single phenomenon, whereas it is but one of several that act and react on one another. To-day we see a good example in the obvious connection between certain developments in contemporary music, painting, and poetry. An American writer, Arthur Ware Locke, has dealt with an aspect of this relation of the arts in his 'Music and the Romantic Movement in France' (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.), a thoughtful book that should be read by all interested in French literature and music.

George Lowe's 'Josef Holbrooke and his Work' (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.) is a stout volume of over three hundred pages, with copious musical illustrations. One who writes of a living composer has a difficult task, for obvious reasons. Not only is the writer too near the music; he is also too near the man. Mr. Lowe does not hesitate to express unfavourable opinions of some of Holbrooke's work, so his somewhat lavish praise carries the more weight. He deals with the whole of the composer's output in chronological order. The book is, moreover, an interesting record of a stormy and struggling career. If that career, so far as the composition side is concerned, has made a less emphatic mark than its early promise led us to expect, the reason is perhaps to be found in Holbrooke's fecundity. It is a great thing to be able to compose easily, but it is an even greater thing to be able to screw oneself up to burn a good half of the result. One feels inclined to dispute some of Mr. Lowe's conclusions. For example, speaking of Holbrooke's position as a chamber music composer, he tells us that only Elgar, Ireland, Cyril Scott, and the late W. Y. Hurlstone 'come into any sort of serious competition' with Holbrooke. And his defence, on the same page, of the classical form in chamber music, with its separate movements and full closes, is far from convincing. By the by, bearing in mind Holbrooke's battles on behalf of British music—perhaps I had better say British composers—it is odd that he seems to see no virtue in the language of his own country. His use of such titles as 'Zuneigung,' 'Werzwurfung,' 'Wunderlicher Einfall,' with countless other unnecessary excursions into foreign dictionaries, strikes me as a form of snobbishness that I thought had begun to die out since the days of Mr. Foley and Signor Foli. It is true that some of these works were published abroad, but that does not entirely explain the habit. Foreigners who publish their works in England do not throw their own tongue overboard. Mr. Lowe would have improved his book if he had spent more time over the proof sheets, and, while removing some obvious slips, he would have done well to have scrapped nine-tenths of his italics and notes of exclamation. The volume is a useful compilation rather than a good piece of literature.

As we have some fine modern books on Bach, it seems at first sight that a new translation of Forkel's work is unnecessary. Alone, perhaps, we could well do without it, though it has all the interest attaching to the first critical appreciation of Bach, and one written moreover when the old man's fame seemed to have dimmed for ever. But the new translator, Prof. Sanford Terry, has added appendices that altogether more than double the size of the original, so that Forkel has ceased to be a merely interesting survival and has become a necessity (Constable, 21s.). The first translation—often ascribed to Samuel Wesley, but really the work of a banker—was notoriously defective. Prof. Terry, in his Preface, says it is impossible to identify this Bachian banker with certainty. I understand, however, that he has since done so, and that a letter on the subject appears in this issue of the Musical Times. Prof. Terry not only retranslates Forkel, but helps him out by copious footnotes. The appendices consist of a chronological catalogue of Bach's works, a chapter on the Church Cantatas with a table giving dates and other particulars, a detailed list of the Bachgesellschaft editions, a bibliography, a collation of the Novello and Peters editions of the Organ works, and a genealogy of the Bach family—altogether well over a hundred pages of valuable information. There are also some admirable reproductions of photographs—Bach's home at Eisenach, the statue at that place, the ditto at Leipsic, the Church and School of St. Thomas at Leipsic, &c. Little did Forkel guess that his modest book was to be thus handsomely revived a century after his death.

The second of the series of Church Music Monographs issued by the Faith Press (4s. 6d.) is 'The Church Organ: an Introduction to the Study of Modern Organ-building,' by the Rev. Noel A. Bonavia Hunt. The author is so well-known as an expert on this complicated subject that his latest work needs no more than bare mention. Some excellent illustrations by Mr. J. H. T. Burrell are a valuable aid to the text.

I do not know why the Musical Times has been favoured with a review copy of the Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution (Washington; Government Printing Office). In its seven hundred pages there is no article on music. However, I return thanks heartily, for its hundreds of beautifully reproduced photographs are a delight. Readers who are interested in such subjects as Catalepsy in Phasmidæ, Bird Rookeries of the Tortugas, Ojibway Habitations, Ancient Human Remains in Florida, and the Formation of Coral Reefs, will find the Report a handy little book to have about the house.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

The Editor has handed me some interesting correspondence from readers who welcome the prospect of a monthly review of gramophone records. One of the writers touches on a point of importance. He warns me in a friendly way that what gramophone users require is candid information as to what records are satisfactory from a musical point of view. He says:

To suggest that a record of a song by Mozart is one of the best records merely because Mozart was one of the greatest composers, seems silly to those of us who have tried the record and disliked extremely the metallic quality of the singer's voice.

He thinks, too, that it is high time we began to be able to understand why some orchestral records are so very much better than others, even where the same players and recorders are concerned. He ends by supposing that frank discussion on these matters will annoy the makers of records, but imagines (quite rightly) that I shall not trouble about that.

If the makers of records are as sensible and businesslike as I believe them to be, they will welcome any amount of fair discussion. The gramophone is still a long way short of perfection, good as it is. The maker who gets his best foot foremost towards the ideal is the one that is going to collar the best of the trade. The use of the instrument among musicians and educational workers will develop in proportion to the enterprise and perseverance of the makers. The latter know this quite well. A review that doesn't frankly distinguish between the good and bad is of no use to the maker in the long run, because it soon ceases to carry weight. Indiscriminate praise is as futile as indiscriminate honours. 'When everyone is somebody, then no one is anybody.'

Harpsichord records are handicapped by the fact that the instrument is obsolete, and its music unfamiliar. Nevertheless, there should be many musicians to whom the four records recently issued by H.M.V. will be welcome. They are double-sided, and consist of:

- (1.) 'Nobody's Gigge' (Farnaby) and three English folk-dances;
- (2.) Scarlatti's Sonatas in D and A;
- (3.) Couperin's 'L'Arlequin' and 'Tambourin,' a Purcell Gavotte, and a Bach Prelude;
- (4.) A couple of Bach fugues.

The least interesting is the Scarlatti. The Farnaby and folk-dances are delightfully quaint. The French pieces are old friends, the Purcell Gavotte ought to be, and the Bach Prelude is fine though unfamiliar. The two fugues are not from the '48.' They are capital specimens, and the one in D has a splendid cadenza. Mrs. Woodhouse is the player. The tone is a kind of compromise, the peculiar stringy rustle of the harpsichord having mostly disappeared, the result being suggestive of a pleasant old pianoforte in an exceptionally good state of preservation. The batch as a whole gives one a great deal of pleasure, the more so as the music is of a type that wears well.

After these delicate sounds, a couple of pianoforte records by Cortôt provide vivid contrast. Liszt's 'La Leggierezza' and Saint-Saëns' 'Waltz-Study' are pretty much of a muchness as music, and there is little to choose between the records on the score of effectiveness. If my preference is for the former, it is because of the delicate beauty of some of the scale-passages. The pearly clearness of these just makes the Liszt the better of two excellent records (H.M.V.).

Despite occasional want of balance—no doubt inevitable—Elgar's Sonata for pianoforte and violin, played by Misses Marjorie Hayward and Una Bourne (H.M.V.) is a success. It is in two double-sided records, (1) the first movement and Romance, and (2) the Finale, divided. The gramophone plays strange tricks, some of which are pleasant surprises. I have heard the Sonata performed on several occasions by our best players, but the pizzicato chords in the Romance have never reached my ears so clearly as they do via this record. Another point: I enjoyed the Sonata when hearing it at first hand, but since the gramophone has reproduced it for me not less than a dozen times I like it even better. How far previous knowledge of a work of this kind is necessary in order to get the best out of the gramophone I do not know. Obviously, familiarity with the music enables one to make good certain deficiencies, such as the want of balance mentioned above. No doubt manufacturers will some day be able to ensure that a sonata for violin and pianoforte shall sound less like a violin solo with an occasionally important pianoforte accompaniment. Yet another point: Why should not metronome marks be placed on works of this type, and indeed on practically all records? The dial on the gramophone could easily bear the figures most used, say, from 50 to 120, graded in fives or tens.

A brilliant vocal record is Galli-Curci's 'Una Voce' from 'The Barber' (H.M.V.). Its opening makes one wonder that strains so threadbare can still have any attractive power, but long before the vocal fireworks are over one has to admit that the magic of the human voice is shown nowhere more convincingly than in this ability to make such worthless material enjoyable.

The Flonzaley Quartet's playing of Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore' has been recorded by H.M.V. with only fair results. A good deal of the jolly effect of the music comes through, but the lower strings are frequently vague and lacking in tone. This is a case where one may say that one enjoys the music in spite of the record.

Edward German's 'Gipsy Suite' (H.M.V.) is a good orchestral reproduction. I have heard only two of the four movements—the Menuetto and Tarantella, on a double-sided. A surprisingly large proportion of instrumental details emerge, especially from the clarinet and flute, a rapid chromatic gurgle by the latter being a specially enjoyable feature. The Tarantella is the better movement of the two—German at his effervescentest.

The Æolian Company has sent a batch of new records from which I choose four for mention this month. Rosing's 'Vesti la Gubbia' (Æolian-Vocalian) is quite startling in its power and intensity of expression. It is more moving than I should have imagined any kind of mechanical reproduction could ever be. I forget for the moment whether Rosing can sing in English. If he can, the Æ-V. should record this performance in the vulgar tongue, for the benefit of the many who have not heard 'Pagliacci,' or who do not know Italian.

The record of the London String Quartet's playing of Mozart's Quartet in D is especially satisfactory in that it gives us the musical texture with unusual clearness. The violoncello part is much more distinct as a whole than that in the Flonzaley record mentioned above. Is this because the music in the Mozart is lyrical rather than bustling? Evidently certain types of rapid bass parts do not record well. Is it a matter of pitch, pace, or tone, or a bit of all three? This Mozart record would have been better if the players had not overdone their pp. Still, even the softest passages are distinct. The four movements are on two records. I have heard only the third and fourth—Menuetto and Finale Allegretto. These should meet the needs of the correspondent quoted above, as they give us the best music well reproduced.

Apparently the violoncello suffers only in ensemble playing. Here is a record of Saint-Saëns' 'Le Cygne,' played by Felix Salmond, in which the tone of the instrument is very full and characteristic. On the other side of the disc is a no less faithful reproduction of Popper's Gavotte No. 2—a piece of music so poor that one reverses a remark used above, and decides that one enjoys the record in spite of the music.

For a final item I choose a record that should be popular at festive gatherings when something jolly is required. 'The Guards' Patrol,' played by the band of H.M. Life Guards, is a capital medley of well-known tunes joined in rough-and-ready counterpoint. Those who still have any use for the somewhat faded glories of the Overture to 'Raymond' will find them well treated on the other side.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Players of all instruments, except pianoforte, are invited to join the St. Jude's Amateur Orchestra. Rehearsals are friendly, and not critical.—Mr. H. SEYMOUR, 2, Milton Road, Herne Hill, S.E. 24.

Lady pianist wishes to join trio or quartet for practice and concerts. Mortlake district.—E. L., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist would like to meet with 'cellist and violinist for practice.—MABELLE FREKE, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist to form trio. Music of all schools. Leamington and Warwick district.—'HARMONY,' c/o Musical Times.

Violinist-pianist (young lady) would like to meet advanced or fairly-advanced violinist-pianist (either lady or gentleman) for interchange of practice at Nottingham. Any morning or Thursday evenings.—Miss POOL, 53, Sneinton Road, Nottingham.

Lady viola player seeks practice with chamber music or orchestral players. Streatham or neighbourhood preferred, or could arrange West End if on Monday or Tuesday afternoon.—'OMEGA,' c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (male) wishes to meet others to form a trio or quartet party for practice of classical works. North London district.—'ENSEMBLE,' c/o Musical Times.

Violinist and 'cellist wanted for a good amateur concert to be given shortly.—S. W. HIBBS, 3, Denholme Road, Maida Hill, W. 9.

Pianist and vocalist (young lady) wishes to meet with violinist and 'cellist for practice of good music. Highgate district.—'MUSIC LOVER,' c/o Musical Times.

There are a few vacancies for good voices, especially tenors and basses, also instrumentalists with good experience, in the Marylebone Philharmonic Society. Rehearsals—Orchestra, Tuesdays, 7.30; choir, Thursdays, 7.30, at Marylebone College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1.

Wanted good viola player and 'cellist (male) for quartet. Must be sufficiently advanced to play the most difficult chamber music. Residents in or near borough of Hornsey preferred. Evening work only.—S. F., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced orchestral pianist wishes to meet good string players for practice of standard works, suites (e.g., Coleridge-Taylor), &c. North London district. Must be good sight-readers.—'CLERY,' c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to join trio. West Norwood district.—W. N., c/o Musical Times.

Church and Organ Music

Dr. Harold Darke's hundred and sixty-seventh recital at St. Michael's, Cornhill, consisted of a plebiscite programme. Such programmes are of interest as showing the trend of public taste, so we append this one: First movement from Guilman's D minor Sonata; Largo appassionata from Beethoven's Sonata in A; Introduction, Theme, and Variations, C. H. Lloyd; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Elegiac Romance, Ireland; Carillon, Vienne. Seventy-on pieces were on the voting paper.

Mention of St. Michael's Church reminds us of the choral society attached thereto—the St. Michael's Singers. During the past season this enterprising body has sung Bach's Christmas Oratorio and St. John Passion, Vaughan Williams' 'Towards the Unknown Region,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Bach's 'Jesu, joy of man's desiring,' and Darke's 'England, awake!' The 1921 plans include a festival week of music in May or June, when the following works will be performed:

'Stabat Mater' ... ..	Vardi
'Towards the Unknown Region' ... ..	Vaughan Williams
'Songs of Farewell' ... ..	Parry
'Voices Clamantium' ... ..	Parry
'O Light! Everlasting' ... ..	Bach
'A Rightfold Sure' ... ..	Bach
And other Works ... ..	Bach
New Cantata, 'The Beatitudes' ... ..	Harold Darke
Te Deum ... ..	Purcell
Two Psalms ... ..	Holst

Here is a choral society that deserves well of all who work in the City. Those who wish to join should apply to the secretary, St. Michael's Vestry. Rehearsals are held at Drapers' Hall on Mondays from 6 to 7.15. Dr. Darke is the conductor.

Choir Festival Services have recently been held at Derby Road Baptist Church, Nottingham, under the direction of Mr. J. F. Blasdale. Selections from 'Messiah' were given by an augmented choir, with Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson as organist, on November 20. The solos were sung by Madame Middleton Woodward, Miss Margaret Walker, Mr. C. H. Morley, and Mr. J. Wightman. On November 21 the music included 'Sing we merrily unto God' (Oliver King) and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.'

The British Music Society's scheme of organ recitals in aid of the Westminster Abbey Fund is being well supported. One such recital, we note, has been given at St. John's, Territet, Switzerland, by Mr. John Lomas. By the way, a note in capitals at the foot of the programme is significant: 'THE CHURCH WILL BE HEATED.'

Brahms' Requiem was sung at Queen's Cross Church on December 5. Miss Margaret Inverarity and Mr. Fred J. Burnett were the soloists, and the accompaniment was played by Mr. John Pulein (organ), Mr. Alex. Center (pianoforte), and Miss Gladys Kirby (drums). Mr. Willan Swainson conducted.

On December 11 the City Temple Choral Society sang Parts I and 2 of 'Messiah.' The soloists were Miss Ida Cooper, Miss Catherine Aulsebrook, Mr. Leonard Lovesey, and Mr. Edward Dykes. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

On December 12, in the private chapel at Wemyss Castle, Fife, the Wemyss Select Choir, under the direction of Mr. G. P. Matthews, the castle organist, sang Stainer's 'The Daughter of Jairus,' the soloists being Mrs. J. Robertson, Mr. David Briggs, and Mr. Charles Hurley.

Organ recitals will be given on the rebuilt organ at St. John's, Hammersmith, on Saturdays in January at 5.30, by the following (in order of playing): Mr. F. E. Williams, Mr. L. K. Boseley, Mr. E. Broadhurst, Mr. Clifford Marshall, and Dr. H. G. Ley.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Two Choral Preludes, Bach; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor. St. Lawrence Jewry—Grand Chœur in C, Hollins; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach; Postlude, Stanford; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant.

- Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Londonderry Air; Toccata-Prelude, Baird; Fantasia, Saint-Saëns; Scherzo in G minor, Callaerts.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—Fantasia, Cyril Jenkins; Madrigal and Divertissement, Vierne; Sonata in E, Handel; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Prelude on 'Eventide,' Parry; Capriccio, Ireland. Wigan Parish Church—'Verdun,' Stanford; Sonata in E, Handel; Concert Scherzo, Purcell J. Mansfield.
- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Baptist Tabernacle, Barking—Intermezzo, Hollins; Pastorale in A, Guilmant; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Lament, Cyril Jenkins; Concert Overture, Faulkes.
- Mr. F. J. A. Eccles, Holy Trinity, Leamington Spa—Overture 'Occasional' Oratorio; Berceuse, Rousseau; Nocturne, Dunhill; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Villanella, Ireland.
- Mr. J. S. Yates, St. Andrew's, Pretoria (two recitals)—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Cantilène (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Berceuse and Carillon, Vierne; Prelude, 'Dream of Gerontius'; 'Finlandia'; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Air, S. Wesley; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; A Wedding Idyll, Yates.
- Mr. Alfred Hollins, Presbyterian Church, Cardiff (two recitals)—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Theme with Variations and Fugue, Intermezzo, Scherzo, and Triumphal March, Hollins; Berceuse, Vierne; Toccata, Widor; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. H. S. Middleton, Truro Cathedral—Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Cantabile and Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Idylle, Elgar.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Requiem 'Eternam,' Harwood; Overture in C minor, Hollins; Choral Improvisation No. 53, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Impressions du Soir, Sticht; March of the Magi, Varley Roberts.
- Mr. James Preston, St. George's, Jesmond, Newcastle (five recitals)—Choral Prelude, Bach; Fugue, Reubke; Sonata No. 4, Alan Gray; Catalonian Rhapsody, Bonnet; Scherzo, Healey Willan.
- Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury—Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Preludes, 'Lohengrin' and 'Tristan and Isolde.'
- Mr. R. E. Redman, Clapham Congregational Church—First movement, Sonata No. 18, Rheinberger; Meditation Elegie, Borowski; Preludio Romantico, Ravanello; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Bach; Légende, Redman; 'Finlandia.'
- Mr. W. Dymore Boseley, St. Nicholas, Guildford—Introduction and Fugue, Rubke; 'Harmonies du Soir,' Karg-Elert; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Choral No. 3, Franck; Evening Song, Baird; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach; Scherzo-Caprice, Baynon.
- Mr. A. C. P. Embling, St. Nicholas, Guildford—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Preludes, 'St. Peter' and 'Veni Creator,' Darke; Elegy, Borowski; Toccata, Widor.
- Mr. Fred Gostelow, Ilford Baptist Church—Choral No. 3, Franck; Meditation, Gostelow; Intermezzo, Hollins. Luton Parish Church—Marche Pontificale, Tombelli; Air with Variations, Haydn-Best; Scherzo Symphonique, Guilmant.
- Mr. G. Virgil Dawson, Mount Zion Congregational Church, Sheffield—Symphony in C minor, Holloway; Berceuse, Jarnfeldt; 'Alpine Sketch' and 'A Song from the East,' Cyril Scott.
- Mr. Ernest Bittcliffe, St. Mary Magdalene, Bradford—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Allegretto, Frederic Archer; Impromptu in A minor, Coleridge-Taylor.
- Mr. T. Newbould, St. Paul's, King Cross, Halifax—Fugue in E minor, Bach; Elegy, Borowski; 'Harmonies du Soir,' Karg-Elert; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, Ireland; Finale in B flat, Franck.
- Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Allegro Pomposo, Holloway; Overture to 'Rienzi.'
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (four recitals)—Melody, Yon; Prelude, 'St. Michael,' West; Meditation in a Cathedral, Silas; Grace for a little Child, Walford Davies. (Collection: Westminster Abbey Fund, £11.)
- Mr. William Algie, St. Columba Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Finale in E flat, Guilmant.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (five recitals)—Impression and 'Pax Vobiscum,' Karg-Elert; Elegie, Introit, Arabesque, Offertoire, Berceuse, and Cortège, Vierne; Prelude and Variations, Farrar; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Andante con Moto, Frank Bridge; Idylle and Skandinavisch, Rheinberger; Prelude on 'York,' Charles Wood; Jour de Noces, Stuart Archer.
- Mr. Quentin Morvaren Maclean, All Souls', Langham Place (three recitals)—Sonata, Elgar; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Fantasia on BACH, Liszt; Chorale and Eleven Variations, Bach; Sonata, Reubke; Toccata, Purcell; Menuet Scherzo, Jongen; Fantasia and Fugue on 'Sleepers! wake,' Reger.
- Mr. H. F. Rutland, St. Edward's, Cambridge—Sonata in F, Stanford; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn-Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Canzonetta, Cui; Choral Prelude, Bach.
- Mr. Alan Burr, St. Edward's, Cambridge—Two Pièces, Byrd and Bull; Fantasia (in four parts), Gibbons; Prelude, 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; 'Now thank we all,' Karg-Elert.
- Mr. T. Vernon Griffiths, St. Edward's, Cambridge—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Madrigal, Lemare; Epilogue, Harvey Grace.
- Mr. William Ellis, Newcastle Cathedral—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; 'Sleepers! wake,' Bach; Fugue, Reubke.
- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—Concert-Overture in C minor, Hollins; Fugue in G, Bach; Fantaisie, Saint-Saëns.
- Dr. C. E. Jolley, St. George's, Hanover Square (four recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Fugues in E flat, G minor, Prelude and Fugue in D, and Toccata in F, Bach; Berceuse, Vierne; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Toccata, Boëllmann.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—March in B flat, Silas; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Overture to 'Oberon.'
- Mr. A. G. Mathew, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta—Prelude in G, Bach; Capriccio, Ireland; Two Movements, Sonata No. 16, Rheinberger; Pilgrims' March, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. C. F. Eastwood, St. John's, Dumfries—Prelude in C, Bach; Voluntary, Gibbons; Toccata for Double Organ, Blow; Sonata in C minor, Guilmant; Largo, 'New World' Symphony; Cantilène and Minuet, Marchant.
- Miss Florence Pope, St. Peter's, Hedgesford—Concert-Overture in C, Hollins; Pœan, Harwood; Three Impressions, Karg-Elert.

[Many recital programmes are held over for want of space. Others are not inserted because they omit an important piece of information—the name of the town at which the recital took place.—ED., M.T.]

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. Leslie J. Gillespie, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Deptford.
Mr. R. Richardson-Jones, organist and choirmaster, Northampton Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

MR. ERNEST NEWMAN ON 'THE PIANO-PLAYER'

SIR,—At last we have a really practical and sensitively-musical book on the piano-player, and Mr. Newman's quite admirable work should be in the hands of every intelligent user of a piano-player. There are but few points on which I should venture to disagree with the author, but as an old 'pianolist' who has worked through all its models, I may perhaps have a helpful word in commentary.

Mr. Newman rightly says that the instrument could be made far more responsive and sensitive, but that it is not a good commercial proposition to do so, as only a comparatively small number would then be able to use it. Yet could not the music student be catered for in a specially suitable type of construction? The pianoforte maker does not make his instrument on the assumption that it will be used mainly by schoolgirls and learners; he makes it in the hope of meriting the advertising encomiums of a Paderewski, a Pachmann, a Hofmann, &c., so that that argument is disposed of.

Anyhow, I myself soon got so tired of the mechanical unresponsiveness of my pianola that I experimented and hit upon a method of improving it which I commend to any of your readers who are similarly dissatisfied with their instrument. Briefly it is this (and it can be adapted to any player at a trifling cost): The bellows that fill the wind-chest are worked by springs; normally the bellows contain two springs of 14-lbs. each. These are provided so as to ensure sufficient air in the wind-chest to make all the notes sound, and to run the motor evenly. But this means that there is always too much air in the chest; no real pp or ppp can be got, and no change of touch or accent, by foot-pressure is possible except in, say, every two or three notes. To ask of the ordinary player a series of single notes pp, and each with a different accent, quality, or touch, is to demand the impossible; and yet if such cannot be procured, real nuance, phrasing, grading, or accent are impossible, and the player is almost useless musically.

It occurred to me that it should be possible to put only as much air in the wind-chest as was needed for the chord or note to be played, and if the spring-pressure were lightened it should be possible to make foot-pressure alone responsible for the touch and accent. I had one of the 14-lb. springs removed, and at once proved the truth of my theory; I then had the 14-lb. spring replaced by a 7-lb. spring, with the delightful result that I can now play a chord or a single note either pp or ff by foot-pressure alone; and can make the notes in a passage of single notes all different, and of whatever strength I desire, from ppp to fff. All that has to be learned is never to let the bellows go slack, to keep each foot tight against the other, so that enough air is always in the chest for any note needed, the feet feeding each other as the notes pass by, each providing for what is to come. Nearly every note in a piece is thus given its own distinctive foot-pressure; one makes each note as it comes, as do the fingers. This method also gives complete control over phrasing—building up a sentence, as Mr. Newman has it. Crescendos and diminuendos are perfectly under control, ensuring perfect grading and therefore perfect phrasing. The work is so personal, so direct, and so human that it is far less fatiguing and a thousand times more enjoyable. We are really playing our pianoforte instead of merely 'operating a pianola.'

Part-writing also becomes much clearer; one hears the 'stuff' all over the keyboard. The muddy, thick effect so common in pianola playing disappears. The joy of perfect grading is very great—e.g., the Scherzo of Chopin's B minor Sonata can be interpreted with nearly all the free, intangible phrasing one desires.

But I must emphatically differ from Mr. Newman when, on p. 138, he says, 'There is nothing easier than to incorporate phrasing in the roll by means of the metrostyle. By the flicking of the tempo-lever all degrees of retardation and acceleration can be obtained; this is the way indeed in which the musician phrases on the piano-player.'

If so, I feel like saying, 'The less musician he.' Phrasing is the elocution of music, and is a question of emotional stress far more than rate of movement. A phrase is made cres. and dim. by its grading. Play a passage with a level tone, and no amount of tempo-lever flicking will give a feeling of phrasing. Also there are countless passages where no rubato of the least sort is permissible, and yet they must be perfectly phrased or be meaningless. As an instance chosen almost at random, play Fugue No. 22 of Book I. of the 'Forty-eight.' This needs the most intimate phrasing, but must be played in strict time. If Mr. Newman could get on his player the freedom of grading and accent I do on mine, he would not, I feel sure, have given this advice. It is the inability to get this full, free, spontaneous grading that tempts the pianolist to rely on the tempo-lever for his effects, leading to an abuse of rubato, and spoiling the natural rhythm of the passage.

I have made scores of converts to this light-spring method, and all are genuinely grateful for the enormous increase in spontaneity, and in the personality it has conferred on the piano-player. An old argument against it was that accent should be got by the accent levers plus a full wind-chest. I found, however, that this was a very difficult method to acquire, especially to any with feeble wrists or fingers, and nowadays it is quite out of the question, by reason of the themodising of so many notes. If both levers have to be held back to soften the accompaniment, how can they be used for accenting without the accompaniment becoming loud also? And I was told that it would make the tempo of the motor unsteady; but it does this in so slight a degree as to be negligible. The slightest turn of the tempo-lever instantly corrects it. Till we get the ideal player in which the motor is driven independently—a method I advocated twenty years ago—this method of mine seems as far as we can go in sensitiveness of response. The performer does very largely what he wants to do, and this grows with practice. Of course such manipulation calls for continual study, but that is where the fun comes in, and progress is quickly made. I always combat the dictum that it is too sensitive for the ordinary person, by saying that as his great difficulty is in playing a passage twice alike, he has to search for and choose which way he likes it best, and the power to do so soon comes. He is exercising choice, even sub-consciously.

Mr. Newman makes a good point when he complains, as I have long done, that rolls are not 'barred.' Copyright cannot exist here, as all new music cut is paid for in royalties, and the old classics are surely so long out of all copyright as to make that no defence, especially when a perfect mechanical device for it has been patented.

Mr. Newman has some good advice on the sustaining pedal, and complains, rightly, of its difficulty in the piano-player. I realised this difficulty, and made mine (both in extended leverage on my 'grand' and in extra ease of spring in the pianola) so that I can work my pedal level with the little finger. It is so light and instantly responsive as to seem to be broken. But pianofortes differ in their ease of adjustment in this direction.

I venture to disagree with Mr. Newman's theory that we should regard the piano-player as an instrument that should have music composed or arranged specially for it. This idea came about, I believe, from the difficulty of getting any real approach to the delicate grading of finger-playing. 'Accent in pp is impossible, &c.,' say some people. 'Give it up, then, and let us try only for what it can do—big, noisy orchestral arrangements.' Mr. Newman says the player can do so much more than ten fingers that rolls should be cut giving fuller transcriptions of orchestral pieces than the usual pianoforte arrangement. But if we go too far in this direction only noise will result; the labour, and the amount of air needed to make so many notes sound, preclude all delicacy or intimacy of rendering. One may as well ask six people to sit down to one pianoforte and play. I prefer music to musical noise, and the orchestral rolls I can really enjoy are very few and far between.

A great deal of pianoforte music is impossible on the pianola. The 'Reconnaissance' in Schumann's 'Carnaval' with its multitude of short repeated notes with a delicate melody over, is impossible of adequate interpretation by any player-mechanism. The 'Pantalon' is equally impossible; so why ask for more notes to be cut when to be played at all they must be given ff?

In fact I refuse to regard my pianola as more than a substitute for fingers. I want to play my pianoforte, the pianola is merely the intermediary, and it must express me or I will have none of it. Monochrome renderings of polychrome orchestral works are so unsatisfactory that in cutting such rolls the ideal should always be the most pianistic rendering, a translation into the terms of the pianoforte, not the fullest rendering of the orchestral notes. Numberless works can be found containing quadruple shakes, impossible to play properly with even any amount of noise. We must not forget it is the pianoforte we are playing: the player is merely a substitute for our fingers, and must be improved in that direction only, or else we shall falsify our beautiful instrument, the grand pianoforte. Of course there are cases where one can add notes impossible from stretch of fingers, e.g., bass octaves giving great depth. I frequently do this when cutting transcriptions from Bach's organ works; but even then one does not transcend the pianistic effect proper. It is these noisy orchestral renderings, plus the heavy spring and its turn-a-handle monotony of effect, that make the piano-player so often an intolerable nuisance to all—but the performer!—Yours, &c.,

32, Rosemont Road, FREDERICK H. EVANS.
Acton, W.3.

'EXTREMISTS' versus THE REST'

SIR,—May I be allowed, as a regular reader of your paper, to express regret that the pages devoted to 'Correspondence' should, in the December number, have been reserved for the petty quarrels of two of our leading musical critics. This section of the paper is surely intended to be a medium through which readers may express their views on music, or seek information, and ought not to be used by a critic for the purpose of saying what he thinks of another critic. This battle of wits has now been going on for some time, in various papers, and I feel sure that the musical public in general is beginning to be tired of it, and will agree with me in suggesting that your valuable space could be put to better use.—Yours, &c.,

J. N. G. ESCOMBE.

[We sympathise with Mr. Escombe's complaint, and while welcoming free and frank discussion, we must ask contributors and correspondents to bear in mind that they are disporting themselves in a forum, not in a prize ring.—ED., M.T.]

'SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION'

SIR,—Dr. Ferris Tozer is not entirely correct in supposing that I had not read Mr. Elliot Button's book. Actually, I have read at least a good part of it (unless my memory is gravely at fault) in past numbers of the Musical Times; but I admit that this was not in the least in my mind when I wrote my letter. I did not, indeed, set out to write a criticism of Mr. Button's work, but merely to make a comment suggested by an article in the Musical Times which happened itself to be a review of the book. However, if, as Dr. Tozer suggests, I have chosen 'two of the most convincing examples in the book' for criticism, no harm has been done. To attack a man's book at its strongest points gives, surely, little cause for complaint. Criticism deliberately directed against the weakest points might perhaps be regarded as carping.

In case, however, it might seem from Dr. Tozer's letter—if read alone—that I had written in depreciation of Mr. Button's work, I should like to say that I have since found an opportunity for looking through it (in complete form) and find much in it is valuable that—especially in the more elementary parts, about which there can of course be little dispute. The more contentious parts, too, are interesting and stimulating: but between saying this and agreeing with all Mr. Button states—and especially accepting all his various 'conditions'—there is a great gulf fixed.

Dr. Tozer makes a mistake, if I may say so, in appealing to the authority of Sir Edward Elgar. I rather doubt if Sir Edward would support everything Mr. Button writes;

but apart altogether from this, the great charm of Mr. Button's book lies in the youthful exuberance with which he throws overboard all authority altogether. He appeals not to authority, but to reason, system, and logic. (The very title of his work proclaims this.) To fall back, then, after all, on authority is rather to knock the bottom out of his case. Moreover, it leaves it open to me to make the obvious retort that if Mr. Button has Sir Edward Elgar on his side, I, at any rate, have Bach, Beethoven, and the rest of them, on mine!—Yours, &c.,

A. R. CRIPPS.

10, Ambrose Place, Worthing.

December 11, 1920.

VINCENT D'INDY'S VIEW OF HARMONY

SIR,—Mr. Thelwall will find M. d'Indy's demonstration of his Lower Harmonic series in vol. i., pp. 98, 99, of the 'Cours de Composition.' It is similar to that in Riemann's 'Harmony Simplified.' M. d'Indy, in his chapter 'The History of Harmonic Theories,' credits Zarlini with discovering (arithmetically) the true basis of the Minor Mode. Tartini and his resultant tones, and Arthur von Oettingen ('Harmoniesystem in Dualer Entwicklung') are the chief of the later supporters he marshals. His last paragraph on p. 142 points to a hope in a physical demonstration of the whole lower series:

'Our ideas, our knowledge, and our nature itself are eminently modifiable if not perfectible, and who can deny that a theory like ours has a great chance of being true when it assembles in its favour all the distinguished minds whose laborious research we have just retraced? May each of us now verify it, absorb it, and still add to it by his personal toil of reflection and application.'

I ought to say that M. d'Indy does not call his lower harmonics 'partials.' The sentence Mr. Thelwall quotes ('If one cannot hear them in nature, one is to realise them "by second nature,"' &c.) was not a translation from M. d'Indy, nor was it given as such, though I think it fairly enough renders his teaching.—Yours, &c.,

London, December, 1920.

RICHARD CAPELL.

SIR,—In the Musical Times for December I see a letter from Mr. Walter Thelwall, in which he says:

'I am somewhat sceptical as to these multiple tones. . . . I hope that this letter may have the effect of eliciting evidence upon the subject.'

Has Mr. Thelwall tried the effect of playing the lowest note on the organ pedals with only a 16-ft. stop out, then adding the note a 5th higher? The lower octave of the C is then plainly audible. Is this not a proof—even to the unscientific—that these lower partials do exist?—Yours, &c.,

The Look-out, Clevedon.

ENID PAYNE

December 1, 1920.

(Mrs. Walter Morris).

'LETTERS OF GREAT COMPOSERS'

SIR,—I crave an inch of your valuable space to reply to Mr. F. Sinclair-Terras and Mr. R. B. Kettlewell, whose letters concerning my article appeared in the November and December numbers of the Musical Times. Mr. Terras has apparently misread me. The edition of Mendelssohn's letters he mentions is the identical one I possess, and from which my quotations were taken. I merely expressed a wish that some of our enterprising publishers of to-day who issue reprints of the world's classics would include a selection from the correspondence of Mendelssohn.

In reply to Mr. R. B. Kettlewell's reference to my not having treated of Brahms' letters, I may say that, from considerations of space, I confined myself to four selected composers. In a future article I hope to deal with a further four composers, when I shall certainly include the Herzogenberg correspondence of Johannes Brahms.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM PEARSON.

323, Victoria Road,
Aston Park, Birmingham.

December 5, 1920.

PERMANENT OPERA IN ENGLISH

SIR,—It was good to read in the Musical Times of November, Mr. Francis E. Barrett's interesting article on the desirability of establishing opera in English permanently in London, though the subject, one would have thought, was pretty well played out. He makes, however, one or two statements which are misleading. In discussing opera conditions on the Continent, and speaking of Italy, where for nearly all the year round I have resided for close on thirty years, he says that in this country 'over four-hundred companies tour.' Now during the period of my lengthy sojourn here I have never heard of such a thing as a touring opera company, and I think I may say I am fairly well in touch with matters musical in Italy. Operetta companies, giving such works as 'The Merry Widow,' 'The Waltz Dream,' and things of that class, go on tour, but a dozen companies is the maximum on the road, and this is a generous margin. Occasionally, but very occasionally, in past years a company with an opera that has had conspicuous success at the Scala or the Costanza has given a few representations in some of the most prominent cities of Italy, but such a thing as a touring company with a repertoire does not exist. The extraordinary effect produced by Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' as transferred to the stage after over sixty years' familiarity as an oratorio 'would not appear to have had a very potential effect on the public,' as, if I mistake not, except by the Moody-Manners Company, it has not been performed. Had the transplanting of the work from the concert-platform to the stage been greatly successful, surely steps would have been taken to include it in other 'Opera in English' Companies. I do not know Elgar's 'Caractacus,' but it by no means follows that a dramatic work in a concert-hall will prove effective when transferred to the trappings of the theatre. The late Augustus Harris is mentioned in the same article, and I cannot help thinking if permanent National Opera or Opera in English had been feasible, he certainly would not have neglected the opportunity to establish it.—Yours, &c.,

CLAUDE TREVOR.

Florence, Italy.

ELECTRIC ORGAN AT LÖLINGEN, GERMANY

SIR,—I think it might interest some of your readers to know that during the course of eleven months spent with the Army of Occupation in Germany I had the privilege of playing an organ remarkably similar to that in the Lettish Church at Libau, described in a recent number of the Musical Times.

This particular organ is in the Lutheran Church at Lölingen, Germany, and is a three-manual instrument, the lower manual being the Great Organ, the centre one the Swell, the Echo Organ being at the top. The stops are ranged on either side, with three small pistons, coloured yellow, red, and black respectively, under each stop. By this elaborate arrangement, three distinct combinations can be prepared and brought into play by pressing the 'master-piston' of the required colour which is placed under the Great keyboard, together with a large number of combination pistons producing various 'shades' of tone, from ppp to tutti, the latter giving the almost overwhelming power of the full organ.

In the case of this instrument, the india-rubber covered roller is placed just above, and runs the full length of, the pedal board, the indicator being on the player's right; the Swell and Echo pedals are of the 'balanced' type, and situated at the right-hand end of this roller.

The blowing is effected by a powerful electric-motor. The organ was erected by a firm of builders at Cologne. It is in the west gallery, and the performer sits with his back to it and facing down the church, the console when closed looking like a large roll-top desk.

I may add that I received every courtesy from the organist and church officials, and could practise at any time, a privilege of which, I need hardly say, I made full use.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. DOUGHTY.

12, Howard Road,
Upminster, Essex.

THE PRICE OF CLASSIC FIDDLES

SIR,—On November 25 there appeared in the Daily Express an announcement that at a sale-room a 'Fine Strad Violin dated 1696' was to be sold, and that £5,000 was paid for the 'Emperor Strad' which Dr. Joachim pronounced to be the finest (presumably Strad) he had seen. So far so good; but the announcement went on to state that £10,000 had been offered for the Strad which Paganini left to Genoa. Surely an announcement like this can only be made through ignorance (to be charitable!) or a deliberate attempt to 'boost' up prices in order that unwary bidders may be induced to pay big money and so raise the fictitious value of these violins—fine as they are. Every violin connoisseur and student knows that Paganini's violin was not a Strad, but a Joseph Guarnerius, made in 1743, presented to him by M. Livron, a French merchant living at Leghorn. M. Livron was so entranced by Paganini's playing on it that he said no other fingers should touch it, and after the concert presented it to Paganini. At his death in May, 1840, Paganini bequeathed it to his native town Genoa, and it is preserved in a glass case in the museum there. On the same day that the announcement appeared I wrote to the Daily Express pointing out the error, and asking them in the interests of violin lovers to correct the statement, but as the matter has not been adjusted, although sufficient time has elapsed, I am writing to you in the hope that you will be able to find space in your interesting and widely-read magazine to insert this letter to warn intending purchasers against placing credence in announcements put in daily papers by vendors of violins.—Yours, &c.,

York Cottage, Frome.

A. M. PORTER.

December 8, 1920.

A CORNET WANTED

SIR,—Some time ago a disabled ex-service man came to our centre at Andover, Hants, suffering from a paralysed lip caused by gun-shot wound. He required treatment and training, and our vocal therapist took him in hand and taught him to play the cornet. This curative training has practically restored to the man the full use of his lip, and he is now quite an accomplished player.

He is anxious to continue to play his instrument, and I have been asked to write to you and learn if any of your readers would provide him with a cornet, thereby helping him to supplement his pension by playing in an orchestra, and also preventing his lip falling again into disuse.

I shall be glad to answer any questions regarding the case, and should one or other of your readers desire to make the gift, I shall be grateful if it is forwarded direct to me at this address. The cornet must be in B flat.—Yours, &c.,

(Capt.) J. MANCLARK HOLLIS

(Secretary).

The Village Centres Council,
10, Upper Woburn Place, W.C.-1.
December 1, 1920.

'MR. STEPHENSON THE BANKER'

SIR,—In my recently published 'Johann Sebastian Bach' I was able, by independent investigation, to make a guess that Samuel Wesley's associate 'Mr. Stephenson the Banker,' who translated Forkel's 'Johann Sebastian Bach' in 1820, was one Rowland Stephenson, a man of about forty in 1820, second son of John Stephenson (deceased before 1829), whom he succeeded before 1820 as active partner of the Lombard Street firm of bankers, Messrs. Remington, Stephenson, Remington, & Toulmin. In 1828 the firm was wound up in bankruptcy, and in 1829 Rowland Stephenson absconded to America. In The News of January 4, 1829, his father is named as 'of Great Ormonde Street, Queen Square.'

Dr. Gratton Flood has obligingly put into my hands evidence which seemingly conclusively confirms my investigation. He draws my attention to a letter of Samuel Wesley's, dated March 29, 1810, in which he invites his correspondent to meet him on Sunday, April 1, at 'Queen Square, No. 29 [I think], for the purpose of celebrating the natal day of Sebastian Bach.' Whether Rowland Stephenson was in independent occupation of the Queen Street house, or whether his father was still living there is not determined. But the locality of the house clearly confirms my inference that this particular family of Stephenson was the one with whom Wesley was associated.

Rowland Stephenson was a widower in 1829, and of his eight children the eldest was also in the Bank. Rowland therefore was probably married later than 1810. Whether or no his father was deceased by that year, his tenancy of No. 29 (?), Queen Street in 1810 is equally explicable. On the other hand, until the precise date of John Stephenson's death is ascertained, it is not absolutely established whether he or his son was the 'most zealous and scientific member of our [Bach] Fraternity' to whom Samuel Wesley alludes in 1808 as the translator of Forkel.

I propose to follow the investigation further, and to acquaint you with any positive results that may be attained.—Yours, &c.,

C. SANFORD TERRY.

Obituary

We regret to record the death of EDWARD DE JONG, the celebrated flautist, at the age of eighty-three. In the course of his long career, which commenced at a 'prodigy' age, Mr. de Jong made the acquaintance of Liszt, took part (it is said) in the first performance of 'Tannhäuser' under Wagner, played obbligati for Jenny Lind, and played under August Manns at Amsterdam and Manchester. Settled at Manchester, he carried on a series of popular Saturday night concerts for twenty years. After this he was a musical organizer at Blackpool, Buxton, and Southport.

Sixty Years Ago

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.—A 6½ Broadwood Grand Pianoforte, in good order; warranted. Price £12. Apply to J. S. Wells, Banbury.

Reduced Price, 8d.

DR. MAINZER'S MUSIC BOOK FOR THE YOUNG.

PREFACE.

This little work has been prepared with a view to furnish Schools and Families with a complete set of Juvenile Compositions suitable for all circumstances. The Poetry has been written or selected with the greatest care: it treats of sacred and moral objects, and calls especially the attention of the young to the beauties of Nature.

Reduced Price, 8d.

DR. MAINZER'S FIFTY MELODIES FOR CHILDREN.—Adapted for the use of Schools and Families.

PREFACE.

In preparing this, we had three principal points in view:

1st. To give to our little tunes such a compass that youthful and uncultivated voices can reach the extreme notes without effort.

2nd. To present the young with poetical sentiments within the reach of their intelligence.

3rd. To make these sentiments worthy to be kept in memory, so as to be used, in many circumstances of life, as guides of conduct and means of consolation.

Let it be well understood that these tunes are written for the school, and not for the church. From the school, children may bring them home, sing them in the street, in the field, or at the fireside. Grown-up persons may thus learn from children to sing what is worthy of their voice and their memory; and may learn to forget songs of other descriptions.

May it be, then, my young friends, your guide and companion; may these little tunes now instruct and now amuse you; may they teach you obedience and piety, and fill your hearts with joy and cheerfulness. May you learn, through them, to respect your school and your home, your young friends and yourselves; and, to express all my wishes in one word, may they make you better while they make you happier.

THE AUTHOR.

STONEHOUSE.—In the early part of the last month the Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse Choral Society produced Handel's oratorio, Saul, at the St. George's Hall, Stonehouse. . . . The solo performers, who acquitted themselves remarkably well, had the good sense to keep their names out of the programme—a most unusual thing for amateurs nowadays, who seem at all times anxious to bring their names before the public.

THE THREE FAVORITE SONGS OF THE SEASON.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TIME. With Elaborate Title. Most respectfully dedicated to all classes of society. By E. C. CROGER, Author and Composer of

HURRAH! BRAVE VOLUNTEERS! Humbly and most respectfully dedicated to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and all the British Rifle Volunteers. Also,

WE WELCOME THEE BACK TO THY NATIVE SHORE. Most respectfully dedicated to Miss Florence Nightingale.

Each of the above songs is of that rare quality seldom to be met with—viz., simplicity and beauty; the melodies are truly original, so easy that when once heard they cannot be forgotten. The words are of that chaste description they may be read by all—from the youngest child to the most elderly lady or gentleman, and invariably leave on the mind a delightful sensation of mirth, nobleness, and virtue. Either of the above published at 2s. 6d.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

An interesting and extremely well varied programme of music was given at the chamber concert on November 17. A movement from Grieg's Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, admirably played by Messrs. Frank Leonard and Roy Ellett, opened the concert, while the other concerted items included a MS. Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Herbert Haworth, two movements from Borodin's second String Quartet, played by a very well-balanced quartet led by Miss Gladys Chester, movements from a Bach Sonata for flute and pianoforte (Misses Mary Underwood and Joan Lloyd), and part of the Brahms Trio in E flat for pianoforte, violin, and horn, of which an excellent interpretation was given by Misses Nina North and Florence Lockwood, and Mr. John Orchard. The other instrumental items included a MS. Ballade in A flat for pianoforte, played by the composer, Mr. George F. Dodds, a student of considerable promise, and Liszt's Rhapsody No. 12, brilliantly played by Miss Audrey Goldstein. The vocal items were songs by Parry, Goring Thomas, and Elgar, also Sullivan's rarely heard 'Edward Gray,' of which Mr. Raymond Iles gave an excellent interpretation.

On Friday and Saturday evenings, November 26 and 27, two exceptionally good dramatic performances were given, under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond. The items were 'David Garrick,' and the one-Act play 'Op o' me thumb,' the cast being changed each evening. While the whole of the performances reflected very great credit upon the students and their teacher, special mention may be made of Mr. Douglas Pack as Squire Chivy, Mr. H. Foden-Pattinson as Simon Ingot, Mr. George Thirlwell as David Garrick, and Misses Gwendolen Russell and Vera Castell as Ida Ingot.

The usual terminal orchestral concert took place at Queen's Hall on Monday, December 6, and was conducted by Mr. Frederick Corder, who secured excellent interpretations of Sullivan's 'Overture to a Ball,' Dvorák's Variations for orchestra, and Saint-Saëns' symphonic poem 'Le Rouet d'Omphale.' The other items included the first movement from Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, played by Miss Betty Humby, and the Finale of Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Elsie Betts, both of whom showed themselves to be pianists of very considerable promise. Three interesting songs by Sylvia Carmine (student), Saint-Saëns' Ballad 'The Drummer's Betrothed,' and Mendelssohn's scena 'Infelice,' completed the programme.

Recent awards have comprised the following :

- The Battison Haynes Prize* (Composition)—Alan D. Bush (of London), Michael D. Head being commended. Adjudicator, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill.
- The Hine Gift* (Composition)—Shula Doniach (Samara, Russia). Adjudicator, Mr. Alec Rowley.
- The Sainton-Dolby Prize* (Contraltos)—Mabel Linwood (Eastwood, Notts), Dorothy Pattinson and Betty Thompson being highly commended, and Vera Cree commended. Adjudicators, Miss Elizabeth Davies and Madame Edith Hands.
- The Philip L. Agnew Prize* (Pianoforte)—Harry Isaacs (London), Arthur E. Temple being commended. Adjudicators, Messrs. William Murdoch and Philip L. Agnew.
- The Walter Wilson Cobbett Prize* (Ensemble Playing)—Gladys Chester, Israel Schlaen, Nan Rees, and Lilly Phillips. Adjudicator, Mr. W. W. Cobbett.
- The R.A.M. Club Prize* (Composition)—Paul Kerby. Adjudicator, Mr. Eric Coates.
- The Fred. Walker Prize* (Sopranos)—Edith Rogers (South Wales). Adjudicator, Miss Evangeline Florence.
- The Westmorland Scholarship* (Male Vocalists)—Frank H. Nathan (Manchester). Adjudicators, Messrs. Marcus Thomson and Frederick Keel.
- The Potter Exhibition* (Female Pianists)—Hazel Perman (London), Doris Hobson being highly commended and Lillian Southgate and Kathleen Levi commended. Adjudicators, Messrs. Vivian Langrish, Lawrence Taylor, and Ambrose Coviello (chairman).

The Lent Term opens on Monday, January 10. On Wednesday, January 26, Dr. H. W. Richards will give his first lecture on the 'History of Music from 1650 to 1750,' in which he will deal with the life and works of Henry Purcell. There will be illustrations by the choir under Mr. Henry Beauchamp.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS

The thirty-first annual Conference of the I.S.M. will open on Monday, January 3, with a soirée at Clothworkers' Hall.

On Wednesday morning, January 5, the members will meet at the Mansion House by invitation of the Right Hon. The Lord Mayor. Sir Edward E. Cooper will preside, and an address will be given by Sir Hugh P. Allen on 'Personality in Teaching.' In the afternoon, Prof. Donald F. Tovey will give a lecture-recital at University College.

In the evening an invitation concert will be held at Queen's Hall, when the English String Quartet will play quartets and Miss Olga Haley will sing.

On Thursday, January 6, the morning lecture will be by Mr. Frank Roscoe, on 'The Musician as a Teacher,' and in the afternoon Prof. A. Henderson will lecture on 'Psychology: its Importance in Education.'

The annual general meeting of members will be held on January 7, and the conference will conclude with a banquet at the Hotel Cecil.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

ABERDEEN

The various choirs and choral societies are at work, but so far the public has not been invited to taste of the fruit of these labours. Such music as we have been permitted to hear comes under the heading of imported. The Scottish Orchestra and the Fellows String Quartet have given concerts, the expense of which was underwritten by local music-lovers, and in each case the support forthcoming was so encouraging that re-engagements have been entered into. Recitals have been given by Mr. Marens Thomson, an Aberdeen singer resident in London; by Messrs. T. E. Wright and Johann Blazer (pianoforte and violoncello), local professional musicians, and by Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Burnett (pianoforte and violin), a talented pair of amateurs to whom we were indebted for first hearings of the Elgar and Goossens Sonatas. A Greek play done by graduates and undergraduates of the University was interesting in the musical sense, inasmuch as special music was written for it by Mr. W. G. Whittaker, of Newcastle. In spite of a somewhat inadequate performance of the orchestral score (the voice parts for females were beautifully sung), Mr. Whittaker's music created a most favourable impression.

For the time being grand opera is claiming public suffrage to the exclusion of almost every other form. At the time of writing we are enjoying a week's respite between visits of the O'Mara and Carl Rosa Companies. The two weeks' season which the O'Mara Company has just concluded has been successful in every way, the performances being better and the audiences larger than any heretofore. We could always depend upon Mr. O'Mara for good principals, but on this occasion he has given us, in addition, excellent chorus-singing and a better standard of orchestral playing, improvements which are largely due to the Company's clever conductors, Mr. R. J. Forbes and Mr. Warwick Braithwaite.

BATH

Music during the past month was confined to the Pump Room performances, in their accustomed vigour and activity.

In addition to the usual daily popular concerts, on November 20 Miss Isolde Menges (violin) and Miss Eileen Beattie (pianoforte) gave two recitals—soli and concerted; and on the evening of November 25 the programme was provided by the Bath Society of Gleemen, under the direction of Mr. A. Salter. On November 27 two very interesting concerts of modern British music were given, the artists being Miss Ursula Greville (vocalist) and Mr. Percival Garratt (pianoforte). The return visit of the Anna Pavlova Russian Ballet, on the three days November 30 to December 1, proved a great attraction. On December 9 two pianoforte recitals were given by M. Cernikoff, and on December 11 Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay paid her eagerly-looked for return visit with 'Old Songs and Ballads.'

In drawing up the programme for the usual weekly chamber concerts the object evidently is to embrace as wide a range as possible of the works of the old and more modern masters. November 25 was devoted to Mendelssohn, Weber, Strauss, and Schubert; Bach, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Dvorák serving for December 8.

BELFAST

At the Philharmonic Society's second concert of the season on November 26, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure' was the only concerted work performed, and choir and orchestra reflected credit on their careful training by the Society's conductor, Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. The soloists were Miss Clytie Hine, Mr. R. M. Kent, and Mr. Bateman—in the place of Mr. Murray Davey, who had been announced but did not fulfil his engagement. The rest of the concert comprised a happy miscellaneous selection of music, including for orchestra Sullivan's Overture 'Di Ballo,' two movements of Debussy's 'Petite Suite,' and (most interesting of all) a tone-poem, 'The Waters of Peneios,' composed and conducted by the accomplished cellist, Mr. Arnold Trowell. The work is a beautiful composition which will probably become a general favourite. Mr. Trowell also played with the orchestra Jules de Swert's Concerto No. 2, in C minor, and other pieces. Songs by the soloists completed an excellent programme.

The Belfast Symphony Orchestra continues to discourse excellent music under Mr. Godfrey Brown's baton. On November 27 the players were heard in Mr. Trowell's tone-poem mentioned above—when it was again conducted by the composer—and in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' Overture, Handel's Largo in G, and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance.' Mr. J. H. Gray played three movements of Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor. Mr. John Vine completed the programme with songs by various composers.

On December 11 a concert by the same Orchestra included the Overture and Liebestod from 'Tristan and Isolde,' a movement from Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique' Symphony, the 'Bamboula' dance of Coleridge-Taylor, and Mascagni's Intermezzo from 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' Two novelties distinguished this concert—the first being a new orchestral work entitled 'Glendalough,' composed and conducted by the city organist, Mr. C. J. Brennan, and the second 'Deirdre's Lament,' for soprano voice and orchestra, composed by Mr. W. B. Reynolds, the musical critic of the Belfast Telegraph, an excellent musician whose criticisms are always appreciated by those competent to judge. Both works were greatly and deservedly admired, and it is most gratifying to see Belfast taking in the musical world so high a position in the master art of composition. A new Society called 'The Coleridge-Taylor Musical Society' of which Mr. Teesdale Griffiths is the conductor, gave two performances of 'Messiah' on December 10 and 11.

BIRMINGHAM

'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed by the Walsall Philharmonic Society at Walsall Town Hall on November 18, conducted by Mr. Appleby Matthews, who certainly scored a triumphant success, being admirably supported by choir, orchestra, and principals. Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Charles Harrison rendered artistic help, and mention should also be made of Mr. T. W. North's valuable assistance at the organ. The orchestra comprised an important contingent of the City of Birmingham rank and file, with Mr. Alexander Cohen as leader.

The British Music Society's inaugural concert at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery, on November 24, was honoured by the presence of the Lord Mayor of Birmingham (Mr. W. A. Cadbury) and Dr. Eaglefield Hull, the hon. director of the British Music Society. Some characteristic speeches were made, followed by a concert, the programme of which comprised Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet and a Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Op. 1, by Frank Martin. The performers were Miss Marjorie Sotham (pianoforte), Mr. John Bridge (1st violin), Mr. Frank Venton (2nd violin), Miss Grace Barrows (viola), and Mr. J. C. Hock (violin-cello). Mr. Hock also acted as musical director.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society gave at the Town Hall, on December 1, a magnificent revival of Dvorák's dramatic cantata 'The Spectre's Bride,' which under Sir Henry Wood's direction reached the most poignant reading since its first production at the Birmingham Festival of 1885. The story, culled from Czech legends, has much in common with Burger's familiar poem 'Leonore.' It may here be recalled that Raff wrote a symphony on the same subject, which one would like to hear again. It is true that the public taste has greatly changed since Dvorák gave the 'Spectre's Bride' to the world, and no doubt the ultra-modernists present on this occasion did not listen to it with the same appreciation that it aroused in the audience of 1885 and again in 1900. Nevertheless it still remains a work of great dramatic force and beauty. The fine singing of the principals—Miss Nora Delmarr, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Captain Horace Stevens—contributed towards the success of the performances. Much local interest centred in the first hearing at Birmingham of Miss Dorothy Howell's orchestral tone-poem 'Lamia,' based on Keats' well-known poetic work. For one so young Miss Howell has achieved a composition that appeals to the imagination, showing inventive talent and a decided gift for orchestral colouring. Sir Henry Wood had admirably prepared the work, and it was enthusiastically greeted. The composer was present, and received an overwhelming reception from the audience.

The Midland Musical Society's Concert at the Town Hall on December 4, conducted by Mr. John Tyler in place of Mr. Cotton, provided an impressive and dramatically telling performance of 'The Golden Legend,' in which the principal artists were Madame Parkes-Darby, Miss Alice Vaughan, Mr. E. Ludlow, and Mr. Herbert Parker. A pleasing addition to the concert was Coleridge-Taylor's bright and melodious 'Bon-Bon' Suite. The choir throughout the evening was in excellent form. A crucial test was Bach's Motet for double choir, 'Be not afraid,' which this Society has often given in the past. Mr. Tyler had admirably prepared his forces, whose performance reflected credit upon themselves and their conductor.

Mr. Appleby Matthews' Sunday Evening Orchestral Concerts at the Theatre Royal continue to attract large and appreciative audiences. The programmes contain plenty of novelties, in addition to the Symphonies of the great masters. The City of Birmingham Orchestra has in Mr. Appleby Matthews a conductor who will go far, for he is an enthusiast and a capable musician.

A graphic interpretation of Elgar's 'King Olaf,' which greatly appealed to the audience, was given at the Town Hall on December 11 by the Birmingham Choral Union, under Mr. Richard Wassell's tactful and watchful conductorship. The principals were Miss Emily Broughton, Mr. Sidney Halliley, and Mr. Alfred Askey. The organist was Mr. C. W. Perkins. Choir and orchestra strongly elicited the sympathy of the audience.

BOURNEMOUTH

Bournemouth's music-lovers have little cause to complain of the quality of the programmes provided at recent Symphony Concerts. It is of course in the nature of all human effort that an occasional concert shall fall slightly below the level of the rest of the series of which it forms a part. But this is a rare occurrence—the day's programme usually contains some work that compensates for any sense of tedium that may be evoked elsewhere. Truly, Mr. Dan Godfrey has no easy task to fulfil in arranging programmes for a series of no less than thirty symphony concerts. At the very outset he is necessarily confronted with the difficulty of finding thirty symphonies alone that are worthy of occupying the central positions. The demand is almost greater than the supply; and in these days, when the composing of symphonies is far less popular than formerly, it suggests itself that possibly the substitution of two or three separate works of important proportions in lieu of the symphony in several movements will increasingly become the vogue.

The sixth Symphony Concert of the season—and the first to be noticed this month—will long be remembered as the occasion when the revised version of Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony was first performed at Bournemouth. Here at least—and that despite the dismal croakings of certain reactionaries of narrow view who assuredly one day will eat their words if only to conform with enlightened musical opinion—is a composition of a most impressive nature. Admittedly it is a work towards which some may feel unsympathetic, but even so only pity can be felt for those whose musical insensitiveness blinds them to the fine sincerity, the noble idealism, and the idyllic imaginativeness of this always suggestive and often beautiful musical poem of moods. It is unquestionably one of the finest productions of recent times, and we should be proud that it is an Englishman who has added such a distinguished work of art to the list of symphonic compositions. Its performance was magnificent, and conductor and orchestra cannot be too highly complimented for an interpretation of such outstanding merit. Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in D minor, though played very persuasively by Mr. Julius Rosenthal, appeared an exceedingly dull and mechanical piece of writing after the elevated atmosphere of the Symphony.

The next week's concert opened with an unusually good performance of the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. This was followed by Mozart's lovely G minor Symphony—a work of rare and sustained beauty—and the clever 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' Scherzo by Dukas. Josef Holbrooke's poem for pianoforte and orchestra, 'The Song of Gwyn ap Nudd,' was played with moderate success by Miss Rita Neve.

The programme on November 25 was not altogether well-balanced. Granville Bantock's delicate and picturesque comedy overture, 'The Pierrot of the Minarets,' is not at all, so to speak, Bantockian. In its clarity and economy of means it is more akin to the French school, and one felt the lack of contrast when it was succeeded by Debussy's beautiful 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' Prelude. Also, it is impossible to wax enthusiastic over Berlioz's dreary 'Harold in Italy' Symphony, which may have interest from the historical standpoint, but has little to commend it regarded purely as music. The solo viola part, however, lost nothing at the hands of that reliable artist, Mr. Theo. de la Riviere. Karl Reinecke's Harp Concerto, again, is not an inspired work; but the two movements heard at this concert were admirably performed by Miss Jacoba Wolters, Bournemouth's exceedingly talented harpist.

An exceptionally interesting programme was submitted on December 2. It opened with Chabrier's fine 'Gwendoline' Overture, to which succeeded Rimsky-Korsakov's ingenious and effective Sinfonietta on Russian Themes. Glazounov's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, a composition in which brilliance and scholarliness are cleverly combined, was another enjoyable feature, the solo music being splendidly performed by Mlle. Juliette Folville, now an established favourite with local audiences. Finally there was the first revival since the war of a work by Richard Strauss—the 'Tod und Verklärung' tone-poem. There is no doubt about the magnificence of some of the passages in this score, but it is not the equal of 'Till Eulenspiegel' or of the earlier 'Don Juan,' both of which would now well bear revival. The whole of this exacting programme was carried out in exemplary fashion, and greatly to the satisfaction of the audience.

The writer, owing to indisposition, was unable to attend the tenth concert, on December 9, the programme of which comprised the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, Brahms' second Symphony, a Rhapsody for violin and orchestra by W. H. Reed (soloist, Miss Jessie Snow), and a symphonic poem, 'The Seekers,' by Paul Kerby (conducted by the composer). The last two works were novelties to Bournemouth.

BRISTOL

Concerts crowd upon us. Their financial success is doubtful, but they certainly have been artistic successes, and have given Bristolians such a feast as the city had not had for many years until the influx last season. Among the principal events have been the annual Police Orphanage concerts on November 17, when the full Grenadier Guards Band, under Capt. Williams, gave a typical programme, including the '1812' Overture and the conductor's own skilfully constructed 'Patrols.' Madame Elsa Stralia sang several operatic solos.

A very careful performance of the Prelude and Grail scene from 'Parsifal,' by the Bristol Choral Society, under Mr. George Riseley's judicious direction, also at Colston Hall, drew a large and appreciative audience on November 20; with Mr. Percy Heming—a Bristol baritone who has been much heard of in London—as Amfortas, and Mr. Robert Radford doubling the parts of Titurel and Gurnemanz. The miscellaneous second part of the programme included Boris' Song from Moussorgsky's opera, magnificently sung by Mr. Radford, the fine double chorus, Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' and a unique concession by Mr. Riseley, who permitted an encore and allowed Mr. Heming to repeat the second verse of the 'Toreador's Song.'

On November 22, the second 'international celebrity' concert was the occasion of a first visit from Miss Stella Power, with Miss Leila Megane, Mr. Jean Gerardy, and Miss Adela Verne.

The first of the Bristol Municipal Concerts, the series of organ recitals on the great Colston Hall organ, drew a tremendous evening audience and a fairly good afternoon gathering to hear Mr. Alfred Hollins give exhibitions of his delightful playing. Mendelssohn, Bach, and Sibelius were drawn upon to the very great pleasure of his hearers.

The second Quinlan concert, on November 27, drew a splendid house at Colston Hall, to hear an extraordinary programme supplied by Mlle. Renée Chemet, M. Rosing, Miss Tilly Koenen, and Mr. George Curzon. So many were the encores that the programme lasted far beyond its allotted time.

Mr. Arnold Barter and his New Philharmonic Society gave a highly interesting programme of modern music on December 4 at Colston Hall, including Delius' Rhapsody on 'Brigg Fair,' Prof. Walford Davies' 'Five Sayings of Jesus,' Grainger's 'Brigg Fair,' and Hurlstone's 'Alfred the Great' Ballad, with very fair success. Miss Irene Scharrer played Schumann's Concerto in A minor with the orchestra, and several Chopin studies.

The second Max Mossel concert, on December 7, like the International, was but poorly attended, though Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Coates, M. Arthur de Greef, and Mr. Mossel gave a most pleasing programme, which left only regrets that more people could not have heard it.

On December 11, the Cecilian Choral Society, of about two hundred voices, gave with their usual care, at Colston Hall, under Mr. Charles Read, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' before an interested audience of friends from Messrs. Fry's, from whose Bristol works the choir is recruited.

The third 'international celebrity' concert, on December 13, was a 'surprise' night. Mlle. Graziella Pareto, Mr. Dinh Gilly, M. Bratza, and M. Claudio Arrau, came down to take part in a programme that included the 'Shadow Song' from 'Dinorah,' Massenet's 'Vision' from 'Herodiade,' Wieniawski's 'Faust' fantasia, and Debussy's 'Cathédrale Engloutie.' It is the finest 'four' we have yet had at Bristol.

CORNWALL

The West Cornwall Musical Society is flourishing, and a Beethoven afternoon at Redruth on November 20 comprised Sonatas for pianoforte (Miss Mary Wright), for pianoforte and violin (Miss Margery Holden), Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Miss Edith Blight, Mrs. Twite, and Miss Treweek), and songs.

Mount Hawke Guild has organized a series of sacred concerts for Saturday evenings, and on December 4 a programme of organ solos (Mr. H. Carveth), songs, and duets was successfully given.

At Morazion a large united choir has been formed of Nonconformist Chapel choirs, and, under Mr. J. H. Trudgeon, has begun to practise 'Messiah.' Mousehole Male Choir (Mr. Fred Roach), sang 'Martyrs of the Arena' and 'Destruction of Gaza' (de Rille), 'Comrades in Arms,' and 'To Arms' on December 3. Penlee Male Choir (Mr. W. Richards) and Gunnislake Male Choir (Mr. W. Leverton) gave concerts on December 3 and 4 respectively, and on the latter occasion Elgar's 'As Torrents in Summer' and Cooke's 'Strike the Lyre' were performed.

On December 1 St. Budeaux Baptist Choir (Mr. W. J. Angle) celebrated its twenty-first annual festival by performing the cantata 'Saul of Tarsus.' Redruth Musical Society on December 2 gave a good performance of 'Elijah.' Mr. N. Clemens conducted a choir of a hundred voices and a good orchestra, Mr. Joseph Farrington coming from St. Paul's Cathedral to sing the bass solo. 'Messiah' was performed at Launceston on December 2, Mr. C. S. Parsonson conducting an orchestra and a choir numbering over a hundred voices. The chief principals were Miss Joan Ashley and Mr. Frederick Taylor (vocalists).

Wadebridge Choral Society closed a good autumn's work with an excellent performance on December 10 of Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day,' Cowen's 'Wedding Chorus,' Rhys Herbert's 'Woodland Chorus' for female voices, and other items. Mr. H. S. Derry conducted.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

At a special matinée at the Hippodrome, on November 20, M. Shapiro, the well-known pianist, appeared. On the evening of the same day, Coventry Choral Society gave its second concert of the season at the Baths Assembly Hall. The programme was of great local interest. It included the 'Ballad of Semmerwater' (Bainton) and 'The Death of Morar' (Granville Bantock), which formed the test-pieces at the recent Leicester Festival, at which the Society secured first prize. 'In Cælia's face my Heaven is' (Julius Harrison), the words of which are by a well-known local politician, was also in the programme. Throughout the evening the choir was in good voice. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Lycett and Mr. Barker Beaumont (vocalists), and Miss Winifred Small (violin). Mr. John Potter conducted.

'Elijah' was sung in the Cathedral by Coventry Philharmonic Society on November 25 in the presence of a vast assembly. The work of the choir, which numbered a hundred and twenty, was most satisfactory, the choral technique showing great improvement upon that manifested last season. Mr. Charles Matthews conducted. Mr. Walter Hoyle was at the organ, and in addition a string orchestra supplemented by drums, provided the accompaniment. The soloists were Miss Olive Macdonagh, Miss Norah Scott, Mr. Charles Morley, and Mr. George Baker.

The following evening marked the first concert of the 'Rover' Orchestra at the Albany Road Hall. This organization, conducted by Mr. W. R. Clarke, consists of thirty-six members recruited from all over the city. The ambitious initial programme embraced movements from the 'Surprise' Symphony (Haydn), the 'Ballet Egyptien' (Luigini), 'Henry VIII.' ballet music (Saint-Saëns), and the march from 'Tannhäuser.' Vocal assistance was lent by Miss Maud Coleman and Mr. Ernest Maher.

On November 27, under the leadership of Mr. S. J. Wisdom, the Armstrong-Siddeley Male-Voice Choir gave a well-varied programme at Parkside.

Coventry Co-operative Select Choir, under Mr. Alfred Petty, gave a concert at the Baths Assembly Hall on December 4, when Madame Edna Thornton was the principal soloist.

Leamington has recorded a number of musical events during the past month. Leamington Male-Voice Choir gave an interesting programme at the Town Hall on November 18, when Mr. Geoffrey Gibbs conducted part-songs which included the test-piece 'Sacramentum Supremum' (Dr. F. H. Wood), with which the Choir won first prize at the recent Leicester Festival. Mr. Robert Radford (vocalist) and Mr. John Snowden (violin) were the soloists.

Leamington Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Walter Warren, held its first concert of the season at the Town Hall on November 20. The programme included the 'Unfinished' Symphony. Miss Megan Foster was the soloist.

Rugby Philharmonic Society, at its concert at the Temple Speech Room, Rugby School, on the same evening, sang Brahms' 'Song of Destiny,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Mr. A. H. Peppin, musical director at Rugby School, conducted, and Mr. Steuart Wilson was the soloist.

DARLINGTON AND DISTRICT

Chamber music is flourishing, and we have already had two concerts at Polum Hall School. The first, on October 28, was a 'cello and pianoforte recital by the Misses Hetty and Ethel Page, with Miss Elsie Chambers. The principal works were Sonatas by Saint-Saëns and Sammartini. On November 25 the London Philharmonic Quartet played Beethoven in E minor, Dvorák's 'Nigger' Quartet, and 'Puck' and 'Queen Mab,' by Speaight, the latter being great favourites with the audience.

Middlesbrough is being well supplied with music this season. The Corbett Ballad Concerts are as popular as ever. At the first the notable feature was a superb performance of the César Franck Sonata in A, by M. Cortôt and Miss Isolde Menges, the latter coming in place of M. Jacques Thibaud. Madame Calvé appeared at the same concert, and fascinated her audience, but Mr. Joseph Hislop hardly fulfilled the expectations aroused by preliminary announcements that described him as the greatest English tenor since Sims Reeves. At the second concert M. Rosing caused something like a sensation by his wonderfully dramatic singing. Mr. Arthur Rubinstein, Mlle. Renée Chemet, and Mr. George Curzon completed the cast.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union, under Dr. Kilburn, gave a chamber concert at which the Philharmonic Quartet provided the programme, with Miss Dorothy Helmrich as vocalist and Mr. Paul Kilburn as accompanist. A novel and interesting feature of this concert was the accompanying of a group of Purcell songs by the string quartet with charming effect. On December 8 a choral concert was given at the Town Hall with the assistance of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra. The programme was miscellaneous, and included Goring Thomas' 'Sun-worshippers,' Dr. Kilburn's finely conceived and well-developed setting of the 23rd Psalm, and 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.' The choir is rapidly recovering its old form, and sang with brilliance in the first two works, but was not quite so much at home in the last. The vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls and

Mr. Herbert Teale. One of the best and most enthusiastic societies in the North is the Auckland Musical Society, which is also conducted by Dr. Kilburn. The programme was the same as at Middlesbrough, but the choir on the whole had its work better prepared, and gave an inspired reading of the 'Hiawatha' music that caught all its quaintness and rhythmic flow.

The Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society is practising Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio, although, for lack of a suitable hall, public performances are suspended for a time.

DEVON

Ottery St. Mary Choral Society, on November 24, performed Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and selections from 'Faust,' Mr. Stanley Chipperfield conducting. The principals were Miss Fiffine de la Côte, Mr. Rowland Hushe, and Mr. Walter Belgrove.

Madrigal singing of a high standard was heard at Plymouth on November 17 from the Plymouth Madrigal Society, conducted by Dr. Harold Lake, who included in the programme one of his own Madrigals, a charming 'To Daffodils.' Other examples were by Roger Quilter, 'Gather ye Rosebuds,' Wilbye, 'Flora gave me fairest flowers,' Gibbons, 'I tremble not,' a six-part song by Arthur Somervell, 'In Honour of Music,' and part-songs by Cui, 'Two Roses,' and 'Wi' a Hundred Pipers,' arranged by John E. West. M. Arthur de Greef (pianoforte), Mr. Louis Godowsky (violin), and Miss Louise Trenton (vocalist), contributed to the success of the programme. Mr. Percy E. Butchers' Plymouth Ladies' Choir has made rapid strides, though yet having much to learn in technique. At the concert on December 1, advance was seen in the selection of music, which included Parry's 'Dreams,' Charles Wood's 'Cowslips for her covering,' Cyril Jenkins' 'Storm Song,' 'What means this sadness,' from Moussorgsky's opera, 'Salammbô,' C. H. Lloyd's 'Song of the Forest Fairy,' and a 'Lullaby' by W. W. Starnier. Dr. Ernest Bullock, organist of Exeter Cathedral, gave classical importance to the programme by his organ solos, and Miss Myra Hess played Scarlatti and Chopin music exquisitely.

Plymouth Orpheus Male Choir (Mr. David Parkes) has sung in company with Miss Stella Power and Messrs. Bratza and Claudio Arrau, on November 18, and with Dame Melba, Lionel Tertis, and Dorothy Murdoch on December 2. Chiefly memorable were the electrical readings of two pieces by MacDowell—the 'Dance of the Gnomes' and 'Hush! hush!—Fletcher's 'Lorraine, Lorraine,' and Davies' 'The Winds.' Dame Melba had a great reception, and sang charmingly here, also at Torquay on December 4. Messrs. Bratza and Arrau gave a violin and pianoforte recital at Torquay on November 20.

Barnstaple Orchestral Society is only in its second year, but is doing remarkably good work under the conductorship of Mr. Sydney Harper. Its scheme of serial concerts on Saturdays deserves full support. The programme on November 13 contained Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and an Allegro and Scherzando by Moussorgsky.

Devonians are glad to have the band of the Royal Marines, Plymouth Division, among them again, after the two memorable tours of this organization in attendance on the Prince of Wales. On the Sunday after Armistice Day they gave a concert at Plymouth, conducted by Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell, that included Chopin's Funeral March and Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, and the 'Hymne légendaire à la France,' played with intense feeling. Lighter numbers were by Coleridge-Taylor, Massenet, and Foulds.

Dr. Weekes' Orchestral Society, at Plymouth, on December 8, played a new 'Miniature Overture' by Gerald Phillips, a gifted local composer, Mendelssohn's 'Italian Symphony,' and Handel's Organ Concerto, with Dr. Harold Lake at the organ.

Chamber music has received considerable recognition during the month. It was introduced into the Plymouth Corporation Popular Concerts on December 4, when string quartets by Tchaikovsky and Rheinberger were played by Mr. R. Ball, Dr. H. Lake, Mr. H. Moreton, and Miss Winifred Blight. On the same date Miss Alcock (pianoforte) and Mr. Otto Milani gave the first of a proposed series of recitals for the musical education of the scholars at Maynard College, Exeter, playing a Sonata by Beethoven for the two instruments, also music arranged for violin by Wilhemj, Joachim, and Kreisler, and pianoforte music by Chopin, Brahms, Balfour Gardiner, and Leschetitzky. Exeter Chamber Music Club, initiated by Dr. Ernest Bullock, has already a membership of a hundred and seventy, and its first music-making on December 8 was an excellent send-off. A Brahms Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, violin music by Tartini, Kreisler, and Hellendaal (c. 1725), concerted vocal music by Edwards, Wilbye, Charles Wood, and Mozart, and solo vocal music by Stanford, Elgar, Schubert, and Beethoven, comprised the programme.

Exeter and District Organists' Association has had two sessional meetings. At the first, in November, Mr. Lancelot Holden read a paper on 'Choral Technique,' and at the second, on December 11, the meeting adjourned to the Cathedral, where Dr. Bullock gave a recital, playing Howells' Rhapsody No. 2, Prelude 'In Te, Domine, Speravi' (Hathaway), Choral Preludes by Brahms, Bairstow, and Karg-Elert, and Elgar's Sonata in G.

DUBLIN

The Dublin musical season for the second half of November was unusually brilliant. Only brief reference was made last month to the very interesting classical recital at the Royal Dublin Society on November 15, when Dr. Esposito and Dr. Brodsky, with Mr. Frank Park and Mr. Walter Hutton, co-operated in very adequate interpretations of ancient and modern compositions, the Elgar selection being charmingly interpreted. Another fine recital was given on November 22, when Miss Lord and Mr. John Mundy exhibited old and new styles. The Sonata by Henry Eccles (1720) and Mendelssohn's Sonata, Op. 45, were much appreciated.

Mr. Thomas H. Weaving is to be congratulated on the concert of the Æolian Musical Society on November 18, and his selection of old-established favourites, including Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' found much favour. Miss Nancy Lord played some agreeable violin selections, while Mr. Joseph O'Neill gives promise of future success as a tenor.

Another 'Mater' concert by the Dublin Symphony Orchestra was given at La Scala Theatre on November 21, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien. Among the vocal attractions were Miss Eda Bennie, Mr. Frank Clark, and Mr. Harrison Cook, while Mr. Wynn Reeves played three violin solos. Miss Lucy Leemane was an admirable accompanist.

The Irish Society of Composers afforded an enjoyable entertainment at 37, Charlemont Street, on November 18, the principal novelty being a String Quartet by Mr. Molyneux Palmer. Some varied songs were well interpreted by Miss Mary Maguire.

At the Theatre Royal, on November 27, Miss Madalene Mooney gave a violin recital, assisted by Mr. Percy Whitehead, with Mrs. Boxwell at the pianoforte. Miss Mooney plays with a fine tone and good expression, and her selections were off the beaten path.

In connection with the Royal Dublin Society's recitals, the fare provided on November 29 and December 6 was excellent. On the first occasion the Catterall combination gave unmixed satisfaction to a large audience, while the latter musicale (as trans-Atlantic critics would say) afforded the opportunity for welcoming an Irish composer, Mr. Hamilton Harty, as conductor. In particular, Holbrooke's Sextet was very welcome, though not one of his more mature works.

Dr. Grattan Flood's long expected memoir of 'John Field of Dublin, Inventor of the Nocturne,' has just been published by Martin Lester, Ltd., Dublin. The edition is limited to four hundred and fifty copies, printed from hand-set type, since distributed.

EDINBURGH

The outstanding feature of this month's news has been the Paterson Orchestral Concerts.

On November 15 Heifetz made his first appearance at Edinburgh. Selecting Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D, he held his audience spellbound. Elgar's 'Polonia' Prelude, Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel,' and the 'Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla,' by Wagner, completed an excellent programme. Mr. Landon Ronald conducted, and there was no sign of the orchestra merely working into form; the players started off their season with a high standard of performance.

At the second concert, on November 22, M. Backer-Gröndahl, the Norwegian pianist, gave a clear exposition of Grieg's Concerto in A minor, and a Haydn Symphony, No. 13, in G, was a sheer delight. These classics wear well. 'The Garden of Allah' Suite, by Landon Ronald, and Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance,' also proved popular items.

On November 29 Mr. Julius Harrison, who is training the orchestra, took Mr. Landon Ronald's place as conductor. So far as we have yet seen, his predilections are purely modern. His conducting of Scriabin's 'Poème de l'extase' was very convincing, and he secured a very fine reading. Miss Mignon Nevada in 'The Willow Song' from 'Otello' was the gem of the evening.

Mr. Harrison also conducted the fourth concert, on December 6, when the novelty was Malipiero's Suite, 'Impressioni dal Vero' (Set 2). It cannot be said that the audience was impressed. 'The Bells,' No. 1 of the set, and 'The Bonfire,' were obviously received with considerable amusement. Miss Myra Hess gave a wonderful reading of César Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques' for pianoforte and orchestra. The plasticity of her rhythm and facility in performance were really a revelation in such a work. Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' Overture, and Holbrooke's 'Queen Mab' Scherzo completed, at the time of writing, the most interesting concert of the series.

On November 17 the Royal Choral Union gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' Beethoven's Choral Fantasia (with a local pianist, Mr. Ramsay Geikie), and Gustav Holst's setting of Psalm 86 and Psalm 147. Of these last named numbers, which were given for the first time at Edinburgh, Psalm 86 proved particularly impressive. The exceedingly clever contrapuntal treatment of the second example was interesting, but the general effect was not so uplifting. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Mrs. John Walker, and Mr. Arthur Jordan.

On the same evening Mr. Appleyard gave a pianoforte recital. A pupil of Leschetitzky, he does great credit to his teacher.

On November 25, Miss Marjorie Greenfield (vocalist) assisted by Miss Dorothy Chalmers (violin) gave a very interesting chamber concert. Miss Chalmers, accompanied by Miss Isobel Gray, gave a fine reading of Brahms' D minor Sonata, Op. 108, and Miss Greenfield covered a wide range of vocal art.

Mr. John Petrie Dunn, assistant-lecturer with Prof. Tovey at Edinburgh University, is an accomplished pianist. On December 7—in co-operation with Mr. Watt Jupp (violin) and Mr. Bernard Beers (violoncello)—he gave a fine programme. The Trios were Beethoven's Op. 70, No. 1, and Variations, Op. 121.

On December 9, M. Backer-Gröndahl gave a pianoforte recital, and strengthened the impression he made at the orchestral concert already referred to.

GLASGOW

There has been a good deal of more than usual interest in this month's music. The playing of Jascha Heifetz drew a very crowded audience to the first Classical Concert on November 16. His wonderful technique and beautiful tone were exhibited in Tchaikovsky's Concerto (Op. 53). The first performance here of Landon Ronald's 'The Garden of Allah' was given on November 20, and was well received, especially the richly scored last movement, which made the strongest impression. At the same concert the Norwegian pianist M. Backer-Gröndahl played the solo part in Grieg's pianoforte Concerto in A minor, but without great distinction. On November 30 the Choral Union co-operated with the Scottish Orchestra in an exceedingly fine reading of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' Mr. Warren Clemens, who conducted the performance, had evidently taken the greatest pains in preparing the choruses, and the Union responded splendidly, giving probably the best performance of Elgar's noble work we have yet had at Glasgow. The solo music was in the safe hands of Miss Olga Haley, Mr. Robert Watson, and Mr. John Coates, the last named singing his part entirely from memory. The Scottish Orchestra did full justice to the instrumental part. The Saturday Popular audience of December 4 had the benefit of a first performance here of Scriabin's 'Le Poème de l'Extase,' and in response to a widely expressed demand, the work was repeated at the Classical Concert on December 7. Music of this kind will compel concert-goers to revise their standards as measured by the works of classical composers. There is no doubt that 'Le Poème' was listened to attentively and heartily received, but one doubts if many of the audience—apart from a satisfied curiosity and an appreciation of an adequate interpretation by the Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Julius Harrison—could give perfectly satisfactory reasons for their prolonged applause. At the same concert there was the antithesis of Scriabin in Mozart, as represented by his Symphony in E flat. César Franck's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra (the solo part brilliantly played by Miss Myra Hess), Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, 'Queen Mab,' and Smetana's Overture to 'The Bartered Bride,' completed the programme. The performance of Scriabin's work on November 30 somewhat overshadowed the Choral Union's share of the programme, which consisted of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and a first performance here of Ernest Austin's 'Hymn to Apollo.' Both choral works were sung with good effect under Mr. Clemens' baton. A Tchaikovsky programme, which included the 'Casse Noisette' Suite, the 'Pathétique' Symphony, and the Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, in B flat minor (magnificently played by Miss Adela Verne), drew, as was to be expected, a huge audience to the Saturday Popular Concert on December 11.

The Glasgow Orpheus Choir has now what is probably a unique record among the city's musical organizations in that it crowded St. Andrew's Hall on four evenings in one week, singing the same choral programme each evening. The popularity of the Choir is thoroughly merited, for under Mr. Hugh S. Robertson it seems to have reached the summit of perfection in choral interpretation. The programme ranged from a simple psalm tune to Bantock's marvellous setting of the Hebridean 'Sea Sorrow,' and in each mood and style the Choir's performance (entirely from memory) reached the highest level. Special mention should be made of Mainzer's setting of 'French' (sung to two verses of the metrical version of Psalm 103), in which the old-time embellishments of the melody and the preliminary intoning of each line by the 'precentor' (charmingly done by a member of the tenor section of the Choir), made a specially moving appeal to a Scottish audience. Vocal solos were effectively given by members of the Choir.

HASTINGS

The laudable ambition of the Hastings Corporation to place the town in the front rank of pleasure resorts—musically and otherwise—is rapidly materialising. A decided step in this direction was made on November 18, when Mr. Julian Clifford secured the first provincial performance of Montague Phillips' new Pianoforte Concerto—one of the smaller sensations of the recent 'Proms.' Whatever the impression it made then, it was most warmly received here, for its instant appeal is undeniable. Planned on a grandiose scale, it bristles with difficulties, of which no more capable exponent than Mr. William James could be desired; while the orchestra, which practically 'read' the work, entered into its intricacies with might and main, under the composer's safe guidance. The same concert offered the 'Unfinished' and a really stirring account of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Caprice Espagnole.' Mr. W. H. Reed played Beethoven's Violin Concerto as only a true disciple of Joachim could, for he has all the essential qualities of a Beethoven player. Moszkowski's Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Helen Guest with facile execution, but with not the best pedalling, was heard here for the first time. Miss Lena Kontorovitch was alternately passionate and tender in Saint-Saëns' Violin Concerto, where she found many openings for the exercise of her surprisingly intense temperament.

Of the Russian symphonies recently played by Mr. Clifford—Tchaikovsky in E minor, Kalinnikoff in G minor, and Glazounov in C minor—the last-named towered above its companions, both in nobility of thought as well as for its masterly reading. Among such things as the 'Leonore,' 'Fidelio,' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overtures, Dvorák's Slavonic Dances, and Moussorgsky's 'Gopak,' the Mendelssohn was particularly well done. A brilliant and thoroughly sound exposition of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor was given by Mr. Julian Clifford at his pianoforte recital on December 4, when he also played Bach, Chopin, and some charming little things of his own. Since then this versatile musician has given a lecture on 'The Orchestra,' with illustrations by his own players, which was largely attended by the many girls' schools hereabouts.

An enterprising local lady, Mrs. Allan Kidney, who is the first European to collect the native music of Nyassaland, had many of those interesting songs performed here on November 15. They had recently formed the basis of a Gresham lecture, and have since been warmly greeted at a meeting of the African Society. Mrs. Kidney's labours deserve wide recognition, for not only did she spend several years in noting down the music, but she has also translated the words so that the songs may be sung in English. She observed, among other curious traits in the natives, a marked aptitude for absolute pitch.

At Christ Church, St. Leonard's, the Advent organ recitals by Mr. Allan Biggs are more than usually attractive, and they include Bach's Toccata in F, the Fantasie and Fugue in G minor, and Reubke's C minor Sonata. At St. John's, Mr. Leonard O'Conner conducted expressive interpretations of Bach's 'Bide with us' and Schumann's Advent Hymn, Dr. W. H. Speer being at the organ. Miss Churton's chamber concerts at Bexhill have been singularly enjoyable.

Sir Frederick Bridge's arrangement of Gibbons' 'Cries of London,' accompanied by Miss Kenwood's string quartet, were well sung by the Hastings Madrigal Society on November 30, but more might have been made of their inherently humorous side.

KENT

Wateringbury Choral Society gave a concert—the first this season—on December 1 in aid of the West Kent General Hospital, the chief work performed by the Society being Anderton's 'The Wreck of the Hesperus.' Mr. Edgar A. Clarke-Smith conducted.

Interest in Faversham on November 25, 26, and 27 centred in the first performance of an original comic opera, entitled, 'A Poet of Rome,' for which the music was composed by Mrs. Herdman Porter, of Faversham. The performances were given by local amateurs, under the direction of Mr. Frank Shrubsole, who played the title rôle.

Sittingbourne and Milton Carol Singers, who form a choir of a hundred, gave a concert at Sittingbourne on November 29. Mr. H. S. Welsh, the Society's conductor, arranged a well-varied programme of part-songs and solo vocal and instrumental items.

Madame Emily Himing's students gave their annual concert at Chatham on December 8, in which they were assisted by the Kent Ladies' Choir, which sang part-songs by Coleridge-Taylor, Elgar, and Fletcher, Madame Himing conducting. Of the fifteen students who sang, none showed more than ordinary ability or attainment.

Mairstone Choral Union concert attracted the usual large audience on December 14, when the Union gave part-songs under the conductorship of Mr. F. Wilson Parish. Miss Olive Sturgess (vocalist), Miss Beatrice Harrison (violin-cello), and Mr. York Bowen (pianoforte) gave the audience exceptional pleasure.

Cobham Musical Society held its first concert of the season on December 15, when the Society's principal item was Somervell's cantata for baritone solo and chorus 'The Forsaken Merman.' Mr. Percy Fearnley conducted, and sang the solos in the cantata.

Rochester, Chatham, and Gillingham Choral Society gave its annual performance of 'Messiah' on December 15, at Rochester, Mr. C. Hylton Stewart conducting a full choir and orchestra of over two hundred. The soloists were Miss Doris Tomkins, Miss May Mattingley, Mr. Philip Wilson, and Mr. Walter Clapperton.

November proved a fairly busy month musically in the Medway towns. The orchestras of the Royal Engineers (under Lieut. Neville Flux), and the Royal Marines (under Lieut. Charles Hoby), have resumed their weekly symphony concerts at which mainly familiar works have been heard. Rochester Conservative Orchestra has also been revived, and is figuring largely in the winter series of Bohemian concerts. Rochester Symphony Orchestra collaborated with Maidstone Orchestral Society in a concert on November 17, in aid of the West Kent General Hospital. A very fine performance was given of Beethoven's fifth Symphony and the 'Hebrides' Overture, and the programme also included items by Grieg, Massenet, Elgar, Granville Bantock, and Sibelius. The first concert of the season by Rochester Choral Society attracted a large audience on November 10. The choir gave the brilliant reading demanded in Bach's great Motet, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' under the conductorship of Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, who followed the plan adopted by Sir Hugh Allen and the London and Oxford Bach Choirs of performing the Motet twice in the same programme. Another very great attraction was Mr. H. Plunket Greene's singing of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' (with full chorus), and a number of songs—mostly folk-songs, and all but two of British origin. Miss Joan Willis played some violoncello solos very effectively. On November 17 students of the Medway School of Music (principal, Mr. Leslie Mackay) gave a concert at Chatham, when a high standard of efficiency was reached by vocalists, pianist, violinist, and elocutionist. Mr. Leslie Mackay's Choir (seventy voices) sang part-songs by Coleridge-Taylor, Montague Phillips, Percy A. Whitehead, and Grieg. Sir Frederick Bridge, who was organist of Strood Parish Church in 1862-65, gave a recital on November 18 at the re-dedication of his former organ after its rebuilding. This organ was originally built for the Great Exhibition of 1851. Several stops have been enlarged and new ones added. A recital of chamber music was given at the Royal Naval Barracks, Chatham, on November 24, when the instrumentalists were Miss Elsie Dudding and Mr. John K. Snowden, of Queen's Hall Orchestra (violinist and cellist), Mr. J. S. Roberts (violin), Mr. B. P. Dudding (viola), and Mr. W. Petchey (organ). Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a pianoforte recital at Chatham on November 25, when Miss Helen Henschel sang. This recital was the third of the series known as the Chatham Subscription Concerts, and the Town Hall was not sufficiently large to accommodate all the 'Hambourgs-ites.'

LIVERPOOL

A notable programme of French music was given at the third Philharmonic concert on November 16, conducted by the eminent French musician, M. Gabriel Pierné, with M. Cortôt as solo pianist. The Overture 'Le Roi d'Ys' (Lalo), the Suite 'Deux paysages francéscains' (Pierné), the brilliant fifth Pianoforte Concerto of Saint-Saëns, and Fantaisie for pianoforte and orchestra (Debussy) were presented with all possible finish and ensemble. M. Pierné's Suite, heard for the first time in England, is based upon personal reminiscences of his sojourn in Italy. The first movement is suggestive of a convent garden at evening.

As a composer of the modern serious French school who has come under the influence of Debussy, M. Pierné has expressed himself with poetic imagination and delicate suggestiveness. The form is vague, and the chief aim that of atmosphere. Far more sturdy, and in places even strident, is his picture of the village religious procession with its noisy brass instruments, and endless and monotonous unison-hymn. Heard in connection with its programme, the music at a first hearing made a favourable impression. The Debussy Fantasia is music of his earlier period. It is a clever if not a great work, and is interesting in studying the later Debussy of 'L'Après-midi.' As in the Saint-Saëns Concerto, it provided the great French pianist with ample opportunity to display his masterful facility. One English item which crept into the programme very worthily sustained the reputation of our younger native school. This was Balfour Gardiner's choral tone-poem 'April,' for chorus and orchestra, which provided a delightful ten minutes in a performance ably conducted by the chorus-master, Dr. A. W. Pollitt. The subject is a poem by Edward Carpenter, and is an ecstatic apostrophe to the spirit of Spring, and to 'April, month of Nymphs, Fauns, and Cupids.' It would be difficult indeed to conceive music more in keeping with the poetic fancy and imagery of the lines. The chorus-part makes instrumental demands on the singers, which were courageously surmounted, counsels of perfection apart, and it is hoped that a further hearing may be accorded to this extremely clever and effective work.

The performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony at the Philharmonic concert on November 30 gave immense satisfaction to a number of subscribers of the older school who consider they have heard sufficient of the music of the ultra-modern type to last them for a long time. The performance, which was conducted by M. Bronislaw Szulc, of Warsaw, was very satisfactory.

Elgar's 'Polonia' also lost nothing of its interest and power in the appreciative hands of M. Szulc, but he failed to produce anything specially new in the symphonic poem, 'La Steppe,' by the late Siegmund Noskovski, another Warsaw musician of mark (the teacher of Rozycki, whose symphonic poem 'Anelli' had to be omitted owing to lack of time). The vocalist was Mr. Frank Mullings, for whom an apology was made on the ground of hoarseness. All the same he was acceptably heard in songs by Wagner, and especially in Hugo Wolf's 'Secrecy.' His version of Schubert's 'Erl King' did not equally please. M. Bronislaw Szulc, a pupil of Noskovski and Nikisch, comes of good musical stock. His father was for forty years at the Warsaw Conservatorium, where he was Paderewski's professor. All his sons are musicians, and a notable family record is the performance given of Beethoven's Septet by Szulc père and six of his seven sons.

It was evident that great pains had been taken with the preparation of Berlioz's 'Faust,' of which the performance given by the Welsh Choral Union on November 20 reflected credit on its able conductor, Mr. Hopkin Evans, and upon his superb choral material. Ten years have elapsed since the Union's previous performance of this great work, and if indeed this was not surpassed on the present occasion it is assuring to find that the old spirit, intelligence, and enthusiasm remain with the old ideals. The Berlioz music may not give such soul-stirring choral opportunities as best suit these choralists, but in several numbers they were heard to advantage; as for example in the male-voice Fugue, and in the Apotheosis, where the sopranos and altos sang effectively. Generally the chorus-singing was steady and good, and repaid the pains taken in two rehearsals each week. The band, led by Mr. Akeroyd, played well, but exception must be taken to the excessive speed of the Hungarian March, which resulted in a scramble. Excellent principals were found in Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. Webster Millar, Mr. J. C. Brien, and notably in Mr. Lewys James.

M. Serge Diaghilev's Russian Ballet recently fulfilled a fortnight's engagement at the Olympia Theatre, where they gave performances of 'Les Sylphides' (Chopin), 'Scheherazade' (Rimsky-Korsakov), 'Prince Igor' (Borodin), 'Cleopatra' (Arensky), 'Thamar' (Balakirev), with 'Papillons' and 'Carnival' (Schumann), and 'La Boutique Fantastique' (Rossini). Nothing finer has been witnessed here in the technical skill and exquisite grace of the dancing, but the orchestral part was less perfect, owing to difficulties in the way. Certainly no effort was spared by the conductor, Mr. Edward Clark.

M. Heifetz made an extraordinary impression at his first appearance here on December 1. One can recall few similar scenes of enthusiasm in the Philharmonic Hall. The audience at once recognized that it was listening to a prodigy wielding astonishing executive powers. His caressing singing tone is inexpressibly beautiful, and makes a very sure human appeal. It was in music chiefly lyrical or decorative in quality, that Heifetz exerted his magnetism most irresistibly. He had an exceptionally good pianist in Mr. Samuel Chotzinoff.

At the third Rodewald chamber concert, on November 22, the Catterall Quartet, assisted by Miss Lucy Pierce as pianist, gave luminous performances of the Elgar Quintet and the Franck Quintet, an interesting association of representative works in which by comparison the Frenchman seemed happiest in this especial medium.

Other happenings include the recital given at Rushworth Hall, on November 18, by Mr. Frederick Blundell, a technically-skilful, if unemotional, pianist, who was heard in the Bach-Busoni Chaconne, Chopin's Sonata in B minor, and a Liszt group. The singer was Miss Ethel Penhall, a local contralto, who has a voice of beautiful and even quality.

At the pianoforte recital at St. George's Hall, on November 27, Miss Gladys Scollick displayed her steady progress to the ranks of pianists who count as artists as well as executants.

The Wednesday afternoon concerts at Crane Hall included a recital by Mr. Anderton Tyrer and Miss Nanette Evans (violin), who played the Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in E flat by Richard Strauss. Miss Edina Thraves sang artistically. A clever violinist, Miss Katherine Kendall, with Miss Bertha Vanner as pianist, found favour on November 24, when also Miss Eva Sparkes (contralto) sang. On December 1, an accomplished local pianist, Miss Marguerite Stilwell, gave a recital assisted by Miss Isabel McCullagh (violin) and Miss Margaret Verity (vocalist). Miss Rose L. Matthews was the pianoforte soloist on December 8, with Miss Raymonde Amy and Mr. Albert Kirkman as singers, and Miss Kathleen Daly as violinist.

A line of appreciation is due to the enjoyable recital given at Rushworth Hall on December 7 by Miss Dorothy Ledsome (vocalist) and Mr. Walter Bridson, a fine pianist whose interpretative gift and executive skill were shown in a wide range of pieces.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

The Beecham opera season was modified in mid-December, and by the omission of the more popular Christmas and New Year period, has been reduced from nine weeks to one of five weeks, commencing about the end of January. At the date of writing, 'Messiah' performances carry our season right up to Christmas Eve, and from Boxing Day over the New Year holiday Mr. Brand Lane has organized a series of twice-daily concerts by the Coldstream Guards band, with Signor De Tura, the Italian tenor vocalist. During the month under review chamber music has been particularly active, a gratifying feature being that all the participants are for the most part resident and trained at Manchester. The most notable visitor has been M. Cortôt, who gave recitals at the Bowdon Chamber Society (November 18) and in the Free Trade Hall (December 9), and played with the Hallé Orchestra (November 18) in the new Rachmaninov Concerto. Ill-health prevented the writer's attendance at any music between November 18 and December 7, so that comment can only be based on impressions drawn from friends of competent judgment who were present.

Not many concerts have aroused such enthusiasm as the Hallé of November 18, when the great attractions were Arnold Bax's 'November Woods,' M. Cortôt's playing, and 'Till Eulenspiegel.' Apart from his early choral miniature, 'Fatherland,' nothing by Bax has been heard here. But more is in store, and possibly a repeat performance of 'November Woods' would meet with gracious approval if the reception accorded the composer is any guide of the public appreciation. It is all to the good when a composer tells you that his work is not to be regarded as objective programme music, but as an impression 'of the dank and stormy ruin of nature in late autumn,' and with these externals there would appear to be linked personal feelings—some affinity with the mood of the Buckinghamshire wood where he conceived the idea of this tone-poem. The wood-wind playing, as continuously so this season, was exquisite in its imaginative suggestiveness.

Some of us cannot forget Miss Bailey (Sir George Henschel's wife) or Mrs. Mary Davies, together with Mr. Edward Lloyd and Henschel himself as the ideal cast for 'Faust.' In Berlioz's 'Faust,' do we not need the subordination of the intellectual aspect of the name-part in favour of sheer vocal beauty? One cannot resist the feeling that before long Mr. Hamilton Harty will emerge as the ablest of our orchestral-choral conductors after Sir Henry Wood, who must clearly be recognized as the one man in England who is complete master of both these departments, bestowing equal pains on the preparation and securing the most thorough co-ordination as a consequence. Sir Thomas Beecham could do it, but it never impressed one as being a fixed article of his artistic creed. Nobody who heard it will ever forget Sir Thomas' handling of 'Omar Khayyam' at two days' notice. It was a tremendous task, and only sheer genius carried it through. Neither Sir Henry Wood nor Mr. Hamilton Harty would have risked it; their method is more deliberate. Patient plodding brings its reward, and not a few discerned in Berlioz's 'Faust' that Mr. Harty's cultural methods are showing signs of budding—in due season the leafage, blossom, and fruitage. Miss Olga Haley, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Herbert Heyner, and Mr. Pashley were the soloists.

At the December 4 Hallé concert the chief novelty was Hamilton Harty's suite, 'Fantasy Scenes from an Eastern Romance,' that presented the Sultan, and his laughing juggler whose amorous attentions to Zuleika, the dancing girl, lead to her being sold into slavery, with the laughing juggler as top bidder. Its clever orchestration and melodic charm made an instant appeal. Don Manuel Quiroga, the Spanish Court violinist, played Mozart and a group of miscellaneous items.

The second Co-operative Wholesale Society's concert, on December 8, was this choir's first appearance since its success at Blackpool Festival. Its audience is a distinctive feature of Manchester's musical life. We may lament the lapse of a semi-private old Society, with its roots deep in musical history; here is something of our own time, built on broad foundations of the people's love for music. Nothing but sheer ineptitude in management could bring such an edifice to the dust. Mr. Norman Allin joined the choir in a whole-hearted, rollicking interpretation of Stanford's 'Sea-Songs.' Many Societies can do them well with pianoforte accompaniment, but who has yet heard one with orchestral accompaniment which has had spontaneity and cohesion? The next Welsh Eisteddfod might prescribe this cycle for its male-voice choral contest, providing conductors with a professional orchestra, as was done with Stanford's 'Revenge' last summer.

The Co-operative Wholesale Society's Choir bids fair soon to become our most prominent male-voice choir, and as such it ought to consign to the dust-heap some of the things sung on this occasion. Miss Desmond and Mr. Albert Sammons deserve mention not alone for the beauty and distinction of their executive ability, but for the higher standard of taste shown in their selections.

Pride of place must be awarded to the Edith Robinson Quartet for its work in the past month in the Beethoven celebration performances of all the Quartets in chronological order. Dr. Brodsky and Mr. R. J. Forbes are to follow in January with the Pianoforte Sonatas, and the official Hallé commemoration concert will be given on the day these notes go to press.

Two young trios—Miss Midgeley and Messrs. Hatton and Sidebottom, and the Misses D. Crewe, Jo Lamb, and K. Moorhouse—show both determination and ambition to make for themselves a place in the city's chamber-music life. Nearly all the trios and quartets which have sprung up here in the last ten or fifteen years owe their early training in ensemble and musical inspiration to Dr. Brodsky, who, twenty-five years ago, founded the quartet bearing his name. On November 30 his anniversary was recognized at the Royal Manchester College of Music in separate presentations from (a) the College, (b) the staff, (c) the students. In replying, Dr. Brodsky commented on the inadequacy of present equipment to meet the great and sudden influx of students. It cannot be met immediately, but the finest reward for his ungrudging work of the last twenty years would be to provide for this necessity.

The transfer of the Brodsky concerts to Monday mid-day at Houldsworth Hall has been attended by too much bad luck in the way of fog and other hindrances to free movement to enable any fair estimate of the situation to be made. The first of the series included the Elgar Quartet, and the second was by way of amplifying the Beethoven celebrations, in which the Robinson Quartet had taken the initiative.

A very happy method of celebrating Dr. Brodsky's completion of twenty-five years' residence and work here was taken by the Tuesday Mid-day Committee in asking him on December 4 to play the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, which is dedicated to him, and which he was the means of introducing to Manchester. Mr. John Willis played the pianoforte transcription of the accompaniment.

NEWCASTLE ON TYNE

Messrs. Elkin & Curwen, having included Newcastle in the list of centres at which recitals of modern British music are being given, fulfilled the engagement on November 10, when Miss Ursula Greville was the vocalist and Mr. Percival Garratt the pianist.

On November 20 the Bach Choir gave a programme mainly devoted to the unaccompanied choral works of Balfour Gardiner, the composer himself being present. Besides the 'Stage Coach,' 'The Hunt is up,' 'The Three Ravens,' and several smaller examples, a new work, 'An old song resung,' was given its first performance. Quite a remarkable impression was made with Bantock's setting of the Hebridean folk-tune, 'The Death Croon,' for contralto solo with humming choral accompaniment. Several effects, such as that of the passage for female voices in six parts above the solo, suggest that there is a field for interesting developments in such combinations. Another interesting item was a five-part work entitled 'Aye she kaimed her yellow hair,' by Mr. E. Crowe, a member of the Choir. The work had secured the award in the choral class of the Composition section of the North of England Musical Tournament last midsummer. It is a charming piece of writing, in folk-song style, making very effective use of humming accompaniments. The choral singing throughout the concert was very elastic, the contrasting moods of the various items being responded to with wonderful ease.

On November 24, the Rhoda Backhouse Trio gave a recital, the programme consisting of Brahms' Trio in C minor, Op. 101, Ireland's Fantasy Trio No. 2, and Dvorák's 'Dumky' Trio.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave a brilliant performance of Elgar's 'Spirit of England' and Holst's 'Cloud Messenger.' The Newcastle Philharmonic Orchestra accompanied, and did its work efficiently, though the horn passages in the Holst did not always quite come off.

On November 13, Prof. Donald F. Tovey lectured before the Newcastle branch of the British Music Society on 'Progress and Permanence in Music.' The lecturer combated the fallacious view that one composer could be said to supersede another in the same way as a scientific theory had to give way before the results of later research. A Mozart symphony was quite complete in itself, and a Beethoven work in the same form was not an 'improved' Mozart.

Mr. A. M. Henderson, of Glasgow University, gave a delightful lecture-recital on 'Russian Composers for the Pianoforte,' to the members of the same Society on December 9.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

A noticeable feature of the season's music has been the sparse attendance at many of the concerts so far held at Nottingham. The almost unexampled stagnation in local industries makes this no matter for surprise; but nevertheless it is regrettable. The second 'international celebrity' concert took place on November 16, with Miss Adela Verne as pianist and Miss Stella Power as vocalist, violin and violoncello solos being supplied by M. Melsa and M. Jean Gerardy respectively. On November 17, Messrs. Wilson Peck's concert consisted principally of scenes from 'Die Meistersinger,' when Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, and Mr. Frederick Randalow, admirably sustained the various rôles. Miss Winifred Small's violin solos were effective, and Miss Ethel Cook was an admirable accompanist. Wagnerian opera also filled the Sacred Harmonic Society's programme on the following night, with an efficient performance of 'The Flying Dutchman.' Strong local interest was provided by three of the soloists—Miss Florence Mellors, Madame Ethel Edgar, and Mr. Charles Keywood—being natives of Nottingham. Mr. Charles Knowles' baritone proved its power to cope with the very strenuous orchestral accompaniment, Mr. Alfred Heather interpreted the tenor part, and under Mr. Allen Gill's direction the choir sang with distinction.

An enthusiastic audience gathered at the People's Concert on November 24 to welcome the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood's conductorship. The fifth Symphony, 'Die Meistersinger' Overture, Massenet's 'Le Cid,' Jarnefeldt's 'Præludium,' and Elgar's 'Dorabella' preceded Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini.' In the concluding item, Böellmann's 'Fantaisie Dialoguée' for organ and orchestra, Mr. Johnson officiated on the solo instrument with marked effect.

The Nottingham Gleemen gave their annual concert on November 27, and reflected credit on Mr. C. Riley's training, singing with good balance, tone, and enunciation. Two outstanding numbers were German's 'O Peaceful Night,' and Shepherd's 'In Memory.' Miss Lucy Goodwin, Mr. Sam Hempall, and Mr. James Coleman contributed solos, and Mr. C. E. Pindar accompanied skilfully.

It was encouraging to find the second chamber music concert at University College on December 2 even better attended than the first. The executive included Miss Cantelo again at the pianoforte, and the London Philharmonic String Quartet. Beethoven's Quartet in E minor, Op. 59, No. 2, was succeeded by Joseph Speaight's three 'Shakespearian Pieces' for string quartet: (a) 'The Lonely Shepherd,' (b) 'Queen Mab sleeps,' (c) 'Puck.' Finally came Brahms' gorgeous Quartet, Op. 25, in G minor (for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello), given by all performers with entrancing brilliance and imagination. The only regret that was felt was in having no opportunity for hearing Miss Cantelo as soloist on this occasion.

The annual concert in aid of the Railwaymen's Benevolent Institution was held on December 2, with Madame Elsa Stralia, Miss Gertrude Higgs, Miss Winifred Small, Mr. Arthur Gordon, and Mr. Norman Allin as artists, and Mr. David Richards as accompanist. Mr. William Turner's yearly concert is always a popular event, and on December 4 proved so once more. Miss Caroline Hatchard deputised for Miss Flora Woodman—who was indisposed—with great success, and Mr. Foster Richardson's bass songs were also appreciated. The Misses G. and M. Allington won favour in vocal duets, Miss F. Webb in her contralto solos, and Miss Sybil Keymer by her violin playing. The Nottingham Philharmonic Society delighted the audience with finely delivered part-songs, and the Girls' Prize Choir sustained its reputation yet again. Mr. G. W. A. Hollings and Miss Ida Sansome acted as highly efficient accompanists.

NEIGHBOURING TOWNS

The Long Eaton Orchestral Society's first concert was given on November 25, under Mr. F. Mountney's direction. The programme included Wagner's 'Rienzi' Overture, Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, Sibelius' 'Finlandia,' Elgar's 'Dorabella,' and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt.' Miss Margaret Fairless as violinist, and Mr. Robert Radford as soloist, won great applause, and Miss E. Roseblade's accompaniments added to the artistic effect of the evening. The Long Eaton Choral Society's season opened on December 9 with 'The Golden Legend,' Mr. E. Smeeton conducting. The principals were Miss Agnes Christa, Miss Grace Ivell, Mr. L. Lovesay, and Mr. David Brazell. The chorus work was particularly good.

The Lincoln Musical Society's twenty-fourth season was brilliantly inaugurated on December 1. Under the baton of Dr. G. J. Bennett (hon. conductor) the band and choir sustained an interestingly varied programme, with the aid of Miss Winifred Lawson, Mr. William Hesselstine, and Mr. George Baker, the accompanist being Mr. H. S. Trevitt.

On November 11, the second Leicester Chamber Music Society's concert boasted a special interest, in the performance of Dr. Ethel Symth's String Quartet in E minor, rehearsed under the composer's personal supervision. The executive comprised the Ladies' String Quartet, and Mr. John Booth (tenor).

OXFORD

Oxford has marvellously recovered since the war. We have had between two and three thousand undergraduates here this term, and feel very much exhilarated thereby; while there has been such a superabundance of music that we must rest content with only a short chronicle of the chief events.

Pachmann came to see us, and again to say 'good-bye,' on October 15; he played as delightfully as ever. The first of a series of eight Subscription Concerts took place on October 22 at the Town Hall, when Sir Hugh Allen conducted some forty or fifty members of the London Symphony Orchestra, giving a most enjoyable concert. The programme included Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G, Miss Myra Hess playing the solo part beautifully.

On October 25 Hambourg gave an excellent recital at the Town Hall, and as well as showing how absolutely at home he is with Beethoven, gave also Ravel's 'Jeux d'eau' and Debussy's 'Toccata.'

On November 4 came the second Subscription Concert in the same building, when the Bohemian Czech Quartet gave a fine programme consisting mainly of advanced works, the most notable perhaps being Smetana's Quartet, 'Aus meinem Leben.' It was a mistake for these gentlemen to have so much altered the arrangement of the printed programme without notice after the eleventh hour, thus causing disappointment to the more musical part of the audience who had gone to some trouble to procure the scores.

On November 5 we had a visit from Melba, and on the afternoon of November 12, at the Masonic Hall, a charming concert of Italian music, ancient and modern, the performers being Miss Olga Rudge (violin), Miss Renata Borgatti (pianoforte), and Mr. Audrey Merry (singer). The same evening, in the Town Hall, M. Cortôt gave an excellent recital, and pleased everybody, though perhaps Chopin was a little too much drawn upon.

In the afternoon of November 28 the Bach Choir and Choral Society, under Sir Hugh Allen, gave the Christmas Oratorio in the Sheldonian Theatre. Unfortunately the weather was dark and cloudy, and the theatre not being lighted—or lightable—several numbers had to be omitted, but these being judiciously selected did not appear to mar in any great degree the excellent effect of the whole, which was really a notable performance. The soloists were Miss A. Williams, Miss D. Clarke, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. Topliss Green.

The third Subscription Concert, on December 2, was given by the Oxford Orchestral Society aided by London wind-players, and conducted by Mr. Maurice Besley, organist of Queen's College. The concert was excellent, and included the 'Meistersinger' Overture (perhaps taken a little too slowly). Brahms' Symphony in D, Op. 73, was thoroughly well played, and showed great care in its preparation. The Hon. Norah Dawnay sang among other things between the instrumental items 'Sabbath Morning' from Elgar's 'Sea Pictures' and Purcell's beautiful 'Evening Hymn,' the accompaniment being arranged for strings by Mr. Besley.

On December 3 Mr. Arthur Rubinstein gave at the Town Hall one of the best pianoforte recitals we have ever had the pleasure of listening to, and there is no doubt that an enthusiastic welcome awaits him whenever again he comes this way.

SOUTH WALES

In the Merthyr district considerable musical activity was shown last month, and many miscellaneous concerts with local talent have been held. At Tredegar, the Orpheus Male-Voice Choir had a great reception at Olympia on November 28, and among others, concerts were held at Bedling (December 6), Trelewis (December 8), and Cwmtaff Fawr (December 9). At Merthyr Mr. Val Stevens organized an orchestral concert for December 12, with Madame Elsa Stralia as principal artist. Special mention may be made of the fine orchestral concert given by the Nelson and District Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. D. Roger Jones, at Nelson, on December 9. It is very creditable that such a body of players can be raised in a small village, and it is perhaps to these mining villages, full of life and enthusiasm, and with no counter-attractions, that the material may be looked for to maintain a permanent Welsh National Orchestra.

The Cardiff Chamber Music Society held its third concert of the season at the hall of the High School for Girls, on the evening of December 1. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi (violin) and Mrs. Ethel Hobday (pianoforte) were the joint exponents of the Sonatas of César Franck, Dohnányi (Op. 21), and Beethoven (Op. 30, No. 2).

On December 2, the Albert Hall, Swansea, was crowded, the occasion being the appearance of M. Alfred Cortôt and Miss Vera Horton at the last of the Swansea Subscription Concerts. M. Cortôt's playing of Chopin's twenty-four Preludes was, as always, a memorable experience.

Tours of 'celebrity' and ballad concert parties have brought many well-known artists into South Wales recently, including the Welsh mezzo who has lately sprung into (apparently well-deserved) fame—Miss Leila Megane.

The Newport Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Sims, held its first concert of the season on December 9, when the first performance at Newport was given of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-Bon' Suite—six short poems of Thomas Moore, set to music for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra. Miscellaneous selections completed the programme. The artists were Miss Stiles-Allen and Mr. Harry Dearth, the New London Wind Quintet (from the London Symphony Orchestra), and a choir of some two hundred and thirty voices.

YORKSHIRE

LEEDS

Though Leeds has been disappointed of the visit of the Beecham Opera Company, which is officially stated to be 're-organizing,' it has none the less had some rather exceptionally interesting musical experiences. To begin with, the Parish Church, under the present Vicar, and its recently appointed organist, Dr. Tysoe, is doing something to present good music outside the ordinary run of services—which, on the cathedral lines planned long ago by Dr. Hook, have made it famous among parish churches. Recently we have had an evening devoted to Bach, and another to Brahms. At the former, on December 21, Dr. Tysoe played some typical organ pieces, including the Toccata in F, and two fine Chorale Preludes, and the ordinary choir of the Church sang the cantata 'Wachet Auf.' The Brahms evening, on December 1, was devoted to the 'German Requiem,' which received an impressive interpretation. The instrumental side of the work was represented very effectively by a small body of capable string players, with drums and pianoforte (to replace the harps), and the organ to fill in the wind parts. Dr. Tysoe conducted, and Mr. Aubie Bennett, who was at the organ, used his instrument very discreetly. The solos were artistically sung by Miss Mary Swailes and Mr. Harry Burley, the latter a new-comer in the choir, who promises to become a useful member.

Each of the two principal Leeds choral societies has, at the time of writing, given a concert, and by the date of publication will have followed these up with the usual Christmas 'Messiah' performances. The Choral Union gave the first part of Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' on November 7 under the direction of Dr. Coward, who secured an excellent performance of the choral passages. Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. John Coates were well fitted for their respective parts, and Mr. Arthur Cranmer as the Philosopher proved a very efficient substitute, as he had done at Huddersfield only the week before. The Philharmonic, for its concert on November 20, fell back on 'Elijah,' and the chorus singing, under Dr. Bairstow's inspiring conducting, attained a high level of precision and fire; rarely, indeed, has one heard so much genuine vitality put into the choruses, and that not for the sake of effect, but from the necessity for adequate expression. Miss Stiles Allen, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Hepworth, and Captain Horace Stevens (a most forceful and earnest Elijah) were the principals. Two of the Saturday Orchestral Concerts fall to be recorded. On November 27 Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted a fine performance of Rachmaninov's E minor Symphony, and Miss Agnes Nicholls gave a dramatic and impulsive reading of Isolde's scene, in which she tells Brangäne of her early meeting with Tristan. At the next concert, on December 11, a symphony by Mr. Harding Churton, the enthusiastic amateur who is responsible for the organization of the concerts, was introduced to the programme. It is a pleasing, unaffected composition, and if not particularly original, more than creditable to one who has not made music the chief occupation of his life. It is entitled 'Old England,' but save for a couple of themes in the Scherzo, the chief discernible influences come from abroad. Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Kanevskaya as soloist, was also in the programme.

One of the pleasantest experiences at Leeds during the past month was on December 4, when the local branch of the English Folk-Dance Society gave a programme of folk-dances and folk-songs in the Town Hall. The Country dances, Morris dances, Sword dances, and jigs were admirably executed by some forty or fifty dancers, whose graceful rhythmical movements produced a charming effect. As an appropriate alternative Miss Patuffa Kennedy Fraser gave some of her Hebridean songs, accompanying herself on a small Celtic harp.

At the Leeds Bohemian Concert on December 1. String Quartets by Frank Bridge (E minor) and Haydn (in D, Op. 64), with Goossens' fanciful little sketches, 'By the Tarn' and 'Jack o' Lantern,' formed the programme, and were well executed by Mr. Bensley Ghent and his colleagues.

Mid-day recitals have been given at the University by Miss Helen Guest, who, on November 30, played Brahms' Sonata in F minor in masterly style, and Miss Muriel Robinson, who, on December 10, gave a very well-chosen selection of Christmas songs. At another series of mid-day recitals, that given on December 8 by Mr. Charles Neville deserves mention, for his programme was of songs by the great German composers, all to translations by Mr. S. Langford, of Manchester, who accompanied, and whose passing commentary added greatly to their interest.

SHEFFIELD

Two of the Sheffield subscription concerts have been held—both, of course, in the Victoria Hall—during the period here reviewed. The first, on November 16, took a form which is evidently thought specially to appeal to Sheffield concert audiences—that of an 'operatic' concert. Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, Mr. Frederick Ranalow, and Mr. George Lawton, with Miss Winifred Small as solo violinist and Miss Ethel Cook as accompanist, formed the concert party, and the whole of the second part of the programme was occupied with an extended selection from Wagner's 'The Mastersingers.' Mr. Ranalow did something to lessen the disadvantage of the absence of stage setting and action by explaining the dramatic situations from time to time, and Miss Cook did a great deal towards suggesting the contents of the orchestral score; but such a concert can be favourably regarded only as a 'musical appreciation' lesson, though the actual performance of Wagner's work, to which it would have been a useful preliminary, is at present apparently out of the bounds of possibility—more's the pity. But why not bring a similar set of artists in conjunction with the Promenade Orchestra, and let us have a concert performance? That would, at any rate, be a step in the right direction, and, I feel sure, a very popular one.

The other concert of the same series, on December 7, was provided by the Hallé Orchestra—with, of course, Mr. Hamilton Harty as conductor—and Miss Isolde Menges as solo violinist in Glazounov's Concerto. The 'Symphonie Fantastique' of Berlioz was the principal work, and the famous Hallé Orchestra, under the stimulating direction of its new conductor, gave a really fine performance. Mr. Harty evidently loves his Berlioz, and his interpretations of that composer's works—conceived as they are in a spirit of fidelity to Berlioz's intentions, and realised by the aid of so competent a body of artists as the Hallé Orchestra—will supply 'a long-felt want,' and no doubt tend to hasten the coming of the time when Berlioz will be appreciated at full value. Handel's 'Water Music' and Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore' completed the programme, and were received with much enthusiasm. The whole programme was got through in under two hours—to its better effect and the general satisfaction of the audience.

At the Quinlan concert on November 18, M. Rosing, Mr. George Curzon, Mlle. Renée Chemet, Mr. Arthur Rubinstein, and Mr. Ivor Newton (accompanist) were the artists. M. Rosing had not before been heard at Sheffield, and his unconventional style and methods aroused a good deal of interest. His tendency to exaggeration of the dramatic side of his art seems to spoil some of his work, and he was not apparently in his best form, but his singing was in many respects notable, and of his earnestness and ability he left no one in doubt. Mlle. Renée Chemet is already a very popular violinist at Sheffield, and there are many people who would like to hear her again in something of more musical value than the trifles which she threw off with such aplomb on this occasion. Mr. Arthur Rubinstein played Liszt's 'Funerailles' and Rhapsody No. 12, Chopin's Scherzo in C sharp minor, and other things brilliantly. His technique is wonderful, but one gets the impression that it is rather a barrier than a means of communication between him and his audience.

Mlle. Graziella Pareto quite won the hearts of her audience at the 'international celebrity' concert on December 8 by her singing of several operatic arias, and two youthful artists in M. Bratza, the Serbian violinist, and M. Claudio Arrau, pianist, made an excellent impression by their clever playing. Mr. Victor Marmont was a first-rate accompanist.

The Sheffield Teachers' Operatic Society has, in the general opinion, surpassed itself in its production of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Princess Ida,' which drew crowded audiences to the Lyceum Theatre during the week ending December 4. The work of the principals (with one or two exceptions), of the orchestra, and especially of the choir, reached a really high standard, and there was hardly a hitch, even in the early performances. Mr. G. E. Linfoot conducted, and Mr. A. Revill Slater was stage-manager and coach.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS

The Bradford Subscription Concert of November 19 consisted of a recital by two excellent artists, M. Alfred Cortôt, who played twelve of Chopin's Studies, and Miss Olga Haley, whose choice of songs was a catholic one, covering many types, among which a group by living British composers more than held its own. The next Subscription Concert, on December 10, was by the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood. Señor Manuel Quiroga was the soloist in Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' in which his deftness of execution and refined style were well displayed, and Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' was a notable feature of the occasion, and was very finely played. Not the least enjoyable thing in the programme was Sir Henry's own Orchestral Suite (No. 6), concocted from Bach's chamber works—a very successful transcription, and most effective.

The Huddersfield Music Club's concert on December 15 was sustained by Miss Agnes Nicholls, who, with Mr. Paul Kilburn at the pianoforte, gave a song recital. On November 24 a Huddersfield tenor, Mr. Harold Hallas, gave a recital, a striking feature of which was the happily arranged groups of songs under different classes, with such headings as 'The Close of Day,' 'The Christ,' and 'The Joy of Love.' On November 20 Mr. Kaye's well-drilled orchestra gave a concert, and on November 23 Dr. Eaglefield Hull gave an organ recital in aid of the Westminster Abbey fund, with the assistance of Mr. Philip Wilson, an Australian artist, as vocalist.

The Halifax Choral Society, on November 25, gave Brahms' 'German Requiem,' which was chosen in memory of its late president, Mr. Holdsworth. Mr. C. H. Moody conducted a good choral performance, and Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. Farrington were the soloists. At the concert of the Halifax Madrigal Society, on December 9, Mr. Shepley conducted some very finished performances of unaccompanied part-music. Señor Quiroga was the solo violinist, and Miss Mignon Nevada the vocalist.

'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Sun Worshipers' (the latter a welcome revival of a work by Goring Thomas, which does not merit oblivion) were the choral works given by the Middlesbrough Musical Union on December 8, when Dr. Kilburn—as able and hard-working a volunteer as the cause of music in the north of England has ever known—secured thoroughly adequate performances. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Herbert Teale were the vocalists. At Ripon, in the Cathedral, Mozart's 'Requiem' was given under Mr. Moody's direction on December 1, when Miss Amanda Taylor, Miss Wrack, and Messrs. Deane and Wood were the solo vocalists. Mr. C. L. Naylor was at the organ, which was reinforced by strings and drums.

THE VIOLS IN ENGLAND

The new Session of the Musical Association opened on November 2 with an exhaustive paper on 'The Viols in England' by Mr. Jeffrey Pulver. He said it was doubtful if a subject more essentially English could have been chosen from the pages of musical history. Although of foreign origin, they became thoroughly naturalised in this country, and exercised great influence upon the history of English instrumental music. The viols were instruments of much importance, and in consideration of their virtue in the artistic, historical, and sociological aspects, merited detailed treatment. In all probability they were introduced into England from the Netherlands, and enjoyed a vogue here unequalled in any other country. Nowhere in Europe were the viols clung to so tenaciously, and nowhere were they given up in favour of the violins with greater reluctance. The English violists were renowned as technicians, and in the 17th century their virtuosity equalled, and even surpassed, that of the contemporary violinists. Used for a long time side by side with the lutes, the viols were admirably adapted for accompaniment; their soft and sympathetic tone blended well with the voice, and, as it were, supplemented it. Even alone, or in the quartet, they were of very great interest, and it would be to the great advantage of music generally if more of the 17th century instrumental works were resuscitated.

After remarking upon the interest shown by Henry VIII., Mr. Pulver said it was a pity that records were not available of the musical doings of the middle classes of that period. Constant quotation from the State Papers was apt to lead the student to imagine that outside the Royal Court no music was cultivated. This was by no means the case. Sir Thomas More entertained his family at dinner and supper to high moral purpose, and allowed them for their recreation to sing and play on the viols. The Parliamentary Act of 1543 stopped to some extent the making of public music; it interfered with the fun that enlivened the Sundays of earlier years, and it caused the Royal band to be reduced in numbers, but probably popular music did not suffer much, and the viol remained in request.

With the accession of Queen Elizabeth the second stage in the development of the viol commenced, and it was not long before England was raised to a musical plane that was unequalled anywhere in Europe at the period. The Queen's own musicianship was of a high order, and she would certainly not have tolerated any slipshod performances on the part of her instrumentalists. The lecturer took occasion to refer to the use of the term 'violons' in several entries in the Lord Chamberlain's Records during the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, a circumstance which had given many otherwise trustworthy authorities the idea that the violin, as we know it, was already extensively used in the middle of the 16th century, but he believed that the term 'violin' was often used for the smaller viols (giving the Italian diminutive termination its proper sense), while the word 'viol' was employed for the larger, or bass, viol. It was fairly well established that no instrument of the modern violin family was made much before the middle of the 16th century, and though it was not impossible for early examples to have been introduced here very soon after their manufacture, it was asking too much to expect us to believe that they were popularised so rapidly that Henry should employ six of them before their varnish was properly dry. In fact, when the violins were actually brought into Court service, the circumstance was entered in the Lord Chamberlain's Records as something noteworthy. Thus on March 14, 1637-8, £12 was paid to Mr. Francis de la France for a 'Treble violin bought by him for his Majesty's service,' and on January 31 of the same year a similar amount was paid to John Woodington for 'a Cremona violin, to play to the organ.' Such sums were much too high for treble viols to have been meant. These entries were over eighty years later than the first mention of 'violins' in the State Papers, and the lecturer said he was convinced that all earlier references applied to viols. It should not be forgotten also that even in early Stuart times the viols were the instruments of the gentry and musicians, while the violin was considered of lower caste. Anthony Wood tells us that before the Restoration the gentlemen who attended musical parties played on viols, 'for they esteemed a violin to be an instrument only belonging to a common fiddler, and would not endure that it should come among them, for feare of making their meetings to be vaine and fiddling.'

The changing of the ruling house from Tudor to Stuart marked the beginning of the greatest period for the viols in England. They came more and more into favour, usurping the position hitherto held by the lute. Composers and publishers saw the trend, and encouraged it by writing and issuing a large quantity of suitable music. It was part of everyone's education to learn at least one of the instruments of this family, and to play on it at sight. During the Commonwealth their vogue suffered no diminution, in spite of all depreciatory references to the Puritans. After the Restoration the violins became more serious competitors of the viols, the formation of Charles II.'s band of violins on the lines of the exquisite two dozen of France giving the coup de grâce to the smaller viols, at any rate. Only the gamba persisted obstinately, and it was a good century later before it could be said that the bass-viol was antiquated. Although the band of violins was the glory of Charles II.'s establishment, violists were still being engaged. This appeared from a number of entries referring to the private music of the King, showing that although Charles may have been proud of his band of twenty-four fiddlers for State occasions, he still clung to the viols for his own entertainment. The bass-viol, the last of a noble race, died hard. Thomas Mace, in the last quarter of the 17th century, wrote bitterly and scathingly on 'scoolding violins,' and pointed out in forceful manner how the new instruments out-screamed the rest of the consort; but to no avail. A few good players still remained, but the days of the viols were numbered.

The Treble viol was the first to disappear. Like the rest of the family, it had six strings tuned:

an octave above the bass viol. The tenor viol was a 5th below the treble viol. Neither the treble nor the tenor viol was played under the chin as is now the case, but was rested on the left breast, a little below the shoulder. The higher positions were thus hardly used, nor did the system of fretting conduce to easy shifting.

Some illustrations were played on a fine tenor viol made by 'William Turner at ye hand and Crowne in gravelle Lane nere Aldgate London, 1652,' Mr. Pulver being accompanied by Sir Frederick Bridge, who also occupied the chair.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The Beethoven Festival may be said to have been on the whole a great success. At the time of writing there is only one more concert due, which will be devoted to the master's ninth Symphony. The work done by the management of the Festival is deserving of nothing but the highest praise. Indeed the arrangement of the programmes of the fourteen chamber music concerts was almost exemplary, and it may be doubted whether a better survey of Beethoven's creations could have been attained. If the Pianoforte Sonatas were not found to be represented, this was because they cannot really come under the denomination of chamber music proper. Moreover of late years we have had various opportunities on which the whole of them have been heard, so that this fact alone would explain their being passed over on this occasions. So much is certain, that the chamber music works which were missing in the programmes are not of such importance as materially to influence our view of the great composer with regard to this particular branch. His Trios for strings, despite their intrinsic value, have never attained real popularity, and his Pianoforte Quartets are negligible. Beethoven's refusal to have them published is strong evidence of his unrelenting self-criticism. The only two works one might have wished to hear along with the others were the String Quintet, Op. 29, and the famous Septuor. A drawback in these concerts, however, lay in the fact that there are hardly any permanent combinations of artists who make trio-playing their speciality. Once more we were forcibly reminded that the indiscriminate collaboration of three accomplished artists may produce anything but ideal results.

As was foreseen, the six concerts devoted to the String Quartets gave the highest artistic pleasure. The interest was enhanced by the fact that with one exception each of the six quartet parties played one work of each of the master's three periods. The 'Bohemians,' to whose share fell only two works, prompted by a quite gratifying jalousie de métier, made up their programme with the charming Trio Serenade in D major (Op. 8). If the performance of the Fugue, Op. 133 (played by the Hague Quartet) was not such as might have been desired, this formed the only item in the entire series which gave rise to adverse criticism. Although it was by no means difficult to prophesy that the 'Bohemians' would carry off the palm, yet the difference between them and such bodies as the Quatuor Poulet (Paris), the Rosé Quartet (Vienna), and the Budapest Quartet was only slightly perceptible. One of the chief points of interest was the treatment of dynamic nuances, and more especially the characteristic 'Beethoven crescendo.' By the way, contrary to popular opinion, this cannot properly be said to have been an innovation of Beethoven's, for it certainly was one of the chevaux de bataille of the famous Mannheim orchestra, and Mozart, after having heard that splendid band, has testified to this by immediately making use of it himself in his 'Nozze di Figaro' (No. 7, Tersetto). The Budapest Quartet went perhaps just a trifle too far in the underlining of this particular effect. Their performance seemed to be based on an exhibition of dynamic virtuosity. If in this respect they showed an almost unrivalled mastery, the sensational effect they secured by playing the final Allegro of Op. 95 sul ponticello must at any rate be regarded as a liberty. It is a matter for regret that the first five orchestral concerts failed to partake of a festival nature. Indeed, they would have been unpardonably dull if the situation had not been saved by the respective soloists, MM. Egon Petri and Leonid Kreutzer, and Madame Ilona Durigo. It was not until the reappearance of Mengelberg that one was able to rejoice again in the true Beethoven. Seldom will the 'Pastorale' have met with so unbounded and tumultuous a success as on this occasion. As if by magic the orchestra seemed to have regained its splendid characteristics, while M. Zimmermann surpassed all his former performances of the solo part in the Violin Concerto. Mengelberg has once more given evidence that his matchless reputation is well founded.

W. HARMANS.

PARIS

The recent article by Marguerite d'Alvarez in the Paris Daily Mail, on English v. foreign names for English singers, has evidently fallen into the hands of English-speaking French people. 'Why not be British?' asks the artist; 'Why should this camouflage be necessary?' The French share her views in part. 'The English,' they say, 'must ever remain English. Even if brought up in France, they cannot hide their nationality. But in the name of common sense, why should they try to?' French managers, however, rather approve of the practice, than otherwise. They have no difficulty in reading and pronouncing Italian names, as well as those originating in various other countries. But the British variety is a little beyond them. Struggle as they may, certain names baffle their most concentrated efforts.

It may also be pointed out that, so far as singing is concerned, the mere mention of a performer with an English name is to court adverse criticism. French critics, both professional and amateur, who have sampled London concerts, do not entertain flattering recollections of what they have heard. Consequently they are not favourably disposed towards artists with English names. That is why, as was pointed out in this column last month, it is high time they were undeceived.

REVIVALS

The revivals announced at the Opéra-Comique are as follows: 'La Habañara,' with its atmospheric colouring and many dull moments, 'Barbe Bleue,' 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' the very gruesome 'La Lepreux,' and 'Le Pays,' a little-known work by Ropartz. 'Les Armaillis' and Berlioz's 'Beatrice et Benedict' also are promised, as well as Offenbach's 'Les Bavards.' Why an opéra-bouffe is permitted to figure at a theatre dedicated to opéra-comique is not clear.

Talking of the above establishment, 'Madame Butterfly' is nearing its two hundred and fiftieth performance thereat. The composer's 'Tosca' and 'Bohème' run it close for popularity, all three works being given throughout France. The rôle of Pinkerton, however, is seldom in capable hands. The music is essentially Italian, and French tenor voices rarely have the right Italian quality. Apropos of operatic affairs, at the Paris Opéra parts occasionally are oddly distributed. To allot Iago to a bass and the baritone rôle in 'Thais' to the same voice hardly seems expedient. The latest departure is to allow a bass to try conclusions with Tonio in 'Pagliacci.'

AN INDIAN OTHELLO

Musical circles throughout France are interested in Ali Khan, the Indian tenor, whom Madame Emma Nevada recently introduced at an audition at Paris. Upon this occasion Ali Khan was heard in the death scene from 'Otello,' which he interpreted with admirable roundness of tone and with commendable understanding of the situation. He also sang that pièce de résistance, 'Celeste Aida,' as well as the ever charming (and always fresh) 'Pur diesti' and an excerpt from 'Barbière,' in which his flexibility of voice recalled Bonci. Meanwhile it is hoped that the new-comer will appear as Otello, a part for which he apparently is suited—both vocally and temperamentally.

Ali Khan sings in Italian, and to the manner born. He also sings like an Italian, which is more remarkable when it is remembered that the natives of India invariably sing without expression. The native voice, too, like the Persian voice, is very high-pitched. Ali Khan's, on the other hand, is of Italian quality, with good lower notes, and of a timbre seldom heard the other side of Suez.

Bruneau's 'Le Roi Candaule' has recently been produced at the Opéra-Comique, without, however, greatly adding to the prestige of modern opera. Mozart's 'Così fan Tutte,' which is being given regularly, is of greater musical value.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

'HOW "LOHENGRIN" CAME TO ITALY'

Apropos the recent production of 'Lohengrin' at Rome, the Piccola has fished out an interesting piece of scandal of bygone days, which it has published with the above title.

As is well-known, up to 1870 Wagner was regarded as a semi-barbarian here, his 'music of the future' being ridiculed; the few musicians who thought it worth while to make a pilgrimage to Bavaria receiving a very cold shoulder when they returned.

It seems that in 1868, when Verdi's 'Don Carlos' was staged at the Comunale at Bologna, Angelo Mariani, at that time the leading conductor of Italy, was desperately in love with the prima-donna, the famous Rosine Stolz. Verdi assisted at the recitals, and Mariani was not slow to perceive that the singer 'made eyes' not at himself, but at the composer. Irritated beyond measure, Mariani poured his laments into the ears of his sympathetic colleagues, and one evening came out with, 'But I'll get even; I warrant that in two years' time I will have imported Wagner's "Lohengrin" into Italy.' He kept his word, and it was at the Comunale that 'Lohengrin' began its triumphal progress in Italy, and opened a way for all the great Wagnerian cycle. But Verdi did not take it ill, and when asked what one ought to understand by the phrase 'music of the future,' the immortal composer replied: 'It seems to me perfectly clear; music of the future means music that lasts.'

PLAIN SPEAKING

In the Italian Chamber the Hon. Benelli, one of the foremost dramatists of the day, has notified the Minister of Public Works in the following terms, concerning a matter that has also recently become exigent in England. He says:

'Having regard to the fact that (a) the sixty per cent. increase of the railway tariff gravely affects every dramatic company in Italy—some, perhaps, irreparably; (b) the State does nothing and never has done anything to assist such companies, many of which devotedly carry a ray of light to places where, owing to the supineness of the rich or the poverty or indifference of the municipalities, Art would never penetrate; (c) the State receives from the theatre more revenue than from any other industry: It is desired to ask whether the Minister does not intend to concede to such companies at least some amelioration of the existing tariffs? The State would suffer small hurt; it would, indeed, gain more from other sources, while Art would be greatly benefited. But if something be not done, general ruin, hastened by contributory considerations, will reduce Italian theatrical undertakings to a condition much inferior to those of the smallest European States.'

It will be remembered that in Italy the railways are a State monopoly.

THE AUGUSTEO

An artistic event of the first importance has been the visit of Toscanini with his orchestra. Two concerts were given, the programme of the first comprising:

Concerto in A minor, for strings ... ..	Vivaldi
Symphony No. 5 ... ..	Beethoven
Dance (from 'Three Hebrew poems') ... ..	Bloch
Serenata ... ..	Tomassini
'Le Fontane di Roma' ... ..	Respighi
'Iberia' ... ..	Debussy
'Tannhäuser' Overture ... ..	Wagner

Of this programme only the third item perhaps is new to my readers. Ernest Bloch is as yet unknown here, although in America he is popular. As Toscanini has taken him up, perhaps it were well if musicians made his acquaintance. His history is interesting—even romantic. Born at Geneva in 1880, of a Jewish family, he had no musical antecedents. Nevertheless, at the age of eleven years, he made a vow to devote himself to music. This vow he wrote on a piece of paper, and solemnly burned in the open air on an altar of stones erected to—Orpheus! His parents opposed his desire, but nevertheless he succeeded in going to Brussels, Frankfurt (where he passed a year with Ivan Knorr), Munich (where he studied with Thuille), and Paris. In 1904 he returned to his native city, where he had to contend with great difficulties—artistic, as well as those having a family origin—and to avert financial disaster he consented to assume his father's occupation of cloth merchant. In 1910 his 'Macbeth' failed at the Opéra-Comique, while soon afterwards professional jealousy succeeded in depriving him of the direction of the Neuenburg concerts, and later, of his post as professor of composition in the Geneva Conservatory. Nevertheless, Bloch pluckily continued the fight, and has now won the battle—if not yet in Europe, at any rate in America. It must be confessed, however, that the specimen of his work submitted did not make a very favourable impression at the Augusteo.

The second programme contained:

Concerto per il 'Santissimo Natale' (for strings) ... ..	Manfredini
Symphony No. 7 ... ..	Beethoven
'Piemonte' (suite on popular themes) ... ..	Sinigaglia
'Le festin de l'araignée' ... ..	Roussel
'Tristan and Isolde' (Prelude, and death of Isolde) ... ..	Wagner

An extremely regrettable and annoying incident threatened to ruin this second concert. For some reason best known to themselves, the employees of the electric-light station felt aggrieved, and, with diabolical malice, arranged to strike at the critical hour on Sunday afternoon when all the public spectacles were in full swing. Their plan succeeded only too well, and at 5 p.m. the electric light failed in all parts of the city. In the Augusteo, Beethoven's seventh Symphony had reached the last movement, and naturally had to be suspended. The authorities had made no provision for such a contretemps, and, incredible as it may seem, the vast hall remained in almost complete darkness for nigh half an hour, when the audience was afforded the ludicrous spectacle of seeing a packet of candles arrive for the orchestra! These were distributed, and fixed about on the stands, on the edge of the platform, &c., a graceful row of a dozen or so decorating the cover of the grand pianoforte. With this primitive illumination, the remainder of the programme was completed.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

Very little that requires comment has occurred here since my last notes. Two performances of 'Parsifal' were given at the State Opera on October 31 and November 1, with the same artists each evening. These performances were notable principally for the splendid work of Frau. Wildbrunn, a guest from the Berlin State Opera, as Kundry. During her stay here this artist also appeared in the 'Ring' (Brünnhilda) and 'Fidelio' (Leonora). Another guest of note has been Cornelius Bronsgreest, also of Berlin, who sustained with success the parts of Rigoletto and Papageno. He has also been heard in 'Madame Butterfly,' 'Carmen,' and 'The Huguenots.' On November 20, performances were given of Korngold's two operas, 'The Ring of Polykrates' and 'Violante,' under the direction of the composer.

We are promised a Beethoven Festival for the second week of December. The scheme comprises a number of concerts and a performance of 'Fidelio' at the State Opera. The principal concert will be held on December 12 in the Belvedere Palace in the style of the time when Beethoven was living and composing at Vienna, and will be under the direction of Dr. Schalk, of the Opera.

Puccini's three one-Act pieces are apparently a big draw here, and performances are being given once every week.

S. WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

There is usually a touch of reasonable unconventionality about the doings of the Norwich Handel Society under Mr. Ernest Harcourt's direction. In its performance of 'Acis and Galatea' at St. Andrew's Hall, on November 20, this took the form of 'fancy dress' for the principals and most of the choir, and as much dramatic action as could be reconciled with a concert setting and the necessity, in the case of one principal, for having a copy of the music to sing from. The performance gave all-round satisfaction. Earlier in the day the Society had given a chamber concert at which an agreeable Violin and Pianoforte Sonata by Mr. Harcourt had been performed.

Owing to the date (December 30—January 2) of the Scarborough Festival we are unable to report upon it in this issue. The announced programme included concert-versions of Mr. Alick Maclean's 'Quentin Durward' and 'The Hunchback of Cremona,' his choral work 'The Annunciation,' and works of Bantock, Delius, Elgar, and Quilter. The Hallé Orchestra and Sir Henry Wood, Dr. Coward's, Sheffield Choir, and many well-known soloists were to take part.

Many news items arrived too late for insertion in the present issue, which went to press earlier than usual owing to the Christmas holidays. Of the matter held over, however, a good deal should have been sent earlier. Secretaries of choral societies and others concerned should send programmes, &c., within a day or two of the concert. On December 20 we received particulars of events that had happened two or three weeks previously.

The British Music Society has inaugurated a London Contemporary Music Centre for performing—at first in private—unknown MS. and published music, in all except orchestral forms, by living British composers. Information is obtainable from Mr. Philip Wilson, 19, Berners Street, W.1.

Mr. W. Smith Woods has retired from his position as Lecturer in Music at Warrington Training College, after thirty-seven years' service. Mr. Smith Woods was also Lecturer in Music at the Liverpool University Training College from 1892 to 1904.

The Glastonbury Festival Play, 'Bethlehem,' set as a choral drama by Rutland Boughton, will be given at Glastonbury on January 3, 4, and 5. Principal parts will be taken by Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. William Bennett, and Mr. Steuart Wilson.

A series of five chamber concerts at Museum Hall, Babbacombe, came to an end on December 8, when the programme included the first performance of a Violoncello Sonata in E minor, Op. 15, by Harold Rhodes.

In order to avoid increased postage on this issue, we have omitted the Competition Festival Record. It will be sent to subscribers who apply for it.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
Performing Fees ... ..	9
Some Italian Composers of To-day. By Guido M. Gatti ... ..	10
The Concert-Room Song. By Arthur L. Salmon ...	11
The Organ Works of Bach. IV. The Later Weimar Preludes and Fugues ( contd. ). By Harvey Grace ...	12
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XIV. Richard Bramston. By W. H. Grattan Flood ... ..	17
The 'Beggar's Opera.' By Frank Kidson ... ..	18
Mutual Error. By Sydney Grew ... ..	19
Concerts and Critics. By Thomas Moulton ... ..	20
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	21
Prize Competitions ... ..	24
New Music. By William Child ... ..	25
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ... ..	27
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ... ..	30
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught ... ..	32
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste' ... ..	32
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ..	40
Chamber Music for Amateurs ... ..	42
Church and Organ Music ... ..	42
Letters to the Editor ... ..	44
Obituary ... ..	47
Sixty Years Ago ... ..	47
The Royal Academy of Music ... ..	47
Incorporated Society of Musicians ... ..	48
Music in the Provinces ... ..	48
The Viols in England ... ..	59
Musical Notes from Abroad ... ..	59
Miscellaneous ... ..	61

MUSIC:

'The Roseate Hues of Early Dawn.' Anthem for General use. By Ilugh Blair ... ..	33
---	----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
'London Town.' Four-part Song. By Edward German.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

A GUTTER, B.—Marches for the Organ, Book 1. 2s.
BATH, HUBERT.—'The Wake of O'Connor.' Book of Words, 10s. per 100.
BLAIR, HUGH.—'The Roseate Hues.' Anthem. (No. 935, The Musical Times .) 2d.
DUPRE, MARCEL.—'Vêpres du Commun des Fêtes de la Sainte-Vierge.' For Organ. 10s.
FORD, S.—'Now the day is over.' Hymn and Tune. 1½d.
HAILING, R. G.—'Cradle Song.' For Organ. No. 74, Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series). 1s. 6d.
HARWOOD, BASIL.—'Christmastide.' Fantasia for Organ. (No. 13, Original Compositions for the Organ by Basil Harwood.) 3s. 6d.
IRELAND, JOHN.—'When May is in his prime.' Four-part Song. (No. 1384, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.
MACMILLAN, E. C.—'England.' An Ode. 1st Violin, 3s. 6d.; 2nd Violin, 3s. 6d.; Viola, 3s. 6d.; 1st Violoncello, 3s. 6d.; 2nd Violoncello, 3s.; Bass, 2s. 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—'Fair was the night.' Christmas Carol. 1d.; or 2s. 6d. per 50.
RAVENSCROFT, THOMAS.—'A Freeman's Song and Chorus.' From 'Deuteromelia'. (1609). Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE. 4d.
ROBERTS, W. H.—'Glasmor.' ('Rejoice, all ye believers.') Hymn and Tune. Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa. Welsh and English words. 2d.
ROSTRON, S.—'Come unto Me.' Anthem. 4d.
RUSSELL, F. G.—'Hymn to the Trinity.' 1½d. Words only, 1d.; or 9d. per dozen.
SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 343) contains the following music in both notations: 'Where go the boats.' Unison Song by TEMPLE P. M. BEVAN. 'Country Dance' (from Finland). Arranged with English words by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 2d.
SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A B
No. 1299. 'Laugh a bit.' Unison Song R. BERNARD ELLIOTT. 3d.
SHARP, CECIL J.—English Folk-Songs. Collected and arranged with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Songs and Ballads. Two Volumes. Cloth, 18s. each.
TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:
CHAMBERS, H. A.—'Breathe, breathe o'er a world of woe.' (No. 380, Novello's Christmas Carols.) 1½d.
MACMILLAN, E. C.—'England': An Ode. 3s.
TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2337. 'And thou, Bethlehem.' Christmas Anthem. F. W. WADELY 2d.
No. 2338. 'London Town.' Four-part Song. EDWARD GERMAN 4d.
No. 2339. 'O world in sorrow sleeping.' Christmas Anthem. ALFRED HOLLINS 3d.
No. 2340. 'Bread of the world in mercy broken.' Short Anthem. H. A. CHAMBERS 3d.
TCHAIKOVSKY, P.—'Legend.' From 'Children's Songs.' Arranged for Mixed Voices by the composer. (No. 934, The Musical Times .) 2d.
VINDEN, M.—'If we believe that Jesus died.' For Eastertide, Burial Services, or General use. (No. 1078, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—'Evensong.' For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).
DICKINSON, C.—'When the dawn was breaking.' Polish Folk-Song. Arranged for Solo and Chorus. 15 cents (8d.).
JAMES, PHILIP.—'The Victory Riders.' Ballad for Baritone. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).
WHITMER, CARL.—'Behold, I stand at the door.' Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

THE

CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE

WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

Suitable for Mission, Village, and Parish Choirs, or for a Congregation without the aid of a choir.

ARRANGED BY THE

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EDWARD MACDOWELL. T. HILTON-TURVEY

FROM THE XVIIIth CENTURY

(TRANSCRIPTIONS FOR PIANO OF HARPSICHORD PIECES).

NOW ISSUED IN TWO BOOKS.

BOOK I.—4s. 6d. net.

1. COURANTE ... ..	Rameau
2. SARABANDE... ..	Rameau
3. TEMPO DI MINUETTO ....	Grazioli
4. LE BAVOLET FLOTTANT ... ..	Couperin
5. GIGUE ... ..	Mattheson
6. SARABANDE... ..	Loeilly

BOOK II.—4s. 6d. net.

7. GIGUE ... ..	Loeilly
8. LA BERSAN ... ..	Couperin
9. L'AUSONNIENNE ... ..	Couperin
10. ARIA from Handel's "Susanna"...	Lavignac
11. GIGUE ... ..	Graun

Each piece may also be had separately, price 2s. net each (except No. 6—1s. 6d. net).

FIRST SONG ALBUM

1. A MAY-DAY LILT.
2. STARS ON THE SEA.
3. FOR LOVE AND YOU.
4. SLEEPY-BYE SONG.
5. HER CHEEK IS LIKE THE TINTED ROSE.
6. IF JUNE WERE MINE.
7. WHEN THE LONG LANE TURNS.

Low or High Voice, 5s. net.

"Genial, graceful, and sincere—the products of a genuine artistic temperament; rich in melody and imbued with charm."

From a critical article by George Lowe.

ELKIN &amp; Co., LTD.,

8 AND 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

WILL BE PUBLISHED EARLY NEXT MONTH.

LAMIA

SYMPHONIC POEM

FOR

FULL ORCHESTRA.

BY

DOROTHY HOWELL.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ÆOLIAN PIPE ORGAN for SALE.—17 stops, 2 composition pedals, 116-note, double tracker board, two-manual. Carved black oak case. 10-ft. 6-in. high; 11-ft. broad; 7-ft. deep. Electrically driven. A most beautiful instrument. Can be seen by appointment. The present price of this instrument—which is very difficult to obtain—is £2,300. I will accept £1,700. W. Bowker, 125, Kings Road, Brighton.

FOR SALE.—Organ Pedal Attachment for Piano-forte. Radiating, Concave Stool. Good condition. Price, £7 10s. Apply, 1, Woodbine Terrace, St. David's, Exeter.

OWING to the death of J. M. Boustead, Esq., the unique Five-manual Organ at Westfield, Wimbledon Common, is offered for sale. The organ has 112 stops, including three of 32-ft. pitch, and is fitted with electro-pneumatic action and electrical blowing apparatus. Offers and inquiries should be addressed to A. Hunter & Son, Organ Builders, 87, High Street, Clapham, S.W. 4, from whom a full specification can be obtained.

FOR SALE.—A lovely toned HARP, by Erard. Suitable for small Orchestra, in good condition. £30 cash. Apply, "V. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. Two TENORS and one ALTO WANTED. Stipend, £150. Candidates must be communicants and under 32 years of age. Applications, with testimonials (not less than three), to be sent to the Rev. The Precentor, before January 15th, 1921.

ASSISTANT-ORGANISTSHIP, or Sole Charge, desired by experienced Lady Organist holding appointment. Pianoforte, viola, sight-reader. "M. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST (Communicant) WANTED at once for Combe Martin Church, North Devon. Salary, £50. Two services Sunday and two weekly practices; mixed choir; choral Eucharist. Apply, Rev. R. Seymour, The Rectory, Combe Martin.

ORGANIST, Glenorchy Congregational Church, Exmouth. Apply, with usual particulars, and salary required, A. H. Toone, 17, Rolle Street, Exmouth.

BASS WANTED, for All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £15. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood, S.E. 27.

THE SINGER'S ART (just Published). By Agnes J. Larkcom. Price 2s. London: Novello & Company, Limited.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Mr. JAMES BATES will resume his Saturday morning Lecture-Lessons to Teachers and Choir-Trainers on Children's Voice-Culture and Singing: January 15th at 10 o'clock. For full particulars address Royal Academy of Music, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

THE CRUCIFIXION A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100; Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS.

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. Strings parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s. String Parts, 15s. 6d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three Shillings. Paper boards, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU? AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs.

BY

E. V. HALL, M.A.

Price Tenpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

VIA DOLOROSA A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

Suitable for the Seasons of Lent and Passiontide.

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Three Shillings. Paper boards, 4s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS (STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Five Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. Vocal parts, 1s. each.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 5s.; paper boards, 7s.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 2s. each. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 3s.; paper boards, 5s. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

*THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 6s.; paper boards, 8s.; cloth, gilt, 10s. Abridged edition for Church use, 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 2s.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s. Choruses only, 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 2s.

*PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. 3s.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 5s.

OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 2s.

*ZION'S WAYS DO LANGUAGE. Soprano Solo and Chorus, from "Gallia" (Motet). CH. GOUNOD. 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The Music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonised by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The Music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 1d. *Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in E flat)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in G)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in D, Unison)	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 1d.)	4d.
BLAIR, HUGH (in G)	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (in D)	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (Shortened Form)	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G)	2d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (in E flat)	3d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (No. 2, in F)	2d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (in F, Chant Form)	6d.
FROST, PERCY H. (in D)	3d.
GADSBY, HENRY (in G, Chant Form)	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G)	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants)	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D)	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat)	2d.
ILIFFE, FREDERICK (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form)	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat)	4d.
LOYD, C. HARFORD (in E flat, Chant Form)	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, shortened form)	2d.
MACPHERSON, CHARLES (in F, rhythmic setting)	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G)	each 6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat)	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN)	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (in E flat)	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat)	1d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (in B flat)	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F)	2d.
SMITH, BOYTON (in A flat)	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1d.)	2d.
STAINER, J. J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
STEWART, C. HYLTON (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BARNBY, J.	2d.
FOSTER, JOHN	2d.
SMITH, MONTEM (two settings)	2d.
TURLE, J. (two settings)	2d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings)	2d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in G)	3d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in A). Short and simple	3d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in G)	6d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in C)	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (in D). Shortened Form	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D)	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant)	2d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

FOR VOICES AND ORGAN

With Short Interludes, giving opportunity for Meditation.

THE WORDS BY

THE REV. E. MONRO

SET TO MUSIC BY

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 1d.)	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 1d.)	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 1d.)	4d.
STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 1d.)	4d.

Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, REV. J. B.	4d.
GOUNOD, CH.	3d.
HOYTE, W. S.	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies)	6d.
(Edited by W. S. Vale)	6d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied)	4d.

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price Two Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR LENT, EASTER,

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN A—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE IN E	... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS IN A	... ..	3d.
JUBILATE IN A	... ..	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A	... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E	... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E, FOUR VOICES	... ..	1s.
THE STORY OF THE CROSS	... ..	2d.

ANTHEMS.

LEAD ME IN THY TRUTH	... ..	3d.
130TH PSALM, "OUT OF THE DEEP"	... ..	1s.
TENOR SOLO AND CHORUS	... ..	1s.
AMEN—CARD	... ..	1d.
IF WE BELIEVE—EASTER ANTHEM	... ..	4d.
THE GOOD SHEPHERD—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD	... ..	4d.

The Composer will be pleased to send specimens of any of the Compositions on this advertisement.

Address, 36, Christ Church Road, Norwich.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PENITENCE

PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tubb, 34, Percy Street, W 1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE SEASON'S SUCCESS.

"CREATION'S PRAISE."

Well-balanced in Chorus, Solo, and Quartet.
 Cantata by F. W. PEACE.

O.N., 2s. 6d. Sol-fa, 1s. Less 25% Discount for six copies.

ALSO

"CHRIST THE CONQUEROR."

O.N., 2s. Sol-fa, 1s.

By JOHN S. WITTY.

BLACKBURNS, LTD.,

Broadway Avenue, Cardigan Road, Leeds.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

POT-POURRI. A Cycle of Fragments or Verses by	s. d.
Isobel Scott Bremner	6 0

SONGS.

LOVE OUTWITTED. Phantasy Duet for Voice and Pianoforte	... ..	2 0
MARCH MORNING. For High or Low Voice	each	2 0
TWO SONGS: "Absence" and "Serenade." For High, Medium, or Low Voice	... .. each	2 0

PART-SONGS.

FAIR, SWEET, CRUEL. (S.A.T.B.)	... ..	4d.
HUNTING SONG. (S.A.T.B.)	... ..	4d.
SWEET KATE. (S.A.T.B.)	... ..	4d.
THREE SLEEPS. (S.A.T.B.)	... ..	2d.
WHEN LAURA SMILES. (S.A.T.B.)	... ..	4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VOL. IV.

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS

THIRTY SONGS

BY VARIOUS COMPOSERS

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"SHEPHERD OF MEN"

CANTATA BY JOHN S. WITTY.

A Musical Treat. Send for Sample.

Your Choir must not miss the opportunity for rendering this attractive work.

ALSO

"THE SCENE ON CALVARY"

By F. W. PEACE.

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCTION.

Staff Notation, 2s. Sol-fa, 1s

We allow 25% Discount to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

BROADWAY AVENUE, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "SUN OF MY SOUL."
- "THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
- "DIVINE LOVE."
- "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
- "LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
- "THE NAZARENE."
- "THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
- "JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each,

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
 15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

STABAT MATER

SET TO MUSIC
FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

ENGLISH VERSION

BY
W. G. ROTHERY.

Price Three Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH.

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

Price Two Shillings.

CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S
DARK PRISON

(CHRIST LAG IN TODESBANDEN)

AN EASTER CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH.

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

ENGLISH WORDS BY PAUL ENGLAND.

Price Two Shillings.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

SET TO MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE
REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

COMPOSITIONS BY DR. J. W. G. HATHAWAY.

SONGS.

Songs from Vagabondia—	Keys.	Compass of 1st Key.	Net.
1. The Joys of the Road ...	B?	B? to E	3 0
2. The Sea Gypsy ...	E? mi.
3. The Wander Lovers...	C# mi.
*The Blind Girl's Lament (Contralto Scena)	A?	A? to G?	2 0
*The Dying Swan (Tenor Scena)...	C mi.	D to A	2 0

* Orchestral parts can be hired.

PART-SONGS.

	Net.
Light in Darkness (S.A.T.B.) ...	6d.
Larks (S.A.T.B.) ...	6d.
Spring (S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.) ...	9d.
Tonic Sol-fa ...	4d.
O Sweet Delight (S.A.T.B.) ...	4d.
The Ships drift Home (S.A.T.B.) ...	4d.
The Song of the Wreck (S.A.T.B.) (with Baritone Solo)	6d.
White Steeds of the Sea (S.S.A.A.) (with Baritone Solo)	6d.
A Sea Requiem (S.A.T.B.) (with Baritone Solo) ...	1/0
The Sea's Mysterious Marge (S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.) ...	6d.
The Dunes by the Sea (S.A.T.B.) ...	6d.
The Young Knight (T.T.B.B.) ...	6d.
The Knight's Return (T.T.B.B.) ...	3d.
It keeps Eternal Whisperings (T.T.B.B.) ...	6d.
In the Heart of a Dreaming Rose (S.S.A.) ...	3d.
Shadow March (S.A.) ...	3d.
Silence (S.S.A.) ...	6d.
Rounds in a modern style for equal voices, complete	1/6
1. Old Mother Hubbard ...	3d.
2. Little Polly Flinders ...	3d.
3. Gregory Griggs ...	4d.
4. There was a Bee ...	...
5. Jack and Jill ...	4d.
Lullaby Land (S.S.A.A.) ...	6d.

SONGS.

	Keys.	Compass of 1st Key.	Net.
Two Songs. Modern Songs, No. 81.
1. A little child's evening prayer	E?	B? to E?	2 0
2. A child's thoughts at night	A?
Two Songs. Modern Songs, No. 84.
1. Block City...	E	B to E	2 0
2. Windy Night ...	E
Flowers Nodding Gaily ...	A?	E? to G(A?)	2 0

UNISON SONGS.

	Net.
The Curfew ...	3d.
Bed in Summer ...	3d.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

	s. d.
50 Sight-Reading Tests for students of all grades ...	4 0
Wattle Leaves ...	2 0

CHORAL RHAPSODIES.

	1	6
*How sweet the Moonlight ...	...	...
*A Legend of Bregenz ...	...	...
In Great Waters (Unaccompanied, with Baritone Solo) ...	...	2 6

* Full Score and Orchestral parts may be hired.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Complete Morning and Evening Service in G—

	8d.
Te Deum ...	...
Benedictus ...	6d.
Jubilate ...	4d.
Communion Service ...	1/3
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis ...	8d.
Communion Service in C, for Treble voices ...	1/3
Benedicite in A?	2d.
Remember not, Lord, our offences ...	4d.
The souls of the righteous ...	4d.
Turn ye unto Me ...	3d.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT

VOL. I.

Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWO PASTORALS

"COME YOU, MARV."

"WHIO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES FORSAKE?"

THE WORDS BY

NORMAN GALE.

THE MUSIC BY

ERNEST BRISTOW FARRAR

(Op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3)

TWO KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 93.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

THE ORGAN

A STUDY OF ITS PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE

PART I.

BY

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

Price Three Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

A SELECTION

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Op. 30, No. 1.

ARRANGED AND ADAPTED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Five Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

(SET 11).

1. One golden thread.
2. The spirit of the Spring.
3. What part of dread eternity.
4. The blackbird.
5. The faithful lover.
6. If I might ride on puissant wing.
7. Why art thou slow.
8. She is my love beyond all thought.

(SET 12).

1. When the dew is falling.
2. To Blossoms.
3. Rosaline.
4. When the sun's great orb.
5. Dream pedlary.
6. O World, O Life, O Time.
7. The sound of hidden music.

The Series is now completed by the publication of the above Sets.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHANN SEBASTIAN

BACH

His Life, Art and Work. Translated from the German
of J. N. FORKEL, with Notes and Appendices by
C. SANFORD TERRY, Litt.D. 21s. net.

"Very much more than a re-translation of an old work which was previously translated very imperfectly into English a hundred years ago. . . .
It contains material for a history of Bach criticism from the beginning of the 19th century until the present day, and incidentally suggests directions which future research may follow."—Times Literary Supplement.

"Dr. Terry has done English musicians considerable service. . . Two-thirds of what Dr. Terry magnanimously describes as 'Bach by Forkel' it Bach by Terry. My only complaint is that there is not still more Terry."—New Statesman.

BACH

CONSTABLE &amp; Co., LTD., 10-12 ORANGE STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

The Craftsman says:

“OUR CATHEDRAL ACRIBELLE IS A GENUINE
... SUPER-QUALITY SILK STRING ...

The Craftsman says: “Violinists everywhere are delighted with our new ‘Cathedral’ Acribelle. We have had shoals of applications for free samples, and many letters thanking us for producing such a genuine super-quality silk string.”

“The ‘Cathedral’ Acribelle is the result of many elaborate experiments, and new discoveries in manufacturing processes. I am proud of the new Acribelle. It reveals wonderful craftsmanship. But the best test of its value is actual trial on your instrument. See our Sample offer below.”

Mr. G. Roberts, of 270, Wylds Lane, Worcester, writes: “I beg to thank you for the sample (Cathedral E) received on the 12th inst. I have given it a thorough test, and find it meets all the demands placed upon it. It is certainly the best string I have struck for several years, and I hope to make the acquaintance of your other brands in the near future.”

Send for FREE Sample String.

Owing to the great success of the “Cathedral” Acribelle String our sample offer will be extended for January only. State the exact string required. Your Music Dealer can also supply “Cathedral” Acribells at the following prices: Cat. No. 50, E super-silk, three lengths, 1s. each. No. 60, a super-silk, two lengths, 1s. 3d. each. No. 70, D, super-silk, two lengths, 1s. 9d. each.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4

Telephone: North 2594.

Telegrams: “Cello, Finspark, London.”

THE “DISCUS” REGD. ORGAN BLOWER

Introduced in 1906, and now installed in nearly a thousand Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. A thoroughly efficient, soundly constructed mechanical blower, designed on approved scientific principles. The absence of complicated parts makes the “DISCUS” a trustworthy machine, and with ordinary attention it can be used for years without requiring repairs.

The “DISCUS” dispenses with manual labour, which, for this class of work, is often difficult to obtain, and is instantly available for use. It requires remarkably small space, is very quiet in action, not affected by damp, and can be adapted to any type of organ, large or small. We guarantee its efficiency, and can undertake to give satisfaction no matter how modest the equipment desired. A “DISCUS” Installation is always a sound financial investment.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

ILLUSTRATED PARTICULARS FREE.

WATKINS AND WATSON
SOLE MAKERS OF THE “DISCUS” BLOWER

Designers and Manufacturers of Hydraulic Engines, Gear, and Fittings for Organs for the past thirty years.

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N. 1.

Telegrams: “HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON.”

Telephone: NORTH 2035.

VIOLIN AND VIOLONCELLO WORKS

ARRANGED BY JOSEPH SALMON.

MESSRS. G. RICORDI & Co., of 265, Regent Street, London, have great pleasure in introducing this most interesting collection of

WORKS OF THE OLD MASTERS,

Arranged for the Violin (also Violoncello). With New Pianoforte Accompaniment.

By MONS. J. SALMON, of Paris.

These important works have been played by many of the eminent Violinists and Violoncellists, and G. RICORDI & Co. feel confident that players and teachers will find them worthy to be included in their repertoire.

When ordering please state whether for Violin and Piano OR Violoncello and Piano.

THE PRICE OF BOTH EDITIONS IS THE SAME.

NET CASH PRICE s. d.				NET CASH PRICE s. d.
ANTONIOTTI (G.) (1692-1776). Sonata ( G minor )...	4	6		GUERRINI (F.) (1710-1780). Allegro con brio ...	3
ARIOSTI (A.) (1666-1740?). Sonata ( E minor ) ...	5	3		Sonata ( G major ) ..	6	0
Sonata ( G major ) ...	4	6		HERVELOIS (CAIX D') (1670-17..?). Gavotte ...	3	0
BIRCKENSTOCK (J. A.) (1687-1733). Sonata				Sonata ( A minor )...	5	3
( E minor ) ...	6	0		LECLAIR (J. M.) (1697-1764). Tambourin...	3	0
BOCCHERINI (L.) (1743-1805). Menuet ( G major )	3	0		LEILLET (J. B.) (1653-1728). Sonata ( A minor )...	6	0
BONONCINI (G. B.) (1680-17..?). Sonata ( A minor )	5	3		Sonata ( G major ) ...	4	6
CAPORALE (A.) (16..?-17..?). Sonata ( D minor )	4	6		MARAI (ROLAND) (17..?-17..?). Sonata
CERVETTO (G.) (1682-1783). Sonata ( C major ):				( C major ) ...	6	0
1. Adagio and Allegro. 2. Andante				MARCELLO (B.) (1686-1739). Sonata ( D major ):
cantabile and Allegro ...	6	0		1. Grave and Allegro. 2. Largo and Vivace	4	6
Separate: Adagio and Allegro ...	4	0		Separate: Grave and Allegro ...	3	3
Separate: Andante cantabile and Allegro	4	0		Separate: Largo and Vivace ...	2	6
Sonata ( G major ) ...	6	0		Sonata ( E minor )...	4	6
CORELLI (A.) (1653-1713). Sonata ( D minor ) ...	4	0		Sonata ( G major ), No. 1 ...	4	3
COUPERIN (F.) (1668-1733). Les Chérubins ...	3	9		Sonata ( G major ), No. 2 ...	4	3
DALL'ABACO (E. F.) (1675-1742). Sonata ( F major )	4	6		Sonata ( G minor )...	4	6
DE FESCH (W.) (1695-1758). Sonata ( G major ):				PIANELLI (G.) (1725-17..?). Sonata ( G major ) ...	6	0
1. Prélude and Allemande. 2. Sarabande				PORPORA (N. A.) (1686-1766). Sonata ( F major ) ...	4	6
and Menuet ...	4	6		RAMEAU (J. PH.) (1683-1764). Gavotte from the
Separate: Prélude and Allemande ...	3	3		ballet Les Indes Galantes ...	3	0
Separate: Sarabande and Menuet ...	2	6		Menuet from the opera Platée ...	3	0
Sonata ( D minor ): 1. Sicilienne and Allemande.				Gavotte ...	3	0
2. Andante cantabile. 3. Menuet ...	4	6		SAMMARTINI (G. B.) (1698-1775). Sonata ( G major ):
Separate: Sicilienne and Allemande ...	3	0		1. Allegro. 2. Grave. 3. Vivace ...	4	6
Separate: Andante cantabile ...	2	0		Separate: Allegro ...	2	6
Separate: Menuet ...	2	3		Separate: Grave ...	1	6
DUPUITS (J. B.) (1741-17..?). Sonata ( D major )...	4	6		Separate: Vivace...	2	0
ECCLES (H.) (1670-1742). Sonata ( G minor ):				SENAILLE (J. B.) (1687-1730). Allegro spiritoso ...	3	9
1. Grave and Courante. 2. Adagio and				Largo and Gigue ...	3	9
Vivace ...	3	9		Menuet... ..	3	0
Separate: Grave and Courante ...	2	3		Sarabande and Allemande ...	3	9
Separate: Adagio and Vivace ...	3	0		Vivace ...	3	9
GALLIARD (J. E.) (1687-1749). Sonata ( G major )...	4	6		SOMIS (G. B.) (1676-1763). Sonata ( G major ) ...	6	0
Sonata ( E minor ) ...	4	3		TRICKLER (J. B.) (1745-1813). Sonata ( G major ) ...	6	0
GASPARINI (Q.) (1725-17..?). Sonata ( E minor )	4	6		VALENTINI (G.) (1681?-17..?). Sonata ( B flat
GRAZIOLI (G. B.) (1755-1820). Sonata ( G major )...	4	6		major )...	4	6

These fine arrangements have created a profound sensation in the Concert world everywhere, as they appeal to all players of the violin and violoncello who are interested in really good music.

G. RICORDI & CO., 265, Regent Street, London, W.1.

The 'APOLLO' Pedal Reed Organ

.. The Substitute for a Pipe Organ

When authorities of a small Church, Chapel, or Mission find their finances will not admit of the installation of a Pipe Organ the solution is the practical 'Apollo' Pedal Reed Organ.

Built by Pipe Organ craftsmen, with the finest pipe organ materials and being a replica of a Pipe Organ in Scale, Dimensions, Position and Combinations the 'Apollo' is worthy of serious consideration.

Eminent authorities endorse the 'Apollo' both for Church use and for Organists or Students Home Practice.

Illustrated Booklet with the testimony of a leading Recitalist will be sent by post free upon application.

Specification.

Two complete Manuals and Pedals, 8 full rows Reeds on Manuals, 61 Notes, CC to C<sub>3</sub>; and 2 rows on Pedals, 30 Notes CCC to F, Pedals RCO Scale, radiating and concave, 17 Stops. Case, Solid Oak, light or dark finish, complete with circular fronted BENCH, as shown.

Great.

Violone .....16ft. Open Diapason 8ft.
Clarabella 8ft. Du ciona ..... 8ft.
Principal 4ft.

Swell.

Bourdon .....16ft Gamba .....8ft.
Oboe .....8ft. Flute .....4ft.
Tremulant —

Pedal.

Sub Bass 16ft. Open Diapason 16ft.

Composition Pedals.

2 to Swell. 2 to Great. Swell Pedal.

Couplers.

Swell Octave. Swell to Great.
Swell to Pedal. Great to Pedal.

Accessories. Hand and Foot Blowers (the latter close into case when not required), Wind Indicator, etc., etc.

Designed
and BUILT by

Rushworth & Dreaper Ltd.

Church, Chamber and Concert
ORGAN BUILDERS

Showrooms, 11-17 Islington, LIVERPOOL.

LONDON:—The CHAPPELL PIANO CO, Ltd., 50 New Bond Street, W.1.

Telegrams:
'APOLLO', Liverpool.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91:—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

As musical compositions get more complicated, elaborate, and difficult of execution, it is increasingly incumbent upon the composer to present his meaning in a manner that will help the performer to grasp that meaning with as little trouble as possible.

The object of this book is to point out to composers, arrangers, and editors, the difficulties they often unwittingly place in the path of executants, and to suggest various means of obviating those difficulties.

Price . . . Three Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

WORKS BY IGOR STRAVINSKY

PUBLISHED BY

J. &amp; W. CHESTER, LTD.

"RAGTIME" (PIANO SOLO).

With a Cover Design by PABLO PICASSO. 4s.

THREE EASY PIECES (PIANO DUET).

1. Marche. 2. Valse. 3. Polka.
2s. 6d.

BERCEUSES DU CHAT.

For Contralto and Three Clarinets.

Score, 6s. Parts, 6s. Voice and Piano, 3s.

QUATRE CHANTS RUSSES.

High Voice and Piano, 3s.

"PIANO RAG-MUSIC" (PIANO SOLO).

Dedicated to ARTHUR RUBINSTEIN.

3s.

"PULCINELLA"

BALLET WITH SONGS IN ONE ACT.

MUSIC AFTER GIAMBATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Piano and Vocal Score, 10s.

FIVE EASY PIECES (PIANO DUET).

1. Andante. 2. Española. 3. Balalaika.
4. Napolitana. 5. Galop.
3s. 6d.

PRIBAOUTKI (CHANSONS PLAISANTES).

For Medium Voice, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, and String Quartet.

Score, 8s. Parts, 10s. Voice and Piano, 4s.

TROIS HISTOIRES POUR ENFANTS.

Medium Voice and Piano, 2s. 6d.

THREE PIECES FOR CLARINET SOLO.

3s.

SUITE from "L'HISTOIRE DU SOLDAT"

ARRANGED FOR

VIOLIN, CLARINETTE, AND PIANO.

2Cs.

ALL PRICES NET CASH.

11, Great Marlborough Street, London W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 936.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

FEBRUARY 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, AT 2.30 P.M.

SAMSON AND DELILAH - SAINT-SAËNS

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. EDWARD HALLAND.
MR. EDMUND BURKE.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN COATES.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW

PRECEDED BY

AT THE ABBEY GATE - STANFORD

CONDUCTED BY THE COMPOSER.
(First time of performance.)

MR. PLUNKET GREENE.

At the Organ ... MR. H. L. BALFOUR.
Full Chorus and Orchestra.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy has been quite full for the past year, no intending Students whose names are not already on the waiting list can be admitted before September.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, February 5 and 19, at 3.

CHAMBER CONCERTS, February 14 and March 2, at 3.

LECTURES by Dr. H. W. RICHARDS, on "Musical History from 1650 to 1750, including the Life Works of Henry Purcell," will be given on Wednesdays, February 2, 9, and 16, at 3.15.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects, STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

New Term begins MONDAY, 10th JANUARY.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The EASTER TERM commenced on MONDAY, JANUARY 10. SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.)

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c., Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.
LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE INCORPORATED

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches: Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3,
and 117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers.
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examination in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Extract from a Letter received from

HARVEY GRACE, Esq., F.R.C.O.,

Editor of The Musical Times.

"You will be glad to hear I use the Techniquer DAILY. It is a BOON, as I have so little time for keyboard work."

Send for full particulars.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE
LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Terms, &c., address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLI-CATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
Dr. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application.
SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.
Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.
Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.
Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.
All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH
MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.

THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.

THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

* COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM, TE DEUM, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE
CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 3-9, 1921.

PRESIDENT: LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

COMPETITIVE SECTION to be held at MOUNTAIN ASH on MONDAY and TUESDAY, October 3rd and 4th, 1921.

CHORAL TEST-PIECES.

MIXED VOICES—FIRST CLASS (minimum number of voices, 125). PRIZE, £250 and a Silver Shield.

- (a) "Song of the Silent Land" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
 (b) "The Shower" ... .. Edward Elgar
 (c) "When lo! by break of morning" ... .. Gerrard Williams
 (a) to be accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra.
 (b) and (c) to be unaccompanied.

MIXED VOICES—SECOND CLASS (minimum number of voices, 60). PRIZE, £50.

- (a) Nocturne ... .. Granville Bantock
 (b) "In Celia's face my Heaven is" ... .. Julius Harrison
 (a) and (b) to be unaccompanied.

MALE VOICES—FIRST CLASS (minimum number of voices, 60). PRIZE, £100 and a Silver Cup.

- (a) "Sea Fever" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
 (b) "War Song of the Saracens" ... .. Granville Bantock
 (a) and (b) to be unaccompanied.

MALE VOICES—SECOND CLASS (minimum number of voices, 40). PRIZE, £30.

- "Song of the Bards" ... .. Julius Harrison

FEMALE VOICES. PRIZE, £30.

- (a) "Night in the desert" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
 (b) "Shadowy Woodlands" ... .. Roy Thompson

CHILDREN'S CHOIR. PRIZE, £15.

- "The Child and the Robin" ... .. E. T. Davies

Adjudicators—

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, CYRIL JENKINS, ERNEST NEWMAN.

Hon. Secretaries—

D. T. EVANS and L. J. DAVIES, Festival Offices, Mountain Ash.

† Published by NOVELLO &amp; Co., Ltd.

All other pieces published by CURWEN &amp; SONS.

CROYDON AND DISTRICT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE NINTH ANNUAL

PUBLIC COMPETITIONS

IN

MUSIC AND ELOCUTION

AT THE

PUBLIC HALL, CROYDON,

APRIL 18th to 23rd, 1921.

(Entries close APRIL 2nd, 1921.)

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" SILVER CHALLENGE SHIELD.

TWO OTHER CHALLENGE SHIELDS.

MEMORIAL MEDALLION. FOUR GOLD MEDALS, and Numerous Prizes and Certificates will be awarded.

Syllabus and Entry Forms may be obtained from

THOMAS COOK, 7, Katharine Street, Croydon.

LEAMINGTON AND COUNTY Open Competitive Musical Festival,

THURSDAY, JUNE 23RD, FRIDAY, JUNE 24TH, AND SATURDAY, JUNE 25TH, 1921.

Syllabus, now ready, 6d., post paid, from Secretary, Town Hall, Leamington.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC (St. John), at St. Anne's, Soho, each Saturday in Lent, 3.30 p.m. Full orchestra and organ. Tickets free, from Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1. Send stamped envelope.

SOUTHERN COUNTIES
SECOND GRAND SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

EXETER.

WHIT WEEK, MAY 16th to 21st, 1921.

Male-Voice Choir £100 Prize.

12 GOLD MEDAL CLASSES.

Over 80 Competitions: Vocal and Instrumental; Elocution; Literary (including Chaining the Bard) Art; Needlework, &amp;c.

— £450 IN PRIZES. —

Get the "BOOK OF EVENTS," now ready, post free, 7d., from the Hon. Secretary, Mr. D. CONNIFF, 1, Exwick Road, Exeter.

GLASGOW
MUSICAL (COMPETITION) FESTIVAL.

MAY 4TH TO 14TH.

Syllabus, price 6d.; post free, 7d.

From Festival Office, 187, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow.

ÆOLIAN HALL.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 22nd, at 8.15.

ALISON KING.

VOCAL RECITAL.

Assisted by DETTMAR DRESSEL, Violinist.

At the Piano, MANLIO DI VEROLI.

Tickets: ros. 6d., 8s. 6d., 5s. 9d.; Unreserved. 3s.; at the Hall, and at Milgrom's Concert Agency, 324, Regent Street, W. Mayfair 4123.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE will LECTURE at Gresham College, on February 8, 9, 10, 11, at 6 p.m. Subjects: (1), "An hour with our Sailors." (2), "Sacred Motets from Leighton's Collection, 1614" (Composers: Bull, Byrde, Hooper, Warde, Wilbye, Johnson, Dowland, and Gyles). (3), Two Humorous Fancies, "Country Cries," by Deering (second performance), and "New Fashions," by Cobbold (first time complete). (4), "The Music of Old English Dances." Illustrations by Mr. Jeffrey Pulver.

THE IDEAL METHOD
OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, Mus. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

A. E. MILGROM'S

CONCERT AGENCY.

Recitals, Concerts, &c., arranged. Over 400 artists for Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Orchestral Conductors, Instrumentalists, Accompanists, Entertainers, Concert Parties in Costume.

For terms, please write—

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY.

Phone: Mayfair 4123. 324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HÜLL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

MR. A. MCALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MUS. BAC. ONE FEE MATRIC.
1st M.B. Ex. Final.

COMBINED Guarantee Courses.

1. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
2. A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M.
3. A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
4. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L.
5. B.A. and Mus. Bac.

JOIN THE M.C.C. AND SAVE

TIME AND MONEY

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

Chas. A. Gillett's
Pianoforte Course

A Correspondence Course dealing with the most modern methods of Piano Playing. It is compiled expressly for the Music Teacher, Professional, or Advanced Amateur. The close study of the actual playing of the leading soloists of the day has enabled Mr. Gillett to analyse Technique in a quite original way. The application of the results of these studies to the technique required for the classics has already proved of the greatest value to many professional musicians of high standing.

THE COURSE EMBODIES:

PERFECTION OF TOUCH AND TONE. USE OF RELAXATION.

ARM WEIGHT. FINGERING.

SIGHT READING. MEMORISING, ETC., ETC.

Extracts from recent Letters:

"Being a Teacher of over twenty-five years' standing, and having tried every known system whereby Technique, Tone, and Touch could be improved, I CAN SAY WITHOUT HESITATION THAT IT IS THE FINEST SYSTEM I HAVE EVER TRIED, AND ONE THAT WILL DO ALL YOU CLAIM FOR IT, if the pupil will follow out instructions carefully. You are at liberty to refer anyone to me with regard to your system, and I will be only too pleased to answer any questions."

"The idea of RELAXATION was not new to me, but I have never treated it with the attention which it merits, probably—in fact no doubt—BECAUSE I HAVE NEVER FOUND IT DEALT WITH AND EXPOUNDED SO ABLY AS IT IS IN YOUR METHOD. THERE ARE MANY WHO KNOW A SUBJECT, BUT VERY FEW WHO CAN TEACH IT—YOU, EVIDENTLY, ARE ONE OF THE FEW."

"Now, I must say I am filled with hope, especially after reading your method of 'APPLIED TECHNIQUE,' which I have never used before. Even in the short time elapsed I FEEL CONSIDERABLE BENEFIT DERIVED BY STUDY OF YOUR CHORD PRINCIPLES; as I am conscious of FLEXIBILITY AT THE WRIST, and really never before understood the PRINCIPLES OF RELAXATION AS SO FULLY TREATED BY YOU."

Studio M.T.—THE CHAS. A. GILLETT,

School of Piano Playing,

11, South Molton Street, New Bond Street, London, W.1.

How to play difficult
music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System; the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

LECTURES—"How to retain the singing voice for forty years."

Italian Production.—What an obsession! Are the British so deficient in brains that they cannot "produce" voices at home? What is "Italian Production" but French, English, Spanish, what you will? There is only one correct production, frontal position, as in true speech, with nasal resonance as reinforcement of tone. And nasal resonance is obtained largely through the correct hum. As soon as our large body of teachers realise that the ease and resonance of frontal placement is the great thing in singing we shall become a nation of singers and not of voices only. All that great wastage of voice will stop. Away with all the hideous "camouflage."

Dr. Graham, of Carlisle, writes:—"Would I had known your simple, definite method twenty-five years ago."

Mr. James Moodie, Edinburgh, writes January 21, 1921:—"The points you were able to help me on have been of inestimable value to me. I am using your method daily in my teaching and have seen a tremendous difference in some of my pupils."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.). (If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.)

DIPLOMA PAPER WORK.

Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A. and F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. and L.T.C.L.

COURSES ALSO IN

MUSICAL APPRECIATION,

GENERAL MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE,

SINGLE SUBJECTS

(HARMONY, FORM, TEACHING, Etc.).

For Terms, List of Successes, &amp;c.—

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 5033.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS VERA SUTHERLAND

CONTRALTO.

Recitals, Concerts, At Homes, &amp;c.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,
324, Regent Street, W.

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

JOHN MACLENNAN,

TENOR.

Address: 185, Loughborough Road, S.W. 9.

Telephone: Brixton, 1702.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

RALPH WILLIAMS (L.R.A.M.)

(TENOR).

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &amp;c.

Busoni Method.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MR.

CHRISTOPHER CLAUDIS,

L.R.A.M. (FLAUTIST).

Twenty years' association with the principal London Orchestras.

Concerts, Oratorios, Cantatas, Recitals, &amp;c.

Lessons in Town or Country.

Address: 10, Listria Park, Stamford Hill, N. 16.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON

undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

GIVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.

*** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WOLFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

45, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-five. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 39 " " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition. Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Corresp. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 380 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920), specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—A SOLO boy will be REQUIRED shortly. Board and education free. Apply for particulars to the Precentor.

ALTO disengaged, for Quartet (professional). Write, "Edens," 17, Salcombe Gardens, S.W.4, or phone Latchmere 4665.

ALTO VOCALIST, with large compass, has vacant dates for Ballads, Oratorio, &c. John Stembridge, 15, Warwick Road, S.W.5.

PARISH CHURCH, Stoke Newington, N. 16. TENOR and BASS WANTED. £20. Apply by letter to Norman Collie, 37, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N. 16.

ST. MARGARET'S, Westminster.—Tenor wanted, principally for chorus work. £20, and deputy fees. Apply to the Vestry Clerk.

PEEL MALE-VOICE CHOIR is in need of TENORS. Practices have been resumed on Thursday evenings, at 8.30 p.m., under conductorship of Henry W. Horwood, Esq., late of Queen's Hall and Philharmonic Orchestras. Inquiries to H. J. Oliver Esq., Hon. Sec., Peel Institute, 14a, Clerkenwell Green, E.C. 1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required at Highbury Quadrant Congregational Church, N. Mixed choir with professional leaders. Candidate with Degree or R.C.O. Diploma, preferred. State salary expected. Apply, by letter, Mr. J. Adams, 79, Ronalds Road, Highbury.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Nicholas' Collegiate Church, Galway. Salary £70. Good organ (Norman & Beard). Teaching connection. Apply to Canon Fleetwood Berry, Rectory, Galway.

ASSISTANT-ORGANISTSHIP, or Sole Charge, desired by experienced Lady Organist holding appointment. Pianoforte, viola, sight-reader. "M. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED, for Leeds and the North, good Pianoforte TUNERS and REPAIRERS. Apply, stating wage and experience, to Archibald Ramsden, Ltd., 12, Park Row, Leeds.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-
MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

EOLIAN PIPE ORGAN for SALE.—17 stops, 2 composition pedals, 116-note, double tracker board, two-manual. Carved black oak case. 10-ft. 6-in. high; 11-ft. broad; 7-ft. deep. Electrically driven. A most beautiful instrument. Can be seen by appointment. The present price of this instrument—which is very difficult to obtain—is £2,300. I will accept £1,700. W. Bowker, 125, Kings Road, Brighton.

FOR SALE.—Karn 2-Manual and Pedal Organ. Riga Wainscot oak case. Splendid condition. Death cause of selling. Offers wanted. Albert Booth, Plumber, Grange Works, Sowerby Bridge.

FOR SALE.—A Hand-barrel Cabinet ORGAN, antique Sheraton style, made by the well-known firm of J. J. Astor, New York. Three barrels, plays ten tunes on each barrel. A unique specimen of an old musical instrument. £15 15s. King, Ewood Court, Mytholmroyd, Yorks.

FOR SALE.—American ORGAN, very superior tone, by Estey. Solid walnut case, in good condition. 17 Stops, Knee-Swells, super Octave-Coupler. Suitable small Church or mission hall. Price £65. Can be seen any time by appointment (Southend-on-Sea). "C. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SPINET, by Broadwood, 1801. £20, or nearest offer. Goddard, School House, Bodham, Holt, Norfolk.

ORGAN PEDALS for Piano. Concave, radiating; and seat. Seen by appointment, London, N. Also quantity Standard Organ Music. "D. T.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS for SALE, Norman & Beard. With bench and foot-board. £10. 12, Sandhurst Grove, Harehills, Leeds.

FOR SALE.—Second-hand Music for Strings and Piano, Trios, Quartets, &c.; also Flute and Piano, Flute and Orchestra. Returnable lists. Brindley, Kennington Avenue, Bristol.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC for SALE.—Cheap. Stamp particulars. (Disabled organist.) J. P. Hardisty, 5, Princess Road, Ripon.

VIOLIN and VIOLONCELLO, by good maker. WANTED. State price and details. "Crouch," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy Song, "THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass: A to D. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

TENOR VOCALISTS should buy Song, "WHO IS SYLVIA?" (Oakley). Compass: E to G. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

HANDEL.—WANTED Letters, early Copies of Works, or authenticated relics of the composer. Flower, Idehurst, Sevenoaks.

THE SINGER'S ART (just Published). By Agnes J. Larkcom. Price 2s. London: Novello & Company, Limited.

NEWFIELD PIANOS.

Artists wishing to PURCHASE a NEWFIELD PIANO, Vertical or Overstrung, on most advantageous terms, can have full particulars from A. E. MILGROM'S Concert Agency, 324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

These Pianos are English made and warranted for twenty years.

PIANO SALE.

ALL PRICES GREATLY REDUCED.

A LARGE STOCK OF PIANOS, VERTICALS AND OVERSTRINGS.

NEW AND SECOND - HAND.

PRICES FROM 34 GUINEAS NET. CASH ONLY.

Can be seen between 11.0 and 5.0, or by appointment, at

MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: MAYFAIR 4123.

THREE ARTS CLUB BUREAU. CONCERT DIRECTION.

RELIABLE ARTISTS FOR ORATORIO AND BALLAD CONCERTS.

19a, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.
Mayfair 2000.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SUITE

FOR STRINGS.

FROM THE DRAMATIC MUSIC OF

HENRY PURCELL

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY

ALBERT COATES.

SCORE.

Price, Two Shillings.

String Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILL BE PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 15TH.

LAMIA

SYMPHONIC POEM

FOR

FULL ORCHESTRA.

BY

DOROTHY HOWELL.

FULL SCORE.

Price, Twenty Shillings.

String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, MS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

BY

JAMES LYON, Mus. D. (Oxon.)

CHAPTERS: I. Introductory; II. Primary Triads, Major or Minor; III. The Secondary Triads; IV. General Information; V. The Inversions of the Diatonic Triads; VI. Sequences; VII. The Dominant Seventh; VIII. Cadences; IX. Modulation Part I; X. Chromatic Triads; XI. Unessential Notes; XII. Suspensions; XIII. Secondary Chords of the Seventh; XIV. The Dominant Ninth; XV. The Dominant Eleventh; XVI. The Dominant Thirteenth; XVII. Chromatic Fundamental Discords; XVIII. The Augmented Sixth; XIX. Chromatically Altered Chords; XX. Modulation, Part 2; XXI. Pedals; XXII. General Hints.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

March 5th. Last day of entry for the next open competition for Scholarships.

March 14th. Last day of entry for the April Examinations for Diplomas and Certificates.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain centres in January last:

FELLOWS (F.T.C.L.).—Henry B. Weatherdon, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., Randolph G. Ball, F.R.C.O.

LICENTIATES (L.Mus. T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—William A. A. Thomson, Mus. B.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Edna M. Beaven, Hilda M. Derry, Phyllis M. Eley, Dorothea E. N. Flawn, Rebecca Gouldman, Eva D. Hoare, George A. James, Edna M. Johns, Gertrude M. Mackinlay, John Martin, Robert E. Moreton, Winifred R. Richards.

ORGAN.—Minnie Bourne.

SINGING.—John M. Smith, Mary E. L. Trimmer.

ELOCUTION.—Fanny L. Clarke.

ASSOCIATES (A.Mus. T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Ena K. Browne, Ellen Done, John M. Rodgers, Emily C. Steers, Hugh Taylor, Ann Warren.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Mabel Bevers, Joseph Booth, Dorothy E. Brown, Elizabeth Booth, Gladys M. Boyce, Cicely M. Butler, Agnes W. Castell-Evans, Doris M. Cole, Ivor R. Davies, Mavis M. Dickinson, Freda R. Dore, Nora Edmondson, Wilfred H. Eva, Sophia Evans, Willie I. Evans, Gladys M. Fellows, Walter Fielden, Albert France, Olive V. Fullers, Cathleen M. Goodwin, Ernest M. Greenhalgh, Hilda Harrison, Sybil Haslam, Elsie Haworth, Nora E. Monro-Higgs, Muriel K. Hollier, Kathleen R. Hopkins, Amy A. Idle, Eva W. Jacques, Griffith J. Jones, Phyllis M. Knowles, Jean Lawson, Jeanie McDowall, Olive S. Mason, Annie Michael, James H. Morgan, Christina Morrisroe, Edward B. Morton, Frances A. Nash, Anna I. Orr, Lilly Parkes, Ada Pepper, Vera I. Perkins, May Perryman, Maureen J. Power, Margaret Procter, Margaret L. Rankin, Francis Rawle, Arthur W. Roberts, Sadie Ruck, Dorothy Schenk, Lonisa K. Scott, Alice Senior, Dorothy E. Sheldon, Gertrude L. Shipp, Dora E. Stanworth, Nellie K. Tasker, Sydney Tilzey, Dorothy O. Trevett, Agnes Turton, Helen F. E. Watkins, Phyllis G. Wilder.

ORGAN.—Reginald B. Bright, Ernest Dawson, Harry Edge, Frederick W. Harvey, Mary Logue, Ernest F. Palmer.

SINGING.—Gladys H. Nash, Mary E. Plumb (Honours in General Principles of Scientific Teaching), Mary G. Ward.

VIOLIN.—Edna C. Baker.

ELOCUTION.—Dieu-Donné Gleave, Elizabeth J. James.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Nora Atkinson, Frances A. Butcher (Hons.), Percy C. Chambers, Archibald J. S. Day, Dorothy A. Dell (Hons.), Edith W. Fry (Hons.), Elsie Garjulo, Irene S. Holland (Hons.), Harold Hutson (Hons.), Ethel Humphries (Hons.), Emily L. Maltby, Doris A. Rockett, Pattie D. Wall, Osborne E. Wear (Hons.).

ORGAN.—Herbert J. Burge, Emily D. Marshall.

SINGING.—Irene Moreton (Hons.).

EXAMINERS.—J. C. Bridge, Mus. D., Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Percy C. Buck, Mus. D., Sir Frederick H. Cowen, Mus. D., Edward d'Evry, F.R.C.O., A. E. Drinkwater, M.A., Dawson Freer, F. J. Gostelow, F.R.C.O., H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Cairns James, Charlton Keith, C. H. Kitson, M.A., Mus. D., S. Myerscough, Mus. B., C. W. Pearce, Mus. D., Alec Rowley, F.R.C.O., C. Vincent, Mus. D., J. Warriner, Mus. D.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W. 1.

Messrs. Novello & Co. beg leave to announce that they have purchased the copyright, plates, and stock of the Works by the late

J. VARLEY ROBERTS,

hitherto published by them as author's property.

List may be had on application to

NOVELLO &amp; Co., Ltd.,

160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1.

BROADWOOD
PIANOS

BOSWORTH &amp; CO., LTD.

CONCERTOS FOR TWO PIANOS (4 HANDS).

(Two copies of each work necessary.)

	Net	s.	d.
ARENSKY, A.—Op. 15, Suite ... ..	...	4	0
BACH, J. C.—Concertos in G major, E major, D major ...	ea.	3	6
BACH, J. S.—Concertos in D major, E major ...	ea.	3	9
— Concertos, F minor, A minor ...	ea.	3	9
— Concertos, D minor, F major ...	ea.	3	9
BACH, K. P. E.—Concertos, C minor, G major, D major (No. 2), E♭ major ...	ea.	3	9
BACH, W. F.—Concertos, F major, E♭ major, originally composed for two pianos... ..	ea.	3	9
— Concertos, E minor, D major, A minor, F major ...	ea.	3	9
BEETHOVEN.—Concerto No. 1, C major ...	ea.	3	9
— Ditto, No. 2, B♭ major; No. 3, C minor; No. 4, G major; No. 5, E♭ major ...	ea.	2	6
CHOPIN.—Concerto, Op. 11, E minor ...	ea.	3	6
— Concerto, Op. 21, F minor ...	ea.	3	6
HANDEL.—Concerto, G minor, F major ...	ea.	2	6
HAYDN.—Concerto, D major ...	ea.	3	6
HUMMEL.—Concerto, Op. 85, A minor ...	ea.	3	6
— Concerto, Op. 89, B minor ...	ea.	3	6
MENDELSSOHN.—Concerto, Op. 25, G minor ...	ea.	2	6
— Concerto, Op. 40, D minor ...	ea.	2	6
MOSCHELES.—Concerto, Op. 58, G minor ...	ea.	3	6
MOZART.—Concerto, D minor ...	ea.	2	6
— Concertos, C major, E♭ major, C minor ...	ea.	2	6
— Concerto, A major ...	ea.	2	6
— Concerto, B major ...	ea.	3	9
— Coronation, Concerto D major ...	ea.	2	6
— Concerto, Rondo, D major ...	ea.	3	6
— Concerto, E♭ major, for two pianos, with the full orchestral accompaniment arranged for 2nd piano... ..	ea.	3	9
RAMEAU, J. PH.—5 Piano Concertos ...	ea.	3	9
SCHUMANN.—Concerto, Op. 54, B minor ...	ea.	3	6
— Concerted Pieces, Op. 92, G major, and Op. 134, D minor ...	ea.	3	6
WEBER.—Op. 11, Concerto, C major ...	ea.	3	9
— Op. 32, Concerto, E major... ..	ea.	3	9

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., Ltd.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES' Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH
HARPSICHORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)
2. Petit air tendre ... L. J. Saint-Amans
3. La Bourrée de Vincent ... J. P. Rameau
4. Tambourin Chinois ... E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Reproduced, by permission, from a Photograph by G. C. Beresford, Brompton Road, London.

GERVASE ELWES

1866—1921

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FEBRUARY I 1921

GERVASE ELWES

It is long since the musical world received such a painful shock as on January 12, when a cable from New York announced that Gervase Elwes had been accidentally killed at Boston railway station. He had been in America only a fortnight, and had commenced a concert tour with a recital at New York a few days before.

Gervase Elwes had a place of his own in our musical life. We have better voices, and even better singers from a purely technical point of view, for his organ was not remarkable for power or range, and there was frequently a sense of effort in his highest notes. But in singing, even more than in instrumental performance, deficiencies on the score of tone and technique may be outweighed by interpretative gifts, and by the various factors that make up what is covered by the comprehensive term 'personality.'

Herein lay his peculiar excellences. Save that he rarely sang works calling for other than serious expression, he had, on the interpretative side, much in common with Plunket Greene. He sang with a whole-hearted fervour that took his hearers captive, and the way to this sympathetic understanding was made the easier by the beauty and clearness of his enunciation. For him, English was no ugly, unsingable tongue.

The serious bent to which reference has been made naturally led him to oratorio, and he will be remembered chiefly for his work in two of the greatest examples of that form—one old, the other modern. The modern work comes to mind first. It is sometimes said, and with a good deal of truth, that executive artists leave little or nothing by which they can be remembered. Their most brilliant performances, especially if they be singers, are often in connection with music of ephemeral character. Elwes, however, was for so long identified with the part of Gerontius that his memory will live with Elgar's work. Apart from the religious convictions which made him a peculiarly fitting exponent of the part, he was especially well-equipped for the performance of music which in a superlative degree calls for intimate expression. He sang the part at the first performance of the oratorio, in April, 1904, and has been closely identified with it ever since.

His other outstanding success was with the music of Bach. From time to time he sang on the concert-platform airs from the Church cantatas, and by his beautifully-phrased and expressive performances did much to draw attention to these hitherto neglected masterpieces of Bach. He had no superior in the trying part of the Narrator in the 'St. Matthew' Passion. He was aided here by his clearness of utterance, and not less by the unerring instinct with which he lightly passed over the less essential portions of the text. In his hands recitativo secco was a vital thing, instead of the infliction so many singers make it—a dreary series of stereotyped phrases, with the words only partly audible.

As a singer of songs Elwes was ever ready to bring forward examples by native composers. It has even been said that his kindness in this matter led him to add to his repertoire a few songs that were scarcely worthy of his powers. But this fault, in so far as it results from a sympathetic appreciation of the work of his fellow-countrymen, is one that we can not only easily forgive, but even wish to see committed by other artists.

On the concert-platform he was identified with a work that, both through its words and its music, makes a unique appeal to English folk—the 'Wenlock Edge' cycle of Laurence Housman and Vaughan Williams. Here, as in 'Gerontius,' he found an ideal medium for his interpretative gifts.

Ample biographical details have appeared in the daily press during the past few days, so there is no need in this place for more than the merest outline. From a lengthy article in the Musical Times of May, 1912, we take the following facts.

Gervase Elwes was born at Billing, near Northampton, on November 15, 1866. In 1877 he went to the school connected with the Oratory, Birmingham, founded by Cardinal Newman. Here he played the violin in the school quartet, and with the musical fathers of the Oratory. In later years he used to recall with interest the fact that Cardinal Newman, himself something of a violinist, used to attend the practices with enjoyment. The boy had an excellent treble voice, and was of course a valuable member of the choir.

In 1881 he went to Woburn School at Weybridge (where he gave a good deal of attention to the violin and pianoforte), leaving for Christ Church, Oxford, in 1885. His adult voice promised to be baritone, but at this stage nothing was done in regard to its development. Nor, during his stay at Munich (1888-90), where he had gone to study languages in preparation for a career in the Diplomatic Service, did such musical work as he found time for take a vocal turn. Instead, he played the violin. During this Munich period he married Lady Winefride Feilding, a daughter of the Earl of Denbigh. In 1891 he was appointed honorary attaché to the British Embassy at Vienna. Here he still worked at music, taking harmony lessons from Mandyczewski. His voice began to develop during his three years at Brussels (1892-95), where he held an appointment at the British Legation. He studied singing under Demest at the Brussels Conservatoire, and was still a baritone rather than a tenor when he left Brussels and the Diplomatic Service together. After a few years in which he sang a good deal as an amateur, he decided to enter the musical profession. He went to Paris and placed himself in the hands of Bouhy, working tremendously and taking ten lessons a week—two with Bouhy, four with one of his assistants, and four in opera classes.

Probably the distinct articulation that conduced so much to his success in after years was largely due to an incident that happened at this time. He often told the story later, with none the less relish for its being against himself.

He sang one day to Higgins, during one of the latter's visits to Paris in search of singers for Covent Garden. Elwes sang 'If with all your hearts,' and had something of a shock when Higgins, after a few pleasant remarks, added that if he had not known the aria he could not have guessed the language in which it was being sung. Elwes took the lesson to heart, and for a long while practised reading aloud and singing with a pencil between his teeth.

His first professional engagement in this country was at the Westmorland Festival in 1903, when he sang the solos in Somervell's 'The Power of Sound' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode.' He was, however, not fully satisfied with his vocal equipment—the criticisms of his singing both at Westmorland Festival and at his subsequent début in London were not as a whole favourable—so he resumed his studies, this time with Beigel, a well-known Vienna professor at that time in London. He afterwards regarded this period of study as his musical salvation.

This brings us to 1904, the year in which, chiefly by his creation of the title-rôle in 'The Dream of Gerontius,' he made an assured position for himself. His tragic end came when his reputation was at its height.

A word should be said as to his interest in the Competitive Festival Movement. He had great faith in its educational value, and showed his belief in the most practical way by giving a good deal of time to the organization of festivals near his Lincolnshire home.

Gervase Elwes entered the profession comparatively late in life—in his thirty-sixth year—so his career has been short. But length of days is not all, and it is certain that his seventeen years as a public singer have had far more influence for good on the musical life of this country than many more careers of treble the length. Nor was this influence solely musical. He brought into professional circles qualities that are notoriously rare among its members—modesty, generous recognition of the talents of others, and unfailing courtesy. These things belong to the man rather than to the musician, and although Gervase Elwes will long be remembered as a singer, all who had the privilege of even a slight acquaintance with him will treasure far more the fragrant memory of a personality of rare distinction and charm.

PARRY AS SONG-WRITER

By H. C. COLLES

Two sets of songs by the late Sir Hubert Parry, recently published by Messrs. Novello, bring his sets of English Lyrics up to twelve volumes, and place before the public all which it is thought desirable to publish of the songs the composer left in manuscript.

Parry was among the least methodical of composers in the classification of his works. He abandoned opus numbers at the stage at which they become useful—that is, when they had reached the early twenties—and since then the date of the copyright or the occasion for which a work was written has been the chief means of determining the order of his compositions. But in the case of songs for a single voice with pianoforte accompaniment Parry fell into a convenient habit of publishing in sets periodically in a uniform edition, and hence it comes that in the twelve books of English Lyrics we have a corpus of his work in this genre from which it should be possible now to form a fair estimate of his character as a song-writer.

The first set of English Lyrics appeared in 1886 (published by Stanley Lucas, afterwards acquired by Novello), and was followed by a second set in 1887. This last was also the year of 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' the choral work which more than any other established Parry in public esteem, and marked him as a composer who had passed the stage of youthful experiment, had formed his own ideals, chosen his own means of expression, making certain acceptances and certain refusals in technique, from which in point of fact he never after departed seriously.

He was then in his fortieth year; a comprehensive list of compositions already stood to his credit. It included two symphonies, a pianoforte concerto, a variety of concerted chamber works, and such memorable choral works as the Scenes from Shelley's 'Prometheus unbound' and Shirley's Ode, 'The Glories of our Blood and State.' Among these are various song publications, one of the most interesting being the three 'Odes from Anacreon' (Moore's version), which enlivened appropriately the wine parties of Oxford undergraduates in the 'eighties. Big, bold, baritone songs, with a touch of the devil in them, much of the jollity of life, and some of the sentiment which youth feels about old age, they are entirely honest, happy, and clean. 'A garland of Shakespearean and other old-fashioned lyrics' was published by Lambourn Cock as Op. 21. It contains some things, such as 'A Sea Dirge,' which ought to be available now. Indeed it would be well worth while to go through the desultory publications before the English Lyrics began to appear, and make a little supplement drawn from the best of the early songs which have gone out of print.

It is to be noticed that one quite early song, 'O world! O life! O time!', written fifty years ago, appears in the twelfth set now before us, and it is among the most beautiful of the series. But before the appearance of the first set of English Lyrics, Parry's song-writing was merely an off-shoot among more absorbing activities. The years 1886-87 saw not only the appearance of the first two sets of English lyrics, the first with words chosen from Philip Sidney, Shelley, Scott, and Shakespeare, the second containing five songs, all by Shakespeare; but there was also published (Stanley Lucas) a set of four Sonnets by Shakespeare which are by far the most important of Parry's works for single voice and pianoforte outside the collection by which he is now mainly represented. These Sonnets are: 'When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes' (xxix.),

'Farewell, thou art too dear for my possessing' (lxxxvii.), 'Shall I compare thee to a summer's day' (xviii.), and 'When to the sessions of sweet silent thought' (xxx.). They mark even more decisively than the two books of English lyrics the starting-point of Parry's maturity as a songwriter. They show him handling with easy mastery the most baffling of poetic forms, never tempted to distort it for the sake of musical elaboration, never failing to find the point of a line in a supple vocal phrase or an apt comment in the harmonic expression, yet always securing a balanced musical design to match the formal characteristics of the verse.

As these Sonnets are so little known, a quotation may illustrate this point here. The passage given as Ex. 1 is the opening of Sonnet No. xxix:

Ex. 1. Agitato.

When in dis - grace with for - tune and men's eyes I all a - lone be - weep my out - cast state.

Its restraint and directness combined appeal at once to all who love the flavour of Shakespeare's lines. It is good reading vocalised. Indeed, one of the best tributes to Parry's genius in this respect was offered by a man of letters who once journeyed from London to Lancashire to hear 'L'Allegro,' because, he said, 'Parry is the only composer who, without annoying one, can set music to the things one has always loved.'

The melody sweeps forward through two quatrains, the restless syncopation always heightening the disquiet of the mood until the crisis of the third quatrain, where it is resolved in the following:

Ex. 2.

Yet in these thoughts my - self al - most des - pi - sing, Hap - ly I think on thee, on thee
and then my state, Like to the lark

It is quite impossible to analyse the extraordinary sense of satisfaction which this passage gives. The material is of the simplest description, the change from the minor to the major mode and from syncopations to plain chords, the repetitions of the phrase 'On thee' (Parry rarely allows himself any repetition of words), are all the commonplaces of musical device. But the absolute rightness of the thing is magical. Those who do not feel the magic need scarcely trouble to pursue the study of Parry's songs further. They will not find anything, whether in his early or late examples, which is likely to interest them deeply. But those who do feel it will be encouraged to the study by the knowledge that, working through a large number of songs, not all of which are masterpieces, and many of which contain obvious defects of manner—especially in their instrumental writing—there is the prospect of discovering innumerable moments of eloquence, the art of which is entirely independent of artifice.

It is Parry's power of adding just so much music as can absorb the words, so that the song becomes a saturated solution of poetry in music, which produces his triumphs, and he was at first most sure of finding the right solvent when he took up the poets of the Elizabethan era rather than those of modern times. Of the thirteen songs which form the 1886-87 group, ten are by Shakespeare, and five of them are Sonnets, for besides the four published together, there is Sonnet lxxi. in the second book of Lyrics. It might be said of him that the fewer the notes the finer is the music, and he felt little temptation to multiply notes when his thought was in contact with the precise verbal expression of the earlier poets.

The later sets of Lyrics (III. to X.) came out mostly in pairs. Books III. and IV. (1895-96) are contrasted by the choice of authors. In the former Lovelace, Beddoes, and Suckling prevail, though Sturgis' 'Through the Ivory Gate,' perhaps the best-known of the larger songs through performances at recitals, is also found here. Emerson, Byron, Keats are prominent in Book IV., though he harks back to the Elizabethans with an exquisite setting of 'Weep you no more, sad fountains.'

Several of the songs which have been brought nearest to popularity are contained in the two Books, V. and VI., which belong to the years 1902-03. 'Proud Maisie' is most constantly chosen to represent Parry by singers who plume themselves on their 'British programmes,' and beside it in Book V. is 'Crabbed Age and Youth,' in which the pitfall of a trite rhythm offered by the short lines is wonderfully evaded; the Coda is a masterpiece of prolongation only paralleled by Purcell's 'Knotting Song':

Ex. 3.

In Book VI. is the bustling 'Love is a bable,' followed by 'A Lover's Garland,' the words of which 'from the Greek by A. P. Graves,' seem to have travelled viâ Ireland and have brought a rare Irish fragrance to the melody. Perhaps this is why Mr. Plunket Greene has been able to make this lovely song so peculiarly his own, so that it has overshadowed the statuesque English melody given to 'And yet I love her till I die' in the same volume.

Books VII. and VIII. were published together in 1907, and show a very distinct change of character from that of their predecessors. Book VII. consists indeed mainly of old lyrics, but Book VIII. abandons the old for the new. Even in setting Shakespeare and Ben Jonson Parry seems less completely at his ease than formerly. Certain restless figures in the instrumental part obtrude into the setting of Sonnet cix.:

Ex. 4.

The recurrence of this little nervous arpeggio in the lower part never quite explains itself in relation to those words which it seems intended to underline. Again, 'Follow a Shadow' depends on the balance of vocal declamation with a pictorial instrumental figure which is exceedingly difficult of adjustment in performance :

Ex. 5.
Capriccioso.

Capriccioso. Fol-low a shad-ow, it still flies you;

These signs of experiment, though they lie on the surface, are symptoms of a deeper change of outlook. Parry seems to be seeking to make the song a more personal type of expression than it had formerly been to him, and the beautiful 'Sleep' which ends the volume, with its long-drawn vocal phrases and its intimate rocking accompaniment, seems particularly the outcome of this change.

It is not surprising that the next volume (VIII.) should consist entirely of modern lyrics, three of which are by Julian Sturgis, author of 'Sleep' and of 'Through the Ivory Gate,' and to whose words Parry became increasingly partial. Sturgis often gave him the things he wanted to talk about, and that became more essential to Parry than the pure beauty of rhythmic language which had first attracted him to the Elizabethans. 'Whence?' a poem in praise of 'the prophet of days to be,' appealed direct to that political idealism which he was never weary of expressing in the greater choral works of the period, ranging from 'Voces Clamantium' (Hereford, 1903) to 'The Vision of Life,' produced at Cardiff in the year that these songs were published. He set the words with enthusiasm, launching impetuously into that angular phraseology which has become too familiar as one of his minor characteristics :

Ex. 6.
Grandioso.

Grandioso. Bay crowned and good-lier than a King;

Allargando. With voice both strong and sweet, The song of free-dom he will sing. And I . . . from out the crowd shall fling . . . my rose - wreath . . . at his feet.

There is something amiss with these turbulent interjections in the instrumental part, which here seem to belong more to the orchestra than to the pianoforte, and, when he writes them for the orchestra, again seem to belong to something else, and yet the thing is splendid; it carries a thrill with it culminating in the gorgeous cadence of the last line.

The songs in this volume are very varied. 'Whence?' is followed by the icy chill of Langdon Elwyn Mitchell's 'Nightfall in Winter,' and this with George Meredith's 'Dirge in Woods' makes a rare and singularly successful excursion into the purely descriptive type of song. 'Grapes,' at the end of the volume, recalls something of the mood of the youthful 'Odes from Anacreon.'

Book VIII. in fact marks a new epoch in his style, which is further illustrated by the contents of the later books. The ninth, published two years later (1909), stands apart from the others by the fact that it is devoted to the poems of one author, and that a personal friend, Miss Mary Coleridge, who had died recently, and whose thoughtful little poems with their touch of mysticism and their charm of imagery gave Parry congenial material. 'A Fairy Town,' 'The Witches' Wood,' 'Armida's Garden,' hint at allegories which are made plain in the last of the series, 'There.' The set is the nearest thing to a song-cycle that Parry ever wrote, and they should be sung together if a singer could be found with the qualities of voice and brain to do equal justice to each number. They are by no means all equally successful, which is one reason for suggesting that they should be sung in sequence. One can hardly suppose for example that anyone would pick out 'Three Aspects' as a song to be sung purely for its own sake, yet it has force as an introduction to those which follow it. It is an instance of an unfortunate tendency of technique in Parry's songs of this period, the tendency to overcrowd the instrumental part with fussy figures which are not genuinely expressive, such as the following:

Ex. 7.

A cease - less striv - ing 'gainst un - num - bered foes.

Another and happier characteristic of these songs is an aspiration after a freer scheme of tonality than that which had contented him formerly. This aspiration, already evidenced in the ending of 'Whence?' is carried to the point of achieving delightful results by adroit modulation such as this in 'Whether I live':

Ex. 8.

mf Animando.
Who ev - er was fool - ish, we were wise,

we cross-ed the boundary line.

Tempo mo.
I saw the rit. a tempo.

soul look out of your eyes.

rit.

but it goes no further. Parry himself never 'crossed the boundary line' between his own accepted harmonic technique and those resources of combined chords and keys which are commonplaces of 'modernism,' but which always remained for him contradictions in terms.

This freer scheme, however, influences several of the last set of songs which he prepared for publication and which appeared in the last year of his life (1918). This, the tenth book of English Lyrics, contains six songs for high voice and is dedicated to Mrs. Hamilton Harty (Miss Agnes Nicholls), who was Parry's chosen interpreter of many of the soprano parts in his larger works and whose voice clearly inspired certain of the later songs. 'My heart is like a singing bird' is hardly what he would have chosen to set had he not had a particular voice in mind, and he revelled in writing the soaring, exuberant phrases in which Miss Agnes Nicholls excels and ninety per cent. of sopranos fail:

My love,

beautifully as the lyric is treated to suit this special medium it is impossible to produce anything but a song of obvious emotion, and the later numbers of the set, 'Gone were but the winter cold,' 'A moment of farewell,' and particularly 'From a city window,' are the things which make this volume compare with the varied interests of Book VIII.

We must leave such comparisons aside for the moment, however, in order to glance at the contents of the two new volumes and see what addition they make to our knowledge of Parry as a song-writer. These fifteen songs are edited by Dr. Emily Daymond, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, and Dr. Charles Wood. It is known that Parry intended two more sets of English Lyrics, and the preface which the three editors initial says that five or six of them had actually been mentioned by him as among those that he meant to publish. Further it tells us that

The songs now published comprise examples that represent the composer at widely different periods of his life; from 'O world! O life! O time!' (first written about 1870 and finally revised a few years ago) to the song that concludes the whole series, which, with its singularly appropriate words, was actually signed on his last birthday, February 27, 1918.

It seems fairly safe to guess however that a wide gap separates 'O world! O life! O time!' from its companions, and that the majority belong more nearly to that period which is represented by the publications of 1907 and subsequent years.

Book XI. contains eight songs for a low or mezzo voice; Book XII. contains seven, all for high voice. These have been disposed with more care for effective contrast than the composer himself generally bestowed on such matters, and it should be said at once that the whole task of editing has been carried out with rare sympathy and careful scholarship. Book XI. begins with 'One golden thread,' a trifling poem by Julia Chatterton, treated with such delicacy that the music raises it to unexpected consequence. That is true of several of these songs. Parry sees the ideal behind a weak and even jejune verbal expression, and makes one forget the defect in viewing with him the content of the whole. The lyrics of Alfred Perceval Graves, four of which are included here, all have a dewy, folk-song flavour which calls out the happiest side of Parry's art, and lovers of 'I'm wearing sweet violets' will quickly discover the charm of 'The Spirit of the Spring,' 'The Blackbird,' 'The Faithful Lover,' and 'She is my love.'

'If I might ride on puissant wing' (Sturgis) is so lightly poised that its charm is less readily discovered, and may be very easily brushed away by imperfect performance. Amongst these are two songs of a more severe type, 'What part of dread eternity,' the authorship of which is unidentified, and Massinger's 'Why art thou slow,' which alone in this volume recalls the more classical standpoint of Parry's earlier style.

Book XII. is still more various. It begins and ends with Julia Chatterton, and it must be confessed that, apart from the personal sentiment which attaches to his last birthday song, 'The sound of hidden music,' is not the one which we should linger over with the keenest sense of satisfaction. Herrick's 'To Blossoms,' and Beddoes' 'Dream Pedlary,' raise more subtle problems of design and rhythm, and more amply fulfil the expectations they arouse. 'Rosaline' (Thomas Lodge) contrasts strongly with these miniatures, and is remarkable for its frank exuberance, and as being almost the only one among Parry's larger songs which seems made for a tenor voice of the robust, full-bodied type. The other big song of this set, 'When the sun's great orb,' is almost overwhelming in its difficulty of execution and interpretation. It is one of several written for Miss Alice Elieson (Mrs. H. Warner) to words by her husband, and its mighty theme:

The trumpet's blast resounds
In clear and resonant tones
The reveille for the resurrection of the dead . . .

inspired Parry to a unique effort. The result is a song in which the strength and the weakness of his later style are contrasted with singular sharpness. Even those most eager to perceive the majestic conception at the back of it must share a doubt of the way in which it is presented. But the explanation of what exactly that doubt is must belong to a more detailed analysis than would be appropriate at the close of this summary of his work as a song-writer.

The object has been to suggest the wide field which the twelve books of English Lyrics cover, and to show that they offer grounds for regarding Parry as one of the great song-writers of his time. It was right to publish 'When the sun's great orb,' for without it we should lose an essential aspect of him. We may well pause here before beginning the more detailed examination which must justify or dispel the contention.

(To be continued.)

The Federation of British Music Industries is now conducting a series of trade Lectures at Mortimer Hall, London, two of which were announced for dates in January. The most interesting of the series for the general musician is that to be given on February 15, by Mr. H. Saxe Wyndham, on 'Covent Garden Opera House and its History,' with musical illustrations.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from January number, page 17)

BY HARVEY GRACE

V.—THE SONATAS FOR TWO MANUALS AND PEDALS

We have seen Bach producing his 'Little Organ Book' for the instruction of 'the beginning organist.' It was fitting that he should supplement that delightful work with a no less admirable collection of pieces calculated to produce the finished player. Bach joins hands with the moderns in a good many ways, but never more pleasantly and humanly than when, as in these cases, in the Anna Magdalena Clavier Book, and elsewhere, he showed how the student's technical and musical development should be simultaneous. As Parry says, 'he delighted in combining the beautiful with the educationally helpful.' It was left for some of his successors to produce dreary wastes of keyboard studies entirely devoid of musical significance—mere technical hard nuts with no kernel of beauty to make the cracking worth while.

Purists point out that these works ought not to be described as organ sonatas, inasmuch as they were written for a two-manual clavicembalo with pedals. But we may reasonably assume that Bach played them on the organ, and we know that they were written as studies in organ technique. Moreover, the title-page leaves the matter open: 'the works commonly known as the six Sonatas for the organ . . . are nowhere authoritatively described as for that instrument, but on a title-page (which may be of Bach's time, or soon after) as "Six Sonatas for Two Keyboards and Pedal," by which is most probably intended a harpsichord with two rows of keys and pedals.' (Parry, but my italics.) The two-manual and pedal clavichord was (as Griepenkerl tells us) 'an instrument at that time in the possession of every student on the organ, to exercise hands and feet at home and to prepare facility in a free use of them on the organ; for in the opinion of that time everything on the organ itself should be free invention.' (We need not consider the latter point seriously. The organ student practised at home mainly to save time and organ-blowers' wages.)

That Bach associated the instrument with organ music is proved by his having included a number of choral preludes in the 'Clavierübung.' It is worth noting, too, that Forkel deals with the sonatas in the section headed 'Compositions for the Organ,' adding that Bach wrote 'other organ Sonatas,' alluding, probably, to the Pastorale, trios, and similar detached movements. This is significant, because Forkel lived sufficiently near the Bach era to have imbibed a good many of the ideas of Bach's contemporaries regarding his works. And although the idiom of the Sonatas is not always that of the organ, it is in many places certainly not that of the clavicembalo. Such passages as :

Ex. 1. Largo.

would be ineffective on the clavicembalo because of its inability to sustain tone. This is only one of the numerous cases where Bach was thinking in terms of the organ, or of some such chamber combination as flute and violin, rather than of an instrument so lacking in sostenuto as the clavicembalo. As a particularly striking example, see the fugue which forms the Finale of the C minor Sonata. The countersubject in the treble in bars 10-14, is a typical piece of organ writing—indeed, it is a fellow to that in the great G minor Fugue. The point as to whether the works were written for organ is not important, and I have touched on it only because Bach's biographers seem to have decided rather too readily in favour of the clavicembalo. But after all, whatever the works may have been originally, we may boldly call them organ sonatas now for two excellent reasons: (1) they have become a very important part of the organ repertoire, and (2) there is no other instrument in general use on which they can be played.

The composition of the various movements extended over a considerable period, and, as is so frequently the case with Bach's works, some of the material was originally designed for other purposes. Thus the Finale of the E minor Sonata originally came between the Prelude and Fugue in G major (the Fugue on the subject from the Cantata 'My spirit was in heaviness'), and the Adagio and Vivace which open the same Sonata were extracted from the Cantata 'Die Himmel Erzählen.' The Largo in A minor was intended to serve as a middle movement to the Prelude and Fugue in C major, probably that with the Fugue subject c-d-e-f. (Schweitzer alone says the Largo belonged to a Prelude and Fugue in G minor, an unlikely theory, on the score of key, though of course Bach may have transposed it from G minor when using it for the Sonata.) The oldest of the movements appears to be that which opens the D minor Sonata; it is found among the variants of the first part of the 'Well-Tempered Clavier.'

There can be no question as to the effectiveness of the organ as a medium for works of this kind. We may be sure that if Bach wrote them for the clavicembalo he was not long in perceiving that whereas that instrument merely gave him two manuals and pedals all of the same tone-colour, the only difference between the manuals being that of power and (by means of an octave-coupler) of pitch, the organ enabled him to use a different colour for each of the three voices, and to make them all of equal strength when desired. The last point is important, because although there are some passages where the effect should clearly be that of melody and accompaniment, the texture is mainly polyphonic, and its beauty can be properly realised only when the three strands vary in colour but not in strength.

In style they are a curious blend of the Italian and the German. Bach wrote them when passing through a kind of chamber music phase. He was apt to follow up in this way any branch of composition that attracted him specially. Parry suggests that they were written 'as a kind of sequel to the Sonatas for violin and clavier, or flute and clavier. Bach had here written a good deal in three-part polyphony, one voice being given to the violinist and a couple to the keyboard player. He may have been struck by the desirability of a similar type of writing for a medium in which all three parts could be managed by one performer.' The only point against this theory of Parry's is that, as we have seen, two of the movements had already been written definitely for use as organ works. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that in the sonatas Bach was developing an organ form in which he had previously experimented. Later he continued to develop it by combining it with the choral prelude, some of his finest specimens being cast in organ trio shape.

Spitta thinks that in these works Bach found the three-movement organ form that he had endeavoured to establish in the Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, and in one or two other organ works. This may be so, for although at first sight a slow movement between a prelude and a fugue may seem to be well placed, in actual practice it works out otherwise unless all the movements are on the short side. There is a vital difference between a three-movement sonata and a prelude and fugue separated by a slow movement. In the sonata the most serious business is almost invariably in the opening movement, and the finale makes the least demands on the hearer. In the case of a prelude and fugue the complexities are in the latter, and the longer and more elaborately developed the prelude the less chance there is of the fugue making its full effect. (In our last chapter we saw in the Toccata and Fugue in F a good example of a fugue being killed by its prelude.) But probably the real origin of the Sonatas is to be found in Bach's habit of working out the possibilities of any form to which by necessity or chance his attention had been directed. The bulk of the movements were undoubtedly written round about 1723-27, a period when, judging from the chronological list of his works, the chamber music fit was on him. It was a natural and happy idea to write a type of chamber music possessing the double claim of being well adapted for both clavicembalo and organ. And here was young Friedemann growing up, already a notable performer, and hoping soon to leave home for his first post: the Sonatas would be just the thing to add the finishing touches to his playing. This is not mere guesswork. Forkel says: 'Bach wrote them [the Sonatas] for his eldest son, Wilhelm Friedemann, whom they helped to become the great performer he was when I knew him.' Friedemann, thus technically armed, was appointed organist at the Sophienkirche, Dresden, in 1733.

Bach's readiness to be influenced by a mere word has already been mentioned in discussing the 'Little Organ Book.' We have another example here. Parry says, 'It may seem a little perplexing that he not only took over the grouping of movements and the name, but also the Italian style. This may have been owing to his extreme susceptibility even to words, so that the Italian name set his mind going in an Italian style. But it may also have been the much more subtle reason that, the type of sonata having been mainly cultivated by Italians—and that with distinguished success—the associations of the particular scheme were all mainly Italian.' The Italian influence is obvious. What seems so far to have been overlooked is the probability of early French organ writers having contributed something. They were much given to the writing of organ trios, and Bach, we know, possessed a good deal of their music in MS.

If the Sonatas are less appreciated than they should be, the fact is probably due to editors, commentators, and teachers having laid undue stress on their value as technical material. No doubt many a student has taken them up as studies and has soon come under their spell as pure music. But probably the majority stick at the exercise stage, and, after working at a few movements as studies in independence of hands and feet, lay the volume aside with Rinck's 'School' and Schneider's Trios. Oddly enough, some of the movements have achieved a wide popularity in unexpected quarters owing to the efforts not of an organist but of an orchestral conductor. Sir Henry Wood's arrangements of the Andante from No. 4 and the Vivace from No. 6 have long been much enjoyed by Queen's Hall audiences. One would have thought that the hint should have been enough for our organ players, and especially our recitalists. The movements arranged by Sir Henry are equalled, even surpassed, in attractive qualities by several of their companions. Let the recitalist who wishes to deal a stout blow at the still-lingering tradition that Bach was a mere composer of dry fugues play again and again the first and third movements of the E flat, the slow movement of the D minor, the first movement of the C minor, the Andante and Finale of the E minor, and the first and third movements of the G major. There are other movements as good—for example, the Finale of the C minor, which is one of the finest of three-voice fugues—but those mentioned above are most likely to appeal at once to the average hearer.

The charm of the Sonatas lies chiefly in their melodiousness, the close and animated interplay of their voices (especially in the manual parts), and the beautiful ease and flow of the polyphony. Let us look at a few examples of themes that take hold of one immediately. Here is the frank subject which opens No. 1:

The Adagio that follows is in Siciliano style, beginning with this expressive tune:

So far as the slow movements are concerned, however, the palm for melody must go to the Adagio of No. 3, the theme of which has a kind of lazy grace all its own:

Bach was evidently fond of it, for he arranged it later as a Trio for flute, violin, and clavier, in which form it serves as a slow movement to a Concerto in A minor. In the version before us nothing is more delightful than the way the tune steals in with one of its voices slightly decorated, first in D minor, later in F, with the parts inverted. Here is the D minor passage:

Very characteristic is the robust subject of the Vivace of No. 6:

and hardly less arresting the opening of the Finale:

One of the most enjoyable of all the eighteen movements is the Finale of No. 2. It does not lend itself to quotation, because its effect lies in the sparkling animation with which it is carried through. It is one of the very best of all Bach's recital works. A movement which runs it close in this quality of spirited tunefulness is the Vivace of No. 4. One would like to comment on the delightful development in some of the movements, but space does not permit. Let the student examine the Allegro moderato of No. 1, and see what Bach makes of the figure with which Ex. 2 begins. He should then look at the Siciliano which follows, and note Bach's use of Ex. 3 inverted and given to the pedals. And, as a crowning example of making something out of nothing, the Andante of No. 4 must be touched on. This is one of the movements so popular with Queen's Hall audiences. Yet it consists of nothing more than a couple of motives of the simplest description, embellished, inverted, imitated, and made the most of generally. Here is a quotation showing the second of these two themes, a figure half a bar in length, elaborated and used in dialogue fashion, the whole passage being then inverted:

It should be observed that this theme is really a development of the figure:

which is a prominent feature in the counter-theme of the first subject, so that the germ of the whole movement is in the first three bars.

As was said above, the organ is a better medium for the sonatas than any instrument of the cembalo type could have been. This superiority is shown unmistakably in some of the rapid conversational passages. Sometimes these consist of short phrases treated in canon:

One of the charms of such passages is the eager effect of the close capping—an effect that depends largely on the voices being of equal strength and of different quality. At times we find all three voices joining in this animated interplay:

Only an organ or a chamber music combination can do such passages justice. There are no more delightful moments in Bach's organ music than these—and they are frequent in the Sonatas.

A few words on the registration. A good working principle may be based on the fact that in form, idiom, as well as in a certain intimate quality, the Sonatas are chamber music. Violent changes of stops are clearly out of place; for, as Schweitzer points out, it is inconceivable that new instruments should be added in the course of a Trio. Nevertheless, we must be prepared to make slight modifications in the relative strength of the keyboards from time to time, especially in passages where the melodic interest shifts from keyboard to keyboard. For example, in the first movement of No. 3, the combination that suits:

will be absurdly top-heavy for the inversion of the passage that occurs later on. The triplets should be a mere delicate ripple, especially when they occur in the higher position. Most cases of this kind can be met with ease on organs with an enclosed Choir; at all events, so far as the softer movements are concerned. In the louder ones we shall be reminded once more of the deficiency of the average English Choir organ in the matter of mf diapason tone. It may be necessary to add or throw off a stop at times. If so, we should make a change as unobtrusively as possible, taking care that such change has a more definite object than the mere obtaining of variety. It must be a perverted ear that demands more variety and interest than is provided by these three beautifully woven strands of tone. The stops should be clear and prompt of speech, rather than loud. In the pedal department there is no room for the booming Bourdon that used to be the sole pedal stop on so many small and medium-sized English organs. The prevailing pedal tone should often be 8-ft. rather than 16-ft., and on occasion we may well use a soft 4-ft. as well as a telling 8-ft. and a soft 16-ft. A very soft 16-ft. may be used for one of the manual voices at times, especially in the more expressive slow movements, and, just as string players would play some of these passages vibrato, we need not be afraid to use the tremolo, always provided that we have a good one—a wave, not a rattle.

Many of the ornaments may be omitted at pleasure. They belong to the cembalo, and in some cases their only object was to make good that instrument's lack of sustained tone. Schweitzer points out that Friedemann's manuscript (on which the Peters edition is founded) contains many more embellishments than Bach's own autograph copy, which Emanuel possessed. Emanuel's copy is the later in date, so we see that as Bach grew older he used fewer ornaments—indeed, his opponent Schiebe attacked him on this very score. The organ student, then, may spend his time more profitably than in negotiating the more difficult of the ornaments, both here and in the organ works generally.

On the technical advantages to be derived from a study of the Sonatas there is little need to speak. Here is Schweitzer's opinion: 'To this very day they are the Gradus ad Parnassum for every organist. Whoever has studied them thoroughly will find scarcely a single difficulty in the old or even in modern organ music that he has not met with there and learned how to overcome; and before all he will have attained that absolute precision that is the chief essential for good organ playing, since in this complicated trio-playing the slightest unevenness in touch is heard with appalling clearness.' And Parry: '... these Sonatas gain quite a special character from the manner in which Bach makes use of the device of crossing the hands and interlacing the parts which are given to them. It seems, indeed, to be his cue in these works, and the effect is to make the works extraordinarily serviceable to develop independence of hands and feet.'

So far as the latter members are concerned the Sonatas are of great value because they provide pedal passages well off the beaten track—wide leaps, arpeggios, and melodic and other passages wherein good phrasing is called for. Some of the movements contain Bach's own phrasing marks. As Schweitzer and Widor point out, 'they show that Bach's ideal aim was to wrest from the keyboard a plasticity such as is peculiar to bowed instruments.' As studies in phrasing alone these works cannot be neglected by the student.

But let our last word on them be a reference to their value as pure music. Parry says: 'The Sonatas present a polyphonic texture of the very first quality,' and there are few works of Bach that are more delicately poised or more subtly finished. Schweitzer is equally enthusiastic: 'For the connoisseur there is hardly a purer æsthetic delight than to pursue these three contrapuntal lines—so free and yet so bound by the laws of beauty—through their delightful intertwinings, to say nothing of the perfection of the themes.' And let due honour go to Forkel, who, though living at a time when Bach's fame was under a cloud, had the seeing eye that could detect a masterpiece, neglected though it might be. He says of the Sonatas: 'It is impossible to overpraise their beauty. Bach composed them in the full vigour of his powers, and they may be considered his chef d'œuvre in this form.' These things being so, why do no more than a mere handful of organists give the public a chance of hearing this delightful music? Any doubts as to its attractive power have long since been dispelled by the popular success of Sir Henry Wood's arrangements of some of the movements. They are difficult, it is true, but our recitalists do not eschew music on that score. Unfortunately they do not sound difficult—in fact, the better their performance the easier they appear to the listener. A fatal defect this, where most soloists are concerned. Now a work that is easy, and yet sounds desperately difficult . . .

A few detached works apparently written for the clavicembalo may well be included in this chapter. They are not important, but they are mostly too good to be neglected. The Trio in D minor (II., 54) is overloaded with ornaments (most of which may be omitted), and there are some dry moments, but there is much charm as well. Note the courageous and effective consecutive 4ths and 5ths between the manual parts, and linger—as you will surely want to—over the cadence, with its beautiful use of a third inversion of the augmented 6th.

The Fantasia with Imitation (XII., 71) is obviously an early work. The second portion, headed 'Imitatio,' is a pleasant treatment of a short simple theme. The set of pieces in Vol. XII., beginning with the Pastorale in F, is usually regarded as a Suite, but there is no sign of their having been originally connected. The suite of Bach's day did not contain movements in different keys. Moreover, only the Pastorale contains a part for the pedals. All the music of these little pieces is pleasant, but the palm goes to the Pastorale. Parts of this delightful movement may be soloed, but the lay-out generally seems to call for the use of one manual only. Its character seems to indicate a fairly late date. How came it that Bach left such a successful work unfinished?—for we cannot regard the A minor cadence as an end. The effect is so unsatisfactory that it must have put the work out of court with many organists. For the benefit of those who wish for an ending in the tonic, I venture on the following suggestion: after the A minor close, go back to the beginning and repeat bars 1-9; then make a little bridge-passage, and end with the A minor close transposed to F, thus:

Ex. 13.

This employs hardly a note not in the original, and satisfactorily rounds off a very attractive little work.

The Trio in C minor which follows is in two movements, an Adagio containing passages suggestive of an echo effect, and a spirited Allegro, with an occasional flavour of Handel. The work seems to be an early attempt at a Trio-Sonata, and is probably one of the efforts Forkel had in mind when speaking of 'other organ sonatas.'

If the above discussion of this side of Bach's work appears to be unduly lengthy, it may be urged in excuse that some kind of propaganda seems to be needed. In the sonatas and similar works organists have a batch of movements far superior on all grounds to many of the fugues that are played to threadbareness. Of all musicians we organists should surely be the most eager to show the many-sided genius of him who, after all (let us remember it with pride) was one of ourselves.

(To be continued.)

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from January number, page 11.)

By GUIDO M. GATTI

I.—MARIO CASTELNUOVO TEDESCO

Mario Castelnuovo Tedesco is the youngest of the important Italian musicians of to-day. He was born at Florence, April 3, 1895, under the shadow of Giotto's belfry, and is thus little more than twenty-five years old. Nevertheless, he has been a prominent figure in Italian music since the publication, in 1914, of his pianoforte piece, 'Questo fu il Carro della Morte' ('Death's Car'). The next year he took a further step forward with his song-cycle of the 'Coplas,' which revealed a strongly musical temperament, an astonishing mastery of means, and a sense of formal perfection quite unusual in a youth of his age.

This last is a notable point. Reading the early works of Castelnuovo, one wonders at finding nothing of the extravagance and want of balance which are a characteristic of youth, and which denote the, as yet, undecided personality and lack of definite aim. During the early period of ferment every artist has the desire, but not the capacity; the lively emotion, but not the artistic image. As a result he too often speaks a borrowed idiom, and is impatient of control and lacking in self-criticism.

Castelnuovo's works show very few traces of outside influence. Even Debussy, who more than any other composer affected the young Italian musicians during the early years of the present century, has left hardly a trace on the work of Castelnuovo—not even in the 'Cielo di settembre' ('September's Sky'), composed in his fifteenth year, and whose autumnal atmosphere has only remote affinities with a Prelude of Debussy. The only influence worthy of note in Castelnuovo is that of his master, Pizzetti (master in the broadest and noblest meaning of the word); but that influence is spiritual rather than æsthetic. Ildebrando Pizzetti has been to Mario Castelnuovo what every teacher ought to be to his pupil: having perceived intuitively his vital personality and talent, he aimed only to enlighten it with generosity and humanity.

Humanity; the word gives us one of the most eminent characteristics of Castelnuovo's music: a great humanity. The outlook of Castelnuovo is neither indifferent nor cold, but humanized by the faith of the tone-poet.

The composition that reveals most clearly this quality is 'Il raggio verde' ('The Green Sunbeam'). It is, moreover, one of the most perfect technically, as well as one of the most freely inspired. In previous works he had obviously been stimulated to creation by the work of others, such as Aldo Palazzeschi (a gamin-poet of Florence itself, ironic and cerebral) in the 'Briciole' ('Crumbs') and in 'Cera vergine' ('Virgin wax'); or the descriptive prose in the 'Novelle dalle Vite del Vasari' (Tales from Vasari's Lives of the Painters), &c. In 'Il raggio verde' Castelnuovo is expressing himself. He sets out to tell us in music of the last green beam shed by the sun as it rushes into the sea: neither more nor less. But with what originality is the subject treated! The composition, though it avoids formal development, is not one of those all-too-common pieces, full of poetical intention but devoid of logical sense—the type of art to which so much impressionism has accustomed us. It is organic, so far as such a work can be without sacrificing the nuances of feeling and colour called for by the subject. Such a complexion, if on the one hand facilitated by the conscious and wise use of all the musical resources which are at the disposal of the modern musician, including such old-fashioned elements as imitative counterpoint, as in the first bars of 'Il raggio verde':

Ex. 1.

is on the other hand inspired by the complex imagery by which the piece was evoked. Occasionally, before some striking aspect of nature, our feelings are divided, so that while we are aware of delicate contrasts of colour and sound imperceptible to us under normal conditions, our soul is rent by emotions hitherto indefinite or latent. These two aspects, however, are mixed in 'Il raggio verde'; and the predominance of the one in the first, and of the other in the second part of the piece, strongly contributes to the unbroken line of the development. More descriptive in the first half, the work becomes more human and more deeply-felt in the second. But the first pages also express that broad love of nature which can be described briefly as a feeling for wide horizons, salubrious air, cloudless sky, and sweet earth. The melancholy pervading the end of 'Il raggio verde' is not hopeless: it seems to reach out towards the new dawn. But elsewhere also has the composer expressed a profound emotion before nature's phenomena—in 'Cielo di settembre,' in 'Tramonto' ('Sunset') from 'Il libro di Dolcina' ('Dolcina's book'), and in the two choruses from Virgil's 'Bucolics.'

The mention of the last-named works moves me to say a few words on that bent towards choral composition which Castelnovo derives directly from his master. In Italy, unfortunately, for many years past choralism has fallen from the high position it formerly held. We may almost say that after the Renaissance vocal polyphony disappeared. Gradually choral work was confined more and more to the school and the Church, ending by becoming entirely ecclesiastical. One finds very few modern Italian choral works containing vital elements of pure art. Scholasticism, cold and sterile, became all-powerful, and no composer dared to write save in the stale idiom of the four-part chorus.

Fired by the example of his master Pizzetti—who has composed some remarkable choruses in his two canzoni ('The Swallow' and 'For the Dead'), and in the wonderful threnody for Ippolyte's death in the music-drama 'Fedra'—Castelnovo produced two beautiful examples of a cappella composition in the male choruses founded on Tommaseo's popular Greek songs, and particularly was he successful with 'Il Cipresso' ('The Cypress'), where the remembrance of the dead friend trembles in the pure vocal lines. In the Virgilian choruses, if the form is here and there not exempt from clichés, the spirit is however virile, because the eternal youthfulness of the eclogue has been understood and reproduced by the musician.

This typical Florentine of to-day, who is not lacking in the spirit of irony and satire characteristic of his city, remains an unspoiled lover of all the fancies of the past, of all the serene beauties which modern restlessness has not succeeded in destroying. There are still to-day in the strongest works by Castelnovo traces of that ingenuous sensitiveness which belongs to the adolescent—chimeras, ideal dreams of remote countries and princesses, revealed in the freshness of expression of certain small pianoforte pieces. Obviously the essential characteristics of the folk-song—simplicity, humanity, and a continuous wondering before nature's spectacles—attracted our young musician to these flowers of poetry; so were born the 'Coplas' and the 'Stelle cadenti' ('Star-shoots'), to say nothing of 'Le Roy Loys'—Castelnovo's first attempt at the vocal lyric, and especially notable for its nuances of genial humour and a sense of comedy that will no doubt bear good fruit in future works.

Castelnovo's view of folk-song is not the usual one. For him folk poetry is no inducement to exploit popular moods, or transcribe and harmonize elementary songs from bucolic mouths. Rather is it a source of new sensations. In his 'Stelle' one seems to see as through an open casement the factor that makes life eternal—love. The musician found in the twelve 'Stornelli' and 'Rispetti' the ingenious glorification of love, expressed in its every aspect—here tragic, there ludicrous—either realistically or symbolically.

The popular style of these songs, however, must be understood (let me repeat) merely as inherent, not as fashion. Each song has its characteristic development, as is suitable to the ethos of the poetry, and is set on a well-defined rhythmic pattern. Thus the composition proceeds in a direct fashion; it never goes astray nor loses its way in following other ideas. This character of unity attaches the 'Stelle cadenti' to the popular genius from which were born the 'Stornelli,' giving to that song-cycle a grateful open-air flavour.

The 'Coplas' have a greater variety and reveal some new aspects of the composer, but they too are contained in the same aisthesis as the 'Stelle.' Castelnovo has not been charmed beyond measure by the popular Spanish rhythms; he could escape from the voluptuousness of the habañera or the sensuality of the jota, because he remained Florentine, perhaps still more for certain sparkles of wit that make the 'Coplas' cycle more light and brilliant than its predecessor. But the irony of the Italian composer is not of the bitter or sceptical kind: there is in it more of Dickens than of Swift.

Is not Castelnovo himself that student of the fifth 'Copa,' who on the roof, astride of a ridge, begins to paint the moon and 'del hombre que tenia pinto un plato de aceitunas'? Our composer loves Spain, has felt it near to himself with its passionate and sentimental nature, and often it seems almost as his native country. Not, however, the Spain of exotic manner, teasing in an uninterrupted dance of Andalusian maids, but the true Spain, the country of all the nostalgias, of all the dreams, the ideal background of love, that like a Spanish dance is alternately languid and vehement.

The latest work of Castelnovo delineates and consolidates his individuality, for the characteristic features get rid of a certain virtuosismo that was at any rate a youthful vanity, and present themselves in its irrefutable essence. As we have seen, these features can be reduced to three: the sincere love of nature that frequently denotes a simple and religious personality; imperishable faith in the goodness of men and things, and in the absolute necessity for such a goodness, over all other virtue, for the sweetening of life; finally a naive humour, a sharp but not bitter irony, the result of a philosophic reflection on events and predilections.

The first of these features predominates in the 'Canti all' aria aperta' ('Songs of the open air') for violin, three pages that form almost a rustic suite, with an unconventional title, lively and directly suggestive of the Tuscan countryman, such as an ingenuous exclamation or a maxim. The Tuscan landscape that in the 'Stelle' was merely the background, becomes here the most important substance, the picture's middle distance: the living figures merge into the landscape, as human exponents of nature. 'La sera per il fresco è un bel cantare' ('At the cool evening it is a fair singing') is the title of the first picture. People singing on the ways and fields, lovers in pairs on the footpaths, bells sounding in the air: in this atmosphere of tender charm a slow love-duet develops itself, an idyll that culminates in a kind of ecstasy, when it seems that life stops and dreams seize upon the ardent soul.

'Stanotte son dormito a ciel sereno' ('To-night I was sleeping under the cloudless sky') reveals one who is alone before the infinity of the starry night, at the top of the hill, whence he contemplates the wide expanse of the fields and sleeping town. The Arno flows slowly and majestically; of the whispering of fronds and fountains, the olive's trembling leaves, the pearly dewdrops, and of his passion, the composer weaves a silvery web. And here the dawn surprises—'Il mattino ha l'oro in bocca' ('The morning has gold in mouth'); the tone-poet wishes to express the awakening of the creatures—a thanksgiving to the newly-smiling heaven. The countrymen go to till and sing, and exult as nature herself, and dance with the joyful chimes of the little churches. This feeling of diffuse happiness of men and things is revealed in the first bars by the theme, that, however eloquent, seems to be evoked by a directly popular song:

Ex. 2. Viol.

The three pieces are genuine songs: their intrinsic impression, even in the manner of treating the violin part, is throughout vocal and lyrical.* The violin is singing, but always in duet with the pianoforte, which on its part is also singing, and never merely accompanying. (This characteristic appears also in the less important pieces for violin, as in 'Signorine,' two elegant sketches, and in 'Rhythms,' soft and curious dances inspired by Spanish memories.)

From the 'Raggio verde' is derived (forming with that piece a kind of sea suite) the 'Alghè' ('Seagrass') and 'L'Naviganti' ('Seamen'), where again we find that feeling of idealism already mentioned—a feeling that seems to suggest a modern St. Francis. We see it in the 'Madonne' of Beato Angelico, and in Giotto's frescoes of Assisi. 'Alghè' is a very short piece, built on two themes; in its calm consonance it reminds us of Debussy's 'Fille aux cheveux de lin.' 'L'Naviganti' is more fully developed, and is musically more interesting than 'Alghè,' though we may regard it as a further step in the same way: the way that led the composer to the subsequent 'Fioretti di San Francesco' ('The Little Flowers of St. Francis').

This composition gives full expression to what we may call the Franciscan side of our composer. It is the greatest work Castelnuovo has so far produced. The topics of the three symphonic frescoes are three episodes of the saint's life. In the first, 'Come uno giovane dono tortore a Sancto Francesco, et mai non si partirono del luogo insui che non ebono la licenzia da lui'; in the second, 'Come Sancto

* It is very interesting to compare the essentially lyrical character of these three canti with the essentially dramatic feeling of Pizzetti's beautiful Sonate for violin and pianoforte (Chester).

Francesco vide tucto il luogo attorinato di demoni, et solo uno n'entro-dentro'; in the third, 'Come gli Ascesani corsono a Sancta Maria degli angeli per ispegnere il fuoco.' To-day, after the war, when all the world is still full of hate, St. Francis says a peaceful word of fraternisation: he delivers the turtle-doves from those who would kill them, so that they may live and multiply to God's glory; he gives shame and repentance to the heart of the Friar warped by envy; and, finally, exalts the love of St. Clara, the love that is 'the divine fire that burns without consuming.'

The chief merit of the composer of the 'Fioretti' lies in having found the musical language most fit to express the substance of the Franciscan parables: a language that is at once that of the 14th century and of to-day, and neither childish nor archæological. It is very simple, especially in its harmonic aspects, and from this simplicity results its limpidity and transparency. Nevertheless there is great melodic breadth and suppleness of rhythm. The declamation is varied and interesting: it is interesting chiefly because it is essentially lyrical, and therefore intrinsically musical. The development is not subordinated rigorously to each thought and each word—as happens too often in the works of modern dramatic composers—but it is a melodic development, uninterrupted, and so having kinship with the symphony:

Ex. 3.

The general construction of the 'Fioretti' is also peculiar, because it is rigorously thematic: especially peculiar is the first, where a single theme (that of the example just quoted) constitutes almost all the substance of the composition. In the third, obviously the variety of the scenery and psychological situations require more material; but even here it is interesting to see how with a minimum of thematic means the composer attains the widest variety. The orchestration is plain and light in the first part, full of vivid contrast in the second; warm and sonorous in the third.

At present Maria Castelnuevo Tedesco is busy at his first work for the stage—a work which will show clearly the ironic side of his temperament. He has composed almost an entire Act of 'La Mandragola' ('The Mandrake'), upon the original comedy by Nicolo Machiavelli. If the leap from the ascetic idealism of the 'Fioretti' to the terrestrial materialism of 'La Mandragola' seems too abrupt, we are reminded of what was said above concerning the dual character of the composer; he is a dreamy poet, but also a keen and philosophic observer. We may almost say that if the 'Fioretti' forms his ideal world, the kingdom of aspirations, 'La Mandragola' is the realistic world, as it was in the age of Machiavelli, and is perhaps even to-day.

And with 'La Mandragola' we close the list of works by this youth of twenty-five. We look to him with high expectations, justified by his past achievements.

LIST OF WORKS OF MARIA CASTELNUOVO TEDESCO

DATE.
1910	'Cielo di Settembre' (pianoforte)	Unpublished
	'Scampanio' (pianoforte)	...
1913	'Questo fu il Carro della Morte' (pianoforte)	Forlivesi, Florence
	'Stanotte son dormito a ciel sereno' (pianoforte)	Unpublished
	'Signorine' (pft., in 1918 for v. and pft.)	...
1914	Two French Ballads ('Le Roy Loys' and 'Le chant des ténèbres') (for voice and pft.)	...
	'Ninna-nanna' (Cradle-song) (for voice and pft.)	Forlivesi, Florence

LIST OF WORKS.—contd.

DATE.
1914.	Two Madrigals to 'Galatea' (for choir, four v.) ... ..	Unpublished
1915	'Stelle cadenti'—12 songs (for voice and pftc.) ... ..	Forlivesi, Florence
	'Coplas'—11 songs (for voice and pftc.) ... ..	"
	'Fuori i Barbari' ... ..	"
	'Briciole' (Rio Bo—Mezzogiorno—Le due rose) (for voice and pftc.)	Unpublished
1916	'Cera vergine'—3 songs ... ..	"
	Two Greek Songs (after Tommaseo) (for male choir) ... ..	"
	'Il raggio verde' (pianoforte) ... ..	Forlivesi, Florence
	'Lucertolina' (pianoforte) ... ..	Unpublished
	Two Songs from 'The Gardener' of Tagore for voice and orch.)	"
1917	'Il libro di Dolcina'—3 songs (for voice and pianoforte) ... ..	"
1919	Three 'Canti all'aria aperta' (for violin and pianoforte) ... ..	"
	'Alge' (pianoforte) ... ..	Forlivesi, Florence
	'L'Naviganti' ... ..	"
1919-20	Three 'Fioretti di S. Francesco' (for voice and orchestra) ... ..	Unpublished
1920	'Rituni—Capitan Tracassa' (for violin and pianoforte) ... ..	"
	'Cantico' (pianoforte) ... ..	"
	'Girotondo dei golosi' (Star) (for voice and pianoforte) ... ..	"
1920	'La Mandragola' (Musical Comedy after Machiavelli) ... ..	"

HOMAGE TO DEBUSSY

The handsome Debussy Memorial number recently issued by the Revue Musicale of Paris will not be denied a rich interest and value even by those who cannot rise quite to the pitch of vehemence and adoration at which the fellow-countrymen of that subtle hedonist now chant his name and works. Here in England we 'like' Debussy probably about as much as is good for us. To have liked him less would have argued insensibility, a colour-blindness in face of a wondrous fowl's exotic plumage. But much more would have meant derogation from the taste and standard that clime and tradition should naturally form for us.

If there ever was an age when music was an international language, that age is certainly not the present. Debussy is nothing if not a flower of the French centuries, sprung from the deep-piled bed of the numberless poets, singers, and voluptuaries of his race; he is like a splendid Cattleya and these gentlemen of the Revue Musicale are the humming-birds which all naturally subsist on the nectar within. But by the time one of us should be so far suited to the orchid's clime as to find that fare ill-sufficing, he would have shed most of his Englishness and be well on his way towards changing his substance for—well, a humming-bird's. All the same, for that we did not like Debussy more, the English voice among the thrufifers, Mr. Dunton Green, thinks necessary to call to account English 'lack of critical sense and artistic curiosity,' and 'a certain indolence of mind which seems to make good and bad equally acceptable.' He goes on, however, to suggest that, thanks to Debussy and Ravel, English composers have thrown off the German yoke eagerly to take on a French one—Frank Bridge, Cyril Scott, John Ireland, Eugène Goossens, J. R. Speaight, John Leath, Holst, and John Gerrard Williams. 'The influence of Debussy and Ravel presided at the unfolding of these, one and all, and opened up to them new horizons.' Which seems altogether to overrate the generosity of our soil towards the delicate needs of Cattleya-culture.

For the Frenchman to-day Debussy is 'incontestably the foremost of French musicians' (Georges Auric). 'If French music is at this moment an example and an adornment for Europe, we owe this really to Debussy and to Debussy alone' (André Suarès). M. Suarès occupies the first twenty-seven pages of the review with his eloquent tribute. His chief praise for this music is that 'It is much more than song; Debussy is spontaneous harmony. Who is supremely a musician is almost always supremely a harmonist.' And he develops his idea thus:

In the orchestra Debussy has genius for tone-qualities, and by colour he multiplies harmony. With him all is really-harmonic; from his beginnings Debussy is all genius. Debussy touched nothing which did not break into musical bloom. No man ever was more of a musician than he. Hence he baffled the crowds of folk who taste of music not as musicians but as readers of books; those who seek first a logical discourse, 'ideas' as the saying is, and all sorts of intentions; but such, be they as rational as you like, are not the principle of the art, but the means only. There must be intelligence and ideas in music, just as in every labour of the mind, but even more necessarily there must be music. Literary ideas and plastic ideas are not musical ideas. At bottom, and above all, harmony decides. That is the price of the modern man's music.

It is most true that polyphony tends to ward off music as often as it realises the same. There is in polyphony a mechanic, abstract element which ends by stifling the natural sense of song, through drying up the sense of harmony; the play of themes, the science of their management, and the intellectual pleasure of combining them, give the symphony the character of a problem with several unknown factors, to be elegantly resolved, the mind finding the key. In this there is to be found a satisfaction for which the music is barely a pretext. Many wise folk who think themselves fond of music, and like performing it, are only pursuing the pleasure of an aural geometry. The more these good people listen, the less they hear. In short, notes take the place of sounds.

In this respect Debussy made a simple revolution. He himself had a feeling of going back from musical geometry to nature. To judge Debussy, and to hear him, his music must always be taken in its function as harmony. What vain disputes would be spared us if musicians were to leave the deaf to argue among themselves, and refused to answer them! Unfortunately, most musicians are more than half deaf themselves.

M. Suarès gives the following sketch of Debussy as he looked on his last appearance in a Paris concert-room:

He had been very ill, and folk called him doomed: he was. A little later he fell back under the malady that was to kill him. I was struck not so much by his thinness and his ruin as by his absent look and grave lassitude. He was the colour of melted wax and ashes. His eyes gave out not the flame of a fever but the dull gleam of a pool. There was not even bitterness in his shadowy smile: what stood out rather was the boredom of suffering, as reeds stand at the pool's dreaming edge, of an autumn evening whose atmosphere of peace is a lie.

His hand, which was round, supple, plump, rather heavy, episcopal, weighed on his arm; his arm weighed on his shoulder and his head on the whole body; and on that head life weighed heavily, our one and only, dear and cruel life. A few persons chatting with him made a show of confidence and declared he looked better than they had expected. As he sat down he glanced at the audience with a slow eye under a rapid eyelid in the manner of those who would see without being seen, and seek to glean from below what their look seems only half to touch directly. He was devoured with shamefacedness, as the artist can be, in the disgust and almost the disgrace of suffering. It has even been alleged that he allowed the disease to grow by dissimulating it. The most voluptuous are sometimes the most jealous to hide their mortal flesh, especially when stricken. The mind takes part therein; a shamefaced touchiness, a leaning towards pleasures, and a care for perfection in art are things hardly to be separated. (So Debussy left us none of his sketches or even the admirable fragments; he destroyed all he did not finish, and would leave behind nothing but his accomplishment.)

In those eyes which evaded the meeting of others I recognised the despairing irony so natural in those about to leave life towards the others who stay. Between them already there is such an abyss. That day Debussy, whatever was supposed or whatever he hoped for himself, bade his farewell.

M. Alfred Cortôt contributes a detailed appreciation of the pianoforte works, and M. Vuillermoz tells of the somewhat unlucky production in 1911 of 'Saint Sebastian' (the music was swamped by the verbosity of d'Annunzio's play and the dazzling production by Bakst). M. R. Godet tells of the origin of one of the latest works, the 'Carol of the Homeless Children' (1916). Debussy was waiting for an operation when, glancing through the newspapers, he read of a little Algerian girl who had sent all her savings to the 'Gentlemen of the Senate' with the request that they should be spent for the benefit of the refugee children of the invaded departments. It struck the imagination of the sick man, who in the few hours that separated him from the operation, wrote the poem and the music of this, his last song. The carol was not long in reaching Belgium, says M. Lesbroussart (Brussels). It came among a mass of apparently German music into the hands of a wealthy amateur. Copies were surreptitiously made and passed about, and in the spring days of 1916 it was not uncommon for the sound of some singer practising hard at 'Ils ont tout pris, tout pris,' to float from some open window above the grey-green German soldiers passing in the street.

The supplement to the review is an anthology of ten little musical pieces by different hands, all in homage to the dead composer. M. Ravel writes a duet for violin and violoncello which may seem rather lively for the occasion, but is ingenious in the extreme. M. Florent Schmitt sends a characteristic page for pianoforte, wild and vehement. M. Albert Roussel's contribution is a graceful 'Welcome to the Muses,' and a charming trifle by M. Paul Dukas has suggestions of one or two of Debussy's own themes. England is represented by Mr. Eugène Goossens, who stands up boldly and shows the world what progressions may nowadays come from the land of 'The Messiah' and Jackson in F. There is a solemn piece by Signor Malipiero, a movement for guitar by Señor Manuel de Falla, and from Hungary a piece by M. Bela Bartok. M. Erik Satie offers a song of twelve bars, and Stravinsky a 'fragment of a symphony for wind instruments,' which is curious in dispensing not merely with key- and time-signatures, but also with all marks of dynamics and expression. Not one of the ten pieces ends on a common chord.

PELHAM HUMFREY AND 'THE TEMPEST'

M. L. Pereyra, in the January number of the same review, describes a manuscript of Pelham Humfrey in the library of the Paris Conservatoire. Humfrey's setting of 'Where the bee sucks' is known, but the rest of this music is not mentioned by Grove, Dr. Ernest Walker, or Sir Frederick Bridge. The MS.

is described as a little score of fourteen pages, with staves of six lines, and it bears the title 'The Vocal Musick in the Tempest, by Mr. Pel. Humfrey.' This 'Tempest' was Shadwell's somewhat barbarous adaptation of Shakespeare, later used by Purcell. M. Pereyra quotes one of Humfrey's pieces, a fine broad setting in D major of 'Arise, ye subterranean winds.'

M. Pereyra's comment is:

The assimilation of Lulli's procedure is complete, and the French influence remains undeniable. Still one meets with nothing that resembles servile imitation. At each moment appears the character of contemporary English music in the declamation, melody, tonality, form, and harmonies. The declamation, Lullist in essence, remains expressive and without stiffness; it is perfectly adapted to the accents of the English text. Reading this music one involuntarily thinks of Henry Purcell, of whose predecessors Humfrey was one of the most characteristic. These few pages reveal an artist's deep nature, both sensitive and refined, and a dramatic temperament everywhere affirmed. Thus the scene of the Three Devils, the intervention of Pride, Fraud, and Crime, and the masque in the fifth Act are strongly laid out. All is designed by an expert and solid hand, the hand of a musician who has his place marked among the masters of English music at the end of the 17th century.

(Humfrey died at the age of twenty-seven, in 1674.) C.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

When, at the I.S.M. Conference, Sir Hugh Allen laid about him on the subject of popular taste, he could hardly have expected his blows to be tamely accepted by those who have the best of reasons for rejoicing in the vogue of the Fox-trot and the Jazz. A reply from Mr. Herman Darewski was inevitable, and it appeared in the daily press a day or two after the attack.

It may be well to give Sir Hugh's exact words. I quote from the official report of the Conference:

At the present time we spent infinite time and patience, and used every resourceful method, to put children on the right road to appreciate music, and then, for the greater part of the time, allowed them to run every kind of risk and to join hands with any kind of beastly tune to vitiate their taste, to destroy their judgment and wipe out any trace of decency in their musical remembrance. Those kindly parents who took so much pains to bring up their children on lines of good behaviour and decent association invariably left them to fend for themselves in the matter of musical associations, and probably would be the first to express astonishment to know that the companionship of bad music was as dangerous as the companionship of people who swore, or stole, or bore false witness.

Freak music was becoming more and more aggressive owing to commercialism and the desire for notoriety, and pleasure was being too easily taken in noises and barbaric rhythms, although, while listening, the public were usually primarily engaged in eating or dancing. Because musical taste was not sufficiently educated to appreciate good music, composers, to attract promiscuous and indiscriminate appetites, had adopted unsound procedure and made foul noises. Such pieces were written from a low motive and a bad impulse.

What was the use of creating in children a healthy appetite and discernment for good musical food, and then for them to be confronted with a permanent scarcity or even a worse danger, bad food, artfully disguised, and plenty of it?

It can hardly be denied that this is a fair statement of the case. Perhaps the terms 'beastly' and 'foul' might be improved upon, not from squeamishness but because the chief fault of the music Sir Hugh had in mind is surely its all-round feebleness and poverty of invention. It has too little character to be anything so vigorous as beastly. And the reference to the evil results of the companionship of bad music are almost as much of an overstatement as Shakespeare's description of the man with no music in his soul. The evil influence of bad music is trifling compared with that of bad books, plays, or pictures.

In publishing Mr. Darewski's retort, the Daily News, of course, speaks of him as 'the famous composer of popular music.' Well, we are getting on. Once upon a time we had a Purcell for our tune-provider. We declined a bit when his place as popular composer was filled by such men as Bishop, Bayley, and Balfe. Our stock rose when we went around humming and whistling Sullivan. And now . . .

Mr. Darewski says :

I presume that Sir Hugh referred to such beastly tunes as 'Keep the home fires burning,' 'The long, long trail,' 'Tipperary,' 'Sister Susie,' and 'Pack up your troubles in the old kit bag.'

Mr. Darewski presumes too much. There is nothing in the report to justify a statement that the attack was on 'Tipperary' and its fellows. I daresay Sir Hugh would agree with most of us as to the excellence of 'Tipperary'—at all events, so far as its chorus is concerned. 'Pack up your troubles' has its points too. 'Keep the home fires burning,' and 'The long, long trail' are not nearly so good. In fact, they are poor and doleful efforts. Sir Hugh, however, was clearly aiming his attack, not at these things, but at the more violent and noisy of recently imported dance forms.

But Mr. Darewski discreetly says nothing about these strepitous and hiccupping American products. It is obviously easier to defend the popular song, and it is especially easy if the defence takes the form of a bit of special pleading, such as the following :

Army commanders, recruiting officers, hospital commandants, and Sir Arthur Yapp would probably have something to say in regard to the baleful influence Sir Hugh appears to think they exercise upon the moral fibre of the public at large.

It was a 'beastly' tune to the chorus of which a shipload of warriors went to their last sleep beneath the waves; it was 'beastly' tunes that eased the pains of maimed and wounded; it was 'beastly' tunes sung in the sweat and welter of battle 'over there' that enabled us to make nice tunes in peace and comfort on this side.

We must refuse to be put off the real point at issue by such an argument as this, though we may remark in passing that the tunes sung by our Army were as often good as bad. Mr. Darewski must not imagine that soldiers sang nothing but airs of the type he mentions above. However, the real point is this. Our Darewskis base their arguments on the fallacious proposition that because a tune is sung by hundreds of thousands of people, therefore it is a good tune. This would follow if the hundreds of thousands first exercised some method of selection. But only one per thousand does that. The remainder sing whatever happens to be thrust on them, and the point of Sir Hugh's remarks is that the worst type of light music gets the widest and most efficient propaganda.

The weakness of the Darewski argument may be shown very easily. 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' was on everybody's lips when Mr. Darewski and I were boys. Not even 'Tipperary' took a greater hold of the public so far as England—and especially London—was concerned. Can Mr. Darewski lay his hand on his heart and say it is a good tune? Can he deny that, of all the airs that have ever obsessed a helpless population, it is one of the feeblest?

He may evade the issue by asking, 'Why did people sing it if they did not like it? And if they liked it, does not the fact prove there was merit in the tune—merit unsuspected by the musician?' The answer is to be found in the preceding sentence, and lies in the words 'obsessed' and 'helpless.' We are the victims of those about us in this matter. Hundreds of thousands cursed 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay,' and, the curses delivered, fell to humming the wretched tune again. The wide and maddening vogue of an air is sometimes due to merit; more often it merely serves to remind us that man is a gregarious animal.

He is wonderfully receptive, too. A youth of my acquaintance, àtât ten, who, like all good wholesome people, sings in his bath, pipingly salutes the morning with fragments of Elgar, Strauss, and such men. Why? Merely because the family gramophone plays that kind of music. If it played fox-trots, or such 'tunes' as that of Mr. Darewski quoted in last month's Musical Times, he would sing those instead. Only a few evenings ago I met a small boy in a slummy street. He was preceded by a penetrating whistle, and a good hundred yards before we met I recognized an old friend in Morley's 'It was a lover and his lass.' Why did he whistle an Elizabethan tune? For two reasons: (1) Because he has the good fortune to attend a school where the head master realises that he has responsibilities in the matter of music, as in arithmetic and the two other R's; and (2) because it is a jolly good tune, and a jolly good tune is one of the things of beauty that are a joy for ever. In the street where I met this youngster is an elementary school whose head-master takes the easy Darewski view. Go by the building during the daily singing lesson, and you will hear the children shouting 'The long, long trail' and 'Keep the home fires burning.' Had my whistler been a scholar there he would have whistled Ivor Novello instead of Morley, and would have been just that much worse off. People like what they hear; give them anything often enough, and be it good or bad, they will end by liking it. We want a much more even standard in our schools to begin with—there are divergences in the choice and teaching of music that would not be tolerated in any other subject. And the good work done in schools should be followed up afterwards. As things are now the only kind of music that has a really well-organized campaign on its behalf is the type Sir Hugh Allen pitched into.

As I said at the beginning of this article, a reply to Sir Hugh was to be expected from Mr. Darewski. But the latter has an unexpected partner in Mr. A. B. Walkley, the dramatic critic of The Times.

In the course of an unexpectedly futile column, Mr. Walkley contrives to go astray in so many directions that I have not space to follow him in more than one or two. But in order to see the weakness of his position, we will imagine the disputants changing places. Behold Mr. Walkley, at

(say) the Society of Arts, putting in a plea for the popularisation of good books and plays:

What is the use of spending money and pains in teaching our children something at least of the beauty and significance of our language and the glories of our literature if on leaving school they have thrust on them snappy magazines and tenth-rate fiction, written in slovenly English, and presenting a wholly distorted view of life? What will become of our stage if the cinema continues to absorb the attention of nineteen-twentieths of our population? In ten years' time our national drama and literature will have ceased to exist save for a mere handful of us. (Sensation.) It is nonsense to say that the taste of people cannot be directed. We don't admit that argument in regard to our children. From the first we set about seeing that they develop good and healthy ideals in manners, clothes, books, recreation, and so forth. The task is not difficult; in all but a few cases it is sufficient to give the best a chance. The natural taste of most people is good rather than bad. What we need is more facilities for the enjoyment of good literature and plays. At present the big drum is banged almost solely on behalf of the bad. (Cheers, and cries of 'Shame!')

To whom Sir Hugh Allen in the Musical Times a few days later:

One feels sorry for Mr. Walkley, wringing his hands over a public that prefers 'Tarzan of the Apes' or 'The worst Woman in London' to the masterpieces of drama and fiction that he thinks they ought to like. Who is Mr. Walkley, anyhow, that he should wish to dragoon people into good taste? If 'Tarzan' is the hero of the hour, clearly he has a right to be. He could not have ousted all competitors had he not been the fittest to survive. Let Mr. Walkley get back to his high horse, while we breathlessly follow our 'Tarzan.'

Perhaps Mr. Walkley's worst slip in The Times article is in the matter of folk-song. Sir Hugh had remarked on the desirability of parents being able to select a good tune from among many bad ones, adding that 'they should at least be able to give their reasons for liking jazz music or a fox-trot in preference to a folk-tune or dance.'

But Mr. Walkley will not admit this. He says:

Jazz-tunes are our folk-tunes, the tunes that the 'folk' of to-day have evolved for themselves. They may be vastly inferior to the old sort, but, such as they are, they are a live growth, whereas the others would be a revived archaism. The efforts of certain musicians to revive folk-tunes, morris dances, &c., always strike me as the same kind of forlorn hope as the gallant attempts of Mr. William Poel to revive the Elizabethan manner of presenting Shakespeare. You can no more do it than you can revive Queen Elizabeth herself. There is no going back in history.

Mr. Walkley's inability to perceive the fundamental difference between folk-music and jazz is curious. The former was a genuine product of the people. Its songs dealt with their every-day life, and its dances played a big part in their recreations. It is the only real communal art in existence, the nearest approach to it being the ballad poetry with which it was often associated. Jazz and ragtime are not evolved by the people. Most of it is produced in America. Its songs are usually in the lingo of the nigger or the argot of the Bowery, and bear only the minimum of relation to the life of this country. Thanks to its exploitation by music-hall performers, restaurant bands, and pianoforte organs it obtains a vogue like that of 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay,' and it has no more in common with folk-music than had that wretched string of notes.

Mr. Walkley's analogy between the folk-song and the Elizabethan method of producing Shakespeare is unconvincing. The latter was due largely to certain conventions of the time, and even more to deficiencies in the structure and conveniences of the playhouse of the period. Its revival for the regular presentation of Shakespeare to-day would be as absurd as an attempt to deliver the text with the pronunciation and quantities of the Elizabethan period. Both are obsolete. But a good tune is never obsolete, and a good dance, like any other form of physical recreation, can always be revived with success. I am sure Mr. Walkley enjoyed 'The Beggar's Opera,' and, not least, the delightful tunes, a large proportion of which, he will be pained to hear, belong to our folk-music. As to the 'forlorn hope,' I wish Mr. Walkley could see one of Mr. Cecil Sharp's folk-dancing schools in full swing. Anything less 'forlorn' he will not easily find. And I fancy he would be surprised if he knew the important part played by folk-song in our musical life to-day, from the school-room to the concert-hall. It is as much alive as ever it was, because a good tune is the common denominator in music. We may differ on every other point concerning the art, but we are at one in our appreciation of the Londonderry air, 'My love she's but a lassie yet,' 'A poor soul sat sighing,' and the 'Ash Grove'—to mention one representative of the four countries of Great Britain. Let Mr. Walkley examine typical specimens of English, Scottish, Irish, and Welsh folk-song. He will find them as different in character as the races themselves. Pursuing his investigations, he will see that there are subdivisions hardly less clear, e.g., between English folk-songs of the West, the East, and the North. He will then, I hope, realise the difference between a type of music that is almost as local and characteristic as dialect, and one that is alien in origin and popularised mainly by a well organized royalty system. If all our musical leaders of the past twenty-five years had taken the feeble Walkley view there would have been no Competitive Festival Movement and no Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, and the 'Old Vic,' instead of playing Shakespeare and opera to crowds of the men in the street and their wives, would have been sacred to the exploits of Elaine or Tarzan.

Finally, the contest is not between old and new music, as Mr. Walkley seems to think. A melody need not be of folk origin to gain the suffrages of musicians. It need only be good. Those of us who know Sir Hugh Allen best are least likely to accuse him of being a highbrow, killjoy, or snob in the matter of popular music. He merely claims for his art what painters, poets, novelists, or dramatists, would (or should) claim for theirs—a fair chance for the best of it.

By way of postscript, I add that Mr. Percy Scholes, in an excellent reply to Mr. Walkley in the Observer of January 16, shows that not many years ago 'A. B. W.' was concerned in a similar dispute in regard to the drama. Of course he had his coat off on the right side then, and was as outspoken against shoddy on the stage as Sir Hugh is against shoddy in music, though he used less violent terms. So you see he doesn't really dote on 'Tarzan' or 'Elaine,' although he champions their musical equivalents.

Since writing the above I have run against Sir Hugh Allen, and have heard from him that (as I thought) his onslaught was not directed at songs of the 'Tipperary' type. As a matter of fact the passage that has caused a good deal of discussion was little more than an episode in an address on 'Personality in Teaching.' As is so often the case, the episode has been singled out for an amount of attention that might well be devoted to the far more important main body of the speech.

I am reminded of some of Sir Hugh's remarks on the musical education of the young by the arrival of a review copy of Music and Youth, hitherto known as Youth and Music—the change of title being made, I believe, in order to make clear the fact of the journal being a musical one for the use of youngsters rather than a youngsters' magazine which happened to be musical. The change is not one of title only: the journal covers a good deal more ground than formerly, and in every way makes a wider appeal. The contributors are all experts in teaching the young idea how to—but let me dodge that overworked phrase, and say they are all educational experts. Here they are: Walter Carroll, Stewart Macpherson, Thomas F. Dunhill, Katharine Eggar, Nancy Gilford, Geoffrey Shaw, Emmie Allen, W. R. Anderson, and the first and last of a strong team is the Editor, Edith M. G. Reed, whose well-known facility in gilding the pill of knowledge appears on several pages. The chief of the many merits of Music and Youth appears to me to lie in its policy of setting the young reader to work finding out things. It tells him a good deal but mainly with a view to putting him on the war-path in search of further knowledge. There is an attractive sporting flavour in the shape of competitions—hunting down quotations, supplying missing terms, answering questions, and so forth. A glance at some of these left me abashed at hitherto unsuspected gaps in my own elementary musical education.

Not the least important thing to be said in favour of Music and Youth is that it induces children to regard the reading of a periodical devoted to music as a normal occupation, like reading about games or any other attractive topic. Musical journals in this country receive nothing like the support they have a right to expect, simply because so few people acquired in early life the habit of reading about music elsewhere than in books or in the stray paragraphs of the daily press. Neither of these sources of information can compete with a musical journal in discussing amply, and with the aid of music-type, contemporary developments of the art.

The success of such an organ as Music and Youth will be of great benefit in ten years' time. Its readers of to-day will be adults then, and, as a result of their youthful reading, will support the grown up musical press as naturally as their parents leave it alone. But for its own sake, and with no eye on possible future benefits, its contemporaries all wish Music and Youth a long and successful innings.

Many men, many minds, and in nothing more than in music. In the case of Holst's 'Planets,' however, we have the unusual case of a practically unanimous verdict in favour, with one adverse opinion so downright as to be startling. Barbara C. Larent, writing in the December Sackbut, begins a notice of the L.S.O. performance of the 'Planets' by saying 'It is difficult to speak with restraint,' and after asking 'Why, indeed, should one?' she proceeds to throw that desirable quality overboard. Having thus cleared the decks she goes on:

It is more than enough to make one utterly despair of the future of music in this country that after a whole hour of blatant vulgarity and pretentious bombast, the entire audience should rise to greet this latest immortal with tumultuous applause that far eclipsed in volume and intensity that which was accorded to such a superlative masterpiece as the 'Totentanz' of Liszt, so magnificently rendered earlier in the same evening by M. Siloti.

I pass by the fact that when an entire audience displays enthusiasm, not (nota bene) over a soloist, but over a long and complex orchestral work, it is reasonable to suppose there is a good deal in the work. Nor do I find a difficulty in realising that one may hear the 'Planets' and dislike it, just as one may easily dislike any strongly individual work at a first hearing. What puzzles me is that to-day anybody sufficiently musical and experienced to be allowed to help in the blowing of so advanced an instrument of musical opinion as the Sackbut should be able to describe the 'Totentanz' as a 'superlative masterpiece.' Judging from the attitude of those near me at the concert, it is already on the shelf, and even a Siloti can do no more for it than take it down occasionally, and blow off some of the dust. Its puerile attempts at development in more than one passage are amusing—in fact, it was only the occasional unintentional humour that enabled at least one hearer to sit through it.

However, despite B. C. L.'s implication that it was insufficiently applauded, the approving noises were loud and long enough to bring Siloti back to the pianoforte. The applause was for him, not for the work, however, and only his modesty made him think so much the other way that he served us right by playing the greater part of the 'Totentanz' again. It is difficult to speak with restraint of such a waste of time and technique. Why, indeed, should one?

HOW NOT TO WRITE A SCHOOL SONG

By W. McNAUGHT

[The following is an enlargement of an article that appeared in the January School Music Review. The matter is so important that we think it should be given the wider publicity of the Musical Times.—ED., M. T.]

The competition recently held by the School Music Review and the Musical Times has promoted a desire for clear guidance in the art and craft of writing school songs. The question of definition forcibly presented itself to the judges who were concerned in the examination of over a hundred and fifty manuscripts all purporting to be school songs but falling short in many ways—some of them strange and unexpected—from the ideal they had formed and hoped to see embodied in practical shape. Instead of model school songs the judges found a model symposium of the ways in which a school song should not be written. Let the title of this article stand for their discoveries.

What do we mean by a 'School Song'? There were competitors to whom the words appear to have immediately suggested 'Speech Days,' and we were greeted with numerous effusions of the Floreat Schola type, eminently suitable for hoarse-voiced multitudes under the lead of a distinguished Old Boy. Given a good swinging tune and no sententiousness these can be tolerable enough, in their place, but they were not what we had in view.

By 'School Song' nowadays we mean a piece of music in which a school class that has been taught to sing musically can make use of its training, and by 'School Class' we mean, in nine cases out of ten, a body of girls or boys, or both, in a State-aided school. We are far less concerned with the Public School and the Girls'

High School, not from any want of interest in their musical work, but because the proletarian schools far outnumber them. Moreover the greater number have the greater need for music. The poorer children meet little music in their homes, and they do not go in search of it at concerts. Only in the school-room can they get a glimpse of this world of sweet sounds, and learn that music is a contemplative enjoyment and a pleasurable exercise and not merely the crude stimulant they pick up in the streets. By a wise dispensation, which was discovered by certain musicians some fifty years ago and of which the musical world is still generally ignorant, a class of school children whose minds are unawakened to beauty in any form have, through music, the power of producing from themselves a thing of living art. Given a skilled, intelligent teacher and twenty or thirty children's voices, then a Council School will show you music more real than a good deal that goes on at Queen's Hall. Composers should know this, for the children want school songs and the teachers want the songs to be of the right kind. And composers should know that when they venture into the field of school music they must not leave behind their judgment, their subtlety, and their cunning. They will write under difficulties and prohibitions that ought to stimulate their best faculties. There is room in school music—I should say, rather, a crying need—for the minds of our best men. The revolution which has produced the concert-songs of Martin Shaw, Ireland, Holst, and the like out of the Claribels and Brahm's of last century has yet to be worked out in school songs.

Coming back to our competitors we find, on turning over their manuscripts again, what an extraordinary number of them could not write music at all. These could be dismissed as a mere annoyance but that they illustrate how cheaply the claims of school music can be held. There are plenty of amiable 'musical' people who cannot harmonize a hymn-tune correctly, who have never tried to work out a figure of accompaniment, who would stare wide-eyed if asked to write six bars of a string quartet, but who at once jump to the conclusion that 'something for the kiddies' is well within their grasp. The following is a fair example of their produce at its worst:

A glance at the first few bars was enough for 'spotting the duds' of this kind, but we would not be accused of unfairness. Let competitors be assured that every bar they wrote came before the eye of an adjudicator.

After a comfortable reduction in our pile of manuscripts we proceed to more complex tests. We have to put ourselves in the position of one who is really the final arbiter of school song—the enlightened teacher in charge of a class. He is, say, a good judge of music, well acquainted with musical literature of all kinds, from a football song to a symphony. He has a keen sense of form and quality, and knows how to estimate music according to its aim. In fact he is a level-headed, all-round critic. As a teacher he understands the 'psychology' (a cant word, but unavoidable) of children, their musical outlook, and their receptivity. He knows how to strike a balance between throwing 'good' music at their heads and insinuating it gently and by easy stages. He knows their technique. In short, he knows his job. Here it is time to add that 'he' may be, and often is, a 'she.'

Now suppose him to be searching through a large pile of music for a school song that will fit in with his educational plans for his children, and help him to make them musicians. What will he look for, and what will be his deciding points?

First of all he will look at the words. He will prefer them either new or not too familiar, and he will require some very good reason—in the music—for accepting any of the stock verses that have been set and reset, ad nauseam, by composers great and small. The lark will leave its wat'ry nest in vain unless with flight of unexampled grace, and cattle will no longer browse on the Sands o' Dee. Our teacher will reject amorous declarations, deep personal emotions, the rhetorical, the figurative. Knowing his youngsters he will fight shy of copy-book maxims:

'Gainst shirking and slacking we'll be on our guard,
For duty well done is its own reward:

and 'honour, not honours, is our aim.' Religion he will, in general, be disposed to leave to others. He won't object to humour, provided it be not too colloquial. Flag-wagging, chest-slapping, and 'Hurrah for the School' will not appeal to him unless superlatively done by both author and composer. He will look for outspoken sentiment about natural, obvious, tangible things; simple emotions and aspirations; a touch of imagination, perhaps, but from the child's wonder-world, not from his own—let R.L.S. be a model. He will not necessarily reject poetic matter that is commonplace to the adult. It may be fresh for the children. (Our two prize-winning songs are about Spring.) He will look for neat versification in simple, straightforward language. He will want this, that, and the other, and he will be hard to satisfy. His literary selection will not be rigid, for good music may cover faulty words, while good words will not cover faulty music.

Our expert will now examine the music. He has been to ballad concerts, and will expurgate with horror anything that recalls their oleaginous iniquities:

and he will impatiently turn from the namby-pamby:

below it—a sickly effect after a while. Another makes the left hand jump about :

on perfectly unnecessary quests that are difficult of accomplishment when the teacher is his own pianist, and is looking sideways at his class and beating time with his head.

But these are minor details, and the list of small 'don'ts' peculiar to school songs could be carried on at great length. There is not a complaint, criticism, warning or hint in this article but rises directly out of this competition, but there is much left unsaid. When our teacher comes to make his final choice he will have to be guided by æsthetic propriety in general terms. His tests throughout have been exacting, and he is sure of them. Would he have found a song among our hundred and fifty to satisfy them all? Not a single one! Hedged about with prohibitions, the art of writing a school song is in reality rather difficult. Only a small portion of the known school songs are perfect, and we must be glad of those that approach within a stage of perfection.

Here I feel that my title 'How not to write a school song' has served me as a useful shield.

If my task had been to explain how a school song ought, in my opinion, to be written, I should have been in difficulties at once. I might, at some length, have said, 'Be original without being elaborate or unvocal, be simple without dullness, write children's music rather than composers' music, use your ingenuity in cutting down rather than adding, observe the technique of concerted children's voices, choose your words carefully,' and so on, not getting much forrader. It is for composers to find the solution, and the search well deserves their attention. Here is a case—the only one—in which children can be artists. They cannot compete with their elders in such things as drawing, painting, designing, writing, reciting, acting, pianoforte playing, violin playing, and the like. But a well-trained choir of children, with a well-written piece of music in their heads, stand shoulder to shoulder with the world's artists in the production of a thing of beauty. Let our lyric writers and composers join hands with them.

New Music

By WILLIAM CHILD

The publication of a pianoforte arrangement of 'Pulcinella' (Chester) makes one wonder that this delightful work has not been heard in our concert-rooms in the form of an orchestral suite. There are many who regard the choregraphic and scenic side of the ballet as something of a nuisance when the music is first-rate. The better the music the more one wants to listen to it for its own sake. In the case of 'Pulcinella' we have an intriguing example of musical periphrasis. The title-page tells us that the music is by Stravinsky 'd'après Giambattista Pergolesi.' One immediately expects to find Igor a very long way after Giambattista, but as a matter of fact the two are arm in arm for most of the time. This is mainly because the modern composer has maintained the diatonic character of the original, his additions being mostly in the direction of additional counterpoints. There is something very piquant in this blend of naivete and impertinence. I would go as far to hear an orchestral suite based on 'Pulcinella' as I would to avoid certain other works in which Stravinsky is after nobody but himself.

Eugène Goossens' 'Nature Poems' (Chester) remind us that the composer has less in common with the later Stravinsky than is generally supposed. There is a vital difference to begin with—the most recent works of the Russian left a good many of us with a conviction that his brevity and economy were the result of his having little to say—though we do not forget that lack of matter is unfortunately no bar to a composer's going on and on long after he should have stopped. But Goossens, whether he is long, as in 'The Eternal Rhythm,' or short, as in the 'Kaleidoscopes' and 'Conceits,' or moderately long, as in these three pieces, shows himself to be full of matter. You may be fogged, or annoyed—even repelled—by his methods of setting it forth, but you cannot pooh-pooh it as you can most of the examples of modernity quoted by Mr. Newman in the November Musical Times. These three pieces seem to be a great advance on Mr. Goossens' previous works for pianoforte, because they have behind them an emotional impulse that hitherto seemed to be either lacking or incompletely expressed. They are extremely difficult, so much so that one has to spend a fatiguing time at the keyboard before making up one's mind about them. Unfortunately, a good many minds will be made up without their owners going through this fiery trial. It is fatally easy to glance at these puzzling pages and pitch them aside with an impatient 'Bolshevism' or 'Futurism,' or any other vituperative 'ism,' and it is a convenient short cut for reviewers. Readers who wish to see some at least of the possibilities of the ultra-modern school should persevere with these pieces. They may never be able to do more than wrestle with them, having the worst of the bout as a rule, but they will find the experience stimulating.

The poems are called 'Awakening,' 'Pastoral,' and 'Bacchanal,' and of the three the last seems to be best, with the 'Pastoral' as a good second. They are dedicated to Moiseiwitsch. When he plays them may I be there to hear. By the by, the title of each piece is given at the end of it, with an effect of having been hitherto forgotten. Probably Mr. Goossens' next essay will go a step further and give us the title-page at the back. Its appearance in the customary place is the only conventional point in 'Nature Poems.'

One may get on terms with the music of Arnold Bax while one is still panting in the wake of Goossens. Bax depends less on harmony, and is the fortunate possessor of a fund of melodic invention lacking in most contemporary composers. One of the chief results of this is a blend of the diatonic and chromatic too often lacking in modern music. Too many composers seem to forget that constant chromaticism is as monotonous as its reverse. Four works of Bax just published by Murdoch are excellent examples of his work. The 'Lullaby' is a charming piece of moderate difficulty, though perhaps a little over-elaborate here and there for a cradle song. The 'Toccata' is a lengthy and well-developed movement. Mr. Bax here gives us a good deal more than the toccata form usually carries. It is now something better than a mere showy moto perpetuo, and Mr. Bax relieves the necessary brilliance with a delightful cantabile middle section. 'A Hill Tune' consists of a melody of folk-song type, treated for the most part

(Continued on page 113.)

FULL ANTHEM FOR EASTER.

1 Peter i. 18, 19, 20; Hebrews ix. 28; and part of a Hymn

(by permission of the proprietors of Hymns A. & M.).

Composed by H. A. CHAMBERS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato.FULL BASS (AND TENOR ad lib.).

mf

Ye know . . . that ye were not re - deem - ed with cor -

Moderato. ♩ = circa 88.

Gt. Diap.

Gt. to Ped.

cres.

- rup - ti - ble things, but with the pre - cious blood of

cres.

Christ, . . . Who ver - i - ly . . . was fore - or -

- dained be - fore the cre - a - tion of the world,

Sw.

Gt.

Gt. to Ped. in.

Copyright, 1921. by Novello and Company, Limited.

p

And was once of - fered for the sins . . . of . .

Sw.

ma - ny.

increase Sw. cres. ed accel. Gt. to Prin.

SOPRANO. Allegro maestoso.

O sons and daugh - ters, let us sing !

ALTO.

O sons, O sons and daugh - ters, let us sing !

TENOR.

O sons and daugh - ters, let us sing !

BASS.

O sons, O sons and daugh - ters, let us sing !

Allegro maestoso. ♩ = 112.

ff Gt. (Sw. coupd.) Gt. to Ped.

The King of

The King of heaven, the glo - rious King, heaven, the glo - rious King, O'er death to - day rose tri - umph-ing, o'er

O'er death to - day rose tri - umph-ing, o'er

O'er death to - day : . . rose . . tri - umph-ing, o'er

O'er death to - day rose tri - umph-ing, o'er death to - day rose tri - umph-ing. Al - - le - lu - . .

death to - day rose tri - umph-ing. . . Al - - le - lu - ia, death to - day rose tri - umph-ing. . . Al - - le - lu - ia, . .

death to - day rose tri - umph-ing. . . Al - - le - lu - ia, reduce Gt.

First system of the musical score. It consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a grand piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "ia, al - le - lu - ia, al - le - lu - ia, al - le - lu". The piano part includes a double bar line and a fermata over a whole note chord.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "ia!". The piano part features a rall. (rallentando) marking and a p Sw. (piano swell) marking. A guitar part is indicated with Gt. soft 8 ft. and Gt. to Ped. in. (Guitar to Pedal in).

Third system of the musical score. It begins with the tempo marking Andante lamentoso. and a time signature of 3/4. The lyrics are: "That Eas - ter morn, at break of". The piano part includes a pp (pianissimo) marking and a Sw. (swell) marking. The system concludes with the tempo marking Andante lamentoso. ♩ = 66.

day, The faith - ful wo - men went . . . their day, The faith - ful wo - men went . . . their legato.

way To seek the tomb where Je - sus lay.

way To seek the tomb where Je - sus lay.

An - gel clad in white they see, Who sat, and spake un - to the pp Celeste.

Man.

( 5 )

Detailed description: This is a musical score for a hymn. It features four systems of staves. The first system has two vocal staves (treble and bass clef) and a piano accompaniment (grand staff). The second system continues the vocal parts and piano accompaniment. The third system shows the vocal parts with lyrics and a piano accompaniment. The fourth system continues the vocal parts and piano accompaniment. The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings like pp and pp Celeste.

three, "The Lord is risen a - gain, the Lord is risen a - gain," . . said

mf cres. f

Full Sw. cres. molto.

Ped.

Allegro maestoso.

he. f On f On f On f On

Allegro maestoso. ♩ = 112. On

Gt. f Sw. coupd.Gt. to Ped.

this most ho - ly day of days,

this . . . most ho - ly day of days,

this most ho - ly day of days,

this . . . most ho - ly day of days,

ff

Our hearts and voi - ces, Lord, we

Our hearts and voi - ces, Lord, we raise raise To Thee in ju - bi - lee, to Thee in

To Thee, to Thee in ju - bi - lee and praise, to Thee in

To Thee, to Thee in ju - bi - lee, to Thee in

To Thee, to Thee in ju - bi - lee and praise, to Thee in

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, al - le -

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, . . al - le -

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, . . al - le -

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, al - le -

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, al - le -

poco rit. ju - bi - lee and praise. a tempo. Al - le - lu - ia, al - le - lu - - - ia! O sons and daugh-ters, let us

lu - - - ia! O sons and daugh-ters, let us

lu - - - ia! O sons and daugh-ters, let us

lu - - - ia! O sons and daugh-ters, let us

The first system of the musical score consists of four vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. Each vocal staff begins with the lyrics 'lu - - - ia!' followed by a rest, and then 'O sons and daugh-ters, let us'. The piano accompaniment features a series of chords and moving lines in both hands, with a forte (ff) dynamic marking.

sing, let us sing!

sing, let us sing!

sing, let us sing!

sing, let us sing!

The second system of the musical score continues the vocal parts and piano accompaniment. The vocal staves are marked with rall. molto. and feature a crescendo leading to the final phrase 'sing!'. The piano accompaniment also includes a crescendo and ends with a final chord. The tempo marking rall. molto. is repeated above each vocal staff and below the piano staff.

(Continued from page 104.)

with a background of graceful arabesque. The 'Burlesque' will surely be popular. It has humour—deliberately uncouth at times—and fine rhythmical variety. Mr. Bax should score this for orchestra—a small one for choice. With strings, wood-wind, and drums it would give us a jolly ten minutes.

Roger-Ducasse's 'Barcarolle' No. 2 (Durand) is another example of the way in which modern composers put a vast amount into an old form. Gone is the day when a Barcarolle meant a couple of pages of soft nothings over a swaying rhythm. Here we have a long piece, complex and difficult, and with some tremendous climaxes. There is splendid stuff in it, but it is far too long and elaborate for its title, and is best regarded as a rhapsody on a barcarolle theme. It is worth noting that Roger-Ducasse's writing for the keyboard is in the direction of developing traditional methods rather than in exploiting sonorities. For a good example of the latter method, or rather of a combination of the two methods, readers should examine D. E. Inghelbrecht's 'Paysages,' a suite of five pieces just published by Chester. Much of the effect of 'La lune sur la plaine' and of the poignant 'Une croix sur le chemin' is obtained by a nice management of pianoforte sonorities. The suite is the work of a resourceful and original composer. It is a pity its difficulty as a whole puts it beyond the reach of all but a comparative handful of players.

Yet more 'Paysages,' this time a pair—'Maritime' and 'Champêtre,' by Jean Cras (Durand). These are not extravagantly difficult, though far from easy. They show pronounced traces of folk-song influence. These two picturesque pieces were written 'A bord du "Commandant-Bory," Brindisi, Octobre, 1917,' so we need not be surprised at finding 'Maritime' the more convincing of the pair.

Balfour Gardiner's 'Salamanca' (Forsyth) needs some clue to its programme. Clearly it is descriptive music, difficult, and with a rough kind of impressiveness, but it remains an enigma to all who are not acquainted with the beauties—or the reverse, judging from the music—of Salamanca.

Roger Quilter's jolly 'Children's Overture' will delight an even larger public now that it is available in the forms of pianoforte solo and pianoforte duet (Winthrop Rogers).

SONGS

Our younger song writers seem to be falling roughly into two groups. One is experimenting along the line of impressionism, with the voice treated as a wind instrument to be given such notes as are lying round after the pianist has been provided with an elaborate solo; the other group is working in the direct line of traditional song. On the whole the future seems to be with the latter. After all, the human voice has its limitations as well as its unique appeal, and so long as the term 'song' implies the setting of words the singer can hardly be cold shouldered without serious loss. No doubt we shall see interesting developments in the direction of wordless song, but even this will probably be most successful when the voice is made one of a group of instruments, as in the effective examples of Mr. Bliss recently heard. Of the songs before me a set of 'Three Welsh Landscapes' by John R. Heath (Chester) contains some delicious harmony, but it is too constantly shifting, and the singer has on the whole a groping time. The best of the three is 'Mists.' It is the most vocal, and the pianoforte part is delightful. Three of Cyril Scott's latest songs show him more mindful of the vocalist's comfort than usual. 'Water-lilies' is an effective little song if treated with the right delicacy. 'Immortality' is a setting of Lytton's 'There is no death,' and has some breadth of style, though here and there its harmony recalls—dare one mention it?—'The Rosary.' In the gradual crescendo and climax of 'The Watchman' there is scope for a good singer. The melody is unusually diatonic, containing not one accidental. The accompaniment consists almost entirely of two swaying chords, and is intentionally monotonous, though indifferent playing may easily induce the wrong kind of monotony. These three songs are published by Elkin.

Gerrard Williams' 'Absence' and 'Serenade'—two short songs under one cover (Novello)—were written before the composer had acquired his present subtlety. There are hints of it, however, in 'Absence'—a setting of an old Scots song—where the sequence of 9ths (apparently out of place in connection with a text one associates with folk-song) is admirably expressive of the longing in the words. The 'Serenade' is more straightforward, with a rhythm that is perhaps too cheerful for a poem ending, 'Come hither, O love, or I die!'

Isadore Luckstone's 'Where be ye going?' (Winthrop Rogers) has a capital tune in folk-song manner, with an accompaniment that, slight as it is, tells in every stroke. The words are Keats' oft-set 'Devon Maid,' and the first line, and therefore the title, should read 'Where be you going?' 'Ye' is not only incorrect, but a less happy arrangement of vowels.

Too rarely does the reviewer light upon a batch of songs so good as the Five Elizabethan Songs of Ivor Gurney, published in separate numbers by Winthrop Rogers. The poems are all familiar, and have been set many a time and oft, but lyrics so perfect are a lasting source of inspiration. Certainly they have moved Mr. Gurney to produce some songs of quite remarkable freshness. Here are the titles: 'Under the Greenwood Tree,' 'Orpheus with his Lute,' 'Spring,' 'Sleep,' and 'Tears.' Mr. Gurney belongs to the second of the two groups of song composers mentioned above. His accompaniments are full of interest and effect, both in harmony and design, but one is always left with the impression of a genuine song with the main appeal in the voice part and text.

C. Armstrong Gibbs evidently takes the same view of song-writing as Mr. Gurney. Here are three very attractive examples of his work in 'As I lay in the early sun,' 'The fields are full,' and 'For Remembrance' (Winthrop Rogers). Like Mr. Gurney, Mr. Armstrong Gibbs writes real tunes for the voice, and still has plenty of invention left for the pianoforte part. Both composers appear to be endowed with the kind of talent that has long been wanted on our lyric and light opera stage.

[Reviews of violin, chamber, and organ music are unavoidably held over.—ED., Musical Times.]

SIR IVOR ATKINS

We join heartily in the chorus of congratulation to the latest musical knight. The honour goes to one of the hardest and most successful workers in the profession.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Since the events mentioned in the last issue the only concert in the old year requiring notice is that of the Oriana Madrigal Society at Æolian Hall. It is a curious commentary upon the state of affairs in musical London, that the Society had to give the programme twice over—on December 21 and 23—because there is no hall which would have sufficed without taking two bites at the cherry. The principal item on the programme was Palestrina's Motet for the Feasts of Christmas and Circumcision, based upon the hymn 'Christe Redemptor'; and in this, and the three Christmas hymns of Michael Praetorius—one of which had been heard at the Philharmonic some days previously—the choir showed how the old music can be made to live again without recourse to what may be called anachronistic modern singing. Indeed, it seems probable that when the musical history of the last few years comes to be written, this revival of sympathy with what the Germans pedantically call 'the phenomena of pre-tonal music' will be recorded as its principal feature. It is not only among performers and audiences, but also among composers that this tendency is evident. Thus at the same concert Herbert Howells and Gustav Holst gave evidence of the same trend of thought, and alike in Howells' 'A Spotless Rose' and Holst's 'Of One that is so fair and bright' there is evident a power of speaking in the ancient idiom without affectation or any appearance of conscious archaism. The playing of two 'Fantasias for String Quartet' of Henry Purcell by the Pennington String Quartet was a welcome interlude. The gradual growth of interest in Purcell is one of the wholesomest signs of latter-day taste. The instrumentalists also took part in Arthur Bliss' 'Second Rhapsody' for mezzo-soprano and tenor, which is interesting, and then in Sir Frederick Bridge's arrangement of Weelkes' humorous fancy 'The Cryes of London,' which (as always) proved immensely entertaining. Another lighter dish was Whittaker's arrangement for female voices and pianoforte of the North Country folk-song 'Chrissemis Day in the morning' ('O Dame, get up and bake your pies'). It is an extremely clever piece of work, though in one or two passages a little oversophisticated. Two part-songs of Walford Davies, and Kennedy Scott's arrangement of carols, completed a full, varied, and completely artistic programme.

Mr. Lamond was also the soloist at the first concert of the New Year of the London Symphony Orchestra on January 17, when he played Brahms' second Concerto, which is one of his favourite battle-horses. He appeared in place of M. Prokofiev, who was to have played his own Pianoforte Concerto, but was absent owing to illness. It is hardly to be supposed that Brahms would appeal very strongly to that part of the audience which had been particularly anxious to hear Prokofiev. Of this concert I can speak only from hearsay, as I was several hundred miles away from London at the time. The programme contained also an interesting Suite arranged by Mr. Albert Coates from music of Purcell. For purposes of record it should be mentioned that these consisted of three excerpts from

'Abdelazar,' two from 'Distressed Innocence,' and 'Bonda'; and the programme was completed by D'Erlanger's Prelude to 'Tess' and Holbrooke's Prelude to 'Dylan.'

On the previous Saturday, January 15, at Queen's Hall, Miss Beatrice Harrison played Elgar's Violoncello Concerto, with the composer conducting. It had always been felt that, for reasons that are an open secret, the first performance a little over a year ago did scant justice to the work. From what can be gathered from Miss Harrison's performance, it will now have a fair chance of coming into its own. At the same concert, the Symphony was Beethoven's No. 7. At the Quinlan Symphony Concert at Kingsway Hall on the same afternoon, Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony was heard again. It is a wise thing to repeat works of this calibre before the effect has been able to wear off, and at the same time not too soon. M. Moritz Rosenthal made his reappearance after a long interval, and his playing of Chopin's E minor Concerto aroused remarkable enthusiasm.

VARIOUS CONCERTS

An interesting event is the formation of the new combination which elects to be known as the 'Chamber Music Players.' It comprises Mr. Albert Sammons (violin), Mr. Lionel Tertis (viola), Mr. Felix Salmond (violoncello), and Mr. William Murdoch (pianoforte). Individual excellence is not always a guarantee of a fine ensemble, but this is one of the exceptions which proves the rule. Their success has been instantaneous, and they will no doubt be an important factor in the making of chamber music in the near future. They made their début on January 6.

Mention should be made of the pleasant Concerts for Young People (with metrical prospectus) of the Lotus Ladies' Orchestra, conducted by Mrs. Douglas Hoare, at one of which a tiny daughter of Mr. Adrian Ross made a promising début as pianist.

M. Kussevitzky has conducted three Sunday concerts at the Albert Hall with success. More will no doubt be heard of him later, and there is a general desire that he should appear again as a double-bass player. Though he specialises to a certain extent in Russian music, he is a versatile artist.

SOME NOTES FOR FEBRUARY

We are definitely promised a visit of the distinguished foreign composer, M. Sibelius, who will conduct the first performance of his fifth Symphony at the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on February 12. At the same concert V. Novak's Symphonic Poem 'In the Tatra Mountains' will be played here for the first time.

Mr. Hamilton Harty conducts the Philharmonic Concert on February 24, at which Mr. W. H. Bell's 'Symphonic Variations' will be played for the first time. Little of Mr. Bell's music has been heard here since he settled in South Africa, but it has aroused considerable enthusiasm there, and English musicians who have chanced to hear it have come back with glowing accounts of his contributions to symphonic literature.*

* A series of articles on 'The Symphonic works of W. H. Bell,' by M. van Someren-Godfrey, appeared in the May-July, 1920, numbers of the Musical Times.

Opera in London

By FRANCIS E. BARRETT

THE 'OLD VIC': 'TRISTAN'

It is somewhat of a reflection on our operatic undertakings that although the past month has been a time of general rejoicing (so far as circumstances would permit) and of holiday-making, there has been no opera for people to rejoice over, or with which to make merry. Therefore to be an accurate chronicler I must be silent. But in the same capacity my story is not all told, since the very demands of the festive season prevented me from finishing my record last month.

I left off at what was for me, and I think for many others, an interesting stage represented by the production of Wagner's great love-drama of 'Tristan' at the Old Vic. Here was courage indeed, and one might think, ambition o'erleaping itself. Not so. Save to those who have given the question the closest of study it is very little known what British artists can do in the way of operatic achievement when they set their minds to it. Generally speaking I may say that all our operatic work comes within the category of the tour de force, for the simple reason that exponents all go into opera without proper preparation, represented by a course of training. But I will not now discuss the question I have often propounded as to the necessity for due operatic training in this country. Our efforts generally, and those of the Old Vic Company in particular, show our extraordinary ability to get through things. Lord Rosebery was wont to term it our ability to 'muddle through'; but I will not say that, and certainly not in connection with the Old Vic representation of this stupendous work. There was no suggestion of muddling. It was a highly individual and very effective interpretation that was offered the patrons at Waterloo Bridge Road. My own impressions of the work are mainly gathered from an infinite variety of performances since that utterly confusing night in the 'eighties when I heard it for the first time. I have heard good performances and I have heard bad, and let me say that the bad performance was not in the S.E. district but 'in another place' further West, where it ought to have been better. So far as my experience of such things goes, I place the Old Vic 'Tristan' on a high level. And I do so because it attained its object. The work here is educative. The performance was decidedly informing. It would give the ignorant a better idea of the work than a more flourishing representation carried out with less earnestness.

There was no special expansion of means for the occasion. The orchestra was of the dimensions customary at these performances, but it was astonishingly effective. And besides giving a wholly comprehensible account of the score it achieved a feature that in all my experience of the work and its performance I have never met with before, and that was that the orchestra never overwhelmed the singers. This alone must have helped the listeners to gain a definite impression, while the presentation of the music by the singers must have helped in another way. There was to all intents and purposes a double cast. Certainly there were two sets of exponents for Tristan and Isolde, which showed that the Company's singers in no way shirked their task. The Isoldas were Miss Gabrielle Vallings and Miss Gladys van der Beck, and the Tristans Mr. John Clinto and Mr. Robert Curtis. Miss Irene Ainsley and Mr. Derwood remained steadfast throughout as Brangaene and King Mark. All are deserving of the warmest commendation for their efforts, and for labours that were artistically Herculean. Their reward was in the keen approval won from the large audiences in all parts of the house. Those who believe that it requires Gargantuan forces for the due representation of 'Tristan,' both in the orchestra and on the stage, must reconsider their verdict. This modest 'suggestion' was thoroughly effective in attaining its purpose. In my praise I must include Mr. Charles Corri, the conductor, who went about his work as modestly and as unassumingly as the rest, and with a like amount of effect. The performances were all the better for the fact that no one went through them with one eye on Covent Garden and an ear for echoes from Drury Lane. They kept 'their eyes in the boat,' as rowing men say, and as a result, as the wet bobs also have it, they put their backs into it. It was, in fact, an English reading carried out by people whose one object was to make the work known to others; and they succeeded in a way that reflects infinite credit upon their hearts and their brains. At the same time, it leads me to the reflection that we shall do a great deal more operatically—as exponents or composers—when we give up imitating other people and do things our own way.

The Musician's Bookshelf

By 'FESTE'

Clearly the biography of Patti had to be written, and no less clearly Mr. Herman Klein had to be the writer. He was in the happy position of knowing his subject as few other people knew her, he has long been an authoritative writer on the department of music she so long adorned, and both by reason of his experience and of his personal taste he is able to bring to his task the enthusiasm and conviction that not many of us can muster up where prime donne are concerned. For there is no plainer sign of the times, and none of better augury for the future of our art, than the steady decline of the dominion of the star singer. Mr. Klein calls his book 'The Reign of Patti' (Fisher Unwin, 21s.), and his title is fully justified, for Patti's life was as clearly a reign as that of any sovereign. But sovereigns no longer reign—they serve, or they don't survive—and it is pretty certain that had Patti been born to-day she would eventually have to choose between serving her art or losing her throne.

In his preface Mr. Klein speaks of the difficulty of avoiding the appearance of hyperbole in writing of Patti's achievements, adding that in this respect she was the despair of every journalist who tried to do her justice. Mr. Klein refuses to plead guilty of exaggeration, and says, 'The reader of these pages who is too young to have heard Patti in her best days, and who cannot conceive the wonder of the miracle that she was, must be content now to "mark, learn, and inwardly"—believe.' We have no difficulty in doing all three things, for Mr. Klein makes the first two easy, and the evidence he marshals is sufficient to convince the least credulous that Patti was a vocal phenomenon, and, save for certain dramatic limitations, in a field by herself. She had the rare advantage of having been born with not only the singer's temperament and voice, but with a liberal supply of the technique as well. When only five or six years old she heard her sister Amalia working hard at the shake, practising slowly as per rule. 'Why do you do it like that?' demanded Adelina. (A trying young sister she must have been!) 'Why don't you trill this way?' and she proceeded to execute 'a faultless natural shake.' At seven years of age her parents stood her on a table and bade her sing an entire piece, leaving the choice to her. She astounded them by a beautiful performance of 'Casta diva,' which she knew by heart through having heard her mother practise it. No wonder the family circle wept. Times were bad just then, and Adelina was clearly a little gold-mine. How, grown up, she went one better and became gold-miner is well-known. What quantities she brought to the surface from time to time we learn from Mr. Klein's book. Such passages as the following will interest a wide public; the rest of us will feel depressed, casting our minds back to such chronically needy folk as Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Franck, and others who were so ill advised as to be mere composers:

The period between the January and the July of 1888 was the most lucrative in Mme. Patti's whole professional career. In those six months she earned larger sums than have ever been paid, before or since, to any artist in the history of musical enterprise. . . . For a long while the Eldorado [South America] that had enriched Italy's two greatest tenors—Masini and Tamango—had been patiently waiting for her to bring with her her largest coffers and fill them with gold. . . . All agreed that the moment was ripe, as American financiers say, for the 'cutting of the melon.' . . . Proceeding leisurely by way of Paris and Madrid to Lisbon, she appeared at the Royal Opera House in the Spanish capital and received £3,000 for six performances. . . . The twenty-four performances at Buenos Ayres realised no less than £70,000, of which sum Mme. Patti received as her share £38,400, or £1,600 a night. This, of course, easily cast into the shade all the previous records associated with Masini and Tamango; nor have such figures been since approached either in any other city or by any other opera singer. . . . Going on to Monte Video, eight representations were given. . . . and for these the total receipts amounted to about £20,000. . . . From first to last, the tour was an unprecedented triumph. It was admirably managed, and, in a financial sense, by far the most successful that Mme. Patti ever undertook. It was estimated that her share of the total receipts exceeded £50,000, four-fifths of which could be reckoned as her profit. . . . Altogether, in the course of eighteen months she must have made an income closely approximating the extraordinary figure of £100,000. It is hardly necessary to add that such a sum was never before earned by any singer within the same space of time.

Here, instead of uncovering respectfully and pausing for a few moments with bowed head before such an unprecedented triumph, I find myself jamming my Sandringham on my head all the harder, and murmuring with Browning, 'But where's music, the dickens?' Well, it was there right enough—of a kind—but we hear little about it. This is not Mr. Klein's fault, of course. There is not much that can be written on works containing so little interest for the musician of to-day as Patti's repertory. On the song side it was negligible, and of the forty-two operas in which she appeared half are dead and most of the remainder are threadbare. She essayed no Wagnerian rôle. We read that she enjoyed listening to Wagner, but in the matter of singing his music she merely sat on the bank and tried the temperature with her toe, so to speak. She sang 'Traume' with great success, and was encouraged to a further flight. This, unfortunately, happened to be a backward one, for she settled on 'Elizabeth's Prayer,' which has very little to do with the real Wagner. This also proving a success she studied 'Elsa's Dream,' but does not seem to have got to the stage of singing it in public. She then took her toe out of the water and kept it out.

It is interesting and not unamusing to see the programme chosen for the first State concert at which Patti sang. Part I. consisted of a selection from 'St. Paul,' Patti's share being 'Jerusalem! Jerusalem!' followed by 'Hear ye, Israel' (Patti) and the Kyrie and Gloria from Beethoven's Mass in C. The second part was only a little more giddy—Rossini's 'Cujus Animam,' an air and chorus from Hummel's 'Alma Virgo,' a Romance from Méhul's 'Joseph,' with a few items from the 'Creation' and 'Israel in Egypt.' It was stipulated that the Hummel item should be described as 'Air and Chorus,' not as Offertorium, and for the same sound Defender-of-the-Faith reasons, no doubt, the Beethoven Mass in C was called 'Service in C,' lest haply We might appear to dally with Rome. No native music was included, of course. The date was June 28, 1861. There is a good deal of the lamentable history of modern British music to be seen in the programmes of such functions, from the date of this specimen down to the years just before the war, when Herr Wurm and his Viennese Orchestra (wasn't it?) used to encourage our composers by leavening the lump of Leo Fall and other representatives of the mainland with a few scraps of Sullivan.

Hereabouts it occurs to me that instead of reviewing Mr. Klein's book I am getting rid of some bile on various matters. This is unfortunate, but the subject of the volume is so bound up with all that has retarded musical progress in this country that the reading of it is like a series of red rags to any John Bull who is sufficiently young to have escaped the Patti spell. Mr. Klein has given us a most interesting book, but he must not expect many of us to share his whole-hearted admiration of the singer. With the best will in the world, we cannot forget that such artists as Patti are little more than phenomenally successful wage-earners, who leave the art as they found it, or even slightly the worse for the contact. If our instrumental soloists, our choral trainers, and our conductors, gave us the kind of music the star singer has almost invariably served up, nine-tenths of the finest music ever written would have been written in vain. Very much to the point is an article by Sir Charles Stanford in the current Music and Letters. Dealing with the centenaries of Jenny Lind, Pauline Viardot-Garcia, and George Grove he says some frank things on the responsibilities of the performer. Joachim and von Bülow were:

Artists of the highest ideals. Liszt was a curious blend of both, with a strong bias to the right side. Clara Schumann was above proof; so even in his purely executive capacity was Sterndale Bennett; so was Neruda; so were many of our great organists, such as S. S. Wesley. In the world of singers the cases are rarer, and instances of what I may term artistic selfishness are largely in the majority. Who can recall a single action for the good of music, as distinct from the display of voice, of Catalani, of Alboni, of Tamberlik? Even Patti, with all Europe at her feet, had the power in her grasp of being a priestess in her art, and she became a servant of the public, inducing them to hear her in Mozart, not Mozart in her, and popularising as the highest form of art 'Home, sweet Home' and 'Coming thro' the Rye.' She had a perfect instrument on which she played with perfect technique, but the results musically were equivalent to those of a first-rate violinist who confined his efforts to the Fantasias of de Beriot and Ernst. If only singers of the first calibre, who hold the public in their hands, no matter what they sing, were to use the great power they hold to disseminate the best music, instead of wrapping their talent in a napkin, how different would the taste of the public have become!

In this respect Patti comes badly out of a comparison with Jenny Lind. The widespread interest in the latter's centenary is a proof that she made a niche for herself in the memory of musicians. Patti's centenary will be with us twenty-two years hence. Will her memory be as green as Jenny Lind's is to-day? Most of us will lay Mr. Klein's book aside with mingled feelings. It is an interesting and well-compiled record of brilliantly wasted opportunities, and is quite unintentionally, no doubt the heftiest of blows at the star system. The reign of Patti began on the drawing-room table at home, and it ended with her last bow to the public. The reign of Bach and a few others of the needy ones mentioned above began in most cases after their inexpensive funerals, but neither we nor our children nor our children's children will see the end of it.

A batch of men of this kind, long dead, but still speaking, is dealt with in Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Twelve Good Musicians' (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., 5s.). The book consists of the substance of a series of lectures delivered by Sir Frederick at the University of London, the subjects being Bull, Byrd, Morley, Weelkes, Gibbons, Deering, Milton, Lawes, Locke, Humfrey, Blow, and Purcell. The treatment is necessarily brief, and there are occasional reminders that Sir Frederick is far happier on a platform than on paper, though he may not be aware of it. But he is an enthusiast on these old composers, and so is likely to make other enthusiasts. Look down the list of names again, and ask yourself if we have not good cause for pride therein. If you know a good deal less about the twelve men than any English musician ought to know, let Sir Frederick put the matter right.

Here is another book dealing with our early music, covering more ground, and dealing with it in a more detailed fashion—H. Ormond Anderton's 'Early English Music' (Musical Opinion Office, 10s. 6d.). Mr. Anderton divides his work into two parts, the first dealing with the Church writers, from Dunstable to the two Wesleys, the second with secular music, under the sub-heads 'Instrumental,' 'Madrigals,' &c. The composers concerned are of course the same in many cases, but it is convenient to have two main departments of their work thus separated. The author is on the least trodden ground in the second half of the book, where he deals with such collections as 'My Ladye Nevill's Book,' the 'Mulliner Book,' Ravenscroft's 'Pammelia,' Benjamin Cosyn's Book, &c. There are some delightful musical illustrations here—indeed the volume throughout is well supplied with examples in music-type. On second thoughts, I am not so sure that this secular ground is the least familiar. Looking at the Church music chapters, one is painfully conscious of the fact that the bulk of the finest work of the kind produced in this country is unknown to most of those responsible for the choice and performance of the music in our churches to-day. Perhaps there was some excuse in the past, when little of it was available in cheap and handy form, and when musical literature was usually silent as to the composers. But this state of things no longer obtains. We have abundance of the works now well edited, with a lot more on the way, and there is no excuse for ignorance when there is available so comprehensive a book as the one under notice. It can need no better warrant than the words of approval in Dr. R. R. Terry's preface.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

Owing to unexpected demands on our space, I am compelled to hold over replies to the queries sent by some correspondents. For the same reason, and also because of the late arrival of the records for review, it will be impossible to do more this month than briefly mention a small number.

Here are details of a batch of Æ-V.: Beethoven's Quartet in D (Op. 18, No. 3), played by the L.S.Q. The first two movements, Allegro and Andante con moto (d.s.). An excellent record save in one or two very soft passages where the pianissimo that would be delightful at first hand fails to reach us via the machine. A particularly weak spot in this respect is the 'cello lead in the second movement, where the actual entry is practically inaudible. One is able to grasp it only after it has got under way. Seeing that the most satisfying portions of string quartet records are usually those in which the power is at least mf, it is odd that players should still indulge in delicacies that have little chance of getting any further than the recording room.

'Question' and 'Answer,' by Wolstenholme, played by Lionel Tertis (d.s.). An arrangement of two popular organ pieces. The viola tone comes out well, and the balance between the solo and the pianoforte accompaniment is good.

'Poet and Peasant' Overture, played by the Band of the 1st Life Guards. A good d.s. record of an old war-horse that presumably still has admirers.

'Serenade,' by Arensky, and 'Moment Musical' by Schubert, played by Albert Sammons, with pianoforte accompaniment (d.s.). The Schubert piece is the popular little F minor movement. Two good records, though most of us would prefer hearing such a fine player in something bigger.

Last month I had high praise for a Rosing record. Here is another, equally good—Moussorgsky's 'Song of the Flea,' with pianoforte accompaniment. Those who have heard Rosing sing this song remember it as a kind of exposition of the dramatic possibilities of the laugh. It is a joy to renew that vivid impression by means of this fine record. Gramophonists who do not know the work, however, will be up against the fact of its being sung in Russian. Now, when we hear a song in a foreign tongue at a concert, we are helped by an English version in the programme. The popularity of such a record as this would be enormously increased if it were accompanied by a translation. There ought to be very little difficulty about it. A slip of paper pasted on the back of a one-sided record, or on the cover of a double-sided example, would meet the case.

From a parcel of Columbia records I choose for mention three. First, one with a pathetic interest, Gervase Elwes singing Dunhill's 'Full fathom five' and Ley's 'The Lake Isle of Innisfree' (d.s.), with F. B. Kiddle at the pianoforte. The first song gives the better result, the words coming out well, and the tone being clean. The other side does a good deal less than justice to the singer's enunciation.

Coleridge-Taylor's Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte, played by Sammons and Murdoch, is a very successful reproduction on two d.-s. records. As usual in this type of record the violin comes off best, but the balance is well up to the average, and with two such players, the tuneful work is made the most of. I have been asked if there is a good record of 'Till Eulenspiegel.' There may be several, but the only one known to me is the Columbia reproduction of Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra's performance. It is d.-s., and of course the work is considerably abbreviated. The amount of orchestral detail that comes out is astonishing, the wood-wind passages being particularly good. The result is so enjoyable that one looks forward to the day when the whole of a long work of this kind will be available without cuts, on a record that will not need reversing, or that will reverse automatically.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Players of all instruments, except pianoforte, are invited to join the St. Jude's Amateur Orchestra. Rehearsals are friendly, and not critical.—Mr. H. SEYMOUR, 2, Milton Road, Herne Hill, S.E. 24.

Lady pianist wishes to join trio or quartet for practice and concerts. Mortlake district.—E. L., c/o Musical Times

Pianist and vocalist (young lady) wishes to meet with violinist and 'cellist for practice of good music. Highgate district.—'MUSIC LOVER,' c/o Musical Times.

There are a few vacancies for good voices, especially tenors and basses, also instrumentalists with good experience, in the Marylebone Philharmonic Society. Rehearsals—Orchestra, Tuesdays, 7.30; choir, Thursdays, 7.30, at Marylebone College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1.

Wanted, good viola player and 'cellist (male) for quartet. Must be sufficiently advanced to play the most difficult chamber music. Residents in or near borough of Hornsey preferred. Evening work only.—S. F., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced orchestral pianist wishes to meet good string players for practice of standard works, suites (e.g., Coleridge-Taylor), &c. North London district. Must be good sight-readers.—'CLERY,' c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to join trio. West Norwood district.—W. N., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (male) wishes to meet others, for study of chamber music. Romford or Ilford district preferred.—A. H. MENDHAM, 68, Mildmay Road, Romford, N. 1.

Pianist wishes to join violinist and 'cellist for enjoyment of Trios, classical and modern.—'AUTHOR,' c/o Musical Times.

A very interesting programme will be performed at the musical service at Southwark Cathedral on February 5, at three o'clock. The scheme includes Holst's Two Psalms for chorus, strings, and organ, and his Four Songs for voice and violin; Stanford's 'A Song of Hope,' for solo, chorus, strings, and organ; Franck's 150th Psalm; Motets by Ecard, Gibbons, Brahms, and Rachmaninov; and works for strings by Elgar and W. H. Reed. The string orchestra will consist of members of the L.S.O. No tickets are required.

Church and Organ Music

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL

The Dean of Manchester (Dr. McCormick) brought the first series of Sunday evening Congregational practices to a close with a carol service. After a brief sketch of the history and nature of carols, 'The First Nowell' was sung, and in order to lend variety to the rendering, the Dean divided his large congregation into Decani and Cantoris, each side of the Church taking alternate verses in turn. Still more unconventional was the treatment of another traditional favourite, 'Good King Wenceslas.' Referring to the fact that, in olden days, the verses assigned to the Page were sung by the maids, and those to the King by the shepherds, he called upon the women and boys to sustain the rôle of the Page, and all the men, impersonating the King, took their part in the dialogue with telling effect. Two other carols, 'Sweeter than songs' (J. F. Bridge) and 'When Christ was born of Mary free,' were taken in the orthodox fashion, and Gounod's 'Bethlehem,' sung by the voluntary choir (directed by Mr. W. H. Cradock), brought the service to a close. The Dean makes free use of antiphonal singing to develop the meaning and beauty of the Psalms, which, he says, possess neither metre nor rhyme, but many of the verses abound in striking parallelisms. To illustrate his point, Psalm 114, 'When Israel came out of Egypt,' was taken, and after the opening verses the choir sang the first clause of each verse, the congregation responding with the second, e.g.:

Choir: 'The mountains skipped like rams.'

Congregation: 'And the little hills like young sheep.'

This psalm, aptly termed the Birthday Song of the Jewish nation, was sung to the Gregorian chant 'Tonus Peregrinus,' and readily taken up by the congregation from the papers pointed for chanting.

A series of lectures and hymn-practices on 'Ecclesiastical Music' will take place at King's College, London, on the Thursdays in February and March, at 5.30. The lecturers are Messrs. E. T. Cook ('Church Music of the Restoration Period'), February 10, and H. C. Colles ('The Lay Musician in Church'), February 24.

Under the auspices of the Church Music Society a Hymn Festival will be held at the People's Palace on February 5, at 5.30. Prof. Walford Davies will conduct.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Fred Gostelow, King Street Congregational Church, Luton—Sonata in A, Borowski; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Central Hall, Westminster—Marche Solennelle, Mailly; Toccata in F, Bach; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant.

Mr. Godfrey Uren, Wesley Chapel, Camborne—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Choral No. 3, Franck; Bourrée and Prelude, and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton—Concert Overture, John Kinross; Marche des Rois Mages, Dubois; Concert Fantasia on a Welsh March, Best.

Mr. W. Cawthorne Sunter, South Parish Church, Greenock—Toccata in C, Bach; Prière et Berceuse, Guilmant; Madrigal, Lemare; Fantasia on two Carols, West.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; Prelude on Old 113th, Wood; Final (Symphony No. 2), Vierne.

Mr. G. Virgil Dawson, Mount Zion Congregational Church, Sheffield—Fantasy on two Carols, West; 'Over the Prairie,' Cyril Scott.

Dr. Thomas Keighley, Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Pastorale, Reger; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Offertoire in E flat, Franck.

Mr. C. F. Eastwood, St. John's, Dumfries—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Pastoral and Adoration, 'The Manger,' Guilmant.

- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, All Hallows', Bromley, E.—Grand Chœur in B flat and Cantilène Nuptiale, Dubois; Fantasy on two Carols, West; Sonata in D, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden—Prelude on 'Southwell,' Wood; 'In Modo Dorico,' Stanford; Prelude on 'St. Bride,' Farrar; Prelude, 'Come, Redeemer of our Race,' Bach.
- Mr. Franklyn Glynn, St. Matthew's, Northampton—Choral No. 1, Franck; Lament, Harvey Grace; Intermezzo, Stuart Archer.
- Mr. Paul Rochard, St. Peter's, Market Bosworth—Passacaglia, Cyril Scott; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Vision, Rheinberger.
- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Christmas Postlude, Harvey Grace.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Grand Chœur Dialogué, Gigout; Cantilène, Wolstenholme; Fugue in G minor and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.
- Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Prière, Borowski. Inverallan Church—Toccata de Concerto, Bossi; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Pavane, Bernard Johnson.
- Mr. Arthur G. Colborn, St. Stephen's, Bristol—Fugue in D, Handel; Gothic March, Salomé; Variations on 'St. Anne,' Colborn.
- Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Sonata in D flat, Rheinberger; Lament, Sowerbutts. St. Stephen's Walbrook—Scherzo, Cantabile, and Final (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Dupré; Allegretto in A, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (four recitals)—Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Intermezzo, Stuart Archer; Sonata in A, Borowski; 'La Fille aux Cheveux de lin,' Debussy.
- Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. Bees Priory Church—Noel, Franck; Maestoso, Rheinberger.
- Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Matthew's, Denmark Hill—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Air with Variations and March for a Church Festival, Best. St. Andrew's, Holborn—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Offertoire in D flat, Salomé.
- Mr. Irby Chapman, St. John's, Clapham Rise—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Choral Prelude, Bach; Overture in D, Smart.
- Mr. W. G. Breach, St. John's, Clapham Rise—Overture in C minor, Hollins; An Irish Fantasy, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Alexander McConachie, Christ Church, St. Kilda—Holsworthy Church Bells, Wesley; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor.
- Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church (two recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Concert Fantasia, Stewart.
- Mr. F. Calvert J. Swanton, Portlaw Parish Church—Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Fugue in D and Prelude on 'From Heaven high,' Bach; Prelude on Old Irish Church Tune, Stanford.
- Mr. Derek E. Kirkland, St. Michael's, Stockwell Park—Pastorale (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach.
- Mr. J. R. Buffel, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Liverpool—Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Sonata No. 1, Harwood.
- Mr. Bertram J. Orsman, St. Mary's, Hitchin—Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake!' Bach; Choral No. 2, Franck; First movement (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Moseley, Birmingham—Prelude 'In dulci jubilo,' Bach; Christmastide Fantasia, Harwood.
- Rev. E. H. Melling, St. Matthew's, Fulham—Prelude in B minor, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Concerto No. 3, Handel.
- Mr. Allan Brown, St. Matthew's, Luton—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Finale ('New World' Symphony); Fugue, Reubke.

APPOINTMENT

- Mr. Herbert S. Mountford, organist, Nechells Wesleyan Church, Birmingham.

Letters to the Editor

PERMANENT OPERA IN ENGLISH

SIR,—Some two or three weeks ago I saw in a Leeds or Bradford paper an article in which the writer stated that Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' had not paid when transferred to the stage. I did not think it worth while to contradict it. But now that I see this statement again in a letter to you from Mr. Claude Trevor I think it is time for me to say that 'Elijah' not only paid but paid very well. If I had any companies running now it would certainly be in the repertoire. This is from a financial point of view. Now, on the artistic side, let me add that I never had an adverse criticism in the Press, and that I never went into the front of the house during a performance without witnessing affecting scenes among the audience. Also in all my experience I never saw so many clergymen in the theatre; indeed, on one occasion, a clergyman was on his knees.

In regard to touring companies in Italy Mr. Trevor is right, but perhaps Mr. Barrett when writing his interesting article had in mind the fact that there were, before the war, three hundred-and-sixty different opera companies in Italy to which he applied the term 'touring' when he meant resident or permanent. But I do want Mr. Trevor not to mind what other companies do or do not, and not to base his argument on it. I recall one item in management to which I steadily adhered, and which gave me an average annual income of £500. Yet no company has copied it. I take off my hat very humbly indeed to the late Augustus Harris, but considering that he toured only once—an Italian opera company, I think—and I have toured as many as three during a period of twenty years, I ought to be able to say something about Permanent National Opera in English. So I here assert for the thousandth time that National Grand Opera can be given in an all round way at popular prices—I repeat, popular prices—far better than it has ever been given, without the cost of a farthing to the rates or taxes, and make a financial success in every way. This I can prove by my own successful experience. If Mr. Trevor can get together a committee, corporation, person or persons sufficiently interested I will show how National Opera can be made to pay. But, alas, I am afraid he will be unsuccessful. At any rate, I've tried for years without success.—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES MANNERS.

Hotel Bristol,
Monaco.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

SIR,—Mr. A. R. Cripps' letter does not seem to call for much comment, except that I should like to say how amused I am at the remark about Mr. Elliot Button's 'youthful exuberance.' On page 5 of the January number of the Musical Times an advertisement informs me that Mr. Button has been musical reviser to Messrs. Novello for thirty-six years, which must carry him far beyond youth, though I gather from his book that he is in no way suffering from senility. As for Mr. Cripps' last sentence, I do not suppose there is any system discoverable in the notation of either Bach or Beethoven; but had it been possible for them to know the Button system, there would have been no occasion for any one to try to explain their intentions, with the always possible chance of doing so incorrectly. Surely the great composers wrote in the notational idiom of their day in the same way as the very earliest writers used neumes, that being all that was known to them at the time.—Yours, &c.,

FERRIS TOZER.

20, Howell Road, Exeter.
January 10, 1921.

BRITISH VIOLIN MUSIC

SIR,—It is my intention to endeavour to popularise British music—to make my audiences familiar with its beauties—and to help as far as I can in giving to it that place in the world that we should claim for it. But I am confronted with a big difficulty—the tracing of the masterpieces of our composers. May I therefore appeal to musicians in all parts of our wide Empire to aid me by bringing to my knowledge any work they may have written for the violin? Hidden treasures may thus be brought to light. And I assure such composers of my best co-operation in realising their ideals in return for their co-operation with mine.—Yours, &c.,

'Inveresk,' Cheltenham.
January 15, 1921.

MARIE HALL.

[We gladly print Miss Marie Hall's letter. At the same time we cannot agree with her suggestion that there is any difficulty in making acquaintance with modern British works. The musical press during the past few years has given ample information in the shape of articles and reviews; there are publishers' advertisements, lists, and public sales-rooms, to say nothing of the substantial catalogue of over 300 pages issued by the British Music Society.—Ed., M.T.]

'MUSIC AT THE CINEMA'

SIR,—With regard to Mr. Salmon's article in your December issue, I should like to raise a point which has evidently escaped his notice, but which seems to me of considerable importance.

It is perfectly true that a great deal of 'good' music is being played, and often extremely well-played, in many of the cinema theatres, but some of us who are interested in 'Musical Appreciation' in schools are constantly coming up against a result of the association of music with pictures which leads us to question your contributor's main conclusion. We observe a growing tendency to describe in terms of 'the pictures' the effect of any piece of music which has just been performed. 'It suggests cow-boys,' 'It is like a train going over a precipice,' are examples of the kind of answer one sometimes gets on attempting, by means of questioning, to find out whether the mood of a composition has been felt. It would seem, therefore, that there is a great danger of children collecting a store of utterly false ideas with regard to the music they hear, through its association with certain types of pictures. The ultimate result of this will be that they will become absolutely incapable of appreciating pure music as such to the end of their days.

I have heard (on the Continent, it is true) parts of the 'Fidelio' Overture used to accompany a picture on the level of fourth-rate melodrama, a fact which leads one seriously to doubt the merit which Mr. Salmon sees in the use of 'good' music at the cinemas.

Probably the ideal musical accompaniment to pictures would be an improvised one. Any proprietor wishing to cater for those who 'do not go for the pictures at all,' but for the music, might arrange purely musical interludes, which could be enjoyed without distraction.

Query: Is it possible to look at the pictures on the screen, and really appreciate the accompanying music at the same time? If so, why bother about 'Musical Appreciation' classes.

It would be interesting to hear the views of other readers on this subject.—Yours, &c.,

A. FORBES MILNE.

Berkhamsted School,
Herts.

IT WAS READ, NOT REED

SIR,—In your January issue there appeared a report of a concert at Hastings where the Beethoven Concerto was played, with Julian Clifford's Orchestra. The name of the soloist was given as Mr. W. H. Reed. May I point out that this was an error? It was not the talented leader of the London Symphony Orchestra, but Mr. William J. Read, of Eastbourne, who was the executant on that occasion.

This gentleman was a scholarship holder of the Royal College of Music, and was the leader and deputy conductor under Mr. Tas of the Duke of Devonshire's private orchestra during the latter part of its existence.

It is to be regretted that the similarity of these names has on several occasions led to mistakes.—Yours, &c.,

29, Edridge Road, Croydon.

F. J. COOPER.

January 10, 1921.

[Several letters are unavoidably held over.—Ed., M.T.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of February, 1861:

TO CORRESPONDENTS

A Young Professional, whose object is to ascertain how he may set about acquiring 'a thorough knowledge of thorough bass, theory, and all that is necessary to make a perfect musician and composer,' is advised to place himself at once with a master capable of teaching him. If he requires books, he will find that Catel's 'Treatise on Harmony,' and Albrechtsberger's 'Thorough Bass,' contain all he can desire to know.

Bow.—On Tuesday evening, January 15, a lecture was delivered in Salem Chapel, Bow Road, on 'Handel,' by Mr. Frederick Bridge, assisted by a choir of fifty voices, who sang several of the illustrious composer's choruses with great precision, under the direction of the lecturer. Mr. John Lloyd presided at the organ.

CAPE TOWN.—The Cape Town Choral Society continues to show an improvement, both in numbers and in musical performances. The Society has now thirty-five effective, and eighteen honorary members. They have lately given a concert, which proved very attractive, and was well attended by the lovers of music in Cape Town.

WEYMOUTH.—A popular concert, at popular prices, was given in this town on December 28, by Mr. Ricardo Linter, when the programme consisted of a selection of classical music from the works of Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Weber. A new feature was introduced, consisting of a short description of the origin, and other interesting facts relating to the compositions, read by Mr. Rowland Brown.

KISS ME QUICK POLKA, by L. WILLIAMS (illustrated). Price 3s.

IN THE GROVE I'LL MEET THEE THEN, Vocal Duet. Poetry by CARPENTER, Music by S. GLOVER. Price 2s.

GROWING OLD. Ballad by BETA (suitable for a Contralto or Bass voice). Price 2s.

T. CROGER'S NEW PATENT EDUCATIONAL TRANSPOSING METALLIC HARMONICONS

Any gentleman who can make a case, may be supplied with the notes by themselves, at 6d. each, all marked and tuned ready for use. A set of notes (namely, 43) for a 3 octave, double row, will make a parcel 6 inches long, by 1½ inches square, weighing 8½ pounds, so that the bulk and weight of any number can easily be calculated, and the expense of carriage to any part of the world ascertained. This is well worthy the attention of persons going abroad, or sending goods to various parts. An immense number of T. Croger's patent notes have been manufactured for this purpose, and a ready sale is found for them, because illustrations are given with each set, showing entirely how to make the instruments, which any person can accomplish.

N.B.—Merchants, Shippers, Captains, and Emigrants will find these Instruments very excellent for a sea voyage or for exportation, because the notes are not at all affected by the variation of climate; they always remain perfectly in tune, and cannot be broken or destroyed.

FOLDING METALLIC HARMONICONS

Having (when shut) the appearance of a mahogany writing-desk, and (when open) . . . suitable for the parlour, sideboard, &c.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS

The Thirty-first Annual Conference was a notable success in many ways. Nothing less than a full report can do justice to the various addresses and discussions, and we regret that we have not the necessary space for such a report. Fortunately the Conference received a good deal of attention in the daily press, and the substance of the addresses of Sir Hugh Allen and Professors Donald Tovey and A. Henderson appeared in the Musical News and Herald of January 15.

CHORAL CONCERTS

Christmas-tide news is apt to fall rather flatly six weeks out of season, and in musical affairs it merely repeats the oft-told tale of carol concerts and performances of 'The Messiah.' We ask, therefore, that our correspondents (from and's End to John o' Groats) will excuse us if we ruthlessly summarize their information into one comprehensive report:

'During the Christmas season countless choral Societies sang carols or "Messiah" very excellently, effectively, and creditably, under the able direction of their conductors, and the solo parts were rendered, or sung, very effectively, creditably or excellently, by the soloists. The audiences were large and enthusiastic.'

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

As an event that looms large in the diary of London musical events, the annual carol concert of this Society calls for individual mention, for it serves as an exemplar to others. The programme was as follows:

Motet for Double Chorus,

'Now once again our hearts we raise.'

(Founded on the ancient chorale.)

Carol for Quartet and Chorus, 'In dulci Jubilo' R. L. de Pearsall

CAROLS

'Carol of the Skiddaw Yowes' ... ..	Ivor Gurney
'By Nazareth's green hills' ... ..	Bridge
'Come rejoice, all good Christians' ... ..	H. L. Balfour
'The rose and the lily' ... ..	Alec Rowley
'Welcome Yule' ... ..	Parry
'When the crimson sun had set' ... ..	arr. by S. S. Greatheed
'Would I had been a shepherd' ... ..	Bridge
'Ring, Christmas bells' ... ..	Bridge

There were also three or four of the traditional tunes which everybody knows. The music was well-chosen to promote the spirit of enjoyment, and its light-hearted melodiousness helped to set the note of festivity rather than of religious celebration. Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Ring, Christmas bells' was encored by acclamation which over-ruled the composer's own prohibition. The solo singers—Miss Flora Woodman, Miss Rosa Rubery, Miss Carmen Hill, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Topliss Green—were popular, and Mr. H. L. Balfour was kept busy at the organ.—'Messiah,' on January 1, drew a large audience as usual, and its performance needs no description. Miss Ruth Vincent, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Robert Radford sang the solos.

The performance of 'Merrie England' by the Central London Choral and Orchestral Society at Central Hall, on January 15, was remarkable chiefly for the size of the audience it attracted—one of the largest that any choral concert has brought to this hall. The choir sang well under Mr. David J. Thomas.

The Handel Society met at the Royal College of Music on December 16, and gave a programme of unusual interest under Dr. Vaughan Williams. A selection from Handel's 'L'Allegro,' and the conductor's own Fantasia on Christmas Carols, showed where choral societies may leave the beaten track and find themselves on still sure ground—for musicians and public.

The Oriana Madrigal Society's concert at Aeolian Hall on December 21 was again a rare and refreshing meal. Mr. C. Kennedy Scott still selects wisely from the old and the new, and side by side with Palestrina's 'Christe Redemptor Omnium,' four Christmas Hymns by Praetorius, and Weekes' 'Cryes,' one could enjoy the modern work of Holst, Howells, Walford Davies, and the arrangements of traditional tunes by W. G. Whittaker and Mr. Scott. Numerous soloists took part, and the instrumental interludes included Arthur Bliss' second Rhapsody for two voices and chamber orchestra. The concert was repeated two days later.

Blackburn Ladies' Choir maintained its high standard on January 10 in a programme that included Hamish MacCunn's 'Night,' Wadely's 'Heaven over-arches earth and sea,' Holst's 'The splendour falls,' Julius Harrison's 'On the beach at Otahai,' and a specially-written choral ballad, 'Jock o' Hazeldean,' by W. R. Anderson. Mr. F. Duckworth conducted.

The Novello Choir offered a novel item in the course of the Christmas concert at King George's Hall (Y.M.C.A.), on December 22, in the shape of an ad hoc Bach cantata made of selected choruses and solos. The sequence was as follows: Chorus, 'God's time is the best'; Recit. and Air (contralto), 'Prepare thyself, Sion'; Chorale, 'This proud heart'; Air (bass), 'Mighty Lord'; Chorus, 'Glory be to God.' With Holst's Fantasy 'Christmas Day,' a group of part-songs and a group of carols, Mr. Harold L. Brooke had put together a programme that could be listened to with unfailing pleasure. Solo contributions were made by Miss Ethel Fenton, Mr. Edward Halland, and Mr. Arthur W. Steed. St. Dunstan's benefited by over £35.

Preston Choral Society, whose reviving work under the conductorship of Dr. Herman Brearley is attracting attention in Lancashire, gave a performance of 'Elijah' at the Public Hall, on December 27, that was distinguished by the dramatic singing of the choruses. It was no less effective than the solo-singing of such deservedly well-known artists as Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

NEW ZEALAND.—The Timaru Orpheus, conducted by Mr. A. W. V. Vine, gave a concert of glees and part-songs on October 19, the programme including Elgar's 'Feasting I watch,' Brewer's 'Alexander,' Lloyd's 'Three men of Gotham,' Lee Williams' 'Song of the Pedlar,' Button's arrangement of 'The banks of Allan Water,' Cooke's 'Strike the Lyre,' and Beale's 'Come let us join the roundelay.'

THE SCARBOROUGH FESTIVAL

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical Festival which took place at Scarborough from December 30 to January 2, was organized avowedly in order to advertise the town, and not for purely artistic objects, but Mr. Alick Maclean—who conducts the Spa concerts in the summer, and who was chiefly responsible for the arrangement of the programme—is much too conscientious an artist to allow anything unworthy to intrude itself. Mr. Maclean is, of course, a composer of distinction, and it was only fitting that on the rare occasion when adequate means were at his disposal, the opportunity should be given him for introducing some of his most important compositions. For this purpose he arranged in concert form copious selections from two of his operas, 'Quentin Durward,' an early work recently revised for the Carl Rosa Company, and a one-Act opera, 'The Hunchback of Cremona,' which was given in Germany for two successive seasons, but had never been heard here. The former is a favourable example of English opera, somewhat of the type which Weber introduced to us in 'Oberon,' and which his pupil, Benedict, imitated in 'The Lily of Killarney.' Without dispensing with pieces in lyrical form, its well-wrought ensembles go far beyond the puerilities of Balfe, and the orchestra is handled with a power that makes it an important factor in the dramatic effect. The later work marks a distinct advance. Its subject has suggested a more sincere emotional treatment, and the music is more coherent and better knit. The interest is admirably sustained, and the opera-going public will suffer a loss if it is afforded no chance of witnessing the stage production of a work which one is convinced would be well received.

The third work by which Mr. Maclean was represented was his oratorio, 'The Annunciation,' which was first heard at Queen's Hall in 1909, when, as on this occasion, the Sheffield Musical Union furnished the chorus. At that time some exception was taken to the dramatic form adopted by the composer, but this will now be generally considered in its favour, for whatever lines oratorio may take in the future, we are certainly not likely to revert to the old type, and a free and elastic form, following closely every suggestion of the text, is more likely to find acceptance than the method of parcelling it out in distinct and separate 'numbers.' Mr. Maclean has treated his subject with power and with an appreciation of its significance; he has used a full brush, charged with strong colours, but never inappropriately, or merely for the sake of effect. Whatever else he may be, he is never dull, and his resourcefulness never flags.

The rest of the Festival programme was of a very varied character. The participation of the Hallé Orchestra (or at least of fifty-three of its members) resulted in some excellent performances, mostly of familiar pieces. One concert was exclusively orchestral, and was conducted by Sir Henry Wood, whose readings of the popular Variations from Tchaikovsky's Suite in G, the first 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, need no comment. He introduced also a native piece of importance in the 'Dance Rhapsody' of Delius, an interesting and characteristic work. Mr. Maclean, who directed the other orchestral pieces as well as his own works, showed himself to be an admirable conductor, and though he allowed himself considerable licence, he always left the impression that it was for the sake of expression and not for sensational effect. At the same time the exaggerated slowness with which he took some passages in the great 'Leonora' Overture had the result of interrupting the course of the music, and seemed hardly justified. One was glad to welcome again Edward German's 'Richard III.' Overture, which was admirably played, and Mr. Roger Quilter conducted his own delightful 'Children's' Overture, which should command great popularity, for it is simple without being bald, and the old nursery tunes are most artistically dovetailed together. Howard Carr's 'Three Heroes' was another recent example of native music.

Dr. Coward and his Sheffield Choir were responsible for the choral pieces, some of which were part-songs of a low-comedy type, the effects of which were realised with a breadth of humour that at times sacrificed artistic finish. Apart from its share in Mr. Maclean's compositions, which was very efficiently carried out, the Choir's most serious effort was in Granville Bantock's unaccompanied Choral Symphony, 'Vanity of Vanities,' the first two sections of which were effectively sung.

The principals engaged were Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Hilda Blake, Miss Cragg-James, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, M. Mischa-Léon, and Mr. Mostyn Thomas. Most of these are well-known, but a word is due to Mr. Thomas, a young Welsh baritone possessing a voice of exceedingly fine quality, who has yet to learn the value of restraint but shows remarkable promise, and to M. Léon, whose singing was that of a finished artist. In one of the concerts he sang groups of French, English, and Scandinavian songs with remarkable intelligence and invariable charm.

DALCROZE EURHYTHMICS

Good audiences have attended demonstrations given by M. Jacques-Dalcroze, his assistants, and pupils at Queen's Hall during the past month. On January 11 we were most struck by the part played by a class of elementary school children who had had only one term's instruction. The feats performed later by the adult students were of engrossing interest, but from a practical point of view the work done by the children was more important. Demonstrations are to be given shortly in various provincial towns, and we strongly urge our readers to lose no opportunity of making acquaintance with a system that, applied in our schools generally, would in a few years work a revolution in the musical life of the country.

ENGLISH FOLK-DANCE SOCIETY

The Christmas Vacation School was held at Chelsea Polytechnic from December 29 to January 4. Nearly six hundred students from all parts of the country took part, and several hundreds more were unable to be admitted owing to lack of accommodation. Mr. Cecil Sharp and a staff of fifty teachers carried through the most successful school the Society has so far held.

We regret to record the death, at Winchester, of the Rev. Francis Gwynne Wesley, Mus. Doc., aged seventy-nine, one of four sons of Samuel Sebastian Wesley. He was vicar of Hamsteels, Durham, for thirty-seven years, until his retirement in 1911. An accomplished musician, he had many friends in the profession, which he would have entered, it is said, but for his father's dissuasion.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BATH

Carol-singing has been indulged in to some purpose by our various choral bodies. St. Dunstan's Home for blinded sailors and soldiers has benefited by nearly £25 from the carol-singing of Oldfield Park Wesleyan, East Tiverton Congregational, and Englishcombe Church choirs; while the Royal United Hospital is richer by some £28 from the programme of Oldfield Park Free Church choir.

Quite recently Bath Choral and Orchestral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry T. Sims, gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'A tale of Old Japan'; and under the auspices of the Bath branch of the British Music Society, a joint recital was given by Lady Woodroffe (pianoforte) and Mr. Hubert Hunt, the organist of Bristol Cathedral (violin). Their programme consisted of excerpts from Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, and Ireland, and of special interest was the Sonata, Op. 9, No. 9, of Jean Marie le Clair (1697-1764).

The Pump Room performances were attractive and seasonable. Two concerts of a miscellaneous character were arranged for Boxing-Day. An interesting item included in the programme of the usual weekly chamber concert held on the afternoon of December 30, was the Quartet in D major by the Russian composer, Borodine. In the evening of the same day, an admirable selection of Christmas and Yule-tide music was presented to a full and appreciative house by the Bath Choral and Orchestral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. H. T. Sims, complementary variation to the vocal items being contributed by the Pump Room instrumentalists. On New Year's Day two performances of 'Messiah' were given by the Pump Room choir of sixty voices, and an augmented orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Davis.

An event of almost universal interest was the presentation by the Glastonbury Festival Players of the nativity play 'Bethlehem,' a music-drama by Rutland Boughton, on January 6, 7, and 8. The libretto of this miracle play, with the addition of certain early English carols, is adapted from the 'Coventry Cycle' plays of the 14th century, and is the most famous of those brought to light when the Cotton library was transferred to the Bodleian. It was first produced at the Glastonbury Christmas Festival of 1915. So much has lately been written of the merits of this play, its almost pristine simplicity and its dignity—so essentially British in character—that further comment is needless. The composer conducted the work. After performances at Burnham and Bristol, the Glastonbury scheme will come to an end, as it would appear that the appeal of Sir Edward Elgar and others for financial aid has failed in its object.

In the evening of January 7, the Players gave a concert of old English and modern music and dances, of which mention should be made of the madrigals 'Since Robin Hood' and 'On the Plains' (Thomas Weekes); 'On a May morning' (Thomas Morley); 'Rosa Salis,' for harpsichord (Giles Farnaby), and three pieces for strings ('Allemande,' 'Sarabande,' and 'Cebell') by Purcell.

BELFAST

The Philharmonic Society gave its usual two performances of 'Messiah' on December 17 and 18, the soloists being Miss Ethel Dyer, Miss Joan Ashley, the Earl of Shaftesbury (president of the Society), and Mr. Kenneth Ellis. Mr. E. Godfrey Brown conducted, and choir and orchestra numbered three hundred and twenty-seven performers. The readings were excellent in every way, and Ulster Hall was completely filled on both occasions.

On January 5 Mr. Quinlan gave a miscellaneous concert at which very distinguished artists appeared, including Miss Irene Scharrer (in the place of M. Rosenthal, who was unable to keep his engagement), Madame Suggia, Miss Agnes Tracey, and Mr. Peter Dawson. The attendance was not so large as the celebrity of the artists deserved.

Mr. Charles H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, has been invested by the King with the insignia of C.B.E.

BIRMINGHAM

Although somewhat belated the following references to some important concerts which took place in the latter part of December should not be omitted. Of these the second symphony Concert given by the City of Birmingham Orchestra at the Town Hall on December 15 was the chief event. Mr. Hamilton Harty (conductor of the Hallé Orchestra) was the honoured guest, and his magnificent command over the fine band enabled him to achieve some remarkable results. This was especially the case with Berlioz's 'Symphony Fantastique,' which must have been a revelation to many; indeed the whole reading of this unique composition was memorable in every way. Another item was Mr. Hamilton Harty's new arrangement of Handel's 'Water Music,' which came to the listeners with refreshing delight. A further novelty was Granville Bantock's Scherzo The Sea Reivers, founded on the Hebridean 'Sea Reivers' song in Mrs. Kennedy Fraser's collection from the Isles of the West. Arnold Bax's 'In a Vodka Shop' had no special attractions. Miss Rosina Buckman sang Aida's scena 'Ritorna vincitor' with dramatic force.

The orchestra of the Midland Institute School of Music gave an interesting Mozart concert on December 13, under Prof. Granville Bantock's direction. The symphony was 'Prague' in D, the overture that to 'Don Giovanni.' Mr. Bernard Jackson played the Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, and Mr. Harold Lawson sang Sarastro's famous aria, 'Qui sdegno.' The programme also contained the Ballet, 'Les petits Riens,' an early work written in 1778. The whole concert reflected great credit on conductor and executants.

The second Saturday Popular Concert of the City of Birmingham Orchestra, given at the Town Hall on December 8, was somewhat of a departure from the original scheme, as it was a choral concert at which the Walsall Philharmonic Society took part in the performance of Elgar's 'Gerontius,' conducted by Mr. Appleby Matthews, who also directed the Walsall Society in the same work. The soloists were Miss Mary Foster in the music of the Angel, Mr. Arthur Wilkes in the part of Gerontius, Mr. Harold Howes as the Priest, and Mr. Arthur Cranmer, who sang the music of the Angel of the Agony. All the principals sustained their parts with conspicuous ability.

In celebration of the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Beethoven's birth, Mr. Appleby Matthews gave a Beethoven concert at the Theatre Royal on December 19, with the City Orchestra. The programme was well-chosen, consisting of the 'Egmont,' 'Fidelio,' and 'Leonora' No. 3 Overtures, the Symphony in C minor, the two Romances in F and G for violin solo, ideally interpreted by Mr. Alex. Cohen, and the Minuet from the Septet. The playing of the orchestra was spirited, and quite admirable in tone and technique.

The customary Yule-tide performance of 'Messiah' by the Festival Choral Society was given at the Town Hall on December 27, and another 'Messiah' concert by the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association took place at the Town Hall on January 1. Sir Henry Wood conducted the former, and Mr. Joseph H. Adams the latter.

A pianoforte recital of more than ordinary attraction was given at the Temperance Hall on January 12 by Mr. Leonard Rayner, a truly-gifted pianist. His programme comprised the first performance here of F. Herbert Bond's Suite, 'Bird Songs,' quite a poetic and pleasing composition. The programme included compositions by Brahms, César Franck, Granados, Cyril Scott, Debussy, and Liszt.

Mr. Dan Godfrey, of Bournemouth, conducted the Sunday Orchestral Concert at the Theatre Royal on January 9, when he secured some outstanding performances of known orchestral pieces. His reception was cordial and enthusiastic. The next evening he gave a lecture at Mason College, which dealt mainly with the musical training of children. He formed a favourable opinion of the City of Birmingham Orchestra, which had played so inspiringly under his baton on Sunday evening.

The Spring Musical Festival of the London Sunday School Choir will be held at the Royal Albert Hall on March 19.

BOURNEMOUTH

In the Musical Times for January mention was made of at least two outstanding works performed during the previous month at the Bournemouth Symphony Concerts—Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony and Strauss' 'Tod und Verklärung.' Although in this month's issue it is not possible again to specify any productions of quite so ambitious a character as those mentioned above, still the average attractiveness of recent programmes has been at a distinctly high level.

The date (December 16) of the eleventh concert of the series coinciding with the anniversary of Beethoven's birth, it was only natural and fitting that Mr. Dan Godfrey should include in the programme one of the master's finest works—the seventh Symphony. Another interesting feature of the afternoon was the first performance here of a 1920 Carnegie award composition, viz., Ina Boyle's Rhapsody, 'The Magic Harp.' It is a pleasure to welcome the advent of another recruit to the small company of women composers, and though 'The Magic Harp' cannot be accounted a work of great significance or originality, yet it yields no small measure of fragrance and charm. The effective, but over-long, E major Pianoforte Concerto by Moszkowski was played in an extremely spirited and able manner by Miss Helen Guest.

Another Beethoven Symphony—the ninth, with the choral section omitted—was well-played at the following week's concert. A further call upon Beethoven was made by Mr. Bertram Lewis, leader of the orchestra, and the soloist on this particular occasion, who chose the tuneful little Romance in G as his contribution to the proceedings, the performance being most artistic. One of the cleverest novelties of the present season was produced at this concert, viz., the Symphonic Scherzo, 'A Night by Dalegarth Bridge' (S. H. Braithwaite), which had its first public performance. A composition of the most delicate fancy—and, too, of mature workmanship—it reaped an instantaneous success, creating an impression that Mr. Braithwaite will go far as a composer. The delightful music was beautifully played.

The 'Symphonie Pathétique,' the Overture to 'The Mastersingers,' and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto constituted an excellent Christmas week programme for the holiday-maker. Both conductor and instrumentalists were at the top of their form, so that general satisfaction was freely expressed. Schumann's almost unrivalled Concerto was played by Mr. Benno Schönberger in the most crystalline and polished style imaginable, but we have heard readings that were more poetic in quality.

Mr. Edgar L. Bainton was a welcome visitor on January 6 in the dual capacity of composer and pianist. In the latter rôle he took the solo part in his new Concerto-Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra, this being the first public performance of yet another work that has recently been crowned with a Carnegie award. It is a composition revealing pronouncedly modernistic tendencies, and from the importance bestowed upon a constantly recurring cadenza might appropriately be styled 'the apotheosis of the cadenza.' The score is an undeniably effective one, although the interest is not fully maintained throughout. But the work is full of character, and a second hearing would probably elucidate certain passages that seem at first acquaintance to possess an element of tonal waywardness. Neither the soloist's nor his associates' tasks were sinecures, but the performance notwithstanding was an admirable one. The programme also contained Mr. Bainton's highly picturesque 'Three Pieces' (conducted by the composer), and Goldmark's Symphony in E flat—which is only redeemed from mediocrity by an exceedingly dainty Scherzo (into which a truly appalling Trio is introduced) and a dramatically conceived slow movement.

The Stockport Vocal Union, assisted by the Brodsky String Quartet and Miss Olga Haley, gave a concert of unusual interest on December 20. Under Dr. T. Keighley, the choir sang di Lassus' 'Matona, lovely maiden,' and a selection of part-songs. The instrumental programme included Beethoven's Septet for strings and wind.

BRISTOL

A quiet month, in which to reflect on the past autumn season, which was particularly full. On December 15 Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, the Cathedral organist, gave the second pair of the Bristol Municipal concerts, designed to develop interest in the great Colston Hall organ. The attendances were nothing like those which Mr. Hollins drew for the first concerts. Mr. Hunt, if not an inspired player, always shows discretion and good taste, and never oversteps his marked powers of execution. His programme contained, among other things, works by three composers who are classed as Bristol men—Dr. Lloyd (Thornbury), Dr. Harwood (Almondsbury), and Dr. Rootham (Redland). Their compositions always repay organ students. Mr. Hunt chose a Scherzo in E (Lloyd), a movement from Sonata No. 2 (Harwood), and Rootham's 'Song of Victory.' Mr. Herbert Spiller, a local baritone, sang.

Bristol Choral Society, under Mr. George Riseley, gave one of its finest performances of 'Messiah' on December 18 to a crowded audience at Colston Hall. The four hundred voices and a properly-balanced orchestra, in volume, precision, and tone-quality were of the highest Bristol standard. Mr. Walter Hyde was the tenor, Miss Carrie Tubb the soprano, Miss May Keene, a capable local singer, the contralto, and a new and very acceptable bass, Captain Horace Stevens, sang with power and understanding.

St. Mary Redcliff and St. Mary Tyndall's Park choirs combined under Mr. C. W. Stear, on December 20, to present a worthy performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' at the former church. Brass instruments and drums added to Mr. R. T. Morgan's skilful playing of the accompaniments on the organ. Miss Elsie Post, Master R. Saunders, Mr. Clare Beavis, Mr. Victor Lovell, and Mr. Montague Hook were the soloists. A crowded and attentive congregation showed the attraction oratorio surely wields when the atmosphere of a great church such as St. Mary Redcliff is added to the power of the music.

The Great Western Railway Choral Society, a new body since the war, drew a full house at the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Hall for its first public concert on January 4. Mr. Clare Beavis, the conductor, had trained his choir of nearly a hundred and fifty on careful lines, and in various well-chosen part-songs and choruses they showed both confidence and discrimination, but the orchestral side needs strengthening. Such choirs as these, which are doing an invaluable work for choral art, deserve every support.

Sir Henry Hadow, in a lecture before the Bristol Church Music Society at the Art Gallery on December 30, on 'Hymn Tunes and Hymn Singing,' urged his hearers not to be satisfied with the improvement made since he was a boy, but to aim at a much higher standard in Church music than that reached, which was still very low. He blamed clergy, organists, and congregations for this. We did not want more elaborate tunes, rather simplicity and a smaller hymn-book, but real melody, measure, stateliness, rhythm, and 'an artistic and graceful swerve,' with no stereotyped repetitions and less of the German band style. There was also, he claimed, the question of structure and form, in which a number of tunes 'were down to the level of the asphalt.' An example of a 'magnificent' tune he had in his mind was that to which 'The God of Abraham praise' was sung.

Mr. Perkins' organ recital at Colston Hall on January 12 had been greatly looked forward to, and he made good all the praise accorded him by his skill in manipulation and intelligent readings of Bach's Fugues in B flat and C minor, Rheinberger's Finale from Sonata No. 20, a Novelette by Wolstenholme, and other selections.

The Glastonbury Players brought Rutland Boughton's nativity play 'Bethlehem' to Colston Hall for three days from January 13. Some twelve months ago they gave it at Victoria Rooms to good audiences, and the later and larger venture drew even larger houses, the bookings being excellent. Mr. Boughton's distinctive choral work and sweet melodies were beautifully sung by these Players, among whom Miss Dorothy Silk as the Virgin Mary, Mr. F. Woodhouse as one of the Wise Men, and Mr. Stuart Wilson, as Herod, were prominent.

On January 13, too, Bristol Madrigal Society gave its annual concert under Mr. Hubert W. Hunt's direction. There was the usual full attendance at Victoria Rooms, and a number of delightful examples of this special branch of part-singing gave very much pleasure by the simple manner of their rendering. There is always a large audience for the Society's 'Ladies' Night'—it was the eighty-fifth—and English composers are largely drawn upon. The choir is about ninety strong.

Among the minor societies, Bristol South Choral Society is taking a good place. Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock' were given by this choir of about forty-five voices under Mr. R. T. Young, on January 12, with a power and precision that were quite creditable. The orchestra was small but good, and Miss Queenie Vaughan assisted with songs.

CAMBRIDGE

A largely-attended meeting of those who took part in the 'Fairy Queen,' and of others interested in opera, was held towards the end of last term, when a resolution was passed asking the opera syndicate to make arrangements for another performance next December, and a suggestion made that Dr. Rootham's new work, 'The Two Sisters,' be performed.

Canon Pemberton has resigned the presidency of the University Musical Society, owing to ill-health, and Dr. H. F. Stewart has been elected in his place. An illuminated address setting forth his services to Cambridge music and the Society in particular, was presented to the Canon at the end of the term.

Three of the series of six chamber concerts organized by the C.U.M.S. were given last term. The first choral and orchestral concert is to be held on February 11, when Brahms' C minor Symphony and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus' are amongst the works to be performed.

On November 21 a performance of works by J. S. Bach was given in the Leys School Chapel. The programme consisted of three chorales, the Pastoral Symphony from the 'Christmas Oratorio,' Largo in F for two violins and orchestra, Suite in B minor for violin, flute, and organ, aria, 'My heart, ever faithful,' organ solos, and two verses of the cantata, 'Sleepers, wake.'

CORNWALL

To develop musical talent in Mousehole and Paul district, a choral society has been recently formed, and under the direction of Mr. Irving Thomas, 'The Messiah' has been put in rehearsal. The new Redruth Choral Society has been practising under the conductorship of Dr. C. Rich since last spring, and on December 17 gave a very good performance of Stanford's 'The Revenge.' The choir of seventy voices was assisted by an orchestra drawn from Falmouth and Redruth. The singing of Miss Fifi de la Côte created quite a sensation by its natural beauty and ease.

Par Choral Society, which has only been in existence since November 1, gave a programme of old and modern carols and selections from 'The Messiah' on December 21, conducted by Mr. C. S. Edwards.

Falmouth Philharmonic Society, which comprises choral and orchestral elements, performed 'The Messiah' on December 28, conducted by the Rev. L. C. Daly Atkinson.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The coming of Christmas as usual witnessed a falling off of concerts at Coventry, and the season had hardly revived in mid-January. Before the holiday, however, a number of interesting events were recorded.

On December 13 Mr. Leonard Rayner, a pianist who is well-known in the Midlands, gave a recital of modern music at St. Mary's Hall. The Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a successful week's visit to the Empire Theatre the same evening with a performance of 'Carmen.'

December 15 marked the second concert of the season given by the Coventry Musical Club, when the Male-Voice Choir acquitted itself well under Mr. John Chapman. The same evening, Mr. Alfred Petty conducted the Centaur Orchestra, which consists entirely of schoolboy members, at its eighth concert at the Baths Assembly Hall. The programme included movements from Haydn's 'Clock' Symphony.

In connection with Christmas, special Church music was heard at the Cathedral and other places of worship in the city.

Mr. Walter Hoyle, the Cathedral organist, gave his customary bank holiday recital in the Cathedral on Boxing Day before a record attendance.

Coventry Philharmonic Society gave 'The Messiah' in the Cathedral on January 13. Mr. Charles Matthews conducted. Mr. Walter Hoyle was at the organ, and in addition, accompaniment was provided by a string orchestra, supplemented by drums. The trumpet solos of Mr. Norman Bright were a noteworthy feature. The soloists were Miss Hilda Searle, Madame Nellie Hamer, Mr. John Collet, and Mr. Hamilton Harris. The work of the choir continues to show improvement in choral technique.

Coventry Amateur Operatic Society is busily engaged upon its forthcoming production of 'Merrie England.' The spring season promises much that is of interest. The Chamber Music Society, the Choral Society, and the Armstrong-Siddeley Musical organizations each have attractive programmes in preparation.

At Leamington, Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was given at St. Alban's Church on December 19 by an augmented choir. Mrs. Gwatkin, Mrs. F. Barr, and Messrs. J. H. Endall and C. Davies, all of whom are well-known locally, were the soloists. Mr. Roberts West was at the organ, Mr. Stewart Sparrow conducted, and the orchestra was under the direction of Mr. Walter Warren.

DEVON

Barnstaple Musical Society, which, under the conductorship of Dr. H. J. Edwards, has maintained a high standard of music in North Devon, on December 13 gave a performance of part-songs. The voices, numbering a hundred, were excellently balanced and thoroughly trained for their work, much credit for this being due to Mr. Sydney Harper, who greatly relieved Dr. Edwards in the labours necessary for the good results achieved. The pieces included 'The Storm' (Rogers), selections from 'Faust,' Eaton Faning's 'Moonlight,' 'There is an old belief' (Parry), 'The Singers' (Mackenzie), and 'The bells of St. Michael's' (Pearsall). Concerted instrumental music was provided in Mendelssohn's C-minor Pianoforte Trio, played by Dr. Edwards, Mrs. Hall Parlbay, and Mrs. Rickard, a Suite in E for pianoforte and violin, by E. Schütt, and a Sonata by Godard for pianoforte and violoncello, played by Mrs. F. W. Chanter and Mrs. Rickard.

Exmouth Church Musical Society performed 'The Last Judgment' on December 19, to organ accompaniment (Mr. G. Bradford), Mr. F. Morley conducting. 'The Messiah' has been performed at Totnes, with orchestra, Mr. Herbert Worth conducting; at Exmouth, by the Choral Society, with orchestra, Mr. Raymond Wilmot conducting; at Plymouth, by the choir of St. Andrew's Church, at the Guildhall, Mr. Moreton directing and accompanying on the organ.

On December 15 a 'Pageant of the Months' was sung at Ashburton by a choir specially formed and conducted by Mr. Harold Jones. The music was composed by Miss Dorothy Godwin Foster, who has published several vocal and instrumental works.

Paignton Musical Association, formed early in the Autumn, on December 16 performed the 'May Queen,' with an orchestra of forty players, and conducted by Mr. F. W. Benson. The singing was marked by good balance, tone, and expression. The orchestra also played Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor and Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques.'

Exeter String Orchestra, whose conductor is Mr. Albert J. James, and which was inaugurated by Mr. W. Petherick last season, has swiftly advanced to a very high standard of performance. Three concerts were given during December, the most successful numbers being a charming Suite by Hammerik, a Serenade by Elgar, some Grig melodies, two Irish jigs by Finucane, a Valse Noble by Laub, and Meyer Helmund's 'Serenade Rocco.' A string orchestra has been started at the tiny village of Winkleigh, in North Devon, and a body of fifteen string players and some wind instrumentalists have begun to study Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony and music by Mozart and Beethoven, under the direction of the Rev. Boyton-Smith, rector of Bondleigh. They intend giving public performance soon after Easter.

The 'Isca' glee singers, at Exeter, on December 28, sang several glees, part-songs, and carols with very good blend and poise of parts.

The Mayor of Torquay, Mr. H. Williams, is president of the Torquay and District Organists' Association, and on December 18 the members met at his residence, where he has a fine three-manual organ. This being combined with pianoforte and strings, a new concerto by Mr. Walter L. Twinning was played, the composer being at the organ, Mr. Harold Rhodes at the pianoforte, Messrs. Harry and Frank Crocker playing violins. A paper on 'English Organ Music' was read by Mr. Harold Jeboult, and a programme of instrumental works was played.

Exeter and District Organists' Association turned its January meeting into an informal gathering on the 8th. A short recital was given by Mr. F. G. Pinn (Hollins' Overture in C), Miss Heywood (Choral Prelude 'By the Waters of Babylon,' Bach), Mr. C. G. Church (Theme with variations, T. Tertius Noble), and Mr. G. Bradford (Rhapsody No. 3, Herbert Howells). The recital was followed by an enjoyable programme of songs and pianoforte music.

Exeter Chamber Music Club is actively fulfilling its purpose, and several parties of performers have been formed and set in rehearsal. On January 13, at the second concert, Rheinberger's Pianoforte Quartet (Op. 38) was played by Messrs. H. T. Depree, C. E. Bell, M. Rendle, and E. Petherick, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Moyle played the Saint-Saëns Concerto in A minor for violoncello and pianoforte. Songs by Debussy, Landon Ronald, and Cyril Scott, violin music by Svendsen and Cottenet, and pianoforte solos by Beethoven and Chopin, were included.

DUBLIN

At the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society, on December 20, Mr. Frederic Lamond, the famous Scots pianist, gave a magnificent performance before a crowded audience. His range of solos was sufficiently varied to electrify those who were privileged to hear him, and in particular his interpretation of the 'Waldstein' Sonata, and of Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor, gave unbounded satisfaction, though his virtuosity was best seen in the Brahms selection. It seems only yesterday since Lamond first charmed a London audience, yet it is almost thirty-five years ago (April 15, 1886), when the occasion was also memorable for Liszt's presence.

The performance of 'The Messiah' in St. Patrick's Cathedral on December 22 was good all round, Mr. Thomas Marchant (vicar-choral) displaying his wonted powers as an irreproachable vocalist. On the following day quite a delightful treat was afforded in a performance of old and new Christmas carols, including a charming setting by Sir Frederick Bridge of 'Remember God's goodness.' Dr. G. E. P. Hewson presided at the organ with his wonted ability. Carol singing was also an attraction at Christ Church Cathedral, under Mr. T. H. Weaving.

Mr. Joseph Schofield has been appointed senior professor of the violoncello at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, in the place of Mr. John Mundy resigned; and Dr. Esposito has accepted the direction of the chamber music class.

Mr. W. J. Raifer has been appointed alto lay-vicar-choral of Christ Church Cathedral, in succession to Mr. Harden, who has gone to Westminster Abbey.

One of the best of the 'Mater' concerts at La Scala Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien, was the performance on December 26, the items being selected with rare discrimination. Particularly interesting was the 'Karelia' Suite by Sibelius, with its marked Finnish characteristic. Miss Jean Nolan and Mr. J. C. Doyle contributed old and new songs, and it was refreshing to find that Tom Moore's lyrics can still capture an audience, as evidenced by the applause given to 'At the mid hour of night' and 'She is far from the land.'

Changes of organists have recently taken place in the Roman Catholic Cathedrals of Waterford, Derry, and Kilkenny, as well as in some of the Dublin churches; but it is regrettable that German and Belgian organists are again being imported. One would have thought that German musicians would not so soon reappear in this country.

The Quinlan concert at the Theatre Royal on New Year's Day was memorable for the reappearance of Miss Agnes Tracy, whose pure and sweet vocalism was as irresistible as in pre-war days. Her reception was extremely cordial, and she sang all her songs—including encores—with rare charm, her clear enunciation being as perfect as before. Mr. Peter Dawson's songs were also much appreciated. It were needless to write anything of Madame Suggia's delightful violoncello solos, nor to emphasise the extraordinary virtuosity of Miss Irene Scharrer (who replaced M. Rosenthal), especially in the Chopin Ballade. As an accompanist, Miss Ella Ivey left nothing to be desired.

The death of Madame Jennie Quinton Rosse, on January 5, was a distinct loss to vocal music at Dublin. This gifted lady was one of the founders of the Leinster School of Music, previous to which she had been professor of singing at the Royal Irish Academy of Music. As a former pupil of Madame Sainton-Dolby she made her début at St. George's Hall, London, in June, 1888, and was for a time a principal of the Carl Rosa Opera Company. She married Mr. H. A. Quinton in 1890, and settled at Dublin, where she did good work for thirty years.

The 'Mater' concerts on the afternoons of January 2 and 9 were most successful. On the latter occasion Prof. Robert O'Dwyer's prize Overture of 'Rosalind' was admirably played by the Dublin Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of the composer, and made a very favourable impression.

At the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society, on January 10, the Wesseley String Quartet gave an admirable programme, which afforded much satisfaction to a critical audience. The Haydn Quartet in G was very finely rendered, especially the Adagio.

The news of the tragic death of Mr. Gervase Elwes was received at Dublin on January 13 with much regret. His last performances in this city were high-water marks of vocal artistry, and will long be remembered.

EDINBURGH

On December 13 Miss Rosina Buckman and Mr. Frank Mullings assisted at a Wagner orchestral programme, with Mr. Landon Ronald conducting.

On December 20 the Spanish violinist, Señor Manuel Quiroga, made his début before an Edinburgh audience. He chose Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' as his chief item, but delighted his hearers more with his playing of slighter compositions.

On December 27 the feature of the concert was Elgar's first Symphony. It had a great reception, and its performance will stand out as one of this season's musical events. Mr. Landon Ronald did full justice to the score.

On January 10 Ivanovitch Bratza, the Serbian violinist, gave an artistic reading of Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor. He is a wonderful player, and his appearance here was compared on all sides to that of Elman several years ago. Mr. Julius Harrison was a brilliant conductor on this occasion, and introduced a very refined and interesting Study for orchestra, by Ernest Bryson, whose work had not before been heard on this side of the border.

The Royal Choral Union, on December 24, gave a concert of Christmas carols. Mr. Greenhouse Allt introduced this new feature for Christmas-tide last year, and although the attendance was not all that might be wished, it was a delightful innovation that a few seasons will firmly establish. We have in recent issues had occasion to comment on the progressive attitude of Mr. Allt, and under his inspiring leadership we may expect more novelties in the near future. Apart from Vaughan-Williams' 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols' the programme was traditional. Mr. Radford was in excellent voice, and Mr. Walton, of Glasgow Cathedral, was organ soloist.

Mr. Robert Burnett, the well-known baritone, gave a song and vocal recital on December 8, with his pupils. The programme was an eclectic one, and afforded evidence of an unsuspected wealth of musical culture beyond public ken. We congratulate Mr. Burnett on the work he is evidently doing in fostering a taste for the best in art.

On December 18 the Orpheus Choir under Mr. Robertson gave a concert to a huge audience. A few years ago this type of concert met with only qualified success, but now it has caught on. Mr. Moonie's Choir gave its annual performance of 'The Messiah' on December 22, and the Royal Choral Union on January 1.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Duncan Fraser, which took place on January 9. For twenty-five years he acted as precentor of the United Free Church Assemblies, and for forty-seven years was a teacher of singing in the City schools. He was virtually the last of a worthy race of Scottish precentors.

GLASGOW

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, under Mr. H. E. Carruthers, gave a praiseworthy concert on December 15. The programme, well within the players' powers, included Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony and Landon Ronald's 'Birthday' Overture. The Choral and Orchestral Union's plan of giving a one-composer programme, inaugurated successfully at a Saturday Popular Concert, was continued with even greater success in a Wagner programme on December 14. The numbers selected were the Prelude, Wedding March, and Love Duet ('Lohengrin'), the Love Duet ('Tristan and Isolde'), and the Prelude to Act 3, Dance of the Apprentices, and Entrance of the Mastersingers ('Mastersingers'). No doubt the appearance of Miss Rosina Buckman and Mr. Frank Mullings as solo vocalists accounted to some extent for the presence of an audience which taxed the seating capacity of St. Andrew's Hall. Considerable disappointment was caused by the substitution of the Good Friday music from 'Parsifal' for a first performance here of Debussy's Two Dances for strings and harp announced for December 21. At this concert Señor Manuel Quiroga, the Spanish violinist, gave a good performance of Saint-Saëns' third Concerto. The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 4. The fifty-fourth annual performance of 'The Messiah' on New Year's Day proved even more popular than before, judged by the overflowing audience. Under Mr. Warren Clemens, the Choral Union sang quite up to its wonted standard in music of this kind. At the ninth concert, on January 4, Mr. Julian Harrison's 'Worcester' Suite was given a first performance in Scotland. The programme also included Rachmaninov's second Pianoforte Concerto, brilliantly played by Miss Irene Scharrer. A very acceptable novelty, Ernest Bryson's Study for Orchestra, 'Voices,' was well received at the tenth concert, on January 11. The clever young Serbian violinist, Bratza, played Wieniawski's D minor Concerto, but the most enjoyable number on a far too lengthy programme was César Franck's Symphony in D minor. The Corporation of Glasgow has engaged the Scottish Orchestra to give four Popular Orchestral Concerts, one in each of the four largest Corporation Halls. This, many people hope, is a tentative move in the direction of subsidising high-class music (municipal concert-giving up to the present has been of the 'ballad' order). Unfortunately the initial concert, judged by the size of the audience, did not give the scheme a very encouraging send-off, but this may be accounted for partly by the fact that the programmes to be played were not announced beforehand, the bald fact that the concerts would take place being considered sufficient.

HASTINGS

Obviously the most potent 'draw' for the Christmas visitors was a tenor with a name, and Mr. Julian Clifford, by engaging Mr. Ben Davies for Christmas Day, filled the Royal Concert Hall with a crowd eager to be pleased. Other Christmas attractions were the appearance of the gifted young soprano, Miss Dora Labbette (of local origin), and a visit from Mr. Howard Carr, who conducted some of his own vividly orchestrated works. Some little friction was caused on this occasion by the absence of Mr. Clifford, who was conducting the London Symphony Orchestra in London for a second time within the week. Ignoring the tribute of a 'provincial' being invited to conduct the famous Orchestra, the Hastings Corporation somewhat short-sightedly raised objections—a policy that is felt to be penny wise and pound foolish, seeing that the town's music thus gets gratuitous advertisement.

The first performance here of Brahms's C minor Symphony was a signal success for conductor and orchestra alike. Their Dvorák and Glazounov (both No. 4), too, disposed of the myth that British conductors lack temperament. Beethoven's seventh, while perfectly traditional, hardly reached the same plane of excellence in the matter of unity. Miss Hilda Atkinson played Reinecke's Harp Concerto very pleasingly. Miss Katharine Kendall was not entirely successful in either Chausson's dreary 'Poème' or Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole.' Mr. Arnold Trowell was however as dynamic as possible in Jules de Swert's Violoncello Concerto, after which he exhibited much the same qualities in conducting his own highly-coloured tone-poem—a work of no little distinction, especially in its orchestration. Mr. Stanley Kaye was mechanically adroit in MacDowell's second Pianoforte Concerto. Though his tone is too metallic, his technique is sure.

By far the biggest thing of the month was M. de Greef's playing in Liszt's A major Concerto on January 1, when in his own sphere of rhythmic perfection he was tender, intellectual, and dazzling in turn; and, with Mr. Clifford's sympathetic co-operation, appeared in his happiest vein. Having made the 'Variations Sérieuses' his own, the Belgian pianist's reading of the work imparted to Mendelssohn a new and unsuspected significance.

The same composer was represented by his 'Hymn of Praise' on January 18, when it was expressively sung by Mr. R. G. Groves' Madrigal Society, accompanied by the Municipal Orchestra.

LIVERPOOL

Frank's D minor Symphony received a welcome hearing at the fifth Philharmonic Concert on December 14, when it was conducted con amore by M. Ernest Ansermet, of Geneva. It was in accordance with the irony of things that this very able musician, so well-known as an exponent of Stravinsky's music, should have had such old-world material in the programme as Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 1, in B flat (of which, by the way, his reading was strong and virile), and the tedious Haydn Violoncello Concerto, which was at most a medium for the display of Madame Suggia's executive art as soloist. M. Ansermet also directed an inspiring performance of Elgar's 'Cockaigne.'

Conducted by Dr. A. W. Pollitt, a first performance was given of B. J. Dale's Poem for chorus and orchestra, 'Before the paling of the stars.' Written before his melancholy experiences at Ruhleben, Mr. Dale's setting of Christina Rossetti's Christmas poem is a work whose suggestive and placid beauty begins, continues, and ends without reaching any climax. But a climax or crisis of another kind suddenly and unexpectedly came in the performance, when, after an orchestral interlude, the tenors followed by the sopranos failed to take up two apparently easy leads. Confusion reigned for a space until the choral forces made a gallant recovery, and all ended well. There had been no rehearsal with the orchestra, and it was a slip which need not be dwelt upon except as regards the opportunity it gives for again referring to the invaluable work done by the ladies and gentlemen of the Philharmonic Choir, whose high reputation is so well maintained under Dr. Pollitt.

At its sixth concert, on January 11, the Philharmonic Society opened the New Year auspiciously with a programme in which there was not a dull note. It was conducted by Mr. Geoffrey Toye, in whom the band found a highly competent and confident leader. Cool, alert, and sensitive, he presents the new order of native conductors who have a higher and wider outlook than of old. Mr. Toye deepened the favourable impression made last year. No mental effort was necessary to enjoy Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel' Overture, Hamish MacCunn's 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood' Overture, and Mozart's G minor Symphony.

The novelty of the evening was the Delius Poem, 'In a Summer Garden.' Written in 1908, it is music quite characteristic of its composer and individual in style. As an orchestral picture it is full of imagination, suggestion, and colour, while not unduly modern in feeling and atmosphere. It created a desire to hear it again. Madame Renée Chemet gave a vivacious performance in Lalo's now seldom-heard Violin Concerto in F minor. The choir also acquitted itself admirably under Dr. Pollitt in singing Sweelinck's spirited carol, 'Born to-day,' and received the rare compliment of an encore, well-deserved, for expressive and beautiful singing of Brahms's 'Love, fare thee well,' which for him is almost sentimentally simple.

Two excellent 'Messiah' performances were given by two prominent choral organizations. That on December 18 by the Welsh Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Hopkin Evans, presented the usual features of spirit, swing, and sonority, with an allowable amount of dramatic suggestion which conductors of the modern school diligently seek for in Handel, and not in vain. The Liverpool Choral Society's performance on December 29 viewed Handel from another angle, and the choral tempi were generally on the slow side. The conductor, Mr. Percival Ingram, seldom if ever let his forces go. The admirable, steady singing was therefore chiefly noticeable for its restraint and discretion.

At the fourth Rodewald Society's concert, on December 13, a vocal recital was given by Mr. John Coates, with Mr. Frederic Brandon as accompanist. Mr. Coates sang no less than fourteen tenor songs by English composers, seven old and seven new; the latter including Elgar, Quilter, Harrison, Bax, Warlock, Mallinson, and Holbrooke, in whose music the singer especially exhibited his vocal art and versatility of style. It was a pleasure to hear Mr. Brandon play again after his long period of munitions work, and his keyboard command was very forcibly shown in Palmgren's 'War' (which may be described as chiefly noise in the bass region of the pianoforte), and also in Schumann's 'Toccata.'

The local branch of the British Music Society possesses a goodly number of music-makers—as well as music-lovers—a programme of whose compositions afforded a highly interesting evening at Rushworth Hall on December 17. The eight composers who responded to the call by no means exhaust the local list, but were fairly representative, and the music submitted included much that was meritorious, and little that was trite and commonplace. Ernest Bryson contributed three MS. pianoforte 'Pastorals'—'Starry Heavens,' 'Still Waters,' and 'Dragon-fly'—three beautiful miniatures which were artistically played by Mr. Frank Bertrand. In another way, Frederick Nicholls' three pianoforte pieces—'Arabesque,' 'Summer Rain,' and 'Nuptial Ode'—which the composer played with great dexterity, were interesting in the modernity of their harmonic texture. More individual were Norman Peterkin's pianoforte numbers—'Dreamer's Tales,' Nos. 1 and 4, and 'The Centaurs,' of which the admirable exponent, Mr. Joseph Greene, had to repeat the last-named item. A composer with definite ideas, naturally expressed, Mr. Peterkin is certainly not a product of the schools.

Another composer whose musical feeling is evidently deep-seated is Frederick Morrison, whose 'Romanza' for violin and pianoforte was played by Mr. Louis Cohen and its composer. Space is not available for more than mention of Osborne Edmundson's three musicianly songs, presumably of student days, and the Octet for strings, Op. 202, which was conducted by its composer, William Faulkes. Compositions by H. Rogerson and C. A. St. George Moore completed the programme.

At his recital at Crane Hall on January 12, Mr. Joseph Greene played the three much-debated pianoforte Preludes by William Baines. On a first hearing they are pleasing as little pieces of delicate fancy, especially Nos. 1 and 2, while No. 3, in B minor, offers an effective contrast in strenuous if short-lived force. Mr. Greene also played Norman Peterkin's 'Dreamer's Tales' and 'The Centaurs,' and joined Mr. Cohen (violin) in Frederick Morrison's 'Romanza.'

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Dolmetsch, with their two young daughters and gifted boy Rudolph, gave two delightful concerts of old-world music performed on lutes, viols, and harpsichord in the Arts Theatre of the University, and also at Rushworth Hall. Played with such admirable precision and soft, blending tone, there can be no better antidote for the fever of modern music than is to be found in the fantasies, suites, and sonatas in which is proved that our John Jenkins, Christopher Simpson, and Matthew Locke can well hold their own with Este, Marais, Teleman, and other foreign worthies. It was interesting to hear the original sounds of Scarlatti, Rameau, and Bach, examples of whose music were so dexterously played by Mr. Dolmetsch on the fine-toned two-manual harpsichord he himself has fashioned.

The recitals were of infinite interest and value to music-lovers, and Mr. Dolmetsch's patient life-work in the study of these old instruments, and the rescue from oblivion of the rich store of music of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, deserves the widest recognition. At Liverpool it has resulted in the study of the old lutes and viols by a party of amateur enthusiasts whose number one hopes to see increased.

The O'Mara Opera Company, with Mr. R. J. Forbes as principal conductor, is fulfilling a ten weeks' engagement at the Shakespeare Theatre.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Acute depression has been the characteristic note of our commercial life for months past, and the clouds appear to grow heavier. This feeling is also becoming dominant in our artistic life. The Beecham opera season, after being postponed, was cancelled early in January. Hard on the heels of this announcement came the sale of the Gaiety Theatre (for a dozen years the most promising home of Miss Horniman's famed repertory company) to one of the growing number of cinema syndicates. And the serious effort made in the season 1919-20 in the provision of rational Sunday orchestral music, under the auspices of the National Sunday League, has suffered partial eclipse this winter owing to the impossible conditions due to the action of the A.M. Union. For this Union to endeavour to extract fees for these Sunday concerts for members of the Hallé band higher than are paid to these same players for either the Hallé or Brand Lane concerts, not only against the players' wishes but for work entailing only an infinitesimal part of the preparation necessary for the bigger-scale week-day concerts, is but another instance of those wrong-headed actions by trades union officials which damage themselves and their members, and completely alienate public sympathy. As a consequence the Sunday League Concerts this winter have been of a miscellaneous character, occasional appearances by one of our famous local brass bands varying the round of vocal and instrumental solo items. If the A.M.U. persists in its present attitude the only solution may be found in the Hallé Society identifying itself with the National Sunday League, and virtually making the N.S.L. concerts into Hallé engagements, thus coming within the four corners of the A.M.U. interpretation. But this cannot operate this season.

The Beethoven celebration on December 16 at the Hallé concert was conducted by Mr. Goossens. A great admirer of his work, I do not class his Beethoven readings among his finer accomplishments; a casual element creeps in—there is little apparent zest in the job. Most old concert-goers can usually sense when the conductor's interest is greatly stirred. Why should the tiresome Rondino for wind find any part in association with the symphonies or the 'Emperor' Concerto? Its place is surely with the Septuor in a chamber series. Mr. Dawson in the Concerto played in authoritative style, with more nobility than is usual with him.

On January 6, after eleven years, Strauss' 'Death and Transfiguration' was again performed. If, after such an interval, packed as it has been with such amazing variety of mental, spiritual, and æsthetic emotions, we can re-experience the old sensations at precisely the same points with, if anything, an added poignancy, may it not be asked if there be a more searching test of music's enduring character? I, for one, was prepared to find it threadbare in places, its emotional content shallower; but it was not so. A companion hearing it for the first time and with no great experience of orchestral music of any schools carried away similar impressions. There can be no denying that modern German music is being subjected to a more searching re-valuation in the light of recent events. As a result there has been a general writing-down in this mental stock-taking; but 'Death and Transfiguration' stands higher to-day than it did ten years ago. Mr. Hamilton Harty's handling of this score was a blend of Richter-like nobility and Nikischian rhythmical elasticity. It was scarcely wise to play Mozart's 'Jupiter' after the Strauss work, and especially on a Mozart-period orchestra, but the artistic gain was unquestionable in all movements but the final one, where the ear missed the cumulative grandeur of the rushing strings.

A notable baritone vocalist new to Manchester was Mr. Giorgio Corrado, who, contrary to appearances, is of Finnish nationality. His work was sung in Italian save for a beautiful folk-tune in his native language.

We add one more to our rich store of precious memories—Brodsky in Bach—in Dr. Brodsky's farewell, which took place on January 13 at the Hallé Pension Fund Concert. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of his first appearance here, playing the same music then as now: Bach in A minor, Tchaikovsky, and Novacek, which he brought to us with all the authority of classical musicianship reinforced by the bonds of friendship or the intimate ties of master and pupil. Tchaikovsky carried his 'Sérénade Mélancolique' to Brodsky with its ink wet upon the page; the Hellmesberger cadenza in the Bach was that of Brodsky's lifelong friend—and so the farewell was inevitably bound up with these delightful personal feelings. There was a certain magic for the younger end of his audience that the evening's soloist linked up in this manner with these great ones of the past.

The noon-time concerts have recently brought much music of varied interest. The Brodsky players in Christmas week were associated with the younger wind-players of the Hallé band in the Beethoven Septet, and Brodsky must have felt almost a paternal interest in the fact that he was now leading a second generation of players in this genial work. On December 31, Miss Lucy Pierce played the big Bach C major Organ Toccata in the Busoni arrangement, and gave, for me, the best impression so far of her powers. With Mr. R. J. Forbes she bids fair to stand out as the finest product of the Manchester School of pianoforte training.

On December 21 there was a sterling reading of the too seldom-heard Brahms Quartet for pianoforte and strings in A by Mr. and Mrs. John Bridge, Mr. F. Park, and Mr. W. Warburton; and on December 28 the Cathedral Choir, under Dr. A. W. Wilson, sang with much refinement an excellently varied series of carols. Concerts like these are vital to our chamber-music needs at present.

Much the most interesting vocal recital of recent months was that of Mr. Charles Neville on December 29, when, with the assistance of Mr. R. J. Forbes, and Messrs. Alfred Barker, Stuart Redfern, A. Voorsanger, and W. Warburton, Manchester had its first hearing of Vaughan Williams' 'On Wenlock Edge' cycle, followed by the Four Mystical Songs sung at the last Worcester Festival with orchestra, but now accompanied by pianoforte and viola.

The Manchester School of Music concert, under Mr. Albert J. Cross, drew its accustomed crowded auditorium before the Christmas vacation. The solo playing was excellently represented by the Misses Osbaldiston, and the 'Carmen' trio must be mentioned among the vocal numbers. The orchestral items were pleasing and not over-ambitious.

On February 24, for the first time in this country, the Hallé Orchestra under Mr. Julius Harrison will play here a substantial portion, in the form of a suite, from Pizzetti's 'La Pisanella,' a scenic drama phrased on d'Annunzio's poem.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

On December 16 the Armstrong College Choral Society under the direction of Mr. W. G. Whittaker, gave a concert which included such varied items as Bach's Cantata, 'Come, Thou Blessed Saviour,' Brahms' 'Liebslieder' Waltzes, and a group of R. R. Terry's arrangements of sailor shanties. Save for the want of weight in the lower parts, owing to the lack of mature male voices, the performance was an excellent one, the dreamy atmosphere of the Brahms waltzes in particular being fully realised. Mr. E. J. Potts was what the man in the street would call 'a star turn.' The poignancy of Cyril Scott's 'O Captain,' the naivety of Austen's 'Twelve days of Christmas' the jabbering atmosphere of Whittaker's 'Ship of Rio,' and the broad dialect and homely humour of the Northumbrian shanty, 'Billy Boy,' were brought out in a most convincing way.

The Newcastle Symphony Orchestra (a combination of professionals and amateurs), conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty, gave on December 17 a programme which included Schubert's C major Symphony, the 'Bartered Bride' Overture, and Rabad's symphonic poem, 'La Procession.'

The Bach Choir, on December 18, gave the first performance at Newcastle of Parts 1, 2, and 3 of the 'Christmas Oratorio.' The chorus work was brilliant, the sureness of attack and the fine sweep with which each number carried the listener along being striking features. A word of praise is due to Miss J. W. Fleming, a member of the choir, who successfully undertook the rôle of tenor soloist at a day's notice. The orchestra, in addition, gave a sprightly performance of the Brandenburg No. 2. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union was heard in its annual performance of 'The Messiah' on December 22. The choruses were given fine, broad interpretations, with no undue striving after thrilling climaxes, yet without being in any way stodgy. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

So far as can be traced, Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' had never been heard at Nottingham until it was given on December 19 as the central feature of the Albert Hall Choir Festival. Mr. Marshall Harding conducted, and Mr. Bernard Johnson was at the organ. A local contralto, Miss Kathleen Halford, made her début on this occasion, Mr. Charles Keywood and Mr. Barrington Knowles being the other soloists. An interesting lecture-recital was held under the auspices of the Nottingham Cosmopolitan Society on December 19, with Mr. Bernard Page as lecturer, and Miss E. Roseblade at the pianoforte. The examples ranged from the classicism of Bach and Scarlatti to the semi-classical, semi-romantic music of Beethoven, and so through the purely romantic works of Schumann, Chopin, Debussy, &c., to the beginning of the realistic composers. The Nottingham Gleemen gave a successful concert in aid of local charities on December 19. Under Mr. Charles E. Riley's direction numerous part-songs and glees were accorded an enthusiastic reception. German's 'O Peaceful Night,' de Rille's 'Martyrs of the Arena,' and the 'Pilgrims' Chorus' proved specially popular. The Gleemen were supplemented by Madame Lilian Riley, Madame Gladys Searson, and Mr. Samuel Jeacock. Space forbids detailed notice of the innumerable 'Messiah' performances, but the Sacred Harmonic Society's presentation is a big local event that cannot be ignored. Under Mr. Allen Gill, with full band and choir, a fine performance on December 27 drew a large and appreciative audience. The principals were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Norah Scott, Mr. John Collett, and Mr. Kenneth Ellis. On December 28, the St. Mary's Choral Society gave a Carol Service. Dr. Frank Radcliffe conducted, and Mr. Robert Radford was soloist. The carols included three by Parry, Berlioz's 'Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling,' Sweelinck's 'Born to-day,' West's 'See amid the winter's snow,' 'Ring out, wild bells' by Fletcher, and the traditional 'When Christ was born.' Mr. Radford was heard in 'For behold,' from 'The Messiah,' Tchaikovsky's 'Benediction,' and carols by Parry and Bridge.

Derby was visited on December 10 by Mr. Appleby Matthews and the Birmingham Orchestra, when the Central Hall was packed to its utmost capacity. The programme contained Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Nicolai's 'Merry Wives' Overture, Sibelius' 'Valse Triste,' Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, &c. Miss Elsie Suddaby's fresh soprano voice was heard to advantage in her solo work. On December 28 the Derby Choral Union, under Dr. Coward, gave a particularly impressive performance of 'Elijah,' when various choral innovations added to the evening's interest. The principals were Miss Florence Mellors, Miss Lucy Bingham, Mr. Henry Brearly, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

The third Leicester Chamber Concert took place on December 6, when Miss Grace Burrows, Miss Joan Willis, and Madame Gertrud Hopkins were associated in Brahms' Trio, Op. 87, in C, and Dvorák's 'Dumky' Trio, Op. 90. Madame Constance Hardcastle was the vocalist, and contributed several songs, including a group of three by Scarlatti, Monro, and Carey, which proved particularly interesting.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

The closing months of 1920 marked a period of considerable activity in local musical circles, but with the New Year there has come a temporary lull. Except for an 'international celebrity' concert there has been very little of note during January, but at the same time the month has not been one of idleness, for preparations have been advanced for several choral concerts later in the season.

Dr. Henry G. Ley, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, gave the first recital on the new three-manual organ at St. James's Church, Milton, the installation of which was completed just before Christmas. The builders of the instrument are Messrs. Walker, of London, and the cost has been about £3,500, towards which a very substantial grant was received from the Carnegie Fund.

It is interesting to note that a lead has been given by Portsea Parish Church in the direction of the improvement of congregational singing. Commencing on the first Sunday in the New Year, congregational choir practices are now taking place prior to the evening services, thus giving church members the opportunity for becoming familiar with new tunes.

Miss Rosina Buckman, Madame Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, M. Jean Vallier, and Miss Marie Hall gave the programme at the fourth 'international celebrity' concert at the Town Hall on January 10, and the series will be concluded with a 'surprise night' on February 8, when Miss Stella Power, Bratza, the young Serbian violinist, and Madame Leila Megane, the Welsh mezzo-soprano, are to appear.

The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society, which gave a much-appreciated performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' in December, has arranged a promenade concert for February 3, with Miss Carmen Hill as the soloist. The date being most eagerly anticipated is March 17, when the Society proposes to perform Bach's Mass in B minor for the first time at Portsmouth.

The Fareham Choral and Orchestral Society, re-formed out of the old Fareham Music Circle, with Mr. J. H. Jackson as conductor, made a successful début in December with a concert of symphonies, part-songs, and choruses, the treatment of the various pieces showing considerable promise.

On January 5, the Emsworth Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. R. T. Canaway, gave a very creditable interpretation of the concert version of 'Merrie England.' Owing to other engagements, Mr. Canaway has now had to relinquish the post of hon. conductor, and the duties are being taken over by Mr. Alfred Agate.

SOUTH WALES

Music is in the ascendant, and Eisteddfodau and musical Festivals have been held this season throughout the Principality 'o Caerdydd i Caerbybi.' It is a truism that, with a few notable exceptions, the winning of the small prize offered marks the limit of musical culture for the mass. Now that the question of reform of the Eisteddfod looms large, it may not be amiss to scrutinise the 'poor man's college.' The same competitors and winners, especially soloists, appear regularly year in, year out. Quo fine? The pianist who boasts dozens of small prizes, and the mature singer of thirteen who is reported to have won about four hundred trophies, are typical members of this vicious circle. The subjects chosen also for competition are for the most part hackneyed, and should be pensioned off, and a wider field explored for their selection. With regard to adjudicators, probably the time is now passing when the same adjudicator gives his verdict in all branches of music—vocal, instrumental, and composition, however foreign any class may be to him.

On Christmas Day singing Festivals were held in various places of worship, for the most part by massed choirs. In the Rhymney Valley, such were held at Bargoed, Pengam, Bedwas, Ystrad, Mynach, Pontlottyn, Fochriw, and Deri; in the Merthyr district, at Merthyr Vale (Aberfan) and Cefn Coed; at Sketty, Cwmtwrch, and Glyn Neath, in the Swansea district, and at Ynysybwl in the Pontypridd area.

On December 15, at Cross Keys Primitive Methodist Chapel, 'Samson' was performed by the Cross Keys and District Harmonic Society, under the leadership of Mr. E. I. Jeffreys.

On December 19, the Rhymney Ladies' Choir, under the conductorship of Madame Mary Richards, gave a concert at the Cardiff Empire, and also on December 24, at the Workmen's Hall, Cwmfelinfach, Rhymney.

On December 20, at Abercynon Workmen's Hall, a concert was given by the Abercynon Male-Voice Party, under the conductorship of Mr. E. T. Jenkins.

On Christmas Day, oratorios were performed in many places—'Judas Maccabæus' by the Bethesda Choir, Merthyr; 'Elijah' at Pontypridd by the Tabernacle Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Alan Dummer; and the same oratorio at the Public Hall, Cwmaman, Aberdare, by the Cwmaman choir, led by Mr. Edward Lewis; 'The Messiah' at Siloa Chapel, Aberdare, by the chapel choir, with Mr. W. J. Evans as conductor; and the 'Hymn of Praise' at the Public Hall, Pontardawe, by the Alltwen Choral Society, accompanied by full orchestra, and led by Mr. David Thomas.

On December 26, a very fine performance was given of 'The Messiah' at Dowlais, by the Bethania Choral Society, with Mr. Evan Thomas as conductor. On the same day this work was also given at Capel Als, Llanelly, by the chapel choir and orchestra, under the baton of Mr. William Richards.

'The Martyrs' (Maunder) was given in three places—on December 25, at the Empire, New Tredegar, by the Wesleyan Church Choir, under the leadership of Mr. Charles Hill, when it was preceded by a programme of miscellaneous items; on December 26, two performances were given at Treorky by the Hermon massed choir of a hundred voices, the conductor being Mr. Howell Howells; and in the first week in January it was given in full character at the Public Hall, Britonferry, by the Brythyn Glee Society, under the direction of Mr. T. J. Jenkins.

On December 27 the Libanus Choral Society, Maesteg, gave a performance of the 'Daughter of Jairus' (Stainer) at the Town Hall. Mr. Thomas Thomas was the conductor. On the following day two largely attended concerts were held at the Bethel Chapel, Gadlys, Aberdare; and on the same date 'Blodwen,' by the late Dr. Joseph Parry, was performed at Swansea.

The Penarth Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Dawning, gave a very fine concert at the Paget Rooms, Penarth, on December 21. The choir numbered nearly a hundred voices, and was heard to advantage in many modern part-songs, notably in 'In praise of Neptune' (German) and 'The Shower' (Elgar), a setting of an almost forgotten 17th century poet—Henry Vaughan. The English Trio—Mrs. Ethel Hobday (pianoforte), Miss Marjorie Hayward (violin), and Mr. Cedric Sharpe (violoncello)—took part, and contributed several concerted items to a programme that won much appreciation.

The bi-monthly series of Saturday evening chamber concerts, held at University College, Cardiff, closed for the term on December 18, when Purcell was discoursed by the College choir and newly-formed orchestra, to the enjoyment of a large audience.

On January 4, at the Paget Rooms, Penarth, Mr. Mark Hambourg entertained a crowded audience with excerpts from Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, Cyril Scott, and Percy Grainger.

Cardiff is decidedly fortunate in having two high-class orchestral concerts every Sunday evening. The Angle Orchestra has migrated from Park Hall, where it has been located for seven seasons, to the New Theatre, and Mortimer's Orchestra has taken its place at Park Hall. The programmes of both concerts are on similar lines, consisting of orchestral selections from standard works, supplemented with vocal or instrumental items by artists of repute.

Mr. J. C. Potter, conductor of the well-known Coventry Choral Society, has been appointed a J.P. for the city of Coventry.

YORKSHIRE

LEEDS

The event of the season at Leeds has without a doubt been the series of concerts (January 10 to 15) at which the London String Quartet has played all Beethoven's sixteen String Quartets, together with the extraordinary and extravagant 'Grosse Fuge' which he designed as the Finale of Op. 130. This miniature Festival has already taken place both in London and Edinburgh, so there is no need to deal with it in detail, and the chief comment that seems necessary is on the audience, whose sustained attention was quite remarkable, reminding one of the famous 'Bayreuth hush.' This formed a considerable factor in one's enjoyment of a really great occasion, and another was the fact that the audience was with some coaxing persuaded to abstain from applause between the movements. The net result was that the admirable performances were not only enjoyed, but were keenly appreciated, and the event will remain in memory as among the most important and distinctive in the musical history of Leeds.

Beyond this there has been the usual gap in musical matters. For rather more than a week before Christmas the customary 'Messiah' performances occupied the ground. One Society, greatly daring, departed from routine by giving Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio.' This was the Leeds New Choral Society, which, under Mr. H. M. Turton, performed the whole of that work on December 15. The venture was handicapped by the absence of an orchestra, for which organ and pianoforte proved a very unsatisfying substitute, and, interesting as it was to hear the entire work, it must be remembered that this was not by any means what was the original intention of this series of six cantatas for the several days of the Christmas festival. Another drawback was the defection of the Narrator, whose part had to be taken at very short notice by Mr. T. Middleton. The tenor airs were sung by Miss Elsie Suddaby, in addition to her share as principal soprano, and she acquitted herself admirably of this most exacting task. Miss Nancy Horde was an excellent contralto, and Mr. Helliwell an effective bass. The choir was exceedingly good, bright, and thoroughly efficient.

Miss Suddaby's fine musicianship passed through a further test on January 7, when she gave a vocal recital at which, with Dr. Bairstow at the pianoforte, she sang a delightful series of twenty-six songs, all of British origin, a group by old composers, another by Parry, a third by Stanford, and a fourth by living writers. She showed great versatility in adapting herself to the many moods, and in voice and style was always satisfying. She had a worthy colleague in Miss Leila Willoughby, whose playing of violin solos was artistic and sympathetic. At the Saturday Orchestral Concert on January 15 Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted the 'Scotch' Symphony, his own Violin Concerto (with Miss Bessie Rawlins as soloist), and the 'Leonora' (No. 3) and 'Barber of Bagdad' Overtures.

SHEFFIELD

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society is to be congratulated on its enterprise in giving the first performance at Sheffield of Bach's 'St. John' Passion. The performance was in every respect a worthy one, and represents one of the outstanding recent achievements in Sheffield music. Sir Henry Wood conducted, and with a reliable and responsive choir, a large, full modern orchestra (in accordance with Reimann's re-scored version), and excellent and sympathetic principals under his control, did not fail to secure an interpretation which, impressive at all points, was as a whole a source of real inspiration. Mr. G. E. Linfoot was responsible for the preliminary training of the choir, Mrs. J. H. Jackson was a thoroughly capable organist who had done splendid service as accompanist at rehearsals, and the principals were Miss Annie Rees, Miss Edith Furnedged, Mr. Sidney Pointer, Mr. Joseph Lycett, and Capt. Herbert Heyner. The Society is fortunate in having as its president Sir Henry Hadow, who, a few days before the performance, gave at the University a delightful lecture on the 'St. John' Passion, which must have been of great value as a preparation.

The Melba concert of the 'international celebrity' series took place on December 15. The programme was of the miscellaneous type usual on such occasions. The most valuable musical feature was the clever viola playing of Mr. Lionel Tertis.

The Musical Union, under Dr. Coward's direction, gave its annual performance of 'The Messiah,' which proved as successful and popular as ever.

The subjects discussed at the North of England Education Conference held this year at Sheffield, included 'Music in Schools,' on which topic a paper was read by Mr. G. E. Linfoot, musical adviser to the Sheffield Education Committee. He urged the importance of cultivating in school children the ability to listen intelligently to music, and the desirability of a thorough grounding in sight-reading and musical dictation in staff notation, using the tonic sol-fa notation only as a means of approach. The attitude to music of our concert audiences was taken as an indication that some reform of our methods of music-teaching in schools is needed.

OTHER TOWNS

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra, on December 18, took occasion to celebrate the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Beethoven's birth by giving his first Symphony, of which Mr. Julius Harrison gave a reading characterised by great vivacity. A pleasing, unpretentious 'Miniature Suite' by Eric Coates proved effective, and Mr. John Dunn was the soloist in Saint-Saëns' Violin Concerto in B minor. Miss Annie Cockcroft was a pleasing vocalist. At Wakefield, a newly-formed Institute Choral Society made a beginning on December 13, with 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' which the small choir sang with considerable spirit under Miss Nettleton's direction. Mr. F. Straw was the soloist. On December 17, at the second of the Wakefield Chamber Concerts, Miss Dorothy Hess played Beethoven's late Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) with great insight and refinement, and Mr. Cecil Barber was the vocalist. Dr. Bairstow conducted an excellent performance of Brahms' 'German Requiem' in York Cathedral on December 19. The surroundings added to the impressiveness of the effect, especially as regards choir and orchestra. The fine Willis organ in Dewsbury Parish Church has been overhauled and its mechanism modernised by Messrs. Harrison, of Durham. On December 16 it was dedicated, and in the service, as well as in a recital which followed, the organist, Mr. G. H. Hirst, demonstrated that it was everything a church organ should be.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The Beethoven Festival wound up with a performance of the ninth Symphony—a performance so successful that it had to be repeated on the following day. In response to the unmistakable public desire, the Concertgebouw directors have induced Mengelberg, prior to his departure, to sign a new agreement for five years, with the addition of another five optional years.

On December 19 and 23, Arthur Nikisch appeared as conductor. It has to be lamented that his programmes are much too mixed to possess any educational value. Excerpts from Wagner's operas may have been very well some forty years ago, when Wagner still sorely needed propaganda; in our day the works of the great musico-dramatist may fortunately be said to constitute universal property. We can no longer detach his music from the stage events, without loss, and broadly speaking, it is better to have the complete opera or nothing. In his second concert Nikisch introduced his son Mitja, who played the pianoforte part in Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto, and made a very favourable impression. Hereafter came a lull in orchestral concerts, from which we were rather rudely awakened by an evening devoted to the works of Arnold Schönberg, conducted by himself. On this occasion we heard his symphonic poem 'Pelleas and Melisande,' and four songs from his Op. 8, in which the Prague tenor Hans Nachod strove hard, but not always successfully, to make himself audible above the orchestra. 'Pelleas and Melisande' was heard here eight years ago, when it met with strong and rather unmannerly opposition. Opposition this time was restricted to a great number of abonnés staying away. On the whole, it must be said that those who had made use of their tickets cheerfully bore the discomforts incidental to the hearing of Schönberg's music; nay, it seemed that this particular work, belonging to an earlier epoch, came as comparative balm after the excruciating moments in which his 'Five orchestral pieces,' Op. 16, abound. Partly at the instigation of a few admirers, and partly from humane motives, Schönberg has been invited to come over from Vienna and take up his abode here until the end of March. Besides the works mentioned in this and one of my former letters, we have heard also his first String Quartet, Op. 7, and the Chamber Symphony for fifteen solo instruments. A performance of the composer's most extensive work, a three-part composition for soli, chorus, and orchestra, entitled 'Gurre-Lieder,' is fixed for March 20. For myself, each time I go to hear a composition of Schönberg's I conscientiously try to get his point of view, having previously fortified myself by a careful perusal of the scores, and, failing these, of guide-books to his works. Concerning the latter, however, my experience—and I do not overmuch exaggerate—is similar to that of Mr. Samuel Clemens, who, witnessing a Tibetan play, was 'helped' to grasp the plot by a Chinaman, who explained it in pidgin-English. Clemens says: 'The play was obscure enough without the explanation; with the explanation added it was opaque.'

Since January 13, we are rejoicing in the presence of Dr. Karl Muck. His first concert at once furnished ample evidence that, in the way of orchestral concerts, we are to expect great things.

Solo recitals have on the whole been moving on a very high level. During the last few weeks we have heard three violinists who rank among the best of their kind, viz., Adolf Busch, of Berlin, Willy Burmester, and Bronislaw Huberman. The latter brought a very gratifying change into the usual run of programmes by introducing into each a sonata by a representative modern composer. At Amsterdam he played Vincent d'Indy's Op. 59, in C, and John Ireland's No. 1 in D minor, both proving to be works of the highest artistic value.

Of the many pianists I must restrict myself to the mention of our own excellent Dirk Schäfer (who on Christmas Day gave a Beethoven-Chopin matinée), and two British artists—the well-known Miss Myra Hess, a great favourite with us, and Mr. Evelyn Howard-Jones. The latter, who is not yet so well-known here as he deserves to be, revealed in his two very interesting concerts an unflinching technique and first-rate musicianship. His Bach playing, more especially, cannot easily be rivalled. By unanimous consent a speedy renewal of his acquaintance is eagerly looked for. There was of course quite a number of song recitals. With the exception of a very interesting Handel matinée, given by Maria Pos-Carloforti and Dr. Georg Göhler, hardly any of these deserve special mention.

Very conflicting news is at present in circulation concerning our National Opera. According to a majority of opinions its existence is seriously threatened. It has done much splendid work in former years, but the results have lately been nullified by disastrous experiments. One feature of the gradual return to pre-war times, as regards operatic life here, will consist in the establishment of an Italian Opera. Whatever the qualities of this will amount to, it is certain to absorb the greater part of the opera-going public, and unless the purses of our wealthy citizens are opened liberally, our National Opera can hardly survive the counter-attraction.

MILAN

On November 20, at the Royal Conservatorium, the violinist Huberman gave a very successful recital, playing the 'Spanish Symphony' of Lalo. His clean, soft bowing, in its breadth and strength, and his faultless technique, fully justified the hearty reception he received. Respighi's Sonata in B minor, perhaps rather an obscure work, was illuminated by dramatic points bordering almost on the excessive. In this Sonata the pianist Frenkel distinguished himself; he also displayed uncommon executive qualities in the Fantasia in F minor of Chopin. The last part of the programme was devoted to show pieces, such as Paganini's 'La Campanella.'

t. The result entirely quieted such fears; but it was much to be regretted that the rehearsals of the opera had been few and insufficient. The lack of preparation was painfully evident.

On December 30 the Costanzi saw the first presentation of 'Maruf,' the new opera of Henri Rabaud, who came expressly from Paris to assist at its representation. The libretto, founded on one of the tales of the Arabian Nights, is from the pen of Lucien Nepoté. The opera, taken as a whole, reveals its composer as a musician of exceptional keenness and delicacy. It is to be regretted that the reception of 'the work at the Costanzi was not marked by that unanimity of applause which the opera in itself, and its 'magnificent production' (the appreciation is Rabaud's own) undoubtedly merited. The real reason of this equivocal success has been admirably revealed and justly condemned by Signor Belli, of the Corriere d'Italia, who thus wrote in his long critique of 'Maruf' published the day following its première:

If the French are unable to endure our music, which they classify as 'une chose pitoyable': if they call Mascagni's operas 'Les œuvres les plus triviales et les plus basses qu'on connaît dans la musique entière,' and if they call Puccini's works 'un peu plus raffinées en apparence, mais ils ne sont pas moins vulgaires en réalité': in other words, if French critics show themselves thus discourteous and unjust, that is no reason why we should follow them on the same road, for in this way not only should we show ourselves forgetful of 'les règles les plus élémentaires de la courtoisie,' but also we should give them an excuse for thinking that our musical culture had made a halt at the productions of Ponchielli and Verdi.

A well-made point!

THE WINTER CONCERT SEASON

Rome is rich in concerts this winter, having no less than three first-class programmes, viz., that of the Philharmonic Society, that of the Amici della Musica, which is in its second year, and that of a youthful group of enthusiasts who have acquired the Bach Hall, which is fitted up with a good though small organ by Bossi, and was the centre of a group of dilettanti which, before the war, a well-known German lady had gathered round her. This hall took on a new lease of life on December 28, when it was opened to the public for the first of a series of twenty concerts, the honour of inauguration falling to an American gentleman, Dr. W. Green, who is organist of the American Episcopal Church in this city, and is also known in England. The concert included items by a trio of players from the Augusteum orchestra, and was a marked success. The programme is subjoined:

Prelude and Fugue in E minor	...	...	Bach
Choral, 'Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten'	...	...	—
Fugue in E flat major	...	...	—

At the organ—Dr. Green.

Three Sonate a tre da camera, from Op. 4	...	...	Corelli
Concerto grosso in B minor (for strings and pianoforte)	...	...	Handel

Dr. Green particularly distinguished himself in his interpretation of the Bach Choral.

The Amici della Musica inaugurated its second year of life on December 12 with an excellent concert, at which the following programme was presented, the pianist being Signor Dante Alderighi, a young artist who has already a past as a prodigy and who will no doubt soon be heard in London:

Quartet for strings, Op. 33, No. 6	...	...	Boccherini
Second Fantasy in C minor (pianoforte)	...	...	Mozart
Novellette (pianoforte)	...	...	Schumann
Andante and Scherzo, Sonata Op. 3 (pianoforte)	...	...	Brahms
Quartet No. 25, for pianoforte and strings	...	...	Brahms

The Philharmonic Society of Rome will inaugurate its season in January. The programme includes a commemoration of Sgambati, an exhumation of the oldest melodrama which has reached our days—Peri's 'Euridice'—the 'Stabat Mater' of Steffani, a little-known composer of the 18th century, and a grand centenary concert in which will be sung a cantata and two lyrics which have won the prize in a recent competition of the Society.

I must not close without noting some other items of the almost phenomenal musical activity at Rome during the past month. The Sistine Choir has been twice heard in exceptional circumstances—at the funeral of the Marquis Della Chiesa, brother of the Pope, when the Requiem Mass of Perosi ('Pro Re Baviera') was sung, and at the solemn fifteenth centenary commemoration of St. Jerome, when a 'Papal Chapel' was held in St. Mary Major, with the attendance of a large number of cardinals, and the Mass 'Laudate Dominum de Coelis' of Orlando di Lasso was sung under the direction of Signor Rella, Perosi's assistant maestro.

At the Costanzi recently, the Russian dancers executed a new work of Respighi, entitled 'Lo scherzo veneziano,' which presents a Venetian carnival scene of Goldoni's time. It obtained an instant success.

Bronislaw Hubermann has also given a concert at the Costanzi 'with a programme which included the Kreutzer Sonata, the Spanish Symphony of Lalo, and some Hungarian Dances of Brahms; and the Berlin pianist, Richard Burmeister, has given a concert at the German embassy with works by Beethoven (the 'Appassionata'), Schumann, Schubert, and Liszt.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

December has been a very interesting month, the Beethoven Festival in commemoration of the hundred and fiftieth birthday of the composer being celebrated by a series of concerts spreading well over three weeks. The chief of these, promoted by the principal musicians at Vienna, was held in the Bevedere Palace on December 12. The programme comprised the 'Egmont' Overture, played by the Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Schalk, Adagio, Op. 127, by the Rosé Quartet, Duet for pianoforte and violin by Messrs. Rosé and Grunfeld, and songs by Frau Schaumann and Herr Wiedermann. Thus practically the whole of the greatest musical talent at Vienna was to be heard on the same occasion. In the evening, at the Opera, a festival performance of 'Fidelio' was given under the direction of Richard Strauss. This was the composer's first public appearance since his return from South America, and he received a great ovation.

Dr. Strauss has had a very successful tour. At the concerts he conducted at Buenos Aires and other South American cities his programmes consisted of Wagner, Beethoven, and Mozart, besides examples of his own works. The greater part of the proceeds of this tour has been allotted to charity, 200,000 kr. going to the technical staff of the Vienna Opera as a Christmas gift, 100,000 kr. to each of the Opera pensioners, and 500,000 kr. to the Bürgermeister of Vienna for the starving children of the city.

Other Beethoven Festival concerts worthy of special mention are a series given by the Rosé Quartet of all the Beethoven Quartets, and a performance of the ninth Symphony by the Philharmonic Orchestra, with choir.

A performance of Johann Strauss' 'Fledermaus' was given on December 26 at the Opera, in aid of the Opera Pensioners' Fund. This is principally worthy of mention as showing the versatility of Herr Slezak. On the previous evening (Christmas Day) this artist had appeared as Tannhäuser, and the change to the low comedy part of Alfred in 'Fledermaus' was remarkable. Richard Strauss conducted the performance.

Korngold's new opera, 'Die Tote Stadt,' is in rehearsal here, and it is expected that a first performance will be given early in January. This work, which has already been produced in Germany, is very heavily scored, and employs pianoforte, harmonium, organ, celeste, and rattles.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Leicester City Orchestra gave its first concert of the season at Melbourne Hall on December 30. Under Mr. Harold C. Hind, and, in one case, Mr. G. E. Hilton, Mayor of Leicester and musical director to the city, the orchestra of fifty-five played Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Petite Suite de Concert,' and other well-chosen items.

Features of special interest at Sir Frederick Bridge's forthcoming Gresham lectures will be the second performance of Deering's 'Country Cries' and the first complete performance of Cobbold's 'New Fashions.'

Answers to Correspondents

'PLAINSONG STUDENT.'—Gigout's 'Gregorian Album' and Ropartz's 'Rhapsody on two French Carols,' are published by Leduc, Paris, and Durand, Paris, respectively. John E. West's Fantasia on 'Bristol' is published by the H. W. Gray Co., New York. All may be obtained through Messrs. Novello.

Several readers have sent replies to a recent inquiry for a book giving specifications of modern organs. Some specifications have lately appeared in the Music Student. The only book that seems to meet the case is the latest edition of Thomas Elliston's 'Organs and Tuning' (Weekes, 2Is.).

A correspondent asks for the name of the publisher of Wilson's 'When I survey,' presumably a song. Can a reader tell us?

CONTENTS.

	Page.
Gervase Elwes ... ..	81
Parry as a Song Writer. By H. C. Colles ... ..	82
The Organ Works of Bach. V. The Sonatas for Two Manuals and Pedals. By Harvey Grace ... ..	88
Some Italian Composers of To-day ( contd. ). I. Mario Castelnovo Tedesco. By Guido M. Gatti ... ..	93
Homage to Debussy ... ..	97
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	98
How not to write a School Song. By W. McNaught	101
New Music. By William Child ... ..	104
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ... ..	114
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ... ..	115
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste' ... ..	115
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ..	117
Chamber Music for Amateurs ... ..	118
Church and Organ Music ... ..	118
Letters to the Editor ... ..	119
Sixty Years Ago ... ..	120
Incorporated Society of Musicians ... ..	120
Choral Concerts ... ..	121
The Royal Choral Society ... ..	121
The Scarborough Festival ... ..	121
Dalcroze Eurhythmics ... ..	122
English Folk-Dance Society ... ..	122
Music in the Provinces ... ..	122
Musical Notes from Abroad ... ..	131
Answers to Correspondents ... ..	134

MUSIC:

'O Sons and Daughters, let us sing. Full Anthem for Easter. By H. A. Chambers ... .. 105

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Gervase Elwes.
2. 'The strife is o'er.' Anthem for Easter. By George Rathbone.

TWO-MANUAL Church (Pipe) ORGAN, by Cavallé Col (Paris), for Sale. 14 Stops. Excellent condition. Suitable small Church or Cinema. Could be enlarged. £500. Immediate delivery. "Musicus," c/o Novello & Co., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BURGESS, FRANCIS.—Additional Psalms for Evening Services. People's Edition. Limp cloth, 1s. 6d. net. Cloth boards, 2s. net.
— "Little Plainchant Canticle Book." 6d. net.
— "Planchant of the Proper" (The English Gradual, Part 2). 6d. net.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"O sons and daughters, let us sing." Easter Anthem. (No. 936, The Musical Times.) 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

CHOPIN, F.—"Prelude" Op. 28, No. 15. Arranged for Organ by ALFRED REDHEAD. No. 62, Organ Arrangements. Edited by JOHN E. WEST. 1s. 6d.

CRASTON, E. S.—"On the Resurrection morning." Hymn and Tune "Hatherton." 2d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"Grace" (from the music to "Henry VIII."). Arranged for Men's Voices (T.T.B.B.). (No. 102, Novello's Services, &c., for Men's Voices.) 2d.

GRIFFITHS, W.—"Boar's Head" Carol. 1½d.

HOWELL, DOROTHY.—"Lamia." Symphonic Poem for Full Orchestra. 1st Violin, 1s. 6d.; 2nd Violin, 1s. 6d.; Viola, 1s. 6d.; Violoncello, 1s. 6d.; Basso, 8d.

JAQUES DALCROZE, E.—"Rhythmic Movement." Vol. i. 6s.

PURCELL, H.—"Suite." For Strings. From the Dramatic Music. Arranged and edited by ALBERT COATES. Score, 2s.; 1st Violin, 8d.; 2nd Violin, 8d.; Viola, 8d.; Bassi (Celli), 8d.

RATHBONE, G.—"The strife is o'er." Easter Anthem. (No. 1084, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

ROBERTS, OWEN.—"Holy, Holy, Holy." Sacred Song. 2s.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 344) contains the following music in both notations: "There was a simple maiden." Two-part (or Unison) Song. 17th Century Tune. 2d.

STARKEY, LAW.—"Scherzino Serenade." For Pianoforte Solo. 1s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2341. "Let us now fear the Lord our God." Harvest Anthem. A. M. GOODHART 3d.

No. 2342. "The tide rises, the tide falls." Four-part Song. ADAM CARSE 2d.

No. 2343. "Trust not too much, fair youth." Madrigal for five voices.

ORLANDO GIBBONS 3d.

No. 2344. "Here a solemn fast we keep." Three-part Song. For Female Voices. ... .. ETHEL BOYCE 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BEETHOVEN.—Minuet in G. Transcribed for Organ by EDWIN H. LEMARE. 50 cents (2s.).

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"The Prince of Peace." Cantata for Soli, Chorus, and Organ. $1.00 (4s.).

DELAMARTER, E.—"Carillon." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—"Stately Procession." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—"Toccato." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

DICKINSON, C.—"Now our hymn ascendeth" (15th century). Arranged for S.A.T.B. 20 cents (10d.).

FERRARI, GUSTAVE.—"All my delight" (15th century). Arranged for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—"Down by the river" (Rondo, 16th century). Arranged for S.S.A.A. 15 cents (8d.).

—"If thou would win the fair one's favor" (Chanson, 16th century). Arranged for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—"Nicholas courteth Joan" (17th century). Arranged for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—"Ye gallant gentlemen of France" (15th century). Arranged for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (6d.).

LEMARE, EDWIN H.—"Drink to me only." Transcribed for Organ. 50 cents (2s.).

SCHUMANN.—"Traumerel." Transcribed for Organ by EDWIN H. LEMARE. 50 cents (2s.).

VITTORIA.—"O Wonder ineffable" (Christmastide). Arranged for S.A.T.B. by CLARENCE DICKINSON. 15 cents (8d.).

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

FIVE NEW SONGS

WORDS ADAPTED FROM THE CHINESE

BY

E. POWYS MATHERS.

THE EMPEROR. G minor (C to E flat) and A minor.

THE RED LOTUS. A minor, B minor (C to F sharp), and D minor.

IN THE PALACE. E flat, F (C to F sharp), and G.

THE PEACH FLOWER. G minor (D flat to E) and A minor.

THE GARDEN OF BAMBOOS. G minor, A minor (D to E), and C minor.

Price 2s. net each.

T. HILTON - TURVEY

FIRST SONG ALBUM

1. A MAY-DAY LILT.
2. STARS ON THE SEA.
3. FOR LOVE AND YOU.
4. SLEEPY-BYE SONG.
5. HER CHEEK IS LIKE THE TINTED ROSE.
6. IF JUNE WERE MINE.
7. WHEN THE LONG LANE TURNS.

Low or High Voice, 5s. net.

"Genial, graceful, and sincere—the products of a genuine artistic temperament; rich in melody and imbued with charm."

From a critical article by George Lowe.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Music Sellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

JUST ISSUED

A NEW VOLUME OF

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

VOL. IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

CONTENTS.

Cherry Ripe ... ..	HORN
Children at play ... ..	MOZART
Come let us all this day ... ..	BACH
Flower thou resemblest, A ... ..	RUBINSTEIN
Gentle flowers ("Faust") ... ..	GOUNOD
Gentle touch, The ... ..	GOETZ
Greenwood calls, The ... ..	SCHUBERT
Harper's Song, The ... ..	SCHUBERT
I attempt from love's sickness ... ..	PURCELL
It was a lover ... ..	MORLEY
Jerusalem ... ..	MEYER
Lass with the delicate air, The ... ..	M. ARNE
Legend ... ..	TCHAIKOVSKY
Like to a Linden tree ... ..	DVORAK
Longing ... ..	SCHUBERT
Lullaby ... ..	BRAMHMS
My heart ever faithful ... ..	BACH
Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... ..	FRANZ
O come, do not delay ("Figaro") ... ..	MOZART
Organ-grinder, The ... ..	SCHUBERT
Orpheus with his lute ... ..	SULLIVAN
Prepare thyself, Zion ... ..	BACH
Serenade ... ..	GOUNOD
Shepherds, The ... ..	CORNELIUS
Tender wood-dove ... ..	GOUNOD
Under the greenwood tree ... ..	ARNE
Violet, The ... ..	MOZART
Walnut-tree, The ... ..	SCHUMANN
When all was young ("Faust") ... ..	GOUNOD
When daisies pied ... ..	ARNE

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT
VOL. I.

Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JAUQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BROTHERHOOD

SONG, WITH CHORUS, FOR A MASONIC GATHERING.

Dedicated to the M.W. The Pro-Grand Master of Grand Lodge of Freemasons of England, LORD AMPHILL.

WORDS BY

FREDERICK KEELING SCOTT.

MUSIC BY

LAWRANCE TAYLOR.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 5s.; paper boards, 7s.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 2s. each. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 3s.; paper boards, 5s. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

* THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 6s.; paper boards, 8s.; cloth, gilt, 10s. Abridged edition for Church use, 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 2s.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s. Choruses only, 2s.

* THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 2s.

* PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. 3s.

* OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 5s.

* OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 2s.

* ZION'S WAYS DO LANGUAGE. Soprano Solo and Chorus, from "Gallia" (Motet). CH. GOUNOD. 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The Music composed by J. BARNEY. 4d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonised by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The Music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price 2d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 4d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 8d.

* MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 1½d. *Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICTITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ..	4d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in E flat) ..	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in G) ..	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in D, Unison) ..	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ..	4d.
BLAIR, HUGH (in G) ..	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES ..	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (in D) ..	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (Shortened Form) ..	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G) ..	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ..	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ..	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G) ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) ..	2d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (in E flat) ..	3d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (No. 2, in F) ..	2d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (in F, Chant Form) ..	6d.
FROST, PERCY H. (in D) ..	3d.
GADSBY, HENRY (in G, Chant Form) ..	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D) ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form) ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison) ..	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C) ..	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) ..	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants) ..	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D) ..	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat) ..	2d.
ILIFFE, FREDERICK (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) ..	2d.
LEMAKE, E. H. (in B flat) ..	4d.
LOYD C. HARFORD (in E flat, Chant Form) ..	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, shortened form) ..	2d.
MACPHERSON, CHARLES (in F, rhythmic setting) ..	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each ..	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) ..	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) ..	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) ..	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) ..	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (in E flat) ..	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) ..	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (in B flat) ..	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F) ..	2d.
SMITH, BOYTON (in A flat) ..	3d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B. ..	2d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) ..	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS ..	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER ..	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1d.) ..	2d.
STAINER, J. J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS ..	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ..	2d.
STEWART, C. HYLTON (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ..	4d.
BARNBY, J. ..	2d.
FOSTER, JOHN ..	2d.
SMITH, MONTEM (two settings) ..	2d.
TURLE, J. (two settings) ..	2d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings) ..	2d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in G) ..	3d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in A). Short and simple ..	3d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in G) ..	6d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in C) ..	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C) ..	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (in D). Shortened Form ..	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D) ..	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) ..	2d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

FOR VOICES AND ORGAN

With Short Interludes, giving opportunity for Meditation.

THE WORDS BY
THE REV. E. MONRO
SET TO MUSIC BY

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT ..	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ..	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ..	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ..	4d.
STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ..	4d.

Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, REV. J. B. ..	4d.
GOUNOD, CH. ..	3d.
HOYTE, W. S. ..	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) ..	6d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) ..	4d.

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price Two Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.

String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s. String Parts, 15s. 6d.

Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s.

Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

THE CRUCIFIXION A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.

Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100; Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS.

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.

Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three Shillings. Paper boards, 4s.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs.

BY

E. V. HALL, M.A.

Price Tenpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

VIA DOLOROSA A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

Suitable for the Seasons of Lent and Passiontide.

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Three Shillings. Paper boards, 4s.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 4s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Five Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. Vocal parts, 1s. each.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire

MUSIC FOR LENT, EASTER,

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN A—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE IN E	... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS IN A	... ..	3d.
JUBILATE IN A	... ..	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E, FOUR VOICES	... ..	1s.
THE STORY OF THE CROSS	... ..	2d.

ANTHEMS.

LEAD ME IN THY TRUTH	... ..	3d.
130TH PSALM, "OUT OF THE DEEP" }	... ..	1s.
TENOR SOLO AND CHORUS	... ..
AMEN—CARD	... ..	1d.
IF WE BELIEVE—EASTER ANTHEM	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
THE GOOD SHEPHERD—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD	... ..	4d.

The Composer will be pleased to send specimens of any of the Compositions on this advertisement.

Address, 36, Christ Church Road, Norwich.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W. 1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"SHEPHERD OF MEN"

CANTATA BY JOHN S. WITTY.

A Musical Treat. Send for Sample.

Your Choir must not miss the opportunity for rendering this attractive work.

ALSO

"THE SCENE ON CALVARY"

BY F. W. PEACE.

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCTION.

Staff Notation, 2s. Sol-fa, 1s

We allow 25% Discount to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

BROADWAY AVENUE, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s. Words with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.

Words only, 1½d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE

SEASON OF LENT

IN SIX SCENES.

- |                              |                            |
|------------------------------|----------------------------|
| 1. The Traitor at the Table. | 4. The Mockery on Calvary. |
| 2. The Denial in the Place.  | 5. The Shadow of Death.    |
| 3. The Unjust Condemnation.  | 6. The Holy Sepulchre.     |

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

THE REV. J. C. BLISSARD, M.A.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

(Op. 37.)

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Paper Boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SHORT AND EASY SETTING OF

THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

IN THE KEY OF E FLAT.

1. KYRIE.
- 1a. RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS.
2. CREDO.
3. SANCTUS.
4. BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT.
5. AGNUS DEI.
6. GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 35.)

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only (for congregational use) price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE

CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE

WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

Suitable for Mission, Village, and Parish Choirs, or for a Congregation without the aid of a choir.

ARRANGED BY THE

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

STABAT MATER

SET TO MUSIC

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY

GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

ENGLISH VERSION

BY

W. G. ROTHERY.

Price Three Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH.

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S
DARK PRISON

(CHRIST LAG IN TODESBANDEN)

AN EASTER CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH.

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

ENGLISH WORDS BY PAUL ENGLAND.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

SET TO MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE
REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHANN SEBASTIAN

BACH

His Life, Art and Work. Translated from the German
of J. N. FORKEL, with Notes and Appendices by
C. SANFORD TERRY, Litt.D. 21s. net.

"Very much more than a re-translation of an old work which was previously translated very imperfectly into English a hundred years ago. . . . It contains material for a history of Bach criticism from the beginning of the 19th century until the present day, and incidentally suggests directions which future research may follow."—Times Literary Supplement.

"Dr. Terry has done English musicians considerable service. . . Two-thirds of what Dr. Terry magnanimously describes as 'Bach by Forkel' is Bach by Terry. My only complaint is that there is not still more Terry."—New Statesman.

BACH

CONSTABLE &amp; Co., LTD., 10-12 ORANGE STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCES of this Devotional work have taken place at the University Church, Oxford; SS. Philip and James, Oxford; the Abbey Church, Bath; St. Mary's, Liverpool; the Parish Church, Bradford, Nuneaton, Southsea, Banbury, Chipping Norton, Kidderminster, Biggleswade, Kettering, Oldham, Tackley, Blackburn, Adderbury; St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare, Bideford, Oldham (Australia), &c.

VIA CRUCIS

(THE WAY OF THE CROSS)

A SACRED CANTATA

DEPICTING THE THREE LAST SCENES OF

THE SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH.

FOR

TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS.

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Choir and Congregation.THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERICK ILIFFE, M.A.,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.; Organist to the University of Oxford.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. net. Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 1s. 4d. net.

Words only, complete, for the use of Congregation, 1½d. each, or 11s. 3d. per 100.Words complete, with addition of Hymn Tunes, 3d. each, or 22s. 6d. per 100.Orchestral Parts, for Strings, Two Horns, Two Trumpets, and Drums may be hired of the Publishers.

LONDON: A. WEEKES &amp; Co., LTD.,

14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. 1.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

---

SELECTED EDITION.

---

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

---

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.

HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.

On Wings of Delight.

In C (Compass, A to C), E flat, and F.

Price 2s. each.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

MAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).

Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.

Price 1s. 6d.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.

Price 2s. each.

J. ST. A. JOHNSON—

Sandy the Piper.

In E (Compass, C sharp to F sharp).

The Fiddler.

In A minor (Compass, C to F).

Price 2s. each.

W. McNAUGHT—

The Piper.

In D (Compass, D to D) E flat, and F.

Price 2s.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.

Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

There's a pathway thro' the heather.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to F), E flat, and F.

Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

(SET II).

1. One golden thread.
2. The spirit of the Spring.
3. What part of dread eternity.
4. The blackbird.
5. The faithful lover.
6. If I might ride on puissant wing.
7. Why art thou slow.
8. She is my love beyond all thought.

(SET I2).

1. When the dew is falling.
2. To Blossoms.
3. Rosaline.
4. When the sun's great orb.
5. Dream pedlary.
6. O World, O Life, O Time.
7. The sound of hidden music.

The Series is now completed by the publication of the above Sets.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

POT-POURRI. A Cycle of Fragments or Verses by s. d
Isobel Scott Bremner ... .. 6 0

SONGS.

LOVE OUTWITTED. Phantasy Duet for Voice and
Pianoforte ... .. 2 0
MARCH MORNING. For High or Low Voice each 2 0
TWO SONGS: "Absence" and "Serenade." For
High, Medium, or Low Voice ... .. each 2 0

PART-SONGS.

FAIR, SWEET, CRUEL. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 4d.
HUNTING SONG. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 4d.
SWEET KATE. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 4d.
THREE SLEEPS. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 2d.
WHEN LAURA SMILES. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES)

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY
H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY
SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

As musical compositions get more complicated, elaborate, and difficult of execution, it is increasingly incumbent upon the composer to present his meaning in a manner that will help the performer to grasp that meaning with as little trouble as possible.

The object of this book is to point out to composers, arrangers, and editors, the difficulties they often unwittingly place in the path of executants, and to suggest various means of obviating those difficulties.

Price . . . . Three Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FREE ON APPLICATION!

— TO —

ORGANISTS AND CHOIRMASTERS
VOCALISTS
PIANISTS
VIOLINISTS
ORCHESTRAL PLAYERS

THE FEBRUARY ISSUE OF
"THE MUSICAL MIRROR"
THE ILLUSTRATED MUSICAL MONTHLY

Contains special feature articles dealing with the above interests, a Portrait Sketch of Mr. Landon Ronald, and articles of general interest, written in a bright and chatty manner, with illustrations also an eight-page Musical Supplement.

 A specimen copy of this issue will be sent, post free, to all Musicians sending a post-card to:

THE CIRCULATION MANAGER,

"THE MUSICAL MIRROR," 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. 2.

MR. GEORGE ROBEY

discovers "Cathedral" Mandoline Strings

Cathedral

ACRIBELLE
VIOLIN STRINGS

A genuine super-quality
Silk String.

A revelation in performance

TRY THEM

The Craftsman says: Mr. George Robey is making London laugh with his little Johnny Jones at the Alhambra. One of the outstanding features of the sketch is Mr. Robey's playing of the Mandoline, and it will come as news to many to hear that the fine tone of the instrument is due to our Cathedral Mandoline Strings. Here is a letter from Mr. Robey expressing his keen appreciation of Cathedral quality.

"I have had an opportunity of testing your Cathedral Mandoline Strings, and I find they are excellent. I shall, therefore, not use any other as long as your strings keep up to the mark of excellence of those you were kind enough to send me along."

Cathedral and Summit Strings are the finest quality strings on the market to-day, far better than foreign brands, and lower in price. Their uniform high quality helps you to get the best out of your instrument.

Send for Sample String.

Actual trial is the best way to prove the quality of Cathedral and Summit Strings. We will send a sample string for your Mandoline, Banjo, or Violin. State the exact string required, and write to-day.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams: "Cello, Finspark, London."

Telephone: North 2594

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

Introduced in 1906, and now installed in nearly a thousand Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. A thoroughly efficient, soundly constructed mechanical blower, designed on approved scientific principles. The absence of complicated parts makes the "DISCUS" a trustworthy machine, and with ordinary attention it can be used for years without requiring repairs.

The "DISCUS" dispenses with manual labour, which, for this class of work, is often difficult to obtain, and is instantly available for use. It requires remarkably small space, is very quiet in action, not affected by damp, and can be adapted to any type of organ, large or small. We guarantee its efficiency, and can undertake to give satisfaction no matter how modest the equipment desired. A "DISCUS" Installation is always a sound financial investment.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

ILLUSTRATED PARTICULARS FREE.

WATKINS AND WATSON

SOLE MAKERS OF THE "DISCUS" BLOWER

Designers and Manufacturers of Hydraulic Engines, Gear, and Fittings for Organs for the past thirty years.

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N. 1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S STANDARD WORKS FOR CHORAL SOCIETIES.

EDWARD GERMAN MERRIE ENGLAND

(Concert Version)

Vocal Score, 5s. net cash.
Choruses only, 2s. net cash.

EDWARD GERMAN A Princess of Kensington

(Concert Version)

Vocal Score, 4s. net cash.
Choruses only, 1s. 6d. net cash.

EDWARD GERMAN TOM JONES

(Concert Version)

Vocal Score, 5s. net cash.
Choruses only, 2s. net cash.

HUBERT BATH The Wedding of Shon Maclean

(Scottish Rhapsody)

Vocal Score, 3s. 6d. net cash.
Choruses only, 2s. net cash.

ORCHESTRAL SCORES and BAND PARTS of the above may be had on hire.

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
NEW YORK, MELBOURNE, AND SYDNEY.

NEW WORKS BY GUSTAV HOLST.

HYMNS FROM THE RIG VEDA.

FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

OP. 24.

GROUP I.

1. USHAS (Dawn).
2. VARUNA I (Sky).
3. MARUTS (Stormclouds).

GROUP II.

4. INDRA (God of Storm and Battle).
5. VARUNA II (The Waters).
6. SONG OF THE FROGS.

GROUP III.

7. VAC (Speech).
8. CREATION.
9. FAITH.

Price 3s. net cash each Volume.

For these songs Gustav Holst has sought inspiration in the most important work of the ancient sacred literature of India, the wonderful religious lyrics dedicated to the Vedic Gods. The composer's settings clearly show that he knows how to deal with occult subjects, which none but a musician of his earnestness and profundity could hope to transcribe successfully into musical terms.

FOUR SONGS FOR VOICE AND VIOLIN.

Words from "A Mediæval Anthology," by kind permission of Miss Mary Segar and Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.

OP. 35.

1. "JESU SWEET, NOW WILL I SING TO THEE."
2. "MY SOUL HAS NAUGHT BUT FIRE AND ICE."
3. "I SING OF A MAIDEN THAT MATCHLESS IS."
4. "MY LEMAN IS SO TRUE OF LOVE."

Price 2s. 6d. net cash.

Once again Gustav Holst has chosen words that are wonderfully adapted to his individuality and, what is more, he has found for them a medium of expression that is as uncommon as it is appropriate. Instead of the usual pianoforte accompaniment, the voice is here supported by a single violin, a device that gives these four songs a kind of primitive feeling which is exactly suited to the delightful mediæval poems. In spite of the limited resources of the two parts, they are so admirably handled and blended that they give an astonishing impression and completeness, of fulness even, and they are so convincing as to make any other musical treatment of these poems unthinkable.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE STRIFE IS O'ER

ANTHEM FOR EASTER

Hymn 135, A. &amp; M.

(By permission of the Proprietors.)

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE RATHBONE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY, CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro moderato. maestoso.

OPRANO. The strife is o'er, . . . the bat-tle

ALTO. The strife is o'er, . . . the bat-tle

TENOR. The strife is o'er, . . . the bat-tle

BASS. The strife is o'er, . . . the bat-tle

ORGAN. f maestoso.

Ped.

done; . . . Now is the Vic-tor's tri-umph won, the Vic-tor's tri-umph done; . . . The tri-umph, the Vic-tor's tri-umph done; . . . Now is the Vic-tor's tri-umph won, now is the Vic-tor's tri-umph done; . . . Now is the Vic-tor's tri-umph won, the tri-umph

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

( 1 )

Poco più mosso.

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

won ; O let the won ; O let the song of praise be sung, O won ; O let the song of praise be sung, the song . . of praise, the song of won ; O let the song of praise, O let the song of praise be sung, Poco più mosso. ♩ = 144.
senza Ped.

song of praise be sung, O let the song of praise be sung. Al - le - lu let . . . the song be sung, the song of praise be sung. Al - le - lu praise be sung, O let the song, the song of praise be sung. Al - le - lu
O let the song . . of praise be sung. Al - le - lu Moderato e molto sostenuto.
poco rit. mf
poco rit. mf
poco rit. mf
poco rit. mf
poco rit. mf
Ped.

ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu - ia ! Al - le - lu sempre cres. f cres. e poco rit.
sempre cres. f cres. e poco rit.
sempre cres. f cres. e poco rit.
sempre cres. f cres. e poco rit.
sempre cres. f cres. e poco rit.
( 2 )

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

a tempo.
- ia!

a tempo.
- ia!

a tempo.
- ia!

a tempo.
- ia!

a tempo. din. mf Sw.

(Solo ad lib.)
mf. espress. tenderly. cres.

Death's mightiest powers have done their worst, . . . And Je - sus hath His p espress. mf cres.

Poco più mosso. poco rit.

Let shouts of praise and joy out - burst, let shouts of praise and joy out -

f poco rit.

Let shouts of praise and joy out - burst, let shouts of joy out -

f poco rit.

Let shouts of praise, let shouts of praise and joy out -

f poco rit.

foes dis - persed; Let shouts of joy . . out -

Poco più mosso. f Gt. poco rit.

senza Ped.

Moderato e molto sostenuto.

sempre cres.

Moderato e molto sostenuto.

mf sempre cres.

- burst. Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le -

mf sempre cres.

- burst. Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le - lu - - ia ! . . Al - le -

mf sempre cres.

- burst. Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le -

mf sempre cres.

- burst. Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le - lu - - ia ! Al - le -

Moderato e molto sostenuto.

mf sempre cres.

Ped.

Musical score for "Al - le - lu - ia!". The score is written for voice and piano. The key signature is B-flat major (two flats). The tempo markings are cres. e poco rit. and a tempo.. The dynamics markings are cres., poco rit., dim., and Sw.. The score consists of five systems. The first four systems are for the voice, and the fifth system is for the piano. The piano part includes a grand staff with treble and bass clefs.

brightly. (Solo ad lib.)

mf On the third morn He rose a - gain, f Glo - rious in ma - jes - ty, .

Gt. Sw. f

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

Allargando.

poco rit. Più mosso.

glo-rious to reign,

glo - rious in ma - jes - ty,

glo-rious to reign ;

O let us

O let u
Più mosso.

Più mosso.

Allargando.

poco rit.

Moderato e molto sostenuto.

poco rit.

$$= m_j$$

O let us swell the joy - ful strain. Al - le - lu

O let us swell . . . the joy - - ful strain. Al - le - lu - - swell the joy - ful strain, the joy - - ful strain. Al - le - lu . . .

swell.. the strain, the joy - - ful strain. Al - le - lu -

Moderato e molto sostenuto.

poco rit.

 $m_j$

senza Ped.

Ped.

sempre cres.

cr'es.

sempre cres.

cr'es.

_sempre_cres.

6728.4

-sempre cres.

res.

sempre cres.

cr'es.

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

poco rit. a tempo.

lu ia! Lord,

poco rit. a tempo.

lu ia! Lord,

poco rit. a tempo.

lu ia! Lord,

poco rit. a tempo.

lu ia! Lord,

poco rit. a tempo. dim. p Sw.

a tempo. legato. pp

Lord, by the stripes that wound ed Thee..

a tempo. legato. pp

Lord, by the stripes that wound ed Thee..

a tempo. legato. pp

Lord, by the stripes that wound ed Thee..

a tempo. legato. pp

Lord, by the stripes that wound ed Thee..

a tempo. legato. pp

Lord, by the stripes that wound ed Thee..

a tempo. legato. pp

Voices alone.

mf cres.

From death's dread sting Thy ser vants free,

mf cres.

From death's dread sting Thy ser vants free,

mf cres.

From death's dread sting Thy ser vants free,

mf cres.

From death's dread sting Thy ser vants free,

mf cres.

f Ped.

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

Più mosso.

That we may
That we may live, and sing to Thee, that
. . . That we may live, and sing to Thee, may live, . . . and sing, may live, and . . . That we may live, and sing, that we may live, and sing to Thee, Più mosso.

f cres.

poco rit. Moderato e molto sostenuto.
live, and sing to Thee, that we may live, and sing to Thee Al - le - lu - . . .
poco rit.
we may live, and sing to Thee, may live, and sing to Thee Al - le - lu - . . .
poco rit.
sing to Thee, that we may live, and sing, and sing to Thee Al - le - lu . . .
poco rit.
that we may live, . . . and sing . . . to Thee Al - le - lu - . . .

Moderato e molto sostenuto.
poco rit.

THE STRIFE IS O'ER.

sempre cres. cres.

ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia!

sempre cres. cres.

ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia!

sempre cres. cres.

ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia!

sempre cres. cres.

ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia! Al-le-lu-ia!

poco rit. molto cres. mf ff

lu-ia! A-men.

poco rit. molto cres. mf ff

lu-ia! A-men.

poco rit. molto cres. mf ff

lu-ia! A-men.

poco rit. mf molto cres. ff

lu-ia! A-men.

poco rit. mf molto cres. ff

lu-ia! A-men.

Doppio Ped.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 937.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

MARCH 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN COATES.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW

PRECEDED BY

AT THE ABBEY GATE - STANFORD

CONDUCTED BY THE COMPOSER.
(First time of performance.)
MR. PLUNKET GREENE.

GOOD FRIDAY, MARCH 25, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Organ ... Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy has been quite full for the past year, no intending Students whose names are not already on the waiting list can be admitted before September.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Duke's Hall, Wednesday, March 2, at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, March 15, at 3.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, March 5 and 19, at 3.

GORING THOMAS SCHOLARSHIP FOR COMPOSITION.
Last day for entry, April 6.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

THE MIDSUMMER TERM will commence on MONDAY, MAY 2.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 19th, 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., June-July, October-November, and March-April. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 11th (Irish entries May 4th), 1921.

Written papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or "School") can be obtained on application. Price 1s. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Owing to the large influx of new pupils, it is desirable that those wishing to enter for the Summer Term should make application without delay.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

TWO BACH ORGAN RECITALS will be given by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, Mus. Bac., Oxon., at All Saints' Church, Norfolk Square, Paddington, W., on Saturdays, March 12th and 19th, at 3.30 p.m.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... .. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.)
SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS, LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches: Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3,
and 117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examination in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations,
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom APRIL. Last day of entry, March 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellow (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at modern fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 1111.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI. Victoria, Cap. cxxxii. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.)
FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London
at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

May 12th, 1921.—LECTURE: "Reminiscences of Musicians I met." By Dr. T. J. SALWEY, J.P., LL.D.

COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM. Tenor and EVENING SERVICE.

Bronze MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOCTORS' CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, W. 11, 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Terms, &c., address: MR. E. H. BIBI
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manc.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS undertakes to develop for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Com.
£3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MODERN PIANO STUDY

SIGHT READING. INTERPRETATION.
FINGERING. MEMORIZING.

Few pianists reach real proficiency in every branch of Piano Playing without special tuition, and it is to those (both amateur and professional) who wish to excel that the Gillett methods are so valuable. The Gillett Course will improve your playing to a remarkable degree, and many fully qualified musicians have written saying how greatly they have benefited by the lesson on chords, on octaves, on interpretation, or on the many other subjects which the course covers. Students often remark even after a few lessons, "You have put soul into my playing." Mr. Gillett is at present able to accept a small number of pupils for private lessons, and can interview prospective students between 3 and 5. Those unable to take personal lessons are invited to write on the attached coupon for terms and particulars of the Correspondence Course of Mr. Gillett's method. • This Course comprises twelve postal lessons, and during the whole period of tuition Mr. Gillett's advice and personal direction is at the command of the pupil. A post card or the attached coupon will bring you terms and full particulars.

MR. CHARLES A. GILLETT (Studio M.T.)
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
NEW BOND STREET, W. 1.

Please send me Booklet of Modern Piano Study.
(Mention when writing what pieces you can play, or if you are a beginner, please say so.)

Name.....
Address.....

WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL

OCTOBER 3-9, 1921.

PRESIDENT: LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

COMPETITIVE SECTION to be held at MOUNTAIN ASH
MONDAY and TUESDAY, October 3rd and 4th, 1921.

CHORAL TEST-PIECES.

MIXED VOICES—FIRST CLASS (minimum number of voices, 6).
PRIZE, £250 and a Silver Shield.

- (a) "Song of the Silent Land" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
† (b) "The Shower" ... .. Edward Elgar
(c) "When lo! by break of morning" ... .. Gerrard Williams
(a) to be accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra.
(b) and (c) to be unaccompanied.

MIXED VOICES—SECOND CLASS (minimum number of voices, 60). PRIZE, £50.

- (a) Nocturne ... .. Granville Bantock
(b) "In Celia's face my Heaven is" ... .. Julius Harrison
(a) and (b) to be unaccompanied.

MALE VOICES—FIRST CLASS (minimum number of voices, 60).
PRIZE, £100 and a Silver Cup.

- (a) "Sea Fever" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
(b) "War Song of the Saracens" ... .. Granville Bantock
(a) and (b) to be unaccompanied.

MALE VOICES—SECOND CLASS (minimum number of voices, 40). PRIZE, £30.

- "Song of the Bards" ... .. Julius Harrison

FEMALE VOICES. PRIZE, £30.

- (a) "Night in the desert" ... .. Cyril Jenkins
(b) "Shadowy Woodlands" ... .. Roy Thompson

CHILDREN'S CHOIR. PRIZE, £15.

- "The Child and the Robin" ... .. E. T. Davies

Adjudicators—

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, CYRIL JENKINS, ERNEST NEWMAN.

Hon. Secretaries—

D. T. EVANS and L. J. DAVIES, Festival Offices, Mountain Ash.

† Published by NOVELLO & Co., Ltd.

All other pieces published by CURWEN & SONS.

GLASGOW MUSICAL (COMPETITION) FESTIVAL

MAY 4TH TO 14TH.

Syllabus, price 6d.; post free, 7d.

From Festival Office, 187, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow.

EDINBURGH MUSICAL (COMPETITION) FESTIVAL

SECOND FESTIVAL—21st to 28th MAY.

SEVENTY-EIGHT CLASSES.

Mixed-Voice, Male-Voice, and Female-Voice Choir
Church Choirs, Junior Choirs, School Choirs, Action-Song
Singing Games, Operatic Quartets, Vocal Solos, Duets, a Quartets, Brass Quartets, Wood-Wind Trios, Instrumental Solos and Duets, Chamber Music, Elocution.

ADJUDICATORS:

GUSTAV HOLST. II. S. ROBERTON.

ERNEST NEWMAN. MRS. TOBIAS MATTHAY
(Elocution)

Syllabus from Secretary,

27, GEORGE STREET, EDINBURGH.

HULL AND DISTRICT MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

MAY 26th, 27th, 28th, 1921.

The Syllabus is now ready, price, 7d. post free.

Apply, S. H. CLARK, Hon. Secretary, 29, Coltman Street, Hull.

A. E. MILGROM'S

CONCERT AGENCY.

itals, Concerts, &c., arranged. Over 400 artists for Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Orchestral Conductors, Instrumentalists, Accompanists, Entertainers, Concert Parties in Costume.

terms, please write—

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY.

ne: Mayfair 4123. 324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

by sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

by becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

by forming New Branches.

by assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE IDEAL METHOD

OF

MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND LENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

THE TECHNIQUE

HAND DEVELOPMENT FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

LECTURE DEMONSTRATION will be given by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, at The London Academy of Music, Princes' Street, Whitehall Square, W., on THURSDAY, MARCH 17th, 1921.

Air to be taken at 8 p.m., by

SPENCER DYKE, Esq., F.R.A.M.,

Lecturer and Examiner of the Violin at the Royal Academy of Music.

ADMISSION FREE.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of photos, 4s.

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION.*DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.)

DIPLOMA PAPER WORK.

Mus.Doc., Mus.Bac., A. and F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. and L.T.C.L.

COURSES ALSO IN

MUSICAL APPRECIATION,

GENERAL MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE,

SINGLE SUBJECTS

(HARMONY, FORM, TEACHING, Etc.).

For Terms, List of Successes, &c.—

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

THREE ARTS CLUB BUREAU.
CONCERT DIRECTION.

RELIABLE ARTISTS FOR ORATORIO AND BALLAD
CONCERTS.

19a, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.

Mayfair 2000.

GUIDE TO A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

BY

A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

"A handy brochure; gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq., L.R.A.M.

Any many others.

3, THE CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, HESSLE, E. Yorks.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL :

ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

MATRIC. SUCCESSES - 55

Jan. 1921.

Entries - - - 3

Successes - - - 3

A.R.C.O. Jan. 1921

Entries - - - 3

Successes - - - 2

A.R.C.O. - F.R.C.O.

£10 will be paid to any Student of M.C.C. who gains the Lafontaine or Turpin Prize.

MUS. BAC.—Guarantee Course—

One Fee. Matric—Final

£10 will be paid to every Student of M.C.C. who passes—

MATRIC—July, 1921.

1st M.B. Sept. 1921.

Final. Sept. 1922.

Special Combined Course

L.R.A.M. (1) Pianoforte Teaching
(2) Singing

Guarantee Courses

A.R.C.M.

A.T.C.L.

A.Mus. T.C.L.

Revision of Compositions

Songs

Pianoforte and Organ Music

Cantatas

Operas

— NEW COURSES —

(1) Psychology as applied to the Teaching of Music.

(2) Choirmastership and Choral Technique for Conductors.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS GERTRUDE MACAULAY (CONTRALTO).

Concerts, Oratorios, &c.
Free for Good Friday.
23, Howley Place, London, W. 2.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

FREDERICK GAY

TENOR.

Oratorios, Lenten Music.

75, Wiltshire Road, Brixton, S.W. 9.

Telephone: Cen. 7121.

JOHN MACLENNAN,

TENOR.

Address: 185, Loughborough Road, S.W. 9.

Telephone: Brixton, 1702.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

RALPH WILLIAMS (L.R.A.M.)

(TENOR).

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

ALBERT HARRISON (BASS).

"THE CRUCIFIXION," "OLIVET TO CALVARY," &c.
"White Heather," Brentfield Road, N.W. 10.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

IVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now emobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte laying and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

G. HUBI-NEWCOME

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart"
"rotère," "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti),
"A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize), "Pedlar of reams" (Dr. Herbert Brewer).

DAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS. 1,300 Songs sold. 350 Adaptations.

Libretti for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &amp;c.

"OVERBURY," FURZE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, ong with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly ermitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

45, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.

Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Corresp. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. B. (Trin. Coll., Dublin),

prepares, by post, for Theoretical Exams. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 380 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),

specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland

Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte, &c. My recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, to, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and
R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

LR.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

PRINCIPAL TENOR REQUIRED, for West-end Nonconformist Church. Two Sunday services and rehearsal. Salary £20 to £25 per annum. "H. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

BASS WANTED, Croydon District. Communicant. £20. Apply, "R. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Dewsbury Wesleyan Church. Usual conditions. Salary £75. Applications, giving full particulars, with copies of two or three recent testimonials, to be sent to Joseph Myers, 12, Hope Street, Dewsbury.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Wesleyan Centenary Church, Boston. Organ: Three-Manual. Large choir. Apply, stating age, experience, qualifications, salary to Rev. W. H. O. Lake, Buxton Villa, Boston.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Thurso Parish Church. Salary £55. Good field for tuition. Apply, James Grant, Janet Street, Thurso.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, for St. Mary's, West Kensington. Light duty. State salary expected. Write to Vicar, 1, Glazbury Road, W. 14.

WANTED immediately after Easter, Organist and Choirmaster for Parish Church, Dormansland, Surrey. Apply by letter, stating salary and with copies of three testimonials, Vicar, Dormansland, Surrey.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for the Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, Croydon. Apply, Mr. W. H. Evans, "Athol," Sandy Lane, Wallington.

YOUNG ORGANIST offers his services as ASSISTANT, voluntarily. W. London Nonconformist Church preferred. Write, with particulars to "Pedrick," 30, Mall Road, Hammersmith, W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas: in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIANO PEDALS, with Stool, FOR SALE. £5. L. C. Putland, 35, Broadhurst Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 6.

WANTED, Second-hand VIOLIN and CASE. Approval. Organist, Rumsey Place, Crickhowell, S. Wales.

FOR SALE.—BALLADS for Setting to Music. Edith Smallwood, 25, Marine Parade, Worthing.

SONGS and MUSIC placed by Experts. Terms for stamp. Cambridge Music Agency, 8, Henrietta St., W.C. 2.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY CHANT BOOK, in black and red cloth. Sixteen copies, perfect. What offers? Bawran, 76, Princess Street, Bishop Auckland.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive Song, "THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass G (or low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED

SUITE

FOR STRINGS.

FROM THE DRAMATIC MUSIC OF

HENRY PURCELL

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY

ALBERT COATES.

SCORE.

Price, Two Shillings.
String Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LAMIA

SYMPHONIC POEM

FOR

FULL ORCHESTRA.

BY

DOROTHY HOWELL.

FULL SCORE.

Price, Twenty Shillings.

String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, MS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PRELUDE

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

COMPOSED BY

J. PIRRIE WHIMSTER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

ON December 23, at Corstorphine, Midlothian, after a long illness, DAVID B. JOHNSTONE, aged sixty-eight. A man beloved. A voice-trainer, choirmaster, and lecturer justly honoured. Mr. Johnstone was an outstanding figure in the world of music. Absolutely sincere in his art, and of magnetic personality, his influence was great. Or shall we not rather say, is great? For the Divine fire which lighted for him the path to ideals of rare musical refinement, surely burns more strongly in him now, and we trust that from behind the veil, he may still be permitted to help and influence, as he did so eagerly when visible.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY
CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.
(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

This Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

March 2nd, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.March 9th, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte Recital by Miss MAUD AGNES WINTER.March 14th, at 5 p.m.—Special Students' Recital of Violin Music.March 14th.—Last day of Entry for the April Diploma Examinations; also for the next open competition for Scholarships.March 21st, at 5 p.m.—Pianoforte Recital by Mr. C. BUDDEN MORRIS.March 23rd, at 3 p.m.—Lecture Recital by Dr. C. W. PEARCE. Subject: "18th Century Sonatas—England, Italy, and Germany." Illustrations by the Lecturer and Mr. L. PRCSKAI.March 24th, at 3 p.m.—Chamber Music and Choir Concert, and selections by the Dramatic, Operatic, and Elocution Classes, including, by kind permission of R. D'Oyly Carte, Esq., a performance of "Trial by Jury," at the Steinway Hall.March 30th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. (Sole Lessees of the Hall, Chappell & Co.)

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

A REMARKABLE NEW PIANOFORTE WORK

BALLAD BY CYRIL SCOTT

(BASED ON AN OLD TROUBADOUR SONG).

Price 3s. net.

"The ballad, which had its first public performance anywhere on this occasion, is a set of three variations—variations that pass one into the other without pause; it is a stupendous achievement."

A. WALTER KRAMER, in Musical America,
November 27th, 1920.

Complete List of CYRIL SCOTT'S Compositions post free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH'S PORTRAIT CLASSICS

AN EDITION OF 15,000 BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS has just been ordered from a firm of printers in London using about TWENTY-FOUR TONS

of British made paper and finding work for many weeks for printers, bookbinders, &c. This is the Edition originally edited by Liszt, and quite recently again corrected minutely by Edward Watson, the well-known editor of all the works being issued by the Blind Institute. We claim our Beethoven to be the most correct and best produced edition in the world—easiest to read, easiest to play from.

We are just producing at an Art Institute at Nottingham

50,000 COVERS,
with a specially designed new title-page for the evergreen Rendezvous Piano Solo, Song, &c., &c.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Sevcik Complete Violin Method; Beringer Piano Tutor; Wickins's Sight-Reading Piano Tutor; Ward's "EASY" Piano Tutor; Hemy's Piano Tutor, &c.

TO THE TRADE.—When Collectors answer works as out of Stock, this does not necessarily mean that they are out of stock at the Publishers.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CONCERTO

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 85).

FULL SCORE.

Price Forty-Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MARCH 1 1921

PARRY AS SONG-WRITER

By H. C. COLLES

(Continued from February number, page 88)

II.

There are two kinds of creative artists: those who change the externals of their personal styles so completely in the course of their careers that subsequently their lives appear to be a gradual emergence from the chrysalis condition into a full and free vitality, and those who, early discovering a species of technique well suited to their ideal expression, continue to pursue it without conspicuous outward change. The latter have the advantage in their early days. Their troubles may come later when they find either that their contemporaries have moved away from them, or possibly that they themselves have something new to say for which they cannot command the language.

But there is compensation even for this. The artist of the constant type has the satisfaction denied to the other of looking back over his life's work and finding his sign-manual on every part of it. It was his real self from the first; he can be well content that it shall remain his real self at the last. That was Parry's case, and the choral 'Songs of Farewell' are the final testimony to it.

Such a song, however, as 'When the Sun's great Orb' gives evidence of struggle. It woke in him a vision of the cataclysm of all creation. He summoned his powers of emphatic declamation, and conceived a bold scheme of brooding rhythms and hard unyielding chord progressions such as belong to the prophetic passages of the cantatas (cf. 'Voces Clamantium'). Here he is on his own ground:

Ex. 1.

When the seas have turned to briny ice, And ev'ry-thing both beast and human shall have perished.

Later, as the imagery of clashing thunder, the 'earthquake's awful roar,' and 'the din of all hell's fury' accumulates, he adopts one device after another, abandoning each without exploring its possibilities of development very far. He hastens towards the climax of the last trump, and in his haste makes use of the following semiquaver passage:

Ex. 2.

fury,

The trumpet's

This is bad. The diminished 7th chord, too constantly his resource in moments of crisis (as whole-tone chords are to a younger generation of composers), is at its worst when combined with these facile chromatics. It is the fury of the stage thunderstorm—just a noise, to make the flesh creep; but only a very unsophisticated flesh will respond to its stimulus. Still he is content with it as a point of detail, and hurries on to the clangour of the trumpet's tones over a figurate chord of A. Breaking off from this, the culmination is reached in the following:

Ex. 3.

For the res-ur-rec

Granted that after what has passed one would be thankful to have the word 'Resurrection' ended on any other chord than the, to him, inevitable diminished 7th, one can still admire the bold sweep of the phrase, and that D flat chord, coming where it does, is an inspiration.

The ending of the pianoforte part is quoted in the above example because here—for once, at least—Parry satisfies the ear with a series of bold discords not founded on the diminished 7th but on the augmented triad, the strident chord which has provided the basis for the greater part of modern harmony. The two strong accents (marked †) show him on the threshold of a new harmonic kingdom, from which, however, he deliberately turned away.

Here if anywhere, then, we see Parry at the moment where, the old methods failing him, he is unable to grapple with new ones, and the doubt expressed about this song is simply whether the impulse is sufficiently strong to compel the hearer to forget the incidental weaknesses. A great singer might achieve it, but it would be by focussing attention on the declamation of the poem to the exclusion of the instrumental detail. The great song, however, is one which will bear the closest scrutiny of all its features.

'What part of dread Eternity' (Book XI.), a song designed on as large a scale as 'When the Sun's great Orb,' survives the test in every particular. It is built on a peculiarly firm musical plan. The greater part of the material is evolved from a questioning motive announced in the pianoforte part:

expressive melody which dominates the whole centre of the song. It seems inspired by the reference in the words to 'the world's yearning tide':

Throughout there is nothing desultory or casual. When a new figure of accompaniment is wanted it is evolved spontaneously from what has gone before. The whole is subject to a purely musical logic, even to the point of combining the principle of recapitulation with fresh developments in the last stanza:

This is developed symphonically until at the end of the first verse it expands into a new and intensely

At the same time its relevance to the mood and temper of the poem is never in doubt. Though presumably a late song it has the same quality of close contact with the words which is characteristic of the early settings of Shakespeare's Sonnets, and reassures one against the suggestion, to which 'When the Sun's great Orb' gives colour, that 'Perry' lost something of his grip in the later songs. These two are the outstanding big songs in the new volumes.

But while the big songs repay study and lend themselves to analysis, the little ones often have less definable qualities which so seize one as to confirm Ben Jonson's encomium of 'small proportions' and 'short measures.' 'If I might ride on puissant wing' is a case in point. To quote a phrase of it would be simply to court misunderstanding. The reader might say, 'There's nothing much in that.' But sing it and play it through without trying to 'make' anything of it, above all in strict time (the singer is entrusted with a poco rit. at two cadences), and if you have found the right time at the start the delicate thread of rhythm on which the whole song is hung will prove to be just strong enough. Anything more would be too much. The poise is perfect. There is nothing else at once so slender and so complete in these volumes, though 'Dream Pedlary' (Beddoes) approaches it nearly. Here, however, one may more safely quote :

Here is more of positive feature ; the shimmer of the semiquaver arpeggio, the swaying pairs of quaver chords and other figures serve to bind the apt vocal phrases together and contribute to the rare atmosphere of the whole.

A third type which contrasts equally with both those already described is represented by 'Rosaline' (Thomas Lodge). Here the song swings along by sheer impulse of tune, and the instrument acts only in support of the voice :

There is no subtlety of word-painting, no peculiar point of harmonic colour, no meticulous care even for declamation. The tune takes precedence of all other considerations and its exuberance is itself the song.

The evidence of the manuscript, the handwriting, and the age of the paper show without date that 'Rosaline' is among the earlier songs. Knowing that, it would be easy to say that one could have guessed it without the knowledge. But if the guess were based on the character of unsullied youth and freshness which pervades every phrase, then the date of 'The Spirit of the Spring' (A. P. Graves) could be decided on the same principle ; and if it were based on the style which places tune first, then the well-known setting of Blake's 'Jerusalem,' written during the course of the war, might be mistaken for an early song by those who did not know the circumstances. If, on the other hand, one notices that a certain meditative seriousness grows on Parry's mood with advancing years, as it certainly does, then there would be the temptation to put 'O world, O life, O time' very much later than 1870:

Ex. 9.

The truth is that if we recognise a young and an old Parry we have also to realise that both were there all his life, that age came early and youth stayed late. The youth in him is one of the dearest remembrances of all who knew him in his later years. The age in the boy appears in a number of different ways—in the expression of countenance in a certain photograph of him taken as a member of a football team at Eton, and in some words in his diary written on the first discovery of Bach's 'Forty-Eight':

It is to me a companion in travel, my comfort in trouble, my solace in sickness, and my sharer of happiness.

This from a boy of sixteen!

With such evidence one hesitates to date any of his work from internal evidence; rather one endorses his own reply when a friend listening with him to a revival of an early composition remarked on his change of style. 'Same chap,' was his comment.

(To be continued.)

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from February number, page 97.)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

II.—FRANCO ALFANO

During the symphony concert season at San Remo in 1912 the Maestro Panizza presented Franco Alfano's Symphony in E. It was well received, and was published in 1910, but has not been performed again. And yet the work had, and still has, real merit and meaning as a bold and unusual symphonic essay. However, it was then thought that Alfano—his first success having been made as a composer of opera—neither could nor should be anything else than a worker in that genre. In fact the Italian public is accustomed to divide musicians into two distinct bands—composers of opera, and the so-called 'pure' musicians; and it is only among the former that Italian composers are expected to shine and surpass the foreigner. The symphony has been regarded by us an exotic plant which does not thrive in a southern climate, and we have accepted the performance of foreign symphonies only as a matter of duty, and therefore without sympathy or emotion.

Our public (which, in a musical sense, has a Peter Pan-like difficulty in growing up) having thus paid its respects to symphonic music, repairs to the theatre and gives itself up to the fascination of vocal melodies with the joy of a youngster who, on his release from school, rushes to the garden and jumps over the flower beds to prove the elasticity of his legs. It is a public that regards with indifference, almost with hostility, the composer who is not content to serve up yearly the national dish: historical or realistic melodrama, adventure in mediæval dress, or scenes from the crimes sheet.

This, more or less, is what has happened to Alfano. He has been almost reproached for having disappointed the expectation of those who imagined him already seated in state on the Olympus of modern Italy's operatic composers. Frankly, although 'Resurrection' is an early work and written under the influence of Giordano's then recently published 'Fedora,' rather than under that of Tolstoi's book, it nevertheless reveals the individuality of a composer who has ideas of his own and unhesitating power of expressing them. In Alfano's first work, written when he was twenty-five, there is more than one page which stands out in clear contrast, for the spirit which inspires it, with the known work of the composers of what was then the young school.

Examining more closely the vocal part, that famous terzo rigo to which as a rule the words are appended with incredible indifference, we perceive that the composer gives a good deal of thought to the value of the words, and aims not only at the most scrupulous observation of the verbal accent but, what is more important still, at focussing the essential meaning of the text.

There are moments in 'Resurrection' when one can entirely suppress the instrumental part and hear the drama live in the song.

Fleeting signs of a new and robust experiment in 'Resurrection' unfolded and defined themselves in 'L'Ombra di Don Giovanni' (the 'Principe Zilah' is transition work, and need not be considered). This opera follows up and consolidates the experimental work in the Symphony, without, however, leaving that lyric field in which Alfano is happiest.

What chiefly strikes us in it is the quantity of music. On every page Alfano has given us waves of music, transforming everything, interpreting everything; he has made a music drama out of a poetic drama—first music and then drama, or both together, but without compromising each other. It is comprehensible that public and critics should have found themselves somewhat bewildered by this opera which transported them bodily into an essentially musical atmosphere, feeding them for three long Acts on music—sound, rhythm, harmony, tone. The man who said that in 'L'Ombra di Don Giovanni' there is musical matter for three operas, was quite right if he was thinking of the poverty of the music in contemporary opera.

We find Alfano's drama interesting precisely on account of its musical value. We are struck by the beauty of the words; the lyric beauty of all the instrumental parts, which almost seem to be the innumerable voices of a fervid soul; the perspicacity and balance of the symphonic tissue, which reveals a master of orchestration, rich in new ideas, and to whom passion suggests bursts of colour, admirable force of expression, and highly effective rhythmic restlessness. In our brief quotation from the opera:

Ex. 1. VANNINA.

Ve - di, . . son tu - a!

Sno - da i miei ca - pel - li!

mf pp tr Ped.

the reader will note also the unresolved chromaticism which is a favourite device of the composer, and which gives a peculiar warmth to the whole.

'L'Ombra di Don Giovanni,' performed at the Scala at Milan on April 3, 1914, has since been revised by the author, and awaits a final judgment; whilst the new opera 'Sacùntala' is about to be performed for the first time in America. In 'Sacùntala' the lyric features predominating in Alfano's work reach the highest degree—it is one long song. From the first note to the last he lays bare his soul, eager to express itself, richly and joyously, in every way possible to song. Not a single page gives us the impression of interrupted verve or of the intrusion of a passionless will. There is freshness and inspiration even in the frequent passages where the composer is pausing before a lyrical flight. They are not mere perfunctory 'marking time,' e.g.:

Ex. 2. Mosso (dolce e triste). SACUNTALA.

Ed è for - za par - tir dir - ti ad - di - o di - read - dio al - le ca - re com - pa - gne del - l in - pp (dolce.) dim. pp pp boco

rall. molto.

fan - zia al - la fo - re - sta . . . Che fu

Sra.

a tempo.

tut - ta mi - . . . &c.

pp

The Symphony in E, together with the more recent Quartet, reveals another characteristic of Alfano's music, i.e., its purely contrapuntal side, which is sometimes pushed to extremes. Here the composer's vision is always realised by lines, never by colours; the design predominates absolutely, sometimes undisputedly. By 'design' it is not of course meant the application of a cold, formal counterpoint, but something vigorous and vibrating, like the elastic web of the composition. In this respect the Neapolitan musician has to some extent anticipated the present day movement against impressionism and against harmonic exaggeration, and in favour of a greater constructive and plastic solidity. But when this tendency in Alfano becomes, as in some parts of the above-mentioned works, almost a mannerism, then we cannot help thinking of the school of Leipsic, of Reger, and Jadassohn, whose pupil Alfano was for a time. We are reminded of his fairly lengthy sojourn in Germany, and of his familiarity with the late 18th century German school influenced by Brahms and Bruckner.

In such passages, which neither succeed in disturbing the harmony of the composition as a whole nor in dimming the beauty of many other pages, we are aware of an almost voluptuous desire to add stroke to stroke, to elaborate themes and fragments of themes—in short, to do brain work on thematic material which would gain in nobility and freshness by being left plain and unadorned. This complacency of the technician is only slightly suggested in the charming 'Suite Romantica,' which, individually, has pages full of real poetry, where a skilful use of popular Neapolitan melodies gives a sense of pleasing freshness; it becomes tedious in the Symphony and in the Quartet. In the Symphony, moreover, it causes a certain prolixity, which the composer has since obviated by suppressing the third movement and cutting down the last.

This said, it would be unjust not to recognise the merits of this work which, in its lyrical and musical conceptions, not only demonstrates the composer's worth but is a notable oasis in the desert of Italian symphonism. When we remember, too, that it was written in 1909, i.e., when modern Italian symphonic works were few, and those few were obsequiously modelled after the German classics, its defects, which are moreover defects of exuberance, seem of small importance.

From the orchestration of the Symphony to that of 'L'Ombra di Don Giovanni' and of 'Sacùntala,' the progress is remarkable. These last two operas show us an Alfano more serene, more master of his own talents. The verve is not diminished, but has become more limpid, more pure. The instrumentation of 'Sacùntala' bears comparison with that of the last operas; it is admirably suited to the character of the work, and accompanies the lyric wave, nourishing and strengthening it continually.

It is clear that the instrumental elaboration sprung from the same source as the song: slight and transparent where the song was like a gossamer web floating in the air, vigorous and robust when human pathos uttered cries of desperation. All this without exaggeration (as is sometimes the case in the score of 'L'Ombra'), continually simplifying and pruning until only the most expressive and significant voices remain.

From this simplification of means spring the 'Poems of Tagore,' in which the voice follows a mellifluous emotional line (not mere recitative, as is usually found), reminding us, in its pure and classical gesture, of the 'Chanson de Bilitis.' The 'Quartetto d'archi,' on the other hand has, perhaps, more affinity with the old symphony than with the later works. Essentially contrapuntal, it is entirely different from the quartet of the modern French school (which may be considered rather as an impressionistic suite), and springs directly from the quartets of Beethoven and from those of Brahms, while possessing all the flavour of new, living harmony, and a vigour of action which makes it in perfect accord with the rest of our composer's works. The composition is one of those which enthrals us by the sole virtue of sound. It has no wish to signify anything, to describe anything; it has no need of a sentimental plot or of comment. It is only music—pure music, essentially physical in its contents, able to transport the soul of the listener to the world of his dreams and of his wishes, and so speaking to us the true language of the indefinite and the unknown.

The Symphony and 'Sacùntala' are the two works which reveal in their elements the strong individuality of Franco Alfano. The one is the creation of a formidable dialectician whose thoughts are demonstrated and united in an edifice which is both stern and pleasing; the other is the unrestrainable lyricism, the song born of the heart without effort: the passion which bursts forth, the life which makes itself felt, with its struggles and ideals, and reaches transfiguration through the labour of love.

To understand the importance and beauty of Alfano's theatrical work, it is necessary to compare it with that of his contemporaries. To bracket Alfano with Mascagni, Puccini, and their followers is to commit not only an injustice but also a serious critical error, an error which is equally apparent whether we are considering the integral conception of music drama or the musical essence and the language which expresses it. Besides, it is sufficient to think of the libretti set to music by Alfano to be persuaded of the nobility of his intentions and of the earnestness with which he prepares to clothe a poem in music.

Giving up all hope of finding a poet to his satisfaction he finished by writing the 'Sacùntala' libretto himself, after having set to music that of 'L'Ombra,' the poetical merits of which are undeniable. We are now decidedly in another field: the work of art applies itself to the expression of conceptions of clear human and philosophical meaning. The poet aims, one might ay, at distilling life and transforming it into poetry, drawing out the elements of the eternal beauty which pulses in its every gesture for him who knows how to gaze on it with a single eye.

Exuberance—the word is on the lips of many when speaking of Alfano, but perhaps vivacity would be a better term. It reveals itself in his speech and manner and gesture (we must not forget that Alfano was born at Naples, or rather at Posillipo), and is therefore naturally found also in his other tongue—music.

For him this universal language is compacted of thought, and gesture, and contrast, but in neither is it pleonastic or redundant. Under the flow of the musical words there is always a living substance; under the semblance there is always a body. His speech is always interesting; it fascinates us, and does not even leave us time to think. We are transported into the very heart of music, wrapt in that sort of musical atmosphere where there is no longer room for the intellectual faculties. We find our lost youth with all its impulses and dreams, our actual life vibrating and ever stretching out to the future, in its eager race towards the ideal which beckons us and flies from us—the drama that we live every day, between the dream which is our joy and the reality which is our torture.

By way of biographical data, it may be added that Alfano was born at Naples in March, 1877, and studied at the Conservatoire, under de Nardis and Serrao. He is now director of the Liceo Musicale Rossini at Bologna, having been appointed two years ago. Besides the more important compositions already mentioned, Alfano has written many small works for pianoforte (published in Germany between 1890 and 1900); 'Miranda,' an opera in two Acts after Fogazzaro (1896); 'La fonte Euschi,' two Acts (L. Illica) (1898); the ballets 'Napoli' (1900) and 'Lorenza' (1901); three short lyrics on poems by Luppis (1920); and three lyrics, 'Dormiveglia,' on poems of Lipparini, not all finished. All his published works are in the Ricordi Edition (Milan), except the Quartet published by Pizzi & Co. (Bologna).

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from February number, page 93.)

VI.—MISCELLANEOUS CHORAL PRELUDES

Before discussing the choral preludes collected and revised by Bach in his later years, it seems reasonable to glance at the large number of miscellaneous examples. So many are obviously of early date that on chronological grounds they should be dealt with before such mature collections as the Preludes in the 'Clavierübung' and the set of eighteen revised (and in some cases probably written) at Leipsic.

These miscellaneous pieces are in Books XVIII. and XIX. of the Novello edition, the former containing forty, the latter twelve, with four sets of variations, the last being the wonderful canonic movements on 'Vom Himmel hoch.'

A fair number of these preludes have little interest for us to-day, and had Bach lived long enough to finish his work of selection we may be sure that he would have discarded the weakest of them. Some are merely chorales plainly harmonized, with florid interludes between the phrases—the kind of thing we find in some of our own hymn-books of a generation ago, and even of fairly recent date in Germany. These arrangements were used for accompanying, and we may look on them with a kindly eye because we know that they were the primitive forms to which we owe some of the most beautiful things in organ music. The development from the primitive type to the highly-wrought movement may easily be traced in Book XVIII. On page 58 we have a choral set forth in the plainest way, with a pause on the final note of each phrase, followed by a silent rest during which the player flourished. On page 53 is an example slightly more florid in its harmonization, and with the flourishes written out. The examples on pages 70 and 74 carry us a stage further. The former begins plainly, but in the phrase following the double-bar the melody is treated in the coloratura style, the decorative scheme being then dropped. The example on page 74 contains the flourishes between the phrases, but makes a move in the direction of homogeneity by its florid harmonization. In its third phrase, too, the melody is lost sight of owing to the soaring exuberance of the right-hand part. Observe also that two phrases of the melody are used in combination, the fourth having for bass an imitation of the first. Now turn to the Prelude on 'In dulci júbilo,' on page 61, and see this primitive interlude form developed and used with such freedom and vigour that the result is one of the most effective of Christmas postludes.

The two Preludes on 'Liebster Jesu' (pages 70 and 71) show us the coloratura style attempted and almost accomplished. In the first we see it adopted for one phrase only, in the second it is carried out consistently save for the beginning of the second phrase, where Bach is content to leave the first three melody notes plain save for a mordente. Though not quite perfect, this little piece has a tender feeling of its own. For a perfect specimen of this method, we may take the Prelude on 'Herr Jesu Christ, dich zu uns wend' (page 50), and note how the simple tune grows into a long-drawn melodic line of beautiful delicacy.

The possibilities of a brief statement of the tune, with very slight decoration, are well shown in the exquisite little piece on 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen,' on page 53. Its appeal depends on several factors—the perfect harmonization, the interest of the accompanying parts, and the broken utterance obviously evoked by the word 'verlangen.' It is a melancholy fact that there are hundreds of organ students wasting precious hours over the least successful of Bach's fugues, and at the same time unaware of such gems as this. Every young player who has reached the Eight-short-preludes-and-fugues stage should surely be working at the pick of the shorter and easier choral preludes as well. He will soon exhaust the somewhat slender interest of the Eight, whereas he will never be too old or sophisticated to respond to the appeal of such music as :

Ex. 1. Adagio.

Book XVIII. contains some varied examples of chorale fugues, the best being a pleasant and obviously youthful one on 'Allein Gott' (page 7); the curiously impressive piece on 'Durch Adam's Fall' (page 28), called a fugue, but really a prelude in the Pachelbel style, with polyphony vocal rather than instrumental; the naive and genial movement, for manuals only, on 'In dich hab' ich gehoffet, Herr' (page 59); the intimate little 'Das Jesulein' (page 24); and, far and away the best of all, the fine fugue on the 'Magnificat,' the subject being the first half of the Tonus Peregrinus. It is worked out in four parts on the manual until the ninety-seventh bar, at which point the plainsong is delivered in long notes by the pedals, the result being a fine Coda of thirty-nine bars. Schweitzer calls this work 'sublime'—a description that seems over-generous until we hear it played at a good pace (the minim as unit) with a fine body of diapason tone, and for its final section a pedal reed able to speak through the full organ. Failing this latter requirement, the pedals should be played in octaves. The movement is rather difficult at the required pace, and is a good study in four-part manual playing.

The Prelude on 'Ein' feste Burg' (page 30) is interesting chiefly because it is one of the few cases in which we have definite registration indicated by Bach himself. The piece was played by Bach at the reopening of the Mulhausen organ, the renovation of which had been carried out under his supervision. He began the prelude with the curious combination of bassoon 16-ft. in the left hand and sesquialtera in the right. The latter must be understood to signify a group of stops. Spitta says that, in accordance with Bach's specification, 'a tertia had been put into the Brustpositiv, with which, in combination with several other stops, a good full sesquialtera tone may be obtained.' At bar 20 he went over to the Rückpositiv with both hands, the Pedal here making its first entry. From bars 24-32 he returned to the two manuals with which he began, both no doubt strengthened in order to balance the pedal, which here has a couple of phrases of the choral, probably brought out by the improved posauene. Bars 33-39 were played on the third manual, and with three semiquavers at the end of bar 39 (not 37 as Schweitzer suggests), Bach went with both hands to the Rückpositiv, with manuals coupled, the full organ coming on at the fiftieth bar. Despite its thinness, the prelude is a spirited affair well worth playing to-day, though we cannot reproduce Bach's registration, owing to our three-manual organs rarely possessing a Choir of the right power or brilliance. The registration suggested in the Novello edition is a good substitute for the original, except in bars 39-50, where the Choir solo with Swell accompaniment seems rather tame; the final ff would be led into better by Great diapasons.

Good short pieces of a solid type, excellent for voluntary purposes and capital studies of moderate difficulty, are the Preludes on 'Der Tag der ist so freudenreich' (page 26), 'Christum wir sollen loben schon' (page 23), 'Gottes Sohn ist kommen' (page 42), and 'Gelobet seist du' (page 39).

The long setting of the Te Deum (page 44) may be left severely alone. It was evidently written to serve as an accompaniment, and is hopelessly tedious as a solo. It has some good five-part harmony, often of a modal character, and is interesting in that it shows us Bach accompanying with an eye on the programme. Reference to the angelic host brings forth the usual scale-passages and the supplicatory verses have the customary chromatic background.

Some of the Preludes for manuals alone are too good to be neglected, both as studies and on their musical merits. The best is the lengthy Fantasia on 'Jesu, meine Freude' (page 64), a beautiful piece of three-part writing. The concluding section in 3-8 time is different in character from the rest, and is based on a little motive from the fine chorus 'Death, I do not fear thee, in the Motet on the choral. The reference seems to be to the words 'He that reigns will rend my chains.'

Of the three pieces on 'Ach Gott und Herr,' the second and third repay study. The former is a closely-packed page of ingenuity, and not without appeal as music; the second is a poignant canon on a minor version of the tune. How square-toed and tedious the Pachelbel form of prelude may become is well shown in 'Ich hab' mein' Sack Gott heimgestellt' (page 54). The fault is partly that of the tune, which hangs so much round a few notes that it cannot stand the test of being repeated and augmented. Bach does his best, but the tune beats him. He scores a point in bar 20 page 55, however, by giving us on the fourth beat a very modern harmonic touch:

Bach here hints at a progression very popular with modern composers. In this form:

made more enigmatic by the C $\sharp$  being called B $\sharp$ , and by the doubling of the G $\sharp$ , it is the basis of a good many delightful passages.

The Prelude on 'Nun freut euch' (page 80) is an appropriately joyous expression of the text of the hymn ('Rejoice now, Christian souls'), and if we play it at recitals we should make it clear by a programme note that the piece has nothing to do with the Advent hymn to which the tune is invariably sung in England. The Prelude may be played as a Trio, but is perhaps better with both manual parts played on Great f, with 16-ft., 8-ft., 4-ft., and 2-ft. diapasons, provided we have an 8-ft. pedal reed strong enough to make the choral stand out. The effect is very brilliant and festive. Readers who were present at a pianoforte recital given a few years ago in London by Leo Ornstein, the self-styled 'futurist composer,' will remember his playing of a transcription of this Prelude—a very dazzling affair he made of it.

Two delightful settings for manual only are the Preludes on 'Allein Gott' on pages 5 and 11. The former is headed 'Bicinium,' an old term for any short two-part composition. The right whirling effect of the left-hand part is got only when the piece is played at a high speed. The suggested  $\text{♩} = 84$  is on the staid side:  $\text{♩} = 104$  is better, and gives the left hand a fine bit of exercise. The Prelude on page 11 is a flowing three-part treatment—a valuable study in polyphonic playing and an attractive piece of music.

The Prelude on 'Embarm' dich mein,' and the second of the two pieces on 'Christ lag in Todes Banden,' have been mentioned in a former chapter.

Only one more number in Book XVIII. calls for notice—the great five-part prelude on 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon,' a movement that appears to have been written in Bach's prime. Griepenkerl tells us that it does not exist in the autograph. In Krebs' manuscript book it appears coupled with the four-part version which Bach included in the set of eighteen preludes he put together at Leipsic. The two movements in Krebs' book are headed, 'Vers 1, a 5 con 2 Clav. e dopp. Ped.' 'Vers 2, alio modo a 4 con 2 Clav. e simp. Ped.' Both are very similar in material. The five-part version is one of the finest double-pedal studies imaginable, besides being a beautiful piece of music. The pedal stops should be of 8-ft. pitch, and if they are of string quality so much the better. Flute-tone is apt to become vague at the bottom of the keyboard unless pointed by the addition of 4-ft. Such an addition would be out of place here, so 'cello tone is the telling quality we should aim at. We may then play the two left-hand parts on the Choir or Great, with 8-ft. flute or lieblich, the melody being given to a soft reed. Here is the opening phrase of the choral:

Why bother about purely technical studies in double pedalling when there are such works as this waiting to be played? The organist who can go easily through the eighty bars of 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon' is ready for anything of the kind, and will, moreover, have in his répertoire a piece he will not easily outgrow.

Book XIX. need not detain us long, as some of its contents have already been discussed in the first article of this series. The volume opens well with two splendid pieces on 'Valet will ich dir geben'—the tune familiar in England through its association with 'All glory, laud, and honour.' The first of the pair shows us the Pachelbel method at its best. Bach had evidently come to the conclusion that the plan of announcing a choral melody line by line, unaccompanied, and then proceeding to treat each line fugally, is apt to become both disjunct and monotonous unless the tune is a short one. Here he binds the whole long movement together by episodic matter, and the announcement of the various phrases is saved from the usual thin effect by an accompanying part of an animated character.

Good as this prelude is, its fellow is far finer. The tune is given to the pedals in minims, under a brilliant three-part moto perpetuo. The rapid manual passages are throughout based on the tune, though the connection does not always leap to the eye. Examination will show that the fine blend of unity and variety is largely due to the way each phrase of the tune is anticipated by suggestion rather than by statement—a subtle development of the Pachelbel method. The following quotation gives an idea of the buoyant energy of the music, and at * shows a striking use of the progression quoted in Ex. 3. There it was probably a chance shot: here it is deliberate:

Reger evidently had this prelude at the back of his mind when writing his tremendous 'Jauchz, Erd, und Himmel, jubel!' Not only is the key and the rhythmic scheme the same; twice he makes use of the progression under notice—at the beginning of bar 8, and again in bar 23. The second of these passages is a hammer-stroke worthy of his great model:

Both of these 'Valet will ich dir geben' pieces make a ready appeal, and should be far better known than they appear to be. It may be added that the bustling animation of their 'valet' is expressive of the joy of one whose impending journey is homewards. There is no 'sadness of farewell' at the end of a pilgrimage.

The severe little Prelude on 'Vater unser' (page 12) may be played with any degree of power from p to fff with equally good effect. Its polyphony owes something to the vocal style of the Palestrina school, and is beautifully knit. Note the continuity obtained by the sparing use of full closes.

The three pieces on 'Vom Himmel hoch' differ widely. The first is a vivacious three-voice fughetta for manuals, surprisingly difficult to play quickly and cleanly, and therefore a valuable finger study. The second is a fugue, an early effort, and one of Bach's worst movements, so we may mercifully pass it by. The third is a fine, compact little piece, full of interest and effect, especially in the cross-rhythms of bar 12, where the treble has crotchets, the alto quaver triplets, the tenor semiquaver sextolets, and the bass quaver duplets—a bar to linger over.

The only other preludes of importance are the pleasant piece on 'Wir Christenleut' and the five-part treatment of 'Wir glauben all.' The latter is a double pedal study, less difficult than that on 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon.' There are fewer skips, and the whole, both on manuals and pedals, lies more comfortably. It is a beautiful piece of writing. The best effect seems to be obtained by giving the solo to a flute stop, against a string quartet background. The cadenza should be toned down by a change of solo stop, and we must not allow the demisemiquavers to lead us into rattling it off. The rallentando should begin with the last note of the tune, and the flourish should be elastic and slackening to the end.

The Trio on 'Wo soll ich fliehen hin' is rather tedious. We shall find Bach treating the same idea much more happily in the Schübler set of preludes.

Of the three groups of variations that follow, only 7-11 of those on 'Sei gegrüßet' date from Bach's maturity. This is evident both from the writing in general and from the independent pedal part. The early partitas were for manuals only, with sketchy ad lib. pedal passages. These later variations are well worth playing, especially the melodious and expressive No. 10 and the massive five-voiced No. 11.

Bach's crowning work in the choral variation field is the wonderful set of canons on 'Vom Himmel hoch,' with which this book closes. There is a disposition to regard them merely as examples of consummate craft. They are that, of course, but in all but a few bars they are delightful music as well.

Parry says: 'The musical effect in these variations is subordinated to the display of skill. The third and fourth variations contain some beautiful music: otherwise . . . the tribute to the chorale is rather of the head than of the heart.' He goes on to remark that Bach had so habitually used his skill in the expression of devotion that he had apparently come to regard the skill itself as something sacred—a variant of 'laborare est orare' worth considering. Schweitzer thinks that Bach's only purpose in writing the variations was 'to pack into a single chorale the complete art of canon . . . If this work already shows the tendency to abstract thought that was characteristic of his last years, there is, for all that, a good deal of emotion in these choral arrangements. They are full of Christmas joyousness and cheeriness.' Anything like an attempt to describe the feats of skill shown here would take up far more space man can be spared. Nor is it necessary; without copy the reader would hardly be helped, and with one he is in no need of assistance. Far more important is it to recommend him to play the movements. Only the last will give him much trouble. Not many players will be insensible to the simple tunefulness of the first two, and the calm meditative contentment of the third and fourth—especially the latter, with its long-drawn quasi violin solo. The final variation opens with more skill than attractiveness, but after the introduction of the semiquavers it makes ample amends, and there is music even in the closing tour de force—a simultaneous use of all the four phrases of the tune. Parry's description of this closing passage is very happy: '... ending in five parts, including pedal, with a profusion of little canons in diminution, which seem to be tumbling over one another in their eagerness to get into the scheme before the inexorable limits of formal proportion shut the floor with the final cadence.'

The two books we have been considering are a very mixed bag, so to speak. The proportion of indifferent music is considerable, as is bound to be the case in a posthumous collection. But there are some notable things, and no organist can afford to neglect volumes containing such pieces as the best of those described above—works worthy of a place among the cream of Bach's organ music.

(To be continued.)

THE PRESENT PLACE OF MUSICAL THEORY

By ARTHUR L. SALMON

Twenty or thirty years ago it would certainly have been said that every young musician, especially with a view to composing, should study harmony and counterpoint. At the present moment it might be said almost as unquestionably that these things are negligible. The older rules of harmony are now almost entirely confined to strict part-writing as we find it in Church music. In this they remain still essential, though the modern writer takes liberties that would have horrified Albrechtsberger and Macfarren, and even Prout. The preparation and resolution of dissonances—the phraseology that could even speak of a dominant 7th as a dissonance—seem to us absurd; the terrified avoidance of false relations, and the still greater dread of consecutives, appear to us an excess of pedantic timidity. There were reasons for these laws; they may have been absolutely wise and necessary in the childhood of composition; and they were governed—or, rather, we may say demanded—by a certain correctness of ear that we have either lost or no longer obey. Some such development was clearly foreseen by Helmholtz when he asserted that 'the system of Scales, Modes, and Harmonic Issues does not rest solely upon unalterable natural law, but is at least partly the result of æsthetic principles which have already changed, and will still further change with the development of humanity.' If these words are pressed to their logical extreme they would provide an apology for any excesses of modernism. It is of course a conviction of the conservative in any art that 'æsthetic principles' do not change, and in basis this must be true. The difficulty is in deciding with finality as to what the true æsthetic principles are, and this knotty point affords the everlasting quarrel between conservative and radical, classicist and modernist, romanticist and naturalist, or by whatever names we may classify the disputants. Prout, a man of broad common-sense, though with an unquestionable bias towards the conservative position, was ready to admit that 'examples of very free part-writing may be found in the works of Bach and Beethoven, or even of Haydn and Mozart'—examples that we smile at now when we think of Strauss or Debussy or d'Indy; but he was wise enough to concede that practice must precede theory, which again is an assertion that may justify any extreme of novelty. The inspired composer, he continues, goes first and invents new effects; the theorist must follow modestly behind and make his rules fit in with the practice of the masters. One might suggest that this is too humble a conception of the theorist's position, and that surely it is his function to discover the inalienable and eternal principles of beauty and form to which the greatest master must adhere. Judging from the advance of musical composition, one is forced to conclude that the work of theorists in the past has been chiefly to insist on non-essentials—that harmony, for instance, has always been something retrospective rather than any regulation for future use—and that every step taken has been to render some law of the past inoperative and obsolete. That is to say, the theory-books have been engaged in the notification of things done, but not of things yet to be done; which is as much as to say that they are historic and not didactic, records but not rulings. We may cordially accept that definition, and yet strongly suspect that it would have been strenuously repudiated by certain of the old harmonic law-givers, who imagined themselves to be judges pronouncing sentence rather than counsel stating a case.

It would seem, then, that harmony has never been an exact science, and that it has now come to be a mere chronicling of former methods. The student who masters it to-day masters it to break its rules. It was never based on an undying principle; it could never be more than the servant, not the controller or dictator of beauty. Æsthetic principles, said Helmholtz, change; in this we must believe that he was speaking loosely, though the spirit of what he meant was right. Neither truth nor beauty can change, but our understanding and presentation are constantly fluctuant. That which satisfied in the past does not satisfy now. The essentials of music must remain unalterable until the essential characteristics of humanity alter; yet music to-day claims to be metaphysical, psychological, ethnological, philosophic, and in thus broadening its aims has been compelled to broaden its vehicle. Whether it can actually become any of those things, whether it does not always remain emotional rather than intellectual, need not further be discussed; but it is certain that even for its emotional advance some broadening of means was needed. We demand to-day something that we suggest as atmosphere, a word that indicates rather than defines; and atmosphere as we understand it is elusive, vague, mystical, and is almost entirely a property of the moderns. The old harmonic regulations very scantily provided for it; yet we find it sometimes in Bach, sometimes, perhaps, in Gluck, rarely or never in Handel. The tendency of former days was to express an explicit and not an indefinable emotion; the means used were definite and explicit. It is possible to take almost any work of a century or more since and give a figured-bass presentment of its framework; it would be very difficult and entirely unsatisfactory to figure-bass a page of Debussy or Scriabin or Rebikov. With the ancients the mere figuring would preserve a good deal; with the moderns, practically everything would be lost. It does not necessarily follow that the moderns are the greater—certainly this test would not be enough to prove it; but it does really seem that in emotional suggestion and atmosphere there has been a gain. We find something in Schubert and Chopin that Handel and Haydn and Mozart apparently never dreamed of; and these two, who may in a sense be termed fathers of the modern school, have been followed—in France and Russia and England—by many whose work entirely fails to fit in with the earlier formalities and conventions. One convention that they have wholly left behind is that of harmonic or structural rigidity. Great literary work was done by the Greeks under regulation of the so-called ‘unities’; greater was done by Shakespeare in actual contempt of them. The essential—whether in literature or music—is the individual genius; and even genius is governed by rules, but these are never rules of formality and artifice.

To understand, then, what has been done in the past, and why, it is necessary for us to study the theorists; but as we shall neglect their theories, we may prefer to call them by another name. They give us a history of the past, but cannot legislate for the future. The music to which we listen will present breaches of every rule once held sacred, so that in a measure the text-books are a series of graves and hic jacet. There is a melancholy pleasure in meditating among the tombs, and in this case there may without heartlessness be an added joy, a consciousness of deliverance and escape. But we must exercise our freedom wisely, remembering always that some structure, some regulation, even some harmonic basis, must always be desirable, and that the finest symphonic effects are hardly possible without a full mastery of contrapuntal intricacies. Old systems must not be our despots, but they are often magnificent assistants.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XV.—RICHARD HYGONS

Those who have studied the famous Eton College MS.—which has been so admirably and minutely described by Mr. W. Barclay Squire in Archæologia, vol. lvi.*—have been struck with the beauty of the five-part anthem, ‘Salve Regina,’ by R. Hygons. Yet no details have hitherto appeared as to the biography of Hygons, and the only fact deducible from the MS. is that he lived before the year 1510 or 1515.

As stated in the previous article on Richard Bramston, there is mention of Hygons in Mr. John E. West’s ‘Cathedral Organists’ (Novello, 1899), as the first recorded organist of Wells Cathedral, under the slightly disguised form of ‘Richard Hugo.’ Mr. West, however, did not suspect the identity of this ‘Hugo’ with Hygons, but the ‘Calendar of the Manuscripts of the Dean and Chapter of Wells,’ vol. ii., issued by the Historical Manuscripts Commission in 1914, leaves no room for doubt, and furnishes unimpeachable material for a memoir of this early Tudor composer.

An antiquarian friend suggested to me that probably Richard Hygons was identical with Richard Huchins, who was a vicar-choral of Wells in 1470; but this suggestion cannot stand, because the latter was dead in 1494, and Hygons was certainly living in 1507, as will be seen later.

Richard Hygons studied under Abyngdon, and was Master of the Choristers of Wells Cathedral in 1474. In the Chapter Act Book for 1486-87, under date of May 2, 1487, there is a record of a grant to Richard Hygons, Master of the Choristers, ‘for his life,’ in recognition of ‘his diligence and good service,’ of an increased salary of 26s. 8d. yearly, issuing from a vacant stall.

Hygons was also organist of Wells Cathedral, and in the Chapter Acts there are several references to the organ and the choristers in the closing years of the 15th century.† We learn also that Robert Wydow, Mus. Bac., was installed a canon of Wells on September 10, 1497, and was appointed successor being further admitted a canon residentiary on February 26, 1499-1500.

Evidently the organist and Master of the Choristers of Wells felt the burden of years in 1507, because on July 23 of that year the Chapter issued an order confirming a private arrangement whereby Richard Bramston was to take over the duties hitherto performed by Hygons, receiving 5s. for the half-quarter ending on September 29 ensuing, and 40s. a year henceforth; the said Bramston undertaking to teach the choristers and also ‘to keep and play the organs both in the great choir and the chapel of the Blessed Virgin Mary.’

This arrangement of Bramston as deputy did not last quite a year, as on May 15, 1508, the Chapter appointed John Clausy to the office of Master of the Choristers, ‘to instruct them to sing plainchant and discant.’ By a strange slip the editor (Mr. William Paley Baildon) of the Calendar

* See also an article on Eton College by Mr. F. G. Edwards in the Musical Times for December, 1908.

† In the Chapter Accounts from 1492-93, a sum of 6s. 8d. was paid to the King’s Commissioner ‘not to take away three choristers.’

translates 'ad cantandum et discantandum' as 'to sing, and sing earnestly,' whereas the ordinary meaning of discantandum is 'discant,' in opposition to 'plain chant,' and not to 'sing earnestly.' It is also found as 'in torto cantu,' and has been Anglicised 'diffuse chant' and 'curious singing' in documents of the mid-16th century. In this Chapter Act, John Clausy is ordered not only to teach the choristers, but also to play the organ 'both in the great choir and in the chapel of the Blessed Virgin Mary behind the high altar as Richard Hygons did heretofore.' Further, the said Clausy was to receive four marks from the Clerk of Works of the Cathedral from two vacant stalls, and 'he shall also receive from the escheator all escheats, with the consent of the vicars, so that the vicars non-perpetuated shall have during the life of Richard Hygons the things which yearly accrue. Moreover, he shall have a house of the yearly value of 26s. 8d.'

From the same Chapter Act we learn that Richard Hygons, late Master of the Choristers, had agreed to pay John Clausy out of his fee and portion 40s. a year,' with the proviso that 'after Hygons's death, Clausy shall receive all the fees that Hygons now has.'

By a strange irony of fate both Hygons and Clausy died early in the year following the above agreement, for under the heading of Receipts in the Accounts of Thomas Weston, the Escheator, from Michaelmas, 1508, to Michaelmas, 1509, there is a significant entry: 'Oblations: At the anniversary of John Clausy 1½d.; of Mr. John Hanse, ½d.'; that is to say, the sum of three-halfpence was given as an offering at the burial of John Clausy, and one halfpenny at the burial of Master John Hans, sub-Dean of Wells. The exact date of the death of Hygons is not recorded, but it was probably about the same time as that of the sub-Dean, either in December, 1548, or January, 1509. Certain it is that Hans was replaced as sub-Dean on February 8, 1509, by Reginald West, while John Gye, vicar-choral, appears as organist and choirmaster in 1511, and evidently had been acting as such for some time, as on October 25, 1512, he was given a substantial douceur 'for his good and diligent service to God and St. Andrew, namely, his praiseworthy organ playing and diligent instruction of the boys and choristers.' I take the liberty of thus translating the italicised words 'his praiseworthy organ playing' as more correct than Mr. W. Paley Baildon's reading: 'his musical praises'; for the Latin text is distinctly 'laudibus organicis'—literally 'praises on the organ.' It is also as well to add that no permanent organist of Wells Cathedral was appointed till William Lyde in 1559.

'THE BEGGAR'S OPERA'

BY FRANK KIDSON

As I mentioned in my first article* the tunes used for the verses in 'The Beggar's Opera' number sixty-nine, and all were popular airs current among people of every class.

As melodies pure and simple they are in general excellent and tuneful. It is certainly a fact that the selection has caused the work to sustain a vogue through a century-and-a-half, during which time it formed a stock piece for London and provincial theatres of all classes.

A consideration of the sources of the tunes may be useful. The first scene of the opera opens with Peachum, the receiver of stolen goods, seated looking over his account books. As an excuse for his dishonesty he sings:

Through all the employments of life

Each neighbour abuses his brother, &c.

The air selected is 'An old woman clothed in gray,' a 17th century tune which occurs in two varieties: one, 'Let Oliver now be forgotten' (see 'Pills,' ii., p. 283), and the other which Gay used for his verse. Beside early sheet copies of the music and song, the words alone will be found in 'The Nightingale,' a small song book published at Edinburgh in 1776. They begin:

An old woman clothed in gray

Had a daughter both charming and young,

But she was deluded away

By Roger's false flattering tongue, &c.

The third volume of the 'Dancing Master,' circa 1726, gives the name of the tune as 'Unconstant Roger,' obviously an allusion to the Roger of the song. It is also under this title in Walsh's 'Dancing Master' of the same period.

In the same scene Filch sings:

'Tis woman that seduces all mankind, using the tune 'The Bonny Grey-ey'd Morn.' The nationality of this air is in dispute. It has been claimed as of Scottish origin, but it is more likely to be the composition of Jeremiah Clarke fitted to Anglo-Scots words. It was introduced by Mrs. Willis into a representation of 'The Fond Husband.' The tune appears in print in 1698.

Mrs. Peachum sings 'If any Wench Venus' Girdle wears,' set to the tune 'Cold and Raw.' It is needless to repeat the oft-quoted anecdote in which Queen Mary is said to demand the song, and how Purcell used it for a bass in one of his Birthday Odes—that for 1692. Its original name appears to have been 'Stingo, or Oyle of Barley,' and under that title it occurs in the first edition of Playford's 'Dancing Master,' 1650, and under 'Cold and Raw' in later editions. It was afterwards used as a Catch in Hilton's 'Catch that Catch can,' 1652. The song beginning 'Cold and Raw' is to be found in 'Pills' (second volume). The tune has been used for a variety of songs, and generally with the chorus, 'Up in the morning early.'

Mrs. Peachum's other song is 'If Love the Virgin's Heart Invade.' This is united to a delightful air in minuet form—'Why is your Faithful Slave disdained?' which is also adapted to another air in 'Pills.'

Lack of space compels me reluctantly to skip a number of 'Beggars' Opera' tunes, and I must confine myself to the more famous airs. One of the most popular melodies is 'London is a fine Town,' to which Mrs. Peachum sings 'Our Polly is a Sad Slut.' The tune belongs to a lengthy ballad singing the praises of London. The air is of considerable antiquity and of uncertain origin. It was used in the 18th century as a vehicle for a variety of popular ditties. Polly's first song is the pathetic

Can love be controlled by advice,

Will Cupid our mothers obey?

It was sung to the fine air 'Grim King of the Ghosts,' a ballad tune of about the middle of the 17th century, originally adapted to a song 'The Lunatic Lover.' The whole ballad will be found in Percy's 'Reliques of Ancient Poetry,' vol. ii., 1765. The tune was afterwards used for Nicholas Rowe's poem, 'Colin's Complaint,' beginning 'Despairing beside a Clear Stream.'

* Musical Times, January, 1921.

The next song, sung by Mrs. Peachum and Polly, 'O Polly, you might have toy'd and kissed,' is sung to the old air 'O Jenny, where hast thou been?' The tune is familiar to every school-child to the words 'Golden slumbers kiss your eyes,' verses which were first adapted to the air by William Chappell.

The original tune was called 'May Fair' at the beginning of the 18th century. About this time it was also known as 'The Willoughby Whim,' commencing with 'Oh, Jenny, Oh, Jenny, where hast thou been?' In early Scots collections it is used for the song, 'My mither says I maunna.'

Another of Polly's songs is, 'Oh, ponder well, be not severe.' This is set to the old tune used for the ballad, 'The Babes in the Wood.' Gay did not confine himself to English airs. There are one or two French tunes, and several from Scotland. Among the latter are 'Over the hills and far away,' 'Gin thou wert mine awn thing,' 'Bessy Bell,' 'O the Broom,' and 'The lass of Patie's Mill.' Most of these he got from William Thomson's 'Orpheus Caledonius,' 1726.

One of the most lively tunes in the opera is Macheath's song, 'If the heart of a man is deprest with cares.' This is used to the tune, 'Would you have a young virgin of fifteen years?' This song, by Tom D'Urfey, appears in his play, 'Modern Prophets,' acted 1709. It can be found in his first volume of 'Pills.' Under the name 'Poor Robin's Maggot,' the air is in the second volume of 'The Dancing Master,' 1719. Elderly people will remember it as forming part of the 'Lancers' in Victorian days.

'Youth's the Season made for Joy' has had its meed of popularity. It is set to a pretty cotillon, probably a French one. The song was preceded by a dance, à la ronde, to the same air. Jenny Diver next sings, 'Before the Barn-door Crowing.' This is to the old air, 'All on a Misty Morning,' or 'The Old Man dressed in Leather.' The tune was originally called 'The Fryer and the Nun,' and it is to be found in 'The Dancing Master' from 1650 onwards. The words, 'All on a Misty Morning,' belong to a song, 'The Wiltshire Wedding,' in 'Pills,' vol. iv.

Jenny Diver sings another song in this scene, 'The Gamesters and Lawyers are Jugglers alike.' This air, besides the old title given in the opera score, is known as 'The King's Jig' and 'The Winchester Wedding.' There are sundry versions of the tune. The song, 'The Winchester Wedding,' is in the first volume of 'Pills,' and also in early editions of 'The Dancing Master.'

Lucy's song, 'How Cruel are the Traitors,' is set to the air to Gay's fine song, 'Twas when the Seas were Roaring.' A tune which has attained world-wide popularity, sung by Macheath, is used for the words, 'The First Time at the Looking-Glass.' It first appears in 'A Third Collection of New Songs,' the words by Tom D'Urfey, 1685, as 'The Winchester Christening,' beginning 'The sun had loos'd his weary team.' The tune is good and lively, and it appeared to have been known locally in some part of Scotland as 'The Diel's awa wi' the Exciseman.' Taking the title of this version, Burns wrote his well-known verses to the air.

Lockit's song, 'You'll think ere many days ensue,' is put to a ballad air which seems to have been used on the stage for one of the songs sung by Ophelia in the Mad Scene. Macheath next sings, 'If you at an office solicit your due,' to the tune 'London Ladies.' This song is in 'Pills,' vol. ii., as 'Advice to the Ladies.' Another lively tune is 'How happy could I be with either,' sung by Macheath. The old name of the tune is 'Have you heard of a frolicsome ditty.' This belongs to a song called 'The Jolly Gentleman's Frolick or the City Ramble.' It is otherwise called 'The Rant,' and many long narrative ballads of a humorous character have been sung to it. 'Cease your Funning' has always been a favourite tune from this opera. Harpsichord and pianoforte pieces have been made from it, with an amount of variations. Although the old name of the tune is not printed with the text, yet it belongs to a late 17th century song called 'Constant Billy,' which commences with the words, 'When the hills and lofty mountains and the vales were hid in snow.' The air is in the third volume of 'The Dancing Master,' and in one of Walsh's 'Dancing Masters.'

The next song, sung by Lucy and Polly as a dialogue, 'Why, how now, Madam Flirt,' is set to the old tune, 'Good-morrow, Gossip Joan,' a tune familiar to the school-children of to-day, with revised words. The song, 'Gossip Joan,' is in the sixth volume of 'Pills.' Another song to the same tune of contemporary date is 'Happy Dick,' 'Packington's Pound' and 'Lilliburlero,' both tunes with histories which space will not allow me to deal with, follow.

'I'm like a skiff on the ocean tossed,' sung by Lucy, is put to the air, 'The Happy Clown.' This song commences, 'One evening, having lost my way.' The song is on early half-sheet music, and the words are in 'The Thrush,' 1749. As 'Walpole or the Happy Clown,' it is in sundry editions of the 'Dancing Master,' and it had been used in Ramsay's 'Gentle Shepherd' before Gay employed it in his opera. Lucy's song, 'Come, sweet Lass,' is to a pretty tune with the same first line. As 'Greenwich Park' it is in the 'Dancing Master' of 1698, and the song is in 'Pills.' 'Tom Tinker's my true Love' is used for a song by Macheath, 'Which way shall I turn me?' The song of Tom Tinker is in the sixth volume of 'Pills.' The plaintive air, 'I am a poor Shepherd undone,' is used by Polly for her song 'When my Hero in Court appears.' The tune, under the title 'Hey, ho! my honey,' is in many editions of the 'Dancing Master,' and with the song, as 'The distressed Shepherd,' in 'Pills.' Lucy's song, 'When he holds up his hand,' is adapted to John Barrett's very popular tune 'lanthe, the lovely.' The song and air are in 'Pills,' vol. v., p. 300.

The next song is to the old tune of 'Bonny Dundee'—not 'The Bonnets of Bonny Dundee,' as known to-day. It is another of the many Scots or Anglo-Scots tunes introduced in the opera. It is used for Macheath's song, 'The Charge is Prepared.' The next scene, the Condemned Hold, finds Macheath in fetters and drinking wine. He sings a medley of tunes which include 'Happy Groves,' 'Britons, strike Home,' 'Chevy Chase,' 'Old Simon, the King,' 'Joy to great Cæsar,' and some others, concluding with a very corrupt version of 'Greensleeves,' to the words 'Since laws were made for every degree.'

The fine 16th century air, 'Greensleeves,' has suffered most undignified changes. All its subtle beauty has been stripped off it as it passed downward through the 17th and 18th centuries. Many degraded copies of the tune will be found in 'Pills' united to such songs as 'The Blacksmith' or 'The Brewer,' with the refrain, 'Which nobody can deny.' Country fiddlers got hold of the tune, and the present writer has many of their versions in old manuscript volumes. The concluding air, 'Lumps of Pudding,' sung by Macheath after a dance to the ords, 'Thus I stand like a Turk,' is in the 1716 edition of the 'Dancing Master.' Burns employs the r for his song 'Contented wi' little and canty wi' mair.' I think all will agree, after trying over the sixty-nine tunes in Gay's opera, that no better representative selection of English airs could have been made, and that they are all worthy of preservation.

The flood of ballad opera which succeeded the 'Beggars' not only employed many airs which had been used there, but brought from obscurity many others of equal beauty. Thanks to John Watts' editions the musical antiquary is furnished with many tunes of interest and charm which otherwise would have been lost.

FESTIVAL OF BRITISH MUSIC AT HASTINGS

BY ALLAN BIGGS

A few of our most representative composers foregathered at Hastings in the last week of January to try conclusions with Mr. Julian Clifford's well-equipped orchestra at the Royal Concert Hall. They were engaged in the exposition of their own works, and as each one has done sterling service in his own particular way, the scheme was both interesting and enlightening to the numbers of people who greeted the composers. Percy E. Fletcher, Thomas F. Dunhill, Norman O'Neill, Frederic H. Cowen, W. H. Speer, and Edward German cover a fairly wide field of activity, while several works of Julian Clifford, Howard Carr, and Ernest Farrar further revealed what has been accomplished in these islands. The last-named, whose promising young life was lost in France, was present only in spirit, but he has left us 'The Heroic Elegy,' 'Lavengro' Rhapsody, and Variations for pianoforte and orchestra (played by Mr. Edgar Heap), all of which were interpreted con amore by Mr. Julian Clifford. The share of the popular chef d'orchestre comprehended his 'Coronation March,' 'Lights Out,' and the delightful Ballade in D—a work worthy of inclusion in any Festival scheme.

The lightest element of the week was introduced by Percy E. Fletcher, who conducted the two Suites 'Sylvan Scenes' and 'Rustic Revels,' the Poem and Valse for violin and orchestra (excellently played by Mr. John Davies), and two Bagatelles. Excepting the last, which are really dainty, the composer's contributions might have approached quality but for their admirable orchestration, for each instrument is allotted the work that suits it best, and the tutti balance is masterly. Thomas F. Dunhill, with his lofty ideals and broad sympathies, as a polished phraseology of his own. His Dance Suite for strings well illustrates his turn for lyrical beauty, while there was abundant poetry and romance in the Prelude inspired by W. B. Yeats' 'The King's Threshold,' a work that deserves wide recognition. Sally in our Alley' forms the material for ten well-contrasted and ingenious variations for violoncello and orchestra which suitably displayed Mr. Norman Nuttwell's smooth style and agreeable tone. Some songs from the same pen were very welcome.

A dreamer of dreams and a mystic, Norman O'Neill has the power of expressing in his music the ethereal world in which he dwells. His flights of fancy, intangible though they are, touch a responsive chord in the hearts of the imaginative. The 'Mary Rose' Prelude and the 'Blue Bird' Dances, with their pentatonic type of melody, supported by a rich harmonic texture, are at once appealing and elusive, and their repetition was resolutely demanded. The 'Mary Rose' call continued to haunt the ear with gentle insistence long after it had reached echo-land. A Valse Suite by Coleridge-Taylor, orchestrated by Mr. O'Neill, was heard for the first time in its present form, but it cannot be said to reveal its gifted composer at his best. The magic of Frederic H. Cowen's name was responsible for a full hall. Old favourites as they are, his 'Butterfly's Ball,' 'Phantasy of Life and Love,' 'Language of Flowers,' and 'In Fairyland' Suites have lost none of their inherent freshness and spontaneity. They reveal yet another aspect of the spirit of refined delicacy which characterised the programme of the day before, and so well do they wear that they bid fair to outlast many of our ultra-modern effusions.

W. H. Speer's Symphony in E flat was an acceptable relief from some of the evanescence of the previous five days. The composer, who lives at St. Leonards, was greeted no less ardently than the visitors who appeared; and rightly so, for though a prolific writer, he has never surpassed this Symphony for sheer effectiveness. The first two movements are particularly attractive, their coherent design and agreeable melodic outline investing them with a distinct character of their own. The work's possibilities were realised by orchestra and audience alike, and the composer, who conducted, had an enthusiastic reception. We have had occasion to refer previously to Arnold Trowell's symphonic poem 'The Waters of Peneios,' an intensely passionate and emotional illustration of the Greek legend, conceived in startling and glaring tone-colours and scored with an unusual command of orchestral technique. The same concert introduced Mr. Julian Clifford's gifted son as a conductor. Though still in his teens, he interpreted MacCunn's 'Land of the Mountain and Flood' like a veteran.

A packed house greeted Edward German, whose 'Welsh Rhapsody' made the biggest sensation of the week. In the view of the 'plain man' it is certainly a serious rival of the '1812' kind of thing, in spite of its being infinitely better music. The composer's eminently English trait was delightfully manifested in his 'Nell Gwyn' Dances, 'Richard III.' Overture, and excerpts from 'Merrie England.' Contrasted with these were the fanciful 'Valse Gracieuse' (from the Symphonic Suite), and the distinguished Theme and six Diversions—the latter striking out a line in the field of variation writing which might well be investigated by other composers.

Howard Carr, the last composer to appear, filled the place of Arthur Herve, who was indisposed. There is enough sensationalism, but little subtlety, in Howard Carr's explorations into descriptive regions. Of 'The Carnival of the Elements,' the Procession music from 'The Lilac Domino,' and the 'Three Heroes' Suite, it was the last-named which left the most favourable impression, so realistic is the orchestral version of an air-raid. Throughout the Festival Mr. Clifford's orchestra more than sustained its reputation as an exceedingly capable and versatile body of musicians.

THE LATE GERVASE ELWES AND THE 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS'

In the obituary notice of Gervase Elwes in our February number it was stated that he sang the title-rôle at the first performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' in 1904, whereas the occasion was his own first performance of the part. The work was produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1900, with Mr. Edward Lloyd as 'Gerontius.'

DISCOVERY OF AN ANCIENT HEBREW MANUSCRIPT CONTAINING NEUMS

BY ARTHUR M. FRIEDLANDER

In the Musical Times of January, 1914, an article written by me appeared entitled 'Facts and Theories relating to Jewish Music.' It dealt largely with the ancient Hebrew signs and their similarity to some of the neums, i.e., the mediæval system of musical notation. In the course of the article I mentioned that Mr. Elkan N. Adler had very kindly lent me the oldest known book [printed 1518], containing the rendering of those Hebrew signs into the musical notation known at that period. I asked Mr. Adler if he possessed amongst his unique collection of Hebrew MSS. and books, anything bearing upon the subject of my research work on Hebrew music. Besides the book already referred to and some modern writings, he was able to show me only a photograph of a Maḥser (a Festival Prayer Book), 1525, on which were depicted some signs which he considered were meant to indicate a special vocal utterance by the Cantor. Some considerable time afterwards he showed me a Hebrew MS., and consulted me as to the meaning of the signs contained therein. Before proceeding further it is important to relate that Mr. Adler had found this MS. amongst his extremely valuable Genizah* fragments.

I was soon convinced that the signs in the MS. were neums. Subsequently I consulted Mr. Hughes-Hughes at the British Museum, who kindly referred me to another authority, Mr. Abdy Williams, who not only gave me considerable and valuable information, but also brought the subject of my investigations to the notice of Dom André Monquereau, of the Benedictine Fathers (Solemes), of Quarr Abbey, Ryde, Isle of Wight, the eminent authorities on Gregorian music, who wrote to me as follows :

'I confided the study of the leaf with the neums to three of my brethren. One of them has some knowledge of Biblical Hebrew. On returning me the leaf he took care to tell me that he would not guarantee the transcription, but would only suggest it, before permitting musicians to place the neums under the different syllables. Your knowledge of the Hebrew language is able to supply what there is defective and indistinct in this essay.

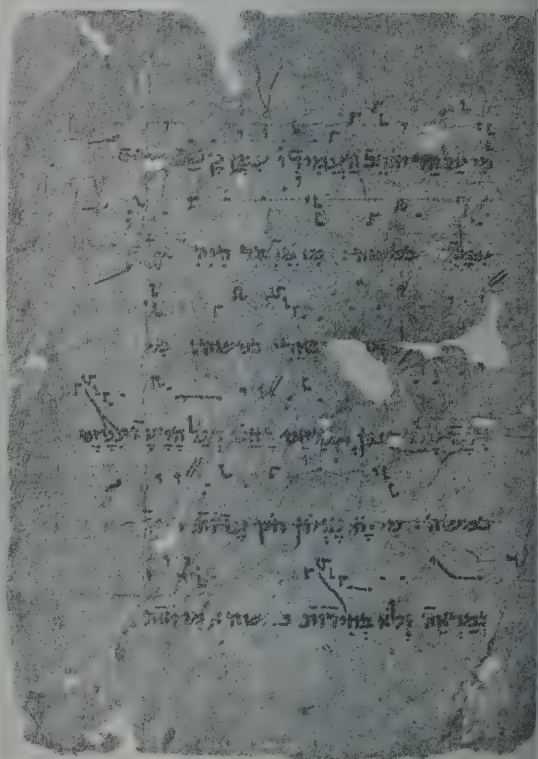

'Two others of our fathers have worked on the neums. Although they worked separately, they both arrived at the same musical transcriptions for the first nine lines of the document.'

As a result of this investigation of the Hebrew MS. the date assigned to the music is the end of the 12th or 13th century. Moreover, so far as I am aware this is the only Hebrew MS. containing neums that has been discovered.

* Genizah (lit., hiding or hiding-place). The storeroom or depository in a synagogue; a cemetery in which worn-out and heretical or disgraced Hebrew books or papers are placed. A genizah serves, therefore, the two-fold purpose of preserving good things from harm, and bad things from harming. A passage in the Talmud (Shab. 115a) directs that holy writings other than the Hebrew and Greek languages require 'genizah'—that is, preservation. The discovery by Solomon Schechter, on May 13, 1896, of a fragment of the original Hebrew of Ecclesiasticus drew so much attention to the genizah whence it came that the term 'genizah' is now applied almost exclusively to the hoard at the old Synagogue at Fostat, near Cairo. This was a church dedicated to St. Michael until the conquest of Egypt by Chosroes, 616, when it became a synagogue. In 1888, and again in January, 1896, E. N. Adler visited the synagogue, and brought with him many fragments.

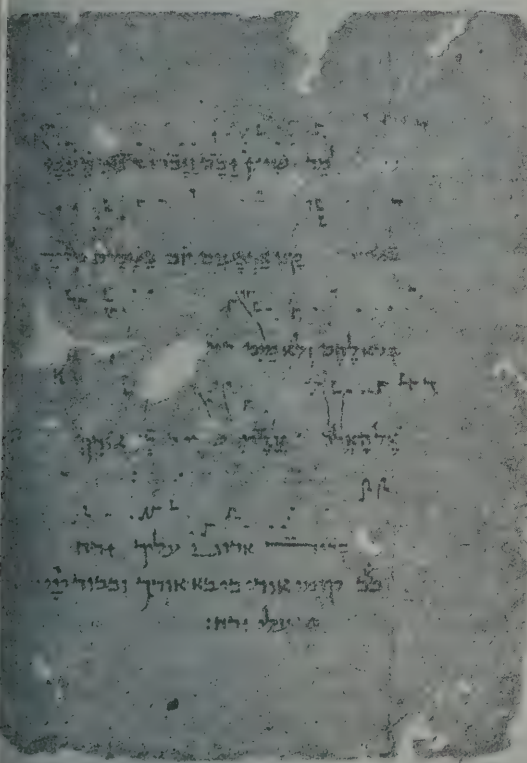

Regarding the Hebrew text, Mr. Adler gives the following version in an Appendix to his forthcoming Catalogue of MSS. printed by Cambridge University Press. The fragment consists of a poem, the acrostic of which points to Amr ibn Sahal as the author. Several of his compositions are to be found in the Genizah, and he lived in the beginning of the 11th century. Following the poem is a quotation from Isaiah lx. 1. He attributes the poem for us either for Pen ecost or Simhath Torah (Rejoicing in the Law). From the particulars of the analysis furnished to me by Dom G. Beyssac, I quote the following :

'I do not know what name to give this sort of elegy in honour of Moses which commences (?) at the first line of recto and finishes before the end of line 9. It is composed of six strophes noted on the same song and limited by the same word reappearing by way of refrain, Ka-Moseh, which the scribe has not noted after the third line (line 5). Each strophe is divided in the centre by a sort of mediant expressed in the manuscript by a double line, 11. The strophes 1, 3, 5 and 6 have not this mark, and the place which it occupies at the beginning of line 3 (and not at the end of line 2) might suggest the idea of some sort of peculiarity in the execution,—perhaps the repetition of the last part of the strophes or a change of the choir. On line 10, perhaps also at the end of line 9, if this end is a doxology—which does not seem probable, considering the tune—there begins a new piece of song inspired by Isaiah lx. 1, at the end of which the copyist by way of colophon seems to have applied to himself the verse of Isaiah, which he has just copied. The notation is grounded on a clear stave of four lines traced with a stife. But these lines have not been traced specially for the notation which only makes use of them. One sees clearly in the margin of the verse, the side on which they are allowed, that they are alternatively too long, reaching a point pierced with a compass, the shorter tending hardly over a centimetre of the line which limits the writing on the right-hand side. In the places not quoted in the manuscript, the writing has been suspended as in the last two lines of the verse on the longer lines. At the beginning of lines 6, 8, 9, and 10, a sign appears which is evidently a clef. One sees it even before the last note and line 6, which in fact ought to be written a line higher. It is clear that we must read this sign, as all the rest, from right to left as a 7 or a 7. Is there or was there ever in Hebrew cantillation a sort of admission? Anyhow, this sign should correspond with the clef ut or with the clef fa, both admissible, having regard to the small extent of the melody.

certain notes (lines 6, 4, and 10) does not belong to the melody. It is unknown to the Gregorian notation. Is it a mark of legato?

Regarding the point raised by Dom Beyssac concerning the clef, I would suggest that the numerical value of the Hebrew letter 1 being 4, this letter was used to denote the clef Fa, on the fourth line. As to the stroke, it appears to me to be for the purpose of showing that a certain number of notes are to be sung on a particular syllable of the word over which it is placed. As to the provenance of the music I suggested a Lombardic influence to Mr. Abdy Williams. With this view he concurred.

The following illustration marked A shows the neums as arranged by Dom Beyssac. The illustration marked B is the rendering of the neums depicted on page 1 of the Hebrew MS. into modern notation by Mr. Abdy Williams. That marked C shows my rendering into modern notation of the neums found on page 2 of the MS. Mr. Williams having described the neums on this page as being 'too fragmentary for any attempt at reconstruction,' I am indeed glad to state that my solution of it—with the exception of a slight error or two in the matter of notes and rhythm—has been found to be correct by him. At first I considered this portion of the melody might be that for the Cantillation of the Prophets, but further investigation induced me to reject that opinion. In all probability it is a species of 'Hazanut,' i.e., an intonation rendered by the Cantor. Moreover, there seems to be something in common with the melody that precedes this latter portion:

A. 1st Strophe.

Mi - 'al har Hô - rêb ha - 'a mi - di

'in ian qâ sa . . . 'i - mâ - di ka - mo - seh :

Last Strophe.

? ? ? ? 'el hâ 'e lô - [him]

'a da - li qô-mi kî bô'ô - rêk ô k bôd

'a - dô - nâ - i 'â - la ik zâ - râh.

Mr. Williams suggested the rhythm or style of singing by analogy with the music of the Armenian Uncial church. I have added time-signatures, bars, and pauses so as to give readers a better impression of the melody:

B. 1st Strophe.

Andante maestoso.

Mi 'al har Hô - rêb

ha - 'a - mi - di 'in ian qâ sa . . . 'i - mâ di ka - mo - seh :

As to the provenance of this fragment it is difficult to be quite sure. The form of the clinis would suggest an Italian influence, but one can well perceive that the scribe was not comfortable in transcribing the neums from right to left when he had been used to writing them from left to right, so he occasionally forgets himself, but regularly writes the verga in the right sense, but not in the inverse sense. The second note of the pes is often outside (lines 4, 5, 7); conversely, the second note of the clinis is sometimes instead of . It seems to me difficult to date this manuscript before the 13th century. Perhaps it is of the end of the 12th century. One point struck me in the writing: the form used for the clef. Is it not unusual? Could not this form assist us to date or localise the manuscript? The stroke which unites

C. Last Strophe.

The notes of interrogation underneath the music denote what appears to be missing in the Hebrew text, and those above it what is doubtful as to the melody.

In concluding this article I desire to express the hope that, whilst it has been the means of throwing light on an hitherto unknown phase of musical history, it will also be the means of affording stimulus for attempts at further discoveries of Hebrew MSS. containing neums. Maybe there are many such manuscripts in existence which till now have escaped the notice of librarians and musical historians.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

My space this month must be devoted to the discussion of a number of letters, some handed to me by the Editor, one sent to me direct. First, a few words in reply to Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji's letter in our Correspondence columns. Mr. Sorabji sees in my comment on the Sackbut paragraph concerning 'The Planets' and Liszt's 'Totentanz,' 'a curious implication' that 'an advanced instrument of musical opinion' must needs be concerned with modern or ultra-modern music. It is surprising to find Mr. Sorabji regarding the term 'advanced' as having, necessarily, any connection with date. It may have such a connection in matters of science or commerce, but in literature and art the calendar is an almost negligible factor. Some of the most vital things in music—vital, therefore still in the front rank, and so, in the most literal sense of the word, advanced—were written generations ago. This is no news to Mr. Sorabji, of course. I don't suppose for a moment that he regards the music of Erik Satie as any advance on that of Bach, Wagner, or Strauss. Similarly, I am sure he will agree that the term 'advanced' should not be appropriated by (say) a journal run by Marinetti or the apostles of 'Dada.' I am as diligent and interested a reader of the Sackbut as Mr. Sorabji, and I regard it as an advanced journal first on account of the literary quality of most of its pages, and even more because of the catholicity of its musical taste, the latter shown by the inclusion of long and discerning articles on 'composers so disparate in date as Gesualdo and Béla Bartók.' That an 'advanced' musician (using the adjective in Mr. Sorabji's sense) has an ear not only for the productions of to-day and the week after next, is proved by the fact that some of our most modern of native musicians are largely responsible for the revival of interest in the works of Byrd and other old English composers, just as in France and Italy (especially the latter) similar revivals have owed much to composers who have been described as ultra-modern and even futurist.

Mr. Sorabji says that one of the aims of the Sackbut 'is certainly not to deny expression or approval by one of its contributors of a work that was composed earlier than the last decade, if he deems it a valuable or worthy example.' Precisely, and if Mr. Sorabji will read my comment again he will see that I expressed surprise, not at the Sackbut contributor being allowed to describe the 'Totentanz' as 'a superlative masterpiece,' but at her being able to do so. Even when all due allowance has been made for personal taste, one expects some kind of critical judgment from a contributor to a journal so discriminating—one might almost say fastidious—as the Sackbut. After this discovery of hitherto unsuspected 'superlative' excellence in one of Liszt's most superficial works, we may open our Sackbut one fine day and discover Barbara chanting a pæan over one of the numerous essays of the same type by Sydney Smith.

Mr. Sorabji adds that my 'assertion of a "practically unanimous verdict" in favour of "The Planets" is not supported by the facts,' and brings forward 'the new critic of the New Age and one very prominent young British composer' as holding adverse opinions. The critic, the very prominent young composer, and Barbara, added together, make three. If Mr. Sorabji has no more than these to throw at me, I must hold to my view that Holst's Suite met with practically unanimous approval. In fact, I know of no other new work of such scope and challenging character having been so well received.

When I described 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' as 'a wretched tune' I was concerned with its quality, not with its source. Mr. Herbert W. Horwill's letter tells me that it is 'classical music,' being the theme of a set of variations by Beethoven. I don't know whether Mr. Horwill means to accuse me of lèse-majesté or to make a dig at Beethoven. If the former, his letter is typical of that blind worship of the classics which is responsible for so much that is unsatisfactory in our musical life. If the latter, his dig goes astray because there is no analogy between a song melody and a theme used for variation or development. A song tune must stand or fall on its melodic qualities. A theme for development may be—and often is—quite worthless until it has been through the composer's hands. Returning to the first point, it is high time we recognised and admitted frankly that a lot of classical music is bad, and that a no less large quantity of popular music by lesser composers is good. The recent controversy on popular music showed most of the disputants far too ready to judge by the name on the title-page rather than by the matter inside. The jazz enthusiasts lightly dismiss all classical music as caviare, forgetting that innumerable pieces by Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Wagner, and other classical composers have enjoyed, and still enjoy, and will continue to enjoy throughout the civilised world a popularity beside which that of the latest Charing Cross Road 'winner' is as nothing. There are only two kinds of music—good and bad, and all we have to do is to give the good a fair chance. It is natural that musicians should look to recognised composers for the good type, but it is lamentable that they should make a fetish of a mere name, however great. There should be no place in these democratic days for the snobbishness that prefers to put on a programme bad music by a dead composer rather than good music by a living one.

this matter above all a living dog is better than a dead lion, even if the dog be plain and unknown. Mr. Smith and the lion Beethoven.

Mr. Algernon Ashton has lately shown us to what lengths the 'classic' fetish will lead a musician. He wrote to the Press saying he was 'appalled' to read Beethoven concert report in which the critic opined at the composer had written a good deal better music than that of the 'Emperor' Concerto. Mr. Ashton would be even more 'appalled' if he knew how many of us have thought the same for years. However, he puts us all in our places. After chastising the critic by calling him 'this person,' Mr. Ashton decides that the 'Emperor' is 'the finest and grandest pianoforte concerto in existence,' and then, having settled the matter so far as the present generation is concerned, he looks ahead and settles for posterity. 'I am perfectly certain,' he says, 'that such sublimely beautiful music will never be written again as long as the world lasts.' So that's that, and you may take it from him that Beethoven's Sale and Arpeggio Manual en forme de Concerto is—and will be—the finest ever and then some.

But there is no peace for this conscientious Defender of the Faith. Hardly was he safely delivered of the above proclamation before they were at it again. Rosenthal, on his return to the English concert-platform, played Chopin's E minor Concerto. A lot of people wondered why, and said so, adding, truly, that it shows Chopin a long way from his best. Whereupon Mr. Ashton:

STR,—Whatever is coming over our music critics? It was only the other day that I had severely to reprimand a Manchester musical reporter for speaking most disparagingly about Beethoven's great 'Emperor' Concerto (the finest pianoforte concerto ever written), and now I see nearly every London critic running down Chopin's superb and delightful Pianoforte Concerto in E minor through thick and thin! Are they being infected by some of that atrocious modern stuff which is falsely called music? It looks uncommonly like it.

ALGERNON ASHTON.

'Only the other day I had severely to reprimand'—could anything be more amusingly pontifical? And yet these persons were not a bit awed. Here they are, nearly every one of them, speaking of a work of Chopin as if it were the product of a mere human being like themselves!

The pained query at the end of Mr. Ashton's letter very nearly touches the spot. Our critics and musicians generally are being infected with something modern, but it is not modern music and it is not atrocious. It is a refusal to open their ears and shut their eyes and take whatever the bigwigs send them. The golden age of music will be once more at round the corner when we are all agreed that a classic has its place in a programme not by divine right, but by its ability to answer the challenge of the present. Is it a good work, showing the composer at his best, and with a message for us still, as most great works have? If so, let us hear it often, no matter how old it be. Is it fourth-rate, Hummel aside, with a Beethoven label, so to speak? If so, give it a friendly good-bye and put it on the top shelf. There is always plenty of good stuff, old and new, waiting for the vacant place in our programmes. The classical composers have no worse enemy than champions of the Ashton type. Such admirers are well qualified to see that the tombstones of the great are decently tended, but they are not to be trusted any farther.

A correspondent writes:

In support of your remarks on the apathy of the musical profession in the matter of journals devoted to the art, I am writing to say that in my journeyings throughout the country—I am a commercial traveller and amateur musician—it is a constant surprise to me how few musicians support their own Press. They seem to be content with the odd paragraphs on the art scattered about the ordinary daily papers. As you pointed out in the February Musical Times, only a definitely musical journal can give the space, music-type illustrations, &c., necessary for a proper consideration of the development of the art in various countries. The letter you published from a famous violinist, asking for particulars of modern British music, would never have been written if the lady had been a regular reader of musical journals. The long series of Musical Times articles on the subject by Mr. Edwin Evans alone would have kept her busy. No wonder the rank and file of our teachers follow the same groove year after year. There is an enormous public for music in this country, and never surely was so much interest taken in it. If all music-lovers, amateur and professional, read at least one of the various excellent musical magazines, all kinds of questions—musical appreciation, support of orchestral concerts, &c.—would practically solve themselves. We ought to be able to obtain a musical journal as easily as we can Tit-Bits or John Bull, and if musicians woke up and did their duty the bookstalls would soon find it worth their while to stock musical papers for the casual purchaser.

Like my correspondent, I am constantly amazed at the number of musicians who not only do not read musical journals, but who are apparently ignorant of their very existence. It looks as if some kind of intensive propaganda were needed. My daily journey takes me through a long and densely populated back street of a type very little above the slum. There are newspaper shops galore, and at all of them it seems to be easy to obtain magazines dealing with every kind of hobby but music. Am I a fancier of the Dog, the Cat, the Pigeon, or the Rabbit? A journal telling me how to fancy successfully beckons to me from the shop window. Do I collect postage stamps—the last infirmity, surely, of a feeble mind? Even that strangest of passions is fed by a journal read by every philatelist. What draper is there who does not buy and read the organ showing him how to well and truly drape? The tailor and cutter devours his own weekly, so that he may tail and cut in the latest mode. And so on. Apparently, only the musician thinks he can get along without a journal. If he does want one he has to order it specially or subscribe, and both operations are far too complicated for so unbusinesslike a person. As to the back street mentioned above, I am pretty sure that quite as many of its people are interested in music as in dogs, pigeons, or even postage stamps, especially as the residents show in their faces their membership of the chosen race—the most musical of nations. Clearly there is something wrong somewhere, and we must get a move on.

The Editor lately received an anonymous postcard, which he passes on, asking me to write a reply that may haply catch the eye of the sender. Here is the text:

'L.S.O.' stands for London Society of Organists, so when you borrow these initials for something else it might be better to make the matter clear beyond a peradventure (not, of course, that anyone but a . . .

Do you remember the fuss there was when a certain widely-used adjective was shot at the audience in Shaw's 'Pygmalion'? It was the great moment of the play. Crowds stood in queues and paid good hard money nightly, and then hung upon the word—a word which they could have heard as well delivered free of charge in the street outside. That word follows next on the postcard, and cannot be quoted in a journal that prides itself on being so conducted that it may safely be left about the house and read even by the oldest. So we will borrow from the more harmless side of Old Bill's vocabulary, and put 'blinkin'' in its place:

... beyond a peradventure (not, of course, that anyone but a blinkin' fool . . .)

And there the card ends,—on an unresolved suspension, so to speak. Turning up last month's Musical Times, I find a contributor speaking of the London Symphony Orchestra as the 'L.S.O.,' little knowing what trouble he was making. Now, the London Society of Organists is a small body about two years old—at all events as at present constituted. We may safely say that beyond the members, their sisters, their cousins, and aunts, nobody knows of their existence. Their fame is bounded on the north by Palmers Green, on the south by Denmark Hill. The London Symphony Orchestra, on the other hand, is known (at least by name) to musicians not only over the greater part of Europe but in North America as well. Its initials have been used as a title for many years.

Was there ever a more ludicrous case of,
'Said the Flea to the Elephant:
"Who're you shovin'?"'

ENGLISH FOLK-SONG

BY RICHARD CAPELL

All national art, says a wise Frenchman, is a source of beauty. Of course Beauty and Art are difficult words, and none but the professed philosopher can say just what he means by them; but still one's feeling may be some help on the way in default of strict philosophy. We may (without straying out of sight of our concern, which is Mr. Sharp and his English folk-songs*) see Beauty as possessed of double aspect, and the one or other allures and is adored in its season—the one is the imagined and fantastic, the other the assured and experienced.

For one whose lot just before the war lay amid London musical doings the days were gorgeously crowded with the exotic succession of tribute-payers who seemed to be bringing to our feet all that the world held of the strange, rich, and monstrous. As Asia of old sent her elephants, apes, and peacocks in offering to imperial Rome, so there showered down on us tetralogies and symphonic poems, the pyramidal scores of Scriabin, Mahler, and Strauss, the fairyland of the Russian Ballet (ah, at its prime!), the opera-casts with all the golden throats of Italy, not to speak of opera-houses simply thrown at our heads by America.

One August day, and all this was like snow upon the desert's dusty face. It left the barest memory of a dream, and it was like awakening from a dream to face the new world, so irrelevant to the intoxication of the eve! The fantastical beauty that mirrored so flatteringly the impossible ends of the earth left not enough comfort to be worth a thought. That autumn there dawned on you perhaps that other beauty, the beauty of the assured things that have made and moulded you and yours for time without mind. It dawned on you, no doubt with a pang, the look of some bit of road, low hills, and home county village, by which you were trudging in weather you would perhaps never have chosen to be out in and with an absurd lot of things on your back.

The beauty had a voice, to be perceived in certain turns of speech of your fellows—the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick-maker. Oh! admirable, vivid and vigorous, a speech that was untouched by the pallor of the printed word. When song put in an appearance, here and there were snatches that were clearly an English voice, a voice which could be recognized from its hints in our prose from Shakespeare to Thomas Hardy. No tune was, I think, 'magnificent.' The feeling was more of humour than of declared heroism. It could bear irony, but could not bear with any of the emotion of the heart-worn-on-sleeve. But here is a sample which was much sung in the neighbourhood of Festubert and Cuinchy in grim days—spring, 1917. There may be a known composer—or even a known author of the verses (the refrain of which begins 'I don't want to be a soldier, I don't want to go to war,' and ends, 'I'd rather stay in England, I merrie, merrie England, than throw my precious life away'). We knew of none, and here is a case of folk-song in the making:

Such artless songs are not to be disassociate from the artless singers, who are our own people ourselves; and their beauty is of more than this surface of cheerful irony, such being just the emerging aspect of that hidden bulk of our own soundness, the solidity of our virtue of self-rescue which 'saved the sum of things' in the day 'when heaven was falling, the hour when earth's foundation fled.'

The causes of our delight in art are doubtless never unmixed, and conceivably these two books of a hundred English folk-songs, chosen from Mr. Sharp's collections of twenty-five years, might leave some persons untouched if beauty in her exotic phases were dominant. But the passions, the disillusion and endurances of the war have perhaps contracted a little our hearts, which used to be so very expansive. We perhaps have come to trust more in ourselves and less in any glib and flattering stranger's effusiveness. Anyhow there is a consistent strain in these song-books which is certain to be seized on more eagerly now than it ever would have been in the past. These songs have not the poignant accent of the eat Irish airs, or the sensuousness and savage rhythmic life of Spanish or of Hungarian folk-songs. To generalise (for often the lyre of pathos is most delicately touched), these are the songs of a happily happy, contented people, with a cheerful humour all its own. There are not the gloom or supernatural terrors of the lore of mountain-folk. Beyond the favourite case of a bridegroom being seized by the press-gang there is no oppression. But short of the grand dramatic flight, these old country songs range over a multitude of human feelings. The ballads give us hints of the really chaotic. Some of these, in Mr. Sharp's scrupulously improved versions, are occasionally fragmentary and obscure. The lyric songs offer to the listener the authentic voice of our countryside. For of course these are countrymen's songs (such as are not sailors'), for urban song is a different thing, picking up and dropping its favourites as often in a year as does the country in a generation. This artless voice, sweet, now tender, now rollicking, has us wholly won, and for the just reason that at the mocking notes of the courted milkmaid, at the plaint of the forlorn swain, or the home-coming sailor's tale everyone must instinctively call from memory's store some corner of the green and pleasant land, a scene from favoured shire, or home.

* English Folk-songs: collected and arranged by Cecil J. Sharp, 2 vols. Novello & Co., Ltd.

How propitious May mornings are to Somerset writers is to be learned from many a song (a good proportion of these first two books comes from Mr. Sharp's Somerset collection). On the other hand even that melting season, it is clear, leaves some minds whole-hearted and scoffing. The sailor is a favourite hero, but some sailors only court to thieve, and hence the rueful modal complaint of more than one once merry milkmaid or shepherdess.

If any doubt that such songs may not have been held they had over English folk, there was a demonstration the other evening at the Morley Working Men's College (Waterloo Road, London), where the chanty 'Let the Bulgine run'—an irresistible tune from Dr. Terry's collection—caught the audience's does not one music-hall song in a thousand.

This collection of Mr. Sharp's, which seems to have every virtue of taste and fidelity, will be an acknowledged record and store-house. It will be the best beloved of song-books in many English homes. Its song recitals a bunch of flowers from Mr. Sharp's garden will always be welcome.

New Music

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

In our January number mention was made of the first set of Caprices and Rhythmic Studies by M. Jacques-Dalcroze. Here is the second set (Augener), and one need give it no higher praise than to say it is as good as its predecessor. It is a pleasure to meet with music of this kind—free and imaginative, and handling complex rhythmic and harmonic problems with ease and assurance. The pieces are for good players. For 'good' we must substitute 'advanced' in speaking of Arthur de Greef's 'Études de Concert' (Augener). There are five, published separately. Here again we have an unusually high standard. The technical excellence of these pieces goes without saying. Far more important is the fact that they have real beauty and power as well—for example, the delicate wistful charm of the Etude in E takes one captive at once. However, there is no space for detailed description. It must suffice to draw the advanced pianist's attention to these excellent additions to his repertoire. Ravel's Poème Chorégraphique, 'La Valse,' has been transcribed for pianoforte solo by the composer (Durand). It makes a fine piece, though one feels the need of the orchestra in the opening pages, where the music lies rather too low to be clear, and later where some important decorative passages for woodwind, written in small notes, will mostly have to be taken as read. 'La Valse' is very difficult and very long—twenty-four pages.

'The Hour Glass' is a set of three pieces by Frank Bridge, published in separate numbers by Augener. 'Dusk' is appropriately vague and slightly melancholy. 'The Dew Fairy' gives us some delightful arabesque treatment of an elvish little tune. In 'The Midnight Tide' fearful conglomerations of notes and tempestuous arpeggi point to dirty weather. The piece is not long, but it has the right sense of bigness. These three highly picturesque sketches are difficult, but they 'come off,' which is more than can be said for a great deal of difficult music.

The pianoforte duet is such a valuable means of getting a good working idea of complex orchestral and chamber works that one is glad to see some of our modern composers taking advantage of it. Here is Malipiero's 'Panthea,' a symphonic drama for chorus and orchestra, boiled down for four-handed consumption (Chester). A very pungent dish it is, too. Only the varied timbres of the orchestra can make some of the dissonances tolerable, so it is to be hoped that no one will judge it from the pianoforte point of view. An arrangement of this kind must be regarded merely as a kind of glorified analytical programme.

We return to pianoforte music proper with some pleasant sets of pieces by Melartin—'Chips' and 'Intermezzi' (Augener). These are fairly easy essays, picturesque and tuneful, excellent teaching material of the type of Grieg's lyrical pieces, though less highly coloured. From the same publishers comes Liszt's edition of Schubert's 'Wanderer' Fantasia. A batch of material for youthful players calls for no more than mention. Four Miniatures by Reginald S. Thatcher (Augener), an album of Ten Preludes and Miniatures by M. E. Marshall (Bosworth), and a Little Suite, 'Nursery Secrets,' by Felix White (Keith Prowse). The last-named gives us not only some unusually pleasant little pieces, but also something new in titles, perhaps an even more difficult feat. Here they are: 'The Forbidden Fairy Tale (with Ghosts in it),' 'A Dream of the Russian Ballet,' 'Who broke the New Toy?' and 'Why the Flies go round and round.' Having settled this last point, perhaps Mr. White will in his next Suite go one better and answer a popular question as to where they go in the winter. C. W.

ORGAN MUSIC

Parry's interest in the organ showed itself in a series of works written in his later years—works so good that organists regretted he had not turned to their instrument before his numerous public and educational duties made composition a mere extra. Among the MS. works he left a Toccata and Fugue entitled 'The Wanderer,' which has now been published (Novello). A note tells us that it had not been finally revised by the composer, but that all the material exists in autograph. The Toccata, after a brief introduction, delivers a chromatic questioning phrase which gives the work its title, and from which most of its two movements is derived. Parry here regards the Toccata as a form of fantasia rather than as a brilliant show-piece. The movement has a good deal in common with his Fantasia in G published a few years ago, though it is less vigorous. It consists mainly of passage-work, and carries on the rather troubled feeling expressed by its motto theme. The fugue subject gives us the motto in more definite shape, though it is still broken up into brief interrogations. It is worked out at considerable length—eleven pages—with a delightfully flexible semiquaver treatment on pages 12 and 13, followed by a bold and effective section in the unexpected key of B flat. The final pages recall something of the style of the Toccata, though the mood is brighter. Most players will agree that this Fugue is one of Parry's best organ works on a large scale. They will take pleasure in the thought that one of the very last pieces Parry wrote was for their instrument, and that it showed him at his happiest.

The set of Fifteen Versets that Marcel Dupré included in his programme at the Royal Albert Hall have been issued under one cover by Novello. They are remarkable in several respects, but perhaps they impress most by their variety. Nothing can be more typically French in brilliance and audacity than the toccata-like movements that form the finales of the suites on 'Ave Maris Stella' and Magnificat. Yet side by side with them are such diverse things as severe canonic studies, a choral prelude à la Bach (a little piece that has borrowed something from the simpler side of Reger en route), expressive cantilène movements, solemn diapason interludes, and a strikingly daring chordal affair for opening number. This last-named calls for a huge organ and building, to say nothing of hands of ample grasp. The standard of difficulty is high, but in every case the result is well worth the pains. Rarely does one meet with so much brains and originality in organ music. Despite the fact of their being based on fragments of plainsong, they lose little or nothing by being played apart from the offices for which they were written. The English player will do well to exercise considerable freedom in the matter of registration. That indicated by the composer will often be found unsuitable for our average organs. Some other works by Dupré demand more space than is available in this issue, and must be held over.

The newer French school of organ writers is getting farther and farther away from the French style of our youth. They are liable to fits of uncompromising severity and complexity, and Emile Bourdon's choral 'Varie sur l'Hymne Ave Maris Stella' (Leduc) is a good example of this style. The piece contains some beautiful music (it seems impossible to write round this loveliest of plainsong melodies without catching some of its magic), and may be warmly commended to players who have ample time for practice and who are not afraid to serve up a voluntary that will leave the churchwardens and sidesmen cold—perhaps even annoyed.

A first-rate postlude or recital piece for Lent is James E. Wallace's Chorale Fantasia on the well-known tune to 'Forty days and forty nights' (Novello). A large organ is called for, with a player who is able to let himself go. Mr. Wallace is apparently an admirer of Karg-Elert. His harmonies are very warm and rich, and he has a good deal of his model's freedom and spontaneity. Indeed the piece more often than not suggests a good improvisation and there can be no higher praise for music written round familiar hymn-tunes. This is the first of Mr. Wallace's works to come my way. I hope it will not be the last. If he has any more of this type up his sleeve the sooner he brings them out the better. His Fantasia is streets ahead of our average essays in the choral prelude field. To many of them are suggestive of Bach on a good off-day.

R. G. Hailing's 'Cradle Song' (Novello) is a simple and tuneful piece that calls for no comment.

The last four parts of Ernest Austin's Narrative Poem, 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' have just been published (Larway). There is no need to discuss in detail a work the scope and style of which have been frequently mentioned in these columns. These new sections show the same picturesque and attractive qualities of their predecessors. Part X. rounds off the whole by employing an ad libitum chorus, bell and solo violin. Organists who give regular weekly or at least fairly frequent, recitals should add serious interest to their scheme by the playing of one or two parts of this work at each.

H. G.

SONGS

It is worth noting that some of the most significant songs recently issued are also the simplest. Gustav Holst's Four Songs for Voice and Violin (Chester) are not for every palate, still less are they for every singer. They call for a rhythm and style so free and natural that they would come badly off in the hands of most of our public singers. Mr. Holst has gone to 'A Mediæval Anthology' for his words, and has caught to perfection the intimate devotion of the text—so much so, in fact, that the settings call for surroundings other than the concert room. One hates to think of applause or bouquet after such things. The songs need the atmosphere of the home or the church.

The old French, Scottish, and English songs with which Madame Collignon recently delighted London audiences have been issued by Chester under the title of 'Répertoire Collignon.' There are twelve of them in separate numbers, with accompaniment provided by Bax, Goossens, Ireland, Frank Bridge, and Howells. The first four composers form a syndicate in the case of 'Cadet Roussel,' with piquant results. This set of songs is worth attention for their accompaniments alone.

Sidney's 'My true love hath my heart' is one of the most hackneyed of song texts, but there is always room for another setting by a composer with something to say. John Ireland comes forward with a very fervid and full-blooded version—one of his best songs, because of this unusual warmth. The piano forte part, though not unduly difficult, needs skilful management (Augener).

A very useful book, especially for school purposes, vol. iv. of Novello's Songs, containing thirty classic examples by Horn, Mozart, Bach, Rubinstein, Gounod, Goetz, Arne, Sullivan, Brahms, Morley, Tchaikovsky, Dvorák, &c., the voice part being given in both Ton-Sol-fa and Staff notation. This volume and its companions provide a repertoire of which no singer need be ashamed.

C. W.

MUSIC FOR STRINGS

Mr. Albert Coates has done good service to the cause of music in general and of English music in particular by editing a Suite for Strings by Henry Purcell (Novello). As the programmes of our own Promenade concerts show, good string music is rare, and of modern composers Tchaikovsky alone appears able to write a string suite which has had more than a passing success. English music, on the other hand, must derive greater confidence in its future by this new evidence of the lasting quality of Purcell's work. The greatness of Purcell, of course, has never been denied, but there is (or at least there was) a tendency to take it for granted until recent performances of 'Dido and Æneas' and 'King Arthur' swept away the dead ashes and revealed the still glowing fire. The Suite in question is yet another proof of the vitality of this music. Mr. Coates has done his share with discretion, and refrained from rendering Purcell the kind of service less scrupulous editors are wont to do in dealing with old MSS. He has allowed Purcell to tell his own tale in his own way, making only those alterations which are conducive to the most effective performance by a modern orchestra. To him is due the credit for the production; the pure charm of the music is Purcell's.

The Suite consists of five movements, easy to play and, save for a few bars at the end of No. 5, without divisi, so that any four players of moderate ability can enjoy them. To such, and to amateur orchestras, the Suite will be a boon and an education, for the study of Purcell is as sure a foundation for the musician's taste and temperament as the study of the classics is for the writer. The professional orchestras of the concert-halls must find it a singularly welcome addition to the somewhat slender repertoire of first-class string music.

A striking contrast to Purcell's methods is offered by Mr. Frank Bridge's 'Suite for String Orchestra' (Goodwin & Tabb), in which the composer uses modern devices with consummate art. Technically his work should not be beyond the ability of competent amateurs. Like most of Mr. Bridge's music, however, it possesses a delicate charm which evades the touch of an unskilled or unsympathetic hand. Fairly recent performances at the Promenade and Queen's Hall Symphony concerts dispense us from the task of discussing the Suite in detail.

Of recent original compositions the most formidable is probably Eric Fogg's 'Phantasy' for 'cello and pianoforte (Bosworth). It shows an absolute disregard for the limitations of the 'cello no less than a firm determination to employ the most up-to-date harmonies and rhythmical devices. It is exuberant and unequal. Yet its very obvious faults are a sort of passport. One cannot but feel through it all that in spite of errors of taste, of grasping at the nearest straw, of consequent loss of a clear and characteristic style, Mr. Fogg is absolutely sincere in his desire to say something. Certain things, such as the theme of the Allegretto Scherzando, cannot possibly be saved from the commonplace by any sort of harmonist or, for that matter, by any ingenuity of orchestration. But if this Phantasy were stripped of all its oddities and cleared of its superfluous material, something would be left of promise for the future. Mr. Fogg is at present still suffering from a kind of disease that attacks most ambitious young men, and is brought about by the desire to emulate those who at the time happen to be in the very centre of the limelight. When the sufferer has completely recovered, when the feverish energy characteristic of the disease has left him, comes the time when his real strength is put to the test. It must be remembered, however, that the disease seldom attacks absolute nonentities.

William Ackroyd's 'Waltz' (Augener) and Karjinsky's 'Chant Slave' (Chester) are good examples of music for the beginner. Mr. Karjinsky's work is just a trifle more ambitious and also slightly more difficult. Two pieces by Quentin Morvaren Maclean (Ricordi) demand a fair technical command of the instrument, such as would be expected from a student who is going through the Kreutzer Studies. Both show skill and discrimination in the accompaniments.

Of new issues of older music the most important are: Veracini's Sonata in B minor (Chelsea Book Club)—a work typical of its class and time, as difficult as the original 'Follia' of Corelli—and Augener's edition of Wieniawski's Polonaise in A and of Rovelli's classical studies. Both have been supervised by Emile Sauret. The Studies, as in Singer's edition, lack a few useful and concise directions such as are found in most editions of other violin studies.

In 'Modern Violin-Playing' (H. W. Gray, Novello) the authors, Messrs. Samuel B. Grimson and Cecil Forsyth, appear to look upon modern technique as something quite different from that of the old masters. They are thus led into apparent contradictions such as the assertion that a telling vibrato must be available everywhere and at every time, after quoting abundant evidence to the contrary in the past. Vibrato is, as it always was, only a nuisance if it be not controlled by a keen sense of fitness and taste. The volume contains much excellent advice, and will be read with great profit by teachers and students. F. B.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The last in chronological order, the first orchestral concert to be mentioned is that of the Queen's Hall Orchestra on February 12, at which Sibelius appeared and conducted his own fifth Symphony. The hall was crowded, and the composer was welcomed with enthusiasm. Whether from nervousness or not, he certainly failed to make the most of his own work, and one could not help wondering how far the extreme greyiness of the score was due to the music itself or to his way of treating it. To a certain extent Sibelius has become the victim of a formula. The word has gone forth that the great merits of his work are its 'reticence' and its elimination of everything that is superfluous. This dictum applies to his matter as well as to the manner of its presentation. We are hypnotized by the epigram, and look for these qualities in all his work. In the Symphony (No. 4) that was heard at the Birmingham Festival before the war, reticence was carried to such an extent that we seemed to be hearing rather a few rough sketches for a symphony than a symphony itself. This fifth Symphony is not quite so sketchy, and is in parts a little more finished, although whenever a climax seems to be indicated it stops abruptly, as if the composer were saying to himself, 'Here, there should be a big climax, but we all know the sort of thing that a climax is, therefore it is enough to show the world that this is the place where it ought to be. Let them imagine the rest.'

Compression and emotional balance are qualities of particular value in these voluble and neurotic days, but it must honestly be confessed that Sibelius carries them too far. The impression left is sometimes that he is silent because he has not really much to say, and that he refrains from the expression of emotion because of his lack of human sympathies. It is true that the latest Symphony does not convey quite the same idea of disgruntlement as the fourth, but it does suggest a warped and unpleasant outlook on life. The third movement has some very effective string passages. I see that in some places this movement has been condemned on the ground of monotony and angularity, but to my mind the very insistence on ordinary rhythms is the true source of its effect. The pizzicato is used in a striking way, which, strangely enough, suggests similar things in another fifth Symphony. The mysterious background and moving strings, against which we hear an expressive melody towards the end of the last movement, shows that Sibelius can be picturesque and emotional if he likes. This is the only passage in the Symphony which gave me, personally, any impression of bigness of idea or individuality.

The other novelty at the same concert was 'In the Tatra Mountains,' by Novak. The composer handles the familiar recipes for describing natural phenomena like a good workman, but there is nothing personal or even distinctly Bohemian in the music.

At its concert, on January 24, the London Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Albert Coates, performed Mozart's 'Requiem,' with Mesdames Stralia and Olga Haley, Messrs. John Coates and Norman Allin as soloists, and the Philharmonic Choir. It was frankly a disappointing performance, singularly lacking in warmth of expression and devotional atmosphere. It seems almost incredible that Mr. Coates of all people should lay himself open to a charge of undue rigidity, but so it was.

Mr. Coates also conducted the Philharmonic concert on January 27. It began with the Overture to the 'Barber of Seville,' which he made irresistibly cheerful, while the strings achieved some magnificent feats of virtuosity. There were two almost new items in the programme: Hamilton Harty's Violin Concerto, played by Miss Murray Lambert, and Ottorino Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome.' Respighi is a modern Italian, but not quite so modern as Malipiero and Casella. He has a great gift for picturesque description and luminous orchestral effects. Mr. Coates made it all very splendid, especially the section descriptive of the Fountain of the Triton. But I have a suspicion, based on a previous hearing, that the composer wished it to be dainty rather than splendid. I am inclined to criticise Mr. Coates' reading of the Trio of the Scherzo of Beethoven's seventh Symphony in the same way. It was made to sound like a battle-hymn rather than a simple song of pilgrims. There were fine points in the Finale, and the rhythmical swing was exhilarating; but it is surely open to doubt whether it should be played so that the string melody with which it opens is almost drowned by the accompaniment. Hamilton Harty's Concerto is a work that aims at pleasing rather than impressing, and succeeds very well with its characteristically Celtic alternation of gaiety and melancholy. The scoring is not heavy, but every touch tells, and the solo part is grateful. It was very sympathetically played by Miss Murray Lambert.

She repeated it at her own concert on February 14 with the composer conducting, and again made a great effect. On this occasion the playing of the Mendelssohn Concerto was very pleasing to listen to. Mr. O'Connor Morris' two pieces for violin solo, orchestra, and organ, based on Irish folk-songs, are well worth the attention of violinists.

To return for a moment to the Philharmonic concert, Signor Corrado most deservedly was successful in the 'Count's Air' from 'Figaro.'

M. Kussevitzy has conducted several concerts at the Albert Hall, and is becoming a great favourite with the audiences there. He conducted an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall, the most interesting feature of which was his reading of Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase.' It is worth remembering that he was the first to conduct it in London, and if memory serves, that was our first introduction to Scriabin as an orchestral composer. We have now become fairly well acquainted with this particular work. M. Kussevitzy's interpretation is widely different from that of Mr. Coates. Under the Englishman the work is a kaleidoscope of gorgeous hues, vague in outline and mainly a matter of colour and mystic atmosphere. M. Kussevitzy's aim, apparently, is to lift the veil and make it clear what is going on behind it, or, to speak prosaically, he gives us a more definite outline and clear cut details. Both conductors can claim to have been well acquainted with the composer and his intention. In the matter of working up the impressive climaxes, Coates and Kussevitzy are equally remarkable.

At the concert of the British Symphony Orchestra on February 5 Mr. Boulton revived John Ireland's 'Forgotten Rite.' It is a very able study in atmosphere inspired by close sympathy with nature. There are some beautiful passages, but it somehow leaves the impression of being a fragment of a larger work instead of a self-contained whole.

A word must be said of Percy Grainger's Suite 'In a Nutshell,' produced at a Queen's Hall Symphony Concert. We had heard a great deal about the 'Narimba' and 'Mabimba,' members of the Xylophone family, which were in the score, but their effect was not in proportion to the expectation raised. The most remarkable thing about the music is that one number is called a 'Humlet,' a new word invented by the composer to describe a song hummed to oneself. The music is jolly, but ordinary.

During the period since last month's issue the have been a good many vocal recitals, but many which clamour for notice here. Again the one that is latest in chronological order is that which should be mentioned first. Mr. Plunket Greene sang at Æolian Hall on February 15. There is nothing new to be said about his art; he can scroll the words faster off his tongue and more clearly than anybody has ever been able to do, and his whisper is still instinct with tragedy. In other respects his technique is as open to question as ever, and his dramatic and interpretative powers more brilliant. There are two points not exactly connected with singing which should be recorded. First of all, he decided to allow smoking. If we smoke at prominent concerts, why should we not smoke at the Æolian Hall? Secondly there appeared a notice in the programme that one of the songs sung was the 'The

Prevent us, O Lord.

ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE.

Words from a Collect in the Office for the Holy Communion.

Composed by GEORGE RATHBONE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED: NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO. SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Larghetto. ♩ = 76.

ORGAN. Ch. Sw. coupled. mf

Ped.

BASSES (OR BASS SOLO). tranquillo. mf

Pre - vent us, O Lord, with

Sw. senza Ped.

cres.

Thy most gra - cious fa - vour, and fur - ther us with Thy con - tin - ual

cres.

dim. bV

help; that in all our works be - gun, con - tin - ued, and

Sw. dim. Ch. Ped.

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

end - ed in Thee, we may glo - ri - fy Thy ho - - ly

Gt.

express. p poco rit.

Name, and fi - nal - ly by Thy mer - cy ob - tain ev - er - last - ing

p Sw. Gt. poco rit.

Ped.

a tempo. tranquillo. pp cres.

Pre - vent us, O Lord, with Thy most gra - cious fa - vour, and

a tempo. tranquillo. pp cres.

Pre - vent us, O Lord, with Thy most gra - cious fa - vour, and

a tempo. tranquillo. pp cres.

Pre - vent us, O Lord, with Thy most gra - cious fa - vour, and

a tempo. tranquillo. pp cres.

life. O Lord, pre - vent us with Thy fa - vour, and a tempo. p Sw.

No. 447.

THE ORPHEUS.
(NEW SERIES.)

Price—2d 3d.

BUSHES AND BRIARS

ESSEX FOLK-SONG

NOTED AND ARRANGED FOR FOUR MEN'S VOICES (T.T.B.B.)

BY

R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante sostenuto.
p espress.

1st TENOR.

Through bush-es and through bri - ars I late-ly took my way; All

2nd TENOR.

Through bush-es and through bri - ars I late-ly took my way; All

1st BASS.

Through bush-es and through bri - ars I late-ly took my way; All for to 2nd BASS.

Through bush-es and through bri - ars I late-ly took my way; All

Andante sostenuto.

(For practice only.)

p

for to hear the small birds sing and the lambs to . . skip and play.

for . . to hear the small birds sing and the lambs to skip . . and play.

hear . . the small birds sing and the lambs . . to skip and play.

for to hear the small birds sing and the lambs to skip and play.

BUSHES AND BRIARS.

pp I o - ver - heard her voice . . so clear, "Long
pp I o - ver - heard her voice so clear, "Long
p o-ver-heard my own true love, her voice it was so clear, "Long p o-ver-heard my own true love, her voice it was so clear, "Long time I have been wait - ing for the com - - - ing, the com-ing . .
pp
p

time . . . I . . . have been wait - ing for . . the com - - - ing time . . . I've been wait - ing for the com-ing . . of my dear, of my time I have been wait - ing for the com-ing . . of my dear.
pp

mf of my dear. . . Some-times I am un - ea - sy and troubled in my mf of my dear. . . Some-times I am un - ea - sy and troubled in my mf dear. . . Some-times I am un - ea - sy and troubled in my mf Some-times I am un - ea - sy and troubled in my

BUSHES AND BRIARS.

mind, Some-times I think I'll go to my love and tell to . . him my mind.

mind, Some - times I think I'll go to my love and tell to him . . my mind.

mind, Sometimes I think I'll go . . . to my love and tell . . to him my mind.

mind, Some-times I think I'll go to my love and tell to him my mind.

pp And if I should go he will say

pp And if I should go he will say

p And if I should go to my love, my love he will say

p And if I should go to my love, my love he will say

pp

p

p nay, If I show to him my bold - - ness, he'll

p nay, If I show to him . . my bold - - ness, he'll

p nay, If I show . . to him my bold - - ness, he'll

p nay, If I show to him my bold - - ness, he'll

BUSHES AND BRIARS.

ne'er love . . me a - gain, . . if I show . . . my ne'er . . love me a - gain, . . if I show to . . him my ne'er love me a - gain, . . if I show . . . my ne'er love me a - gain, if I show to . . him my

This system contains four staves of music. The first two staves are vocal parts with lyrics. The third and fourth staves are piano accompaniment. Dynamics include f (forte) and sf (sforzando). The key signature has two flats, and the time signature is 4/4.

bold - - ness he'll ne'er love me a - gain."

bold - - - ness he'll ne'er . . love me . . . a - gain."

bold - ness he'll ne'er love . . . me . . . a - gain."

bold - ness he'll ne'er love me . . . a - gain."

This system contains four staves of music. The first two staves are vocal parts with lyrics. The third and fourth staves are piano accompaniment. Dynamics include p (piano) and smorzando (diminuendo). The key signature has two flats, and the time signature is 4/4.

TO "GLEE CLUB," WINCHESTER COLLEGE.

JOHNNIE COPE

SCOTTISH SONG

ARRANGED AS A PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES

BY

E. T. SWEETING.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro marziale.

SOPRANO. mf Cope sent a let - ter . . frae Dun - bar: O Char - - lie, p

ALTO. mf Cope sent a let - ter . . frae Dun - bar: O Char - - lie, p

TENOR. mf Cope sent a let - ter . . frae Dun - bar: O Char - - lie, p

BASS. mf Cope sent a let - ter . . frae Dun - bar: O . . Char - lie, meet me . .

PIANO. (For practice only.) mf Allegro marziale. ♩ = 168. p meet me, And I'll learn ye the art of war, Gin ye'll meet me in the meet me, And I'll learn ye the art of war, Gin ye'll meet me in the meet me, And I'll learn ye the art of war, Gin ye'll meet me in the an . . ye . . daur, And I'll learn ye the art of war, Gin ye'll meet me in . . the . .

JOHNNIE COPE.

morn - ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau - kin.. yet? Or are your drums a - morn - ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau - kin yet? Or are your * dr morn - ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau - kin yet? Or are your * dr morn - - ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau - kin.. yet? Or are your drums a - beat - in'.. yet? If ye were wau - kin', I.. wad wait To go to the couls i' the ums a - beat - in' yet? O I wad wait To go to the couls i' the ums a - beat - in' yet? O I wad wait To go to the couls i' the beat - in'.. yet? If ye were wau - kin', I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing. John-nie Cope, John-nie Cope! He morn - ing. John-nie Cope, John-nie Cope! He morn - ing. When Char-lie looked the.. let-ter up - on, He..

morn - ing. John-nie Cope, John-nie Cope!

* Roll the "r."

JOHNNIE COPE.

drew his sword the scab - bard from: Come, fol - low me, my mer - ry men, And drew his sword: Come, fol - low me, my mer - ry men, And drew his sword the scab - bard from: Come, fol - low me, my mer - ry men, And He drew his sword: Come, fol - low me, my mer - ry men, And we'll meet Cope i' the morn - ing. Hey, John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or we'll meet Cope i' the morn - ing. Hey, John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or we'll meet Cope i' the morn - ing. Hey, John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or we'll meet Cope i' the morn - ing. Hey, John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or are your drums a - beat - in' yet? If.. ye were wau - kin', I.. wad wait To are your drums a - beat - in' yet? O I wad wait To are your drums a - beat - in' yet? O I wad wait To are your drums a - beat - in' yet? If ye were wau - kin', I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing. When go to the couls i' the morn - ing. John-nie Cope! When John-nie go to the couls i' the morn - ing. John-nie Cope! When John-nie go to the couls i' the morn - ing. John-nie Cope! John-nie Cope!

JOHNNIE COPE.

p

John - nie Cope he .. heard of this, He thocht it wad - na .. be .. a - miss To Cope he heard of .. this, He thocht it wad - na be a - miss To Cope he heard of .. this, He thocht it wad - na be a - miss To

He thocht it wad - na be a - miss To

p

cres. hae a horse in rea - di - ness To flee a - wa' i' the morn - ing. John-nie

cres. hae a horse in rea - di - ness To flee a - wa' i' the morn - ing.

cres. hae a .. horse in rea - di - ness To flee a - wa' i' the morn - ing.

cres. hae a horse in rea - di - ness To flee a - wa' i' the morn - ing.

cres. p

JOHNNIE COPE.

mf mf

Cope! John-nie Cope! * Na,

Eye, John-nie, now get up and rin, The

p John-nie Cope! John-nie Cope! * Na,

John-nie Cope! John-nie Cope! * Na,

cres.

Na, a, It's best to sleep in a hale skin, For'twill

High-land bag-pipes mak' a . . din; It's best to sleep in a hale skin, For'twill

cres.

Na, It's best to sleep in a hale skin, For'twill

cres.

Na, It's best to sleep in a hale skin, For'twill

cres.

Allargando. a tempo.

be a blui-dy morn-ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau-kin yet? Or be a blui-dy morn-ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau-kin yet? Or be a blui-dy . . morn-ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau-kin yet? Or be a blui-dy . . morn-ing. Hey, John-nie Cope, are ye wau-kin yet? Or

Allargando. a tempo.

* To be sung nasally.

JOHNNIE COPE.

are your drums a - beat - in' .. yet? If .. ye .. were - wau - kin', I .. wad wait To are your dr~~~~~ums a - beat - in' yet? O, I wad wait To are your dr~~~~~ums a - beat - in' yet? O, I wad wait To are your drums a - beat - in' .. yet? If ye were wau - kin', I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing, i' the morn - ing. rall. Lento. p When go to the couls i' the morn - ing, i' the morn - ing. rall.

go to the couls i' the morn - ing. rall.

go to the couls i' the morn - ing. rall. i' the morn - ing. Lento. p

John - nie Cope to .. Ber - wick cam', They speer'd at him, "Where's

p When John - nie Cope to Ber - wick cam', They speer'd at him, "Where's

p When John - nie Cope to Ber - wick cam', They speer'd at him, "Where's

JOHNNIE COPE.

rall. tempo primo. cres.
mf
a' . . your men?" "The deil con-found me, gin I ken, For I left them a' i' the rall. tempo primo. cres.

mf
a' your men?" "The deil con-found me, gin I ken, For I left them a' i' the rall. tempo primo. cres.

mf
a' your men?" "The deil con-found me, gin I ken, For I left them a' i' the rall. tempo primo. cres.

ff
a' your men?" "The deil con-found me, gin I ken, For I left them a' i' the

"The deil con-found me gin I ken, For I left them a' . . i' the

mf morn - ing." Hey, . . John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or . .

ff
morn - ing." Hey, . . John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or

ff
morn - ing." Hey, . . John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or

ff
morn - ing." Hey, John - nie Cope, are ye wau - kin' yet? Or

JOHNNIE COPE.

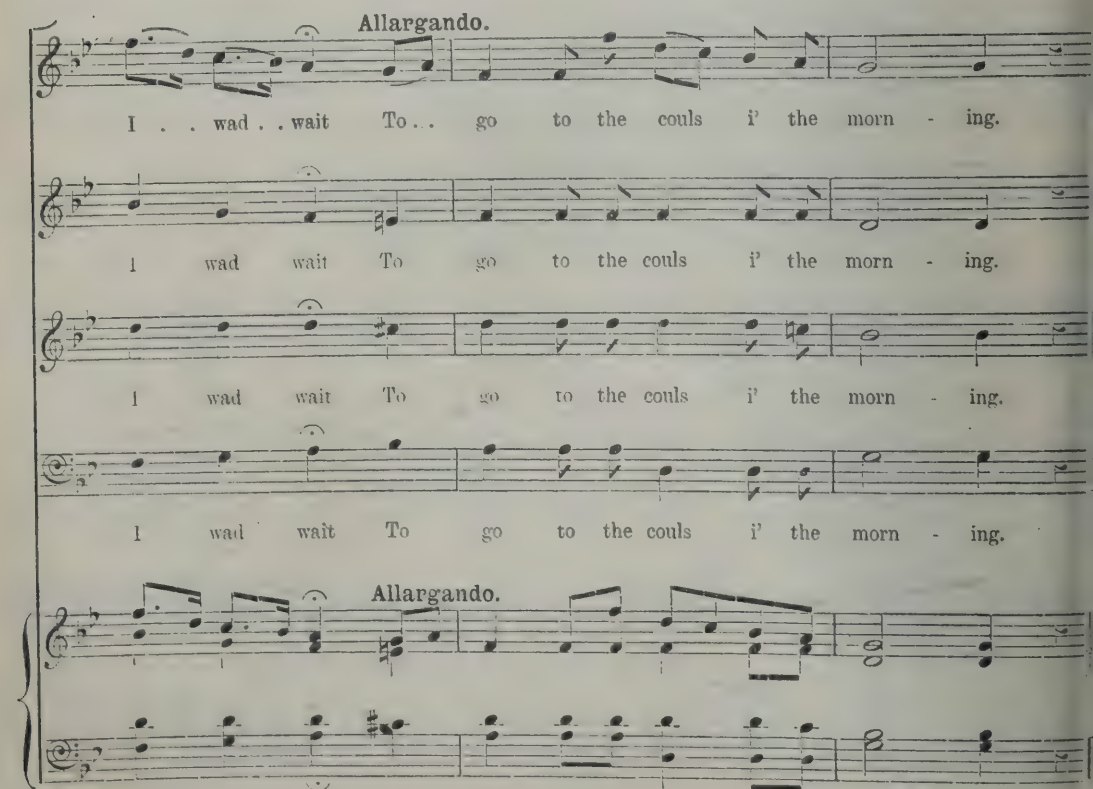

are your drums a - beat - in' . . yet? If . . ye . . were wau - kin', . .

are your dr~~~~~ums a - beat - in' . . yet? O,

are your dr~~~~~ums a - beat - in' yet? O,

are your drums a - beat - in' . . yet? If ye were wau - kin',

Allargando.

I . . wad . . wait To . . go to the couls i' the morn - ing.

I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing.

I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing.

I wad wait To go to the couls i' the morn - ing.

Allargando.

mf

fur-ther us with Thy con-tin - ual help ; that in all our works be -

mf

fur - ther us with Thy help ; that in all our works be -

mf

fur - ther us with Thy help ; that in all . . our works be-gun, and

mf

fur - ther us with . . . Thy help ; that in all our works be -

mf (Sw.)

f

- gun, con-tin-ued, and end - ed in Thee, we may glo-ri-fy Thy ho - ly

f

- gun, and end - ed in Thee, we may glo-ri-fy Thy

f

end - ed in Thee, we may glo-ri-fy Thy ho - ly

f

- gun, and end - ed, be-gun, and end - ed, we may glo-ri-fy Thy

f Gl.

espress. p cres. poco rit.

Name, and fi-nal-ly by Thy mer-cy ob-tain ev-er-last-ing

espress. p cres. poco rit.

Name, and fi-nal-ly by Thy mer-cy ob-tain ev-er-last-ing

espress. p cres. poco rit.

Name, and fi-nal-ly by Thy mer-cy ob-tain ev-er-last-ing

espress. p cres. poco rit.

Name, and fi-nal-ly by Thy mer-cy ob-tain ev-er-last-ing

p Sw. espress. cres. Gt. poco rit.

Ped.

Slow and sustained. pp

life; through Je-sus Christ our Lord. A-men.

pp

life; through Je-sus Christ our Lord. A-men.

pp

life; through Je-sus Christ our Lord. A-men.

pp

life; through Je-sus Christ our Lord. A-men.

Slow and sustained. pp Sw.

(Continued from page 178.)

hundredth song by Mr. Plunket Greene at his London recitals. A wonderful record. If we bear in mind how many of these songs were by native composers, and how much he has done in this way to bring our own musicians into notice, it will be seen that native art is much indebted to him.

M. Rosing has been giving some recitals, and of him too all has been said that it is useful to say. His popularity remains undiminished. Of the lesser-known artists who have given vocal recitals, mention should be made of Miss Hilda Blake, who gave a recital at Wigmore Hall on February 1. She has an exceptionally sympathetic voice, and a pleasant, if not very deep, style; but she made the impression of not yet being at her best. She was joined by Mr. Harold Williams, whose robust and sincere manner will make him popular. He can also give a good account of himself in songs requiring thoughtfulness and delicacy of expression.

The violinists have been very active, but there is no newcomer who calls for special notice. The recitals most deserving of special notice were those given by M. Huberman and Mr. John Dunn, who, however, introduced nothing new. An interesting concert was that given on January 31 at Wigmore Hall by Miss Gwendolen Mason, who played a good deal of harp-ensemble music, including Arnold Bax's Trio for flute, viola, and harp, and that of Goossens for flute, violin, and harp, both unusually interesting from the point of view of tone-colour.

At the same concert Mr. John Coates sang two songs accompanied by harp, flute, clarinet, and string quartet, by Mr. Philip Sainton, the husband of Miss Mason. Grandson of the famous violinist, he is at present a member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The songs show a fine feeling for instrumental colour, and keen instinct for interpreting the moods of the poems set.

These songs were repeated by Mr. Coates at the meeting of the Music Club on February 13, and again made a marked impression. At the same meeting of the Music Club, a new cycle of songs, free arrangements of French folk-songs by Arnold Bax, were sung by Mrs. Anne Thursfield. Mr. Bax has chosen delightful tunes, and there is something very attractive in the skill with which he has retained the old-world spirit while employing the most modern means. One of the numbers, 'Femmes, battez vos Marys,' was repeated—as all of them might have been.

There is a good deal to be said about the pianists. M. Rosenthal gave a recital at which he showed that his technical mastery is as great as it ever was, and that he is still without a rival in certain matters. But he has changed a good deal, both in personality and in the matter of actual tone. Being the artist that he is, it is natural that his change of heart should be reflected by a change of finger. His tone is still of extraordinary brilliancy, but the hard glitter which in the past some people found a defect, has given place to a delightful roundness and softness. We remember his performance of the Schumann 'Carnaval' of old—it was always full of vigour and impulse. It has not lost these qualities, but there is now an added grace and tenderness, and deeper thoughtfulness. He did once or twice bring down the full weight of his left hand on chords when it was least expected, but that is a minor detail. His Chopin playing is full of imagination and sympathy.

After a considerable interval, Mr. Leonard Borwick is again giving recitals. He serves to remind us that there is much value in the style of playing which has now become little more than a memory. It is a matter of fine balance of tone, of nicely calculated proportion in interpretation, and of rigorous self-effacement before the composer. The style has its limitations, and has become somewhat unfashionable in an age which likes things more highly flavoured; but it is good that its virtues should be remembered, and its tendency to adopt a professorial, not to say sacerdotal, attitude should be forgotten. One newcomer among pianists has made a very decided mark—M. Leff Pouishnoff, who is by birth a Persian and by education a Russian. He has a remarkable technique, a sane and healthy style, and an agreeable personality. He deserves better at my hands than to be dismissed in a few lines at the end of a long article, and will be discussed at greater length next month, by which time he will have given several more recitals.

A FEW NOTES FOR MARCH

M. Pouishnoff's next recitals take place on March 3 and 17 at Wigmore Hall. At the Symphony concert at Kingsway Hall, on March 5, Mr. Paul Franz, the operatic tenor, makes his reappearance. The principal feature of the concert of the London Symphony Orchestra on March 14 is the performance of Delius' double Concerto for violin and violoncello, with Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. Felix Salmond, and on April 4 there will be a performance of the B minor Mass. The last concert of the Philharmonic takes place on March 10, when Miss Myra Hess will play Mackenzie's Pianoforte Concerto, and the principal orchestral items are Delius' 'Appalachia' and Scriabin's 'Prometheus.' At the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on March 12, there will be introduced to us M. Franz Schreker—a composer much discussed in Germany just now—when his 'Prelude to a Drama' will be performed for the first time here.

The orchestral version of Gerrard Williams' 'Pot-Pourri' will receive its first performance at Queen's Hall on March 9, when it will be included in the programme of a concert arranged for the English début of the soprano, Miss Ethel Frank. The programme includes also the Scarlatti-Tomasini 'Good-Humoured Ladies.' The orchestra will be the L.S.O., conducted by Mr. Albert Coates.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

It is an easy matter to deal with 'Opera in London' during February, for the simple reason that there has not been any. All the seasons of operagiving have resulted in an eliminative process that leaves the Metropolis without any representation at all. The fact is not by any means due to the unpopularity of the form, for there is plenty of evidence that the public is willing to patronise opera as well as anything else. But there seems to be no one ready at the moment to take up the torn and tattered banner—with its numerous patches—that stands for Opera in English, and thus it is that at the very time the iron is hot there is no one ready to strike. Operatic arrangements generally seem to be in nubibus even as regards a summer season by the Grand Syndicate, but we live in hopes. One thing only is certain, and that is that there will be opera at Covent Garden in the autumn.

THE 'OLD VIC.' PERFORMANCES

In the meantime the good work at the Old Vic. has gone on. Even there it is in reality a side-show, and tolerated as an alternative to the Shakespeare performances. Still it is very popular with the patrons, and very well done. Unfortunately there has not been much of it. At Christmas and the New Year the company gave 'Elijah' in a stage version, the plan meeting with much approval. The visualisation of the familiar oratorio is undoubtedly effective, although I do not think that the stage arrangement given by this company is the best. There is not that wonderful instinct for the theatre that distinguished Mr. Charles Manners' version. It takes the form rather of an illustrated cantata, and leaves a good deal to the imagination—as, for instance, in calling upon Elijah to sing 'Is not His Word' in front of the curtain instead of to the people to whom he has just given proof of the fact. The arrangement of the Widow's Scene struck me as clumsy, and at the opening I missed that thrilling rush of the people on to the stage with their cry of 'Help, Lord.' Nevertheless, although it is by no means so effective a transference as has been shown can be made, it served its purpose in holding the attention of the audience. In whatever way it may be done, there is no question of the impressiveness of the work as thus illustrated. The representation was very good, with a wholly notable Elijah in Mr. Joseph Farrington. It was, in fact, a remarkable reading that met all the demands of the music. How it would come out in the cold light of the concert platform no one can say; but on the stage, with the aid that costume and surroundings afford, it was unquestionably of a very high order. Very excellent singing came from Miss Gabrielle Vallings in the soprano music, and from Miss Irene Ainsley, who had charge of the contralto numbers; and the chorus did its work with a will that never failed.

OLD ITALIAN OPERA

The next opera on the list we reached in February, when the turn of the wheel brought Verdi's 'La Traviata' into the light. I am not one of those who yawn at 'old Italian opera.' It is always of interest to me to hear it because of the extraordinary development that has come about in the form and its expression. And when the particular example is by one of the hands that contributed to the development of the form and expression, I am still more interested. With all the approval they had bestowed upon 'Tristan,' the Old Vic. audiences still had an ear for 'La Traviata.' They enjoyed the performance thoroughly. It was certainly highly commendable for its comprehensibility. The Father's appeal to Violetta was made very poignant, and the whole representation was well calculated to leave no one in doubt as to what it was all about. This is what is wanted. People on the other side of the water rather regard 'Traviata' as a vehicle for the display of the powers of some particular colorature singer and nothing more; the Old Vic. company showed it to be a very human affair, with some music of extraordinary impressiveness such as no man living to-day could provide in the same terms. Miss Muriel Gough attacked the vocal flights courageously, and acted with more effect than I have seen for a long time. Mr. Ben Morgan sang pleasantly as Alfredo, and Mr. S. Harrison made Germonte, the Father, a particularly sympathetic figure, and delivered his famous air in a simple, unexaggerated way that was particularly telling. The audience received it all with warm approval. And what an audience! It may be peculiar to the Old Vic.; it may be its following; it may be its own particular cultivation; but it showed unmistakably how great a love of opera there is among us, and how utterly wrong it is that there should be so few means of gratifying it.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

In last month's notes I suggested that in the case of records of songs in a foreign tongue, a slip containing an English version should be pasted on the record or its cover. After hearing some records sung in English, I have come to the conclusion that the words should always be attached, even when the song is in the vernacular. Here is a fine record of Frank Mullings in the Forging Song from 'Siegfried' (Columbia, d.-s.). The label tells me he is singing in English, and I must needs believe it, but no word are recognizable. This is not necessarily Mullings' fault. The gramophone is capricious in such matters and can furnish two records by a singer—one giving perfect enunciation, the other suggesting that his artificial teeth have temporarily left their moorings. Our enjoyment of a vocal item, whether in the concert-hall or via the gramophone, depends a good deal upon our being able to follow the words, so they should always be attached. This Mullings record is tremendously powerful and exciting. The anvil part comes out curiously like a little flash on the piccolo, but not many other details of the orchestration are clear. This suggests a query: Would it not be an improvement if complex and heavily scored accompaniment were rearranged for recording purposes? A smallish orchestra, with the bulk of the work done by strings and wood-wind, would usually give a much better result than the original.

A good example of the effectiveness of a light orchestral texture is seen in the record of Nos. 1 and 2 of de Greef's Four Old Flemish Dances played by the New Queen's Hall Light Orchestra (H.M.V., d.-s.). The second of these, 'Hoepsasa,' is one of the clearest orchestral records I have heard. The music is delightful, too, with something of the quality of Edward German in it.

That composer's 'Henry VIII. Dances' are still very much alive. Here are the Morris Dance and the Torch Dance, played by the Æolian Orchestra on one side of an Æ.-V., d.-s., and very brilliantly they come out. On the other side is a contrast in Debussy's 'En Bateau,' an orchestral version of one of the charming suite of four pieces for pianoforte duet written in the composer's early days. I have so much regard for it in its original form that I put the record on with misgiving, feeling sure that the delicate little piece would not bear orchestrating. It comes through the ordeal well, however, and in some respects even gains. There are some telling little bits for the lower register of the flute, for example, and the soft brass is more effective than usual.

It seems to be generally agreed that Heifetz is a great player in small pieces. A record of his performance of Chopin's Nocturne in E flat, Op. 9, No. 2, is exquisite in its delicacy and finish (H.M.V.). Did Chopin ever hear this piece as a violin solo? If so, he must have realised that the pianoforte is the wrong medium for it. Only a stringed instrument can sing the higher flights of the melody as they ought to be sung. Heifetz adds some decoration that fully justifies itself, being well in keeping and faultlessly clear in execution.

A first-rate chamber music record is that of the Flonzaley Quartet in the Lento of Dvorák's Quartet in F—the 'Nigger' Quartet (H.M.V.). The texture is above the average in the matter of clearness and balance, and the hauntingly beautiful movement should make many new friends. The remaining movements are presumably on the way.

Grieg's violin and pianoforte sonatas are among his most attractive works, so there should be a welcome for the first movement of the Sonata in C minor, Op. 45, played by Albert Sammons and Frank St. Leger (Æ.-V.). The violin part lies chiefly in the lower and middle registers, and the result is very sonorous, with a good balance between the instruments.

One of the obvious advantages of the gramophone is the facilities it offers in the way of repetition till an unfamiliar work is thoroughly grasped. If I had heard the Romance from Benjamin Dale's Viola Suite once at a concert, I do not think I should have been greatly impressed. But after hearing it a few times on the gramophone, as played by Lionel Tertis and Frank St. Leger (Æ.-V.), it has taken hold of me, and I can see it becoming a favourite. The tone of the viola loses nothing of its appealing quality, and the playing is a delight.

An exceptionally good batch of H.M.V. records arrives just as this review is being closed. I have space now to mention only three. On a double-sided is Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody, played by the British Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boult. Some of the pianissimo sections are barely audible, otherwise this is a very successful record. In violent contrast to its wistful strains is the Scarlatti-Tomasini 'Good-humoured Ladies,' a concert version of the popular ballet music, played by the British Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Boult. This example bears out what was said above as to the excellent results obtained from records of orchestral works in which the scoring makes liberal use of strings and woodwind. The brass so plentifully used in most modern works rarely makes a good show. The trumpet loses its nobility, and suffers a sea-change into something neither rich nor strange—in fact, it comes down in the world, and joins hands with its humble brother of the toyshop, price one penny (pre-war). The lower brass often becomes no more than a vague snore.

In 'The Good-humoured Ladies' the texture of both music and scoring is light, bright, and clear. I have not so far heard an orchestral record in which the scoring could be so easily followed. One could give a lesson in orchestration from such a record as this. Of the music itself, with its old-world gaiety and charm, there is no need to speak.

A first-rate pianoforte record is that of Rachmaninoff's Prelude in G minor, played by the composer. The top and bottom of the keyboard are more equal than usual, and the result altogether is so good that we may hope a large number of people will make two important discoveries: (1) that Rachmaninoff wrote more than one prelude, and (2) that the C sharp minor is not the best of the bunch.

The Great Eastern Railway Musical Society held its hundredth concert at Liverpool Street Hotel on February 2. Miss Hilda Bertram played Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, and Colonel Galloway conducted.

VILLAGE CONCERTS

The reader need not be alarmed. The title looks threatening, but the village concert in this case just happens not to be of that sort which is one of the minor horrors of rural life (the sort at which the curate sings 'I am a Banderillero,' and there are 'recitations'). Quite another sort is posited by 'Village and Country-Town Concerts,' which is the name of an organization that has only to be known in order to win every music-lover's sympathies. The lines on which during the past two years it has run are those which lead to breaking of fresh ground for cultivation. After all, is not that perhaps the most urgent of needs? The averti musical public sometimes appears like a little close corporation, which as things go the novice finds less and less easy of entry. So these concerts of Miss Mary Paget and the Rev. Walpole E. Sealy are not offered to the jaded souls who frequent Wigmore Hall, but they seek to initiate a fresh public in the temple-court of good music (which does not necessarily imply the profoundest, or the most involved and brain-racking music).

Some two hundred and sixty of these concerts have already been given between Devon and Yorkshire. Mozart and Couperin, Elgar and Parry, have been carried far and wide. Sometimes the entire programme is encored, and people have followed the concert-party from one village to another to hear the whole again. The usual plan is for the local arrangements to be managed by a committee or organizer on the spot. The musical arrangements are in the hands of the honorary organizers (Miss Paget and Mr. Sealy). Five musicians are chosen by them, whose fees and expenses are paid out of the takings of the concerts. The cost of a concert varies according to local conditions, but is approximately £5, and the hon. organizers are grateful wherever possible for a guarantee to this amount. A branch of activity which can be indulged in when a tour shows some profit is concert-giving at institutions (workhouses, industrial schools, and so on), such concerts being quite gratuitous. Those who have never attended music-makings in such places can, it is said, have no conception of the delight manifested by the inmates enclosed there from the world.

The organization of 'Village and Country-Town Concerts' is voluntary, and there are no office expenses or commissions. Miss Paget's address is 20, Clarendon Road, London, W.11.

THE BRISTOL 'NEW PHILHARMONIC'

When the critic or the scoffer shoots barbed words at the routine performances of the 'provincial choral societies,' one which assuredly goes unscathed is the Bristol New Philharmonic. The spirit that rules in its choice of programmes proves that here is a musical society that exists pre-eminently for the sake of music (we all know the sort where the music is only an excuse for the Society). What strikes one in its record is the freshness and boldness of this choice, which have given it a career wholly its own. It has not stuck to the ruts, but has chosen to cut across country—yes, and English country!

From its early days the Society made a point of bringing to light at each concert some composition not previously known at Bristol, and more particularly some English work. The Society sprang from small beginnings nineteen years ago. The singing members now number about a hundred and fifty, the orchestra includes fifty professional players of Bristol and Bath (including the members of the Bath Pump Room Orchestra), with a few from London and elsewhere. Three concerts are held each winter. The Society was the first at Bristol to introduce the flat pitch. The president is Mr. George A. Wills. The hon. secretary for seventeen years was Mr. C. J. Weaver. Mr. A. E. Webb now holds the office. One proof of the Society's spirit was its tackling of the formidable 'Sea Symphony' of R. Vaughan Williams, of which it gave one of the first performances. Dr. Vaughan Williams is among its vice-presidents. Mr. Arnold Barter is the honorary conductor of this enterprising organization. The following list of a few of the works performed gives some notion of the Bristol New Philharmonic's activities:

- Elgar: 'The Music-Makers,' 'Sea-Pictures,' 'The Fourth of August,' 'Carillon,' 'Polonia.'
 Vaughan Williams: 'Sea Symphony,' 'Toward the Unknown Region,' 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols,' 'Norfolk Rhapsody.'
 Gustav Holst: 'Hymns from the Rig Veda,' 'Eastern Pictures.'
 Parry: 'Voces Clamantium,' 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.'
 Bantock: 'Sea Wanderers.'
 Percy Grainger: A number of choral and orchestral works.
 Hamilton Harty: 'The Mystic Trumpeter.'
 Rutland Boughton: 'Midnight.'
 B. J. Dale: 'Before the paling of the stars.'
 Frank Bridge: 'A Prayer.'
 Berlioz: 'The Childhood of Christ.'
 Bach: 'Christmas Oratorio' (Parts 1 and 2) and Church Cantatas.
 Debussy: 'The Blessed Damozel.'
 Orchestral works by Delius, George Butterworth ('A Shropshire Lad'), John Ireland ('A Forgotten Rite'), W. J. Fenney, Frank Merrick, Herbert Howells.

A GERRARD WILLIAMS CONCERT AT BATH

A composer who can write witty and ingenious music which is of good intrinsic quality has large claims to an audience's favour. In the case of Mr. John Gerrard Williams he can pursue his claim throughout a whole concert programme without any weakening. This was most clearly shown on February 2, when a recital of Mr. Williams' songs and pianoforte music was given at the Pump Room, Bath. The songs—sixteen in number—included 'Absence,' 'In the bower,' 'A song in Autumn,' 'A widow bird,' 'March morning,' and the favourite 'Inconsequent ballad.' Among the pianoforte solos were six numbers from the 'Pot-Pourri' and two Preludes. With Mr. Osmond Davis to sing and the composer to play, nothing was wanted to make the occasion a success. We are glad to report this step in the progress of a promising young composer whose name is gradually becoming known in programmes and—better still—publishers' catalogues.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Pianist and vocalist (young lady) wishes to meet with violinist and 'cellist for practice of good music. Highgate district.—'MUSIC LOVER,' c/o Musical Times.

There are a few vacancies for good voices, especially tenors and basses, also instrumentalists with good experience, the Marylebone Philharmonic Society. Rehearsals—Orchestra, Tuesdays, 7.30; choir, Thursdays, 7.30, Marylebone College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1.

Wanted, good viola player and 'cellist (male) for quartet. Must be sufficiently advanced to play the most difficult chamber music. Residents in or near borough of Hornsey preferred. Evening work only.—S. F., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced orchestral pianist wishes to meet good string players for practice of standard works, suites (e.g. Coleridge-Taylor), &c. North London district. Must be good sight-readers.—'CLERY,' c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to join trio. West Norwood district.—W. N., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (male) wishes to meet others, for study of chamber music. Romford or Ilford district preferred.—A. I. MENDHAM, 68, Mildmay Road, Romford, N. 1.

Pianist wishes to join violinist and 'cellist for enjoyment. Trios, classical and modern.—'AUTHOR,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced pianist would be pleased to hear from good violin, viola, and 'cello players who would be willing to join him for practice of chamber music.—W. MEACHAM, 39, Springfield Gardens, Upper Clapton, E. 5.

Intermediate pianist-violinist (young lady) would like to accompany violinist (lady or gentleman); or, alternatively, is desirous of meeting pianist who would accompany her on violin. Is willing to help violinist commencing pianoforte study, or to assist pianist beginning violin study. City of Nottingham.—'SNEINTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Cornetist (trained) desires to join good orchestra. J. SYDNEY, 9, Birdhurst Road, S.W. 19.

Gentleman (Bristol) with numerous classical and modern original pianoforte duets and arrangements of orchestral scores, seeks gentleman pianist's assistance in same locality, evenings or week-ends. Facility at sight-reading essential.—'INSATIABLE,' c/o Musical Times.

Tenor wishes to arrange with pianist, trio, or quartet, for practice of chamber-music. Balham or Wimbledon districts.—'CLARINETIST,' c/o Musical Times.

['Clarinetist' made two mistakes: he failed to add his name and address, and (forgetting that announcements are inserted free of charge) he enclosed a postal order. Perhaps he will let us hear from him, otherwise we shall be unable to forward replies.—ED., M. T.]

Church and Organ Music

It is frequently said that organ recitals fail to attract an audience. Of more than passing interest is it therefore that at the annual recital by Mr. Alfred Hollins, at Clapton Park Congregational Church, on Monday, February 7, about eighteen hundred persons were present, and many were unable to gain admission. The great G minor Fugue, Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, César Franck; an Andante in D and Scherzo, Hollins, were skilfully performed. The programme was still further enriched by the inclusion of Liszt's Concerto in E flat, performed as a duet for organ and pianoforte, Mr. Hollins taking the pianoforte part. Mr. John Jefferys supplying the orchestral part.

An orchestra is being formed in connection with the Islington Choral Society. The choir at present numbers about two hundred, and it is intended to give at least two performances this season. Instrumentalists, who are asked to give their services this first season, are invited to communicate with the conductor, Mr. Ronald A. Chamberlain, at the Society's headquarters, 84, Grosvenor Road, London, N. 5. Voices (all parts) are also required.

bach's 'St. Matthew Passion' will be performed in Abbey by the Westminster Abbey Special Choir, with British Symphony Orchestra, on Monday, March 14, 8 p.m. Applications for tickets, which must be accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope, should be sent to the Secretary, W.A.S.C., The Song School, the Cloisters, Westminster Abbey.

bach's Passion ('St. Matthew') will be sung at Southwark Cathedral on Saturday, March 12, at 3 p.m., with full orchestral accompaniment. No tickets are required.

The first of a series of recitals of English Church Music, old and new, will be given at St. Mary's, Primrose Hill, on Sunday, March 12, at 3 p.m. The programme will contain recent works by Holst, Rutland Boughton, Harvey Grace, and Martin Shaw, together with specimens of English Song, and Faux Bourdon Canticles by Byrd. The little known 'Reproaches' by Bernabei will also be sung. Geoffrey Shaw, the master of the music at St. Mary's, will be glad to hear from any tenors or basses willing to help.

A musical service of an enterprising character took place at Andover Parish Church on January 26, when Wesley's 'The Wilderness,' and Franck's '150th Psalm' were sung. Miss Fiander, Miss Violet Bannerman, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Farmer played Beethoven's Quartet in F, Op. 18, No. 1. Mr. Farmer played also three organ solos by Karg-Elert, and Parry, and well-known hymns were sung by the congregation a share.

On January 23, at Seven Kings Baptist Church, Mr. Under's cantata 'Bethlehem' was sung by the church choir. The soloists were Miss Vera Edwards and Miss Martha Forster, and Messrs. J. Piper, R. W. Bentley, and Gull. Mr. Edward D. G. Mason was at the organ, and Mr. E. Carlier Mason, organist and choirmaster, conducted.

ORGAN RECITALS

Henry G. Ley, St. David's, Exeter—Three Preludes on Good Christian men, rejoice, Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Prelude on Welsh Hymn Tune No. 1, Vaughan Williams.

Walter Hoyle, Coventry Cathedral—Fugue 'Ad nos,' Debussy; 'Pomp and Circumstance' (No. 2).

R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (four recitals)—Rhapsody in A minor, Saint-Saëns; Chaconne, Karg-Elert; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach.

W. Hunt, St. George's, Belfast—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge.

George F. Brockless, St. Lawrence Jewry—Toccata in B, Bach; Concert Overture, Faulkes.

G. Virgil Dawson, Mount Zion Congregational Church, Sheffield—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Valse Triste, Sibelius.

W. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey—Chorale with Variations, Mendelssohn; Cortège, Debussy; In Paradisum, Dubois.

Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—'Now thank we all,' Karg-Elert; Christmas Fantasy, Best. Manchester Cathedral—Prelude on 'A Strong Fortress,' Bach; Sonata, Reubke; Finale in B flat, Franck.

Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; The Curfew, Forster; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Imperial March, Elgar; Bromley Congregational Church—Fugue in A minor, Bach; Intermezzo, Hollins.

Caradog Roberts, Brunswick Wesleyan Church, Stockton-on-Tees—Légende, Dvorák; 'Finlandia'; Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias', Richmond (two recitals)—Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake!' Bach; Phantasie on 'Sleepers, wake!' Roger; Symphonie de Noël, de Maleingreau.

E. W. Caulcutt, Abington Avenue Congregational Church, Northampton—Choral Prelude on 'St. Michael,' Vest; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—'Finlandia'; Toccata in F, Widor.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Carillon, Sowerbutts; Prelude 'To God alone,' Bach; Festival Prelude, Dunhill; 'Now thank we all,' Karg-Elert; Prelude on 'Dundee,' Parry.

Mr. C. F. Waters, Immanuel Church, Streatham Common (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Pavane, Johnson; Folk-Song and Morning Greeting, Waters; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley.

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn (four recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in C, Fugue in E flat, Bach; Theme with Variations, Best.

Mr. Fred. W. Gerrett, Southgate Parish Church—Prelude on 'Vexilla Regis,' Baird; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Francis W. Sutton, Croydon Parish Church—Prelude in D minor, Stanford; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (two recitals)—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Bach; 'Pilgrim's Progress,' Part I, Ernest Austin.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Addington—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry; Fantasia on Plainsong Melody, Willan.

Mr. S. M. Popplestone, All Saints', Weston-super-mare—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Evening Song, Baird; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. H. C. Tonking, Park Hall, Cardiff—Fugue in D, Bach; R.A.F. March, Tonking; Christmas Fantasy, Best.

Mr. F. C. Welling, St. Michael and All Angels, South Bromley—Epilogue and Legend, Harvey Grace; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant.

Mr. C. F. Eastwood, St. John's, Dumfries—Allegro Op. 105, Stanford; Preludes on 'Martyrdom,' 'Rockingham,' and 'St. Ann's,' Parry.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Solemn March, Best; Prelude and Fugue in G, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (four recitals)—Symphony No. 5, Widor; Sonata in D, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Overture to 'Othello.'

Mr. Eric Brough, St. Gabriel's, Bounds Green—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Choral in B minor, Franck.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Fugue, Alan Gray; Triumphal March, P. J. Mansfield; March of the Three Kings, Dubois.

Mr. James M. Preston, St. George's Newcastle-on-Tyne (four recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Toccata in A, Best; Carillon, Sowerbutts; Variations on an Old English Melody, Stuart Archer.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata (second movement), Reubke; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Fantasia in G, Bach.

Mr. Frank G. Price, St. Giles', Cripplegate—Ave Maris Stella, M. R. Calho; Prælium, Eslava; Versets, Dupré.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Church of the Holy Communion, New York (nine recitals)—Pastorale, Roger-Ducasse; Fugue in C minor, Shippen-Barnes; Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue, Willan; Symphony No. 2, Vierne; Prelude on 'London New' and Christmas Postlude, Harvey Grace; Passacaglia and Fugue, Daniel Gregory Mason; Chaconne, Fugue, Trilogy, and Choral, Karg-Elert; Symphony, Shippen-Barnes; Adagio, Frank Bridge.

Mr. H. J. Timothy, St. Vedast Foster (five recitals)—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Old French Carol, Quef; Elegie, Rebikoff; Fugue in G minor, Merkel; Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS

Mr. W. J. Allen, organist and choirmaster, Holy Trinity, Hawley, Camberley.

Mr. George Milton Whitehouse, organist and choirmaster, Cannock Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

ORCHESTRAL ARRANGEMENT OF BACH'S ORGAN SONATAS

SIR,—In his article on Bach's organ sonatas, Mr. Harvey Grace mentions Sir Henry Wood's orchestral version of some of their movements. Is he aware of Wetzler's fine transcription for full orchestra of No. 1? It is published by Messrs. Novello. I have often wondered that so effective a work is apparently unknown. It would, I believe, prove to be one of the most popular of Bach's instrumental compositions. Perhaps Sir Hugh Allen will give it a thought when arranging the next Bach Festival programme.—Yours, &c.,

Latimer Road, Notting Hill.

February 12, 1921.

A. W. C.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

SIR,—Dr. Tozer writes that he 'does not suppose that there is any system discoverable in the notation of either Bach or Beethoven.' I do not know whether there is or not, nor do I care, but I know there is a vast amount of 'common-sense' in both these composers which goes far deeper than any 'system' or 'surface-logic.' That is why I would undertake, very cheerfully and confidently, to defend almost any example of Bach or Beethoven that might be attacked on the score of notation by either Mr. Button or Dr. Tozer (or, for that matter, by anyone else).

I do not wish to give to this controversy—or rather friendly discussion—any personal tinge; but I cannot help feeling that Dr. Tozer brings to these questions of notation precisely the same rigidity of mind that he brings to the consideration of my poor little sentence about 'youthful exuberance.' 'Do you mean this, or do you mean that?' we seem to hear him saying to the unfortunate composer. But it is precisely the peculiarity of the composer—if he is a good composer—that he often has half-shades of meaning to express, undercurrents of thought, as it were, which cannot be exactly brought out by any system of notation; they have to be hinted at. Hence the composer has to compromise—to fall back upon methods of notation which may not seem, on a hasty view, to be strictly logical, but which, having regard to all he wishes to express, are logical in the highest degree. It would be easy for me to give particular instances of this, choosing in fact, examples from Mr. Button's book; but it would need the use of musical notation for any clear discussion, and would, besides, take more space than you could probably afford.—Yours, &c.,

10, Ambrose Place,

A. R. CRIPPS.

Worthing, February 10, 1921.

SIR,—If we may judge from Mr. Cripps' recent letter on this subject, he appears to think that the great composers knew how best to put their ideas on paper, and that any attempts to make the rough places plain are a kind of blasphemy. It would be easy to give him, in proof of the contrary, more examples than would fill a whole number of the Musical Times, but I will content myself with two out of many I recently noted in César Franck's set of six organ pieces. Here they are, first as Franck wrote them, then as Buttonised by myself:

EX. 1.

ORIGINAL

REVISED

EX. 2.

ORIGINAL

REVISED

Now it is safe to say that a few such passages as the above—badly laid out, and bristling with unnecessary sharp and double-sharps—in an already difficult work are enough to turn the scale against it, and to cause a busy or impatient organist to abandon the study of it. The more accessible work can make fine music the better. I hope that all new works and as many reprints of old ones as possible, will be edited on the lines laid down in Mr. Button's admirable book. Such editing is of the letter, not of the spirit. The more one sees of the casual and inconvenient way great composers threw their works on paper, the more one regrets that wit all their genius they were in this practical and important respect a Button short.—Yours, &c.,

Balls Pond, N.

February 15, 1921.

WILLIAM CHILD.

'THE RHYTHM OF THE CHANT'

SIR,—An article by Mr. Sidney Grew on the rhythm of the Anglican chant appeared in a recent number, and if this letter does not arrive too late, I should like to be allowed to make a few remarks upon it. The writer, I am glad to see, breaking away from Riemann and Prout, whose theory the strength of bar rhythm is about as far from the truth as it is possible to be.

Because the cadence is very important from a music point of view, Riemann and his followers insist that it therefore loud, and indicates the strong bar. According to this simple theory a penny, being larger than a sovereign is therefore the more important coin.

In dealing with eternal verities there is no such thing as 'Humming and hawing,' 'It might be,' 'In some cases or 'I can conceive it otherwise.' The rhythmic law of the chant follows naturally the rhythmic law in bars, the strong being:

IN BARS

EX. 1.  $\frac{4}{4}$  \* 1 3 2 4 |

EX. 2.  $\frac{3}{4}$  1 2 3 |

OF BARS

EX. 3.  $\frac{2}{2}$  1 3 2 4 ||

EX. 4.  $\frac{2}{2}$  1 2 3 ||

The Anglican chant therefore consists of four sentences, the first and third being three-bar sentences, and the second and fourth four-bar sentences. The following illustration shows clearly the rhythm of the bars, and of the sentence. It will be noted that the Anglican chant stands firmly up eternal rhythmic foundation of pressure and release 2):

* The figures represent strength. The higher the figure the weaker the strength.

length in bars.

entirely object to what Mr. Grew calls the cadential ss. A cadence is a decline and fall of a strain. mann, Prout, and their disciples have helped to kill the cious and natural flow of music by this unnatural rule of ssing the last bar of a musical sentence, and we must be nknful that our great conductors have enough rhythmic nct to save them from carrying out this monstrous ory to its logical conclusion. Mr. Grew's attempt at nining the rhythm of an Anglican chant, while avoiding horrid accentuation at the end of each musical sentence, l breaks the eternal law, the strength of his three-bar nences being either 2-1-3 or 3-1-2, and his four-bar nences being vaguely either 4-3-1-2 or 3-2-1-4.

It is a pity that musicians cannot deal with their art hout having recourse to the terminology of Greek poetry. e rhythmic analogy between poetry and music is not so mplete as a great many people suppose. In poetry the ations of rhythmic patterns are comparatively few: in sic they are illimitable. In poetry the discipline of nlength is imperative, but not the discipline of length. In sic the power to control both strength and length is olutely essential. 'Rising Anapest,' 'Falling Anapest,' actyl,' &c., therefore, while sounding very learned, do carry us very far, and certainly do not help to define the hmic foundation of music. Deep down where there is riability or shadow of turning the musical law stands —a movement, then release. The movement must come t, for absolute immobility is death, and the first sign of must be a movement. Until we know and obey this, ur music will always have an element of weakness.

have not touched upon the question as to whether the lms are pointed suitably or not. I only wish in this tance to stress the eternal law. As this law is not lderstood, it is not surprising that the pointing in our lers is sometimes a lamentable misfit. The law, ver, must not be altered to suit the words: the words st be altered to fit the law.

The Riemann theory is hopeless, because it is opposed to truth and antagonistic to the natural language of tivated humanity.

So far as I am concerned, the law I have stated is nutable, and I have never found it to fail, whether I am nducting a symphony or playing a chant.—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE SAMPSON

(Organist of St. John's Cathedral, Brisbane.

Conductor of the Sampson Orchestral Concerts, &c.).

The University of Queensland, Brisbane.

January 12, 1921.

A PLEA FOR CATHEDRAL LAY-CLERKS

SIR,—As one who has attended several voice-trials for hedral lay-clerkships, and thus got into personal ch with the active members of certain choirs, I have n more or less filled with a sense of pity that the majority uch men, who after all are specialists in their profession, t it an exceedingly lean calling in these days.

In the large majority of Cathedrals, choral matins is still vogue, and as this of course takes place in that part he forenoon when business is at its height, one can quite eciate the fact that employers will not consider the agement of men who are missing from their posts just at ritical hour of the day. As a consequence lay-clerks are ctically excluded from taking part in actual commercial life, and necessarily depend upon a slender teaching connection or upon the precarious emoluments of insurance canvassing, &c.

The two chief drawbacks under which lay-clerks labour are apparently the continuance of choral matins—generally held in an empty Cathedral—and the difficulty they experience in obtaining leave of absence from Saturday Evensong. The necessity for attending the latter service often prevents their acceptance of an engagement on Saturday evening, if a long distance away. The lot of lay-clerks could be improved by the employment of deputy choristers for such services as are likely to prevent the fulfilment of important engagements.

I am aware that at certain Cathedrals considerable licence is allowed choristers as regards absence from duty, but the reverse is the case in many instances.

I suggest, therefore, that a conference of lay-clerks be arranged during the August Bank-holiday week, when grievances could be discussed and a secretary and working committee could be appointed to act on behalf of the whole of the lay-clerks in the United Kingdom with a view to their conditions being improved.

Such a conference would doubtless receive the ready support of a great number of Deans, Chapters, and Cathedral dignitaries, with the result that instead of lay-clerks being, as at present, by reason of their vocation kept out of commercial or professional life, their duties could be so arranged that they would be able to augment the slender incomes derived from Cathedral singing with such extra emoluments as would make their total income derived from all sources equal to that of an ordinary full-time occupation.

I have written on the presumption that a society of lay-clerks is not already in existence. Should my suggestion of a conference be seriously regarded, I shall be pleased to co-operate with a view to its being put into operation.—Yours, &c.,

'INTERESTED.'

'TA-RA-RA-BOOM-DE-AV'

SIR,—In his 'Ad Libitum' notes in February's issue, 'Feste' describes 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' as 'a wretched tune' and as one of the feeblest airs that have ever obsessed a helpless population. It seems to have escaped his notice that it is classical music. If he will turn to Beethoven's Clarinet Trio he will find that the essential part of this air is the theme of the Allegretto con variazioni.—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT W. HORWILL.

159, King Henry's Road, N.W.3.

February 5, 1921.

THE SACKBUT, ETC.

SIR,—The curious implication in 'Feste's' remarks apropos the criticism in the December Sackbut of Mr. Holst's 'Planets' is worthy of comment. He ('Feste') says:

What puzzles me is that to-day anybody sufficiently musical and experienced to be allowed to help in the blowing of so advanced an instrument of musical opinion as the Sackbut should be able to describe the 'Totentanz' as a 'superlative masterpiece.'

As I myself am an occasional contributor to the Sackbut, and as the editor, Mr. Philip Heseltine, is a friend of mine, I may claim to know something of this paper's aims. One of them is certainly not to deny expression of approval by one of its contributors of a work that was composed earlier than the last decade, if he deems it a valuable or worthy example.

As, too, within a short space of time the Sackbut has published articles of a eulogistic nature on two composers so disparate in date as Gesualdo and Béla Bartók, there seems no reason why it should be called either advanced or reactionary. The Sackbut contributors have as little in common with those who think that music ends with Strauss as they have with the press agents of Dada.

'Feste's' assertion of a 'practically unanimous verdict in favour' is not supported by the facts. One other critic, at least, in addition to the syllogistic Barbara, is equally severe—the new critic of the New Age: and one very prominent young British composer has expressed to me an opinion much the same as Barbara's.

'When they do agree . . . their unanimity is wonderful'—and appalling.—Yours, &c., KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.
175, Clarence Gate Gardens, Regent's Park, N.W.1.
February 3, 1921.

MUSIC AT THE CINEMA

SIR,—In paying a visit to a local cinema the other day, I was much struck by the accidental effect obtained when, during a rather impressive scene in 'Alf's Button,' the pianist stopped playing for a few moments, presumably while she searched for a new piece. The scene in question was that in which 'the prettiest girl in London,' fired by a longing to see a battle-field as it really is, mounts upon the parapet of the trench and allows her horror-stricken eyes to travel round the ghastly scene in 'No Man's Land.' The absence of music while this was being shown gave an impression of silent grimness and solemnity which was very powerful indeed, and I have since wondered whether this more subtle use of music at cinemas has ever occurred to those who have the management of these things.

I would like to add that I have just started to take in your magazine as a regular thing, devouring each number from cover to cover and getting so much interest, instruction, and enjoyment out of it that I only marvel at not having discovered it before.—Yours, &c., STUART GUTHRIE.

Flansham, Bognor, Sussex.

[As a rule we exclude from our correspondence columns such appreciation as that with which Mr. Stuart Guthrie ends his letter. We allow the above to stand because of its bearing on a paragraph in 'Ad Libitum.'—ED., M.T.]

A CORRECTION

SIR,—May I bring to your notice an error appearing in your February number under 'Music in the Provinces—Devon,' stating that 'a "Pageant of the Months" was sung by a choir specially formed and trained by Mr. Harold Jones.' I do not know the source of your correspondent's information, but it is so inaccurate that I am venturing to bring to your notice what actually occurred. The performance was given by pupils of the Grammar School, Ashburton, and consisted of the 'Pageant of the Months' and Purcell's Masque in 'Dioclesian.' In the case of the second, three men outside the school—but connected with it as old boys—came in for the solos and to help with the men's parts of the chorus. The orchestra, too, was comprised of friends of the school, who gave their services. Mr. Jones had nothing whatever to do with the training, producing, or conducting of either work. Further the 'Pageant of the Months' is not choir work—it is for twelve solo voices representing each of the months.

Forgive me for taking up your time in this way, but as you have done us the honour of mentioning the performance I felt that you would prefer that the facts of the case should be brought to your notice. Incidentally the educational value of Purcell's work cannot be overestimated. This is an out of the way part of Devon, and the boys and girls of the school have little opportunity for widening their musical knowledge, and by way of training that knowledge I felt that Purcell was excellent material for them to start on. Their only other public appearance was in the summer, when they gave a very successful out-of-doors performance of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' with an orchestra which played Mendelssohn's incidental music.—Yours, &c.,

The Grammar School, Ashburton. E. F. MALCOLM SMITH.
(Senior Mistress.)

Dumfries and Maxwelltown Choral and Orchestral Society gave their second concert of the season on January 21, the programme, apart from the solo work, being orchestral. It included two movements from the 'Jupiter' Symphony, MacCunn's 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood,' J. H. Foulds' 'Celtic Suite,' and Saint-Saëns' 'Scottish Ballet' from 'Henry VIII.' Mr. W. J. Stark conducted.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of March, 1861:

MISS BARNWELL'S CLASS for the practice of Anthems and Glees meets weekly; each member has the privilege of learning a song. Terms, 10s. 6d. per quarter 165, Marylebone Road (N.W.).

R. SCHROEDER'S arrangements of 'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY, and WILLIE WE HAVE MISSED YOU, for the pianoforte. Price 2s. each.

TEMPTATIONS OF GOOD ST. ANTHON. Comic Song (new edition), for a Bass voice, with the verses carried out to music. Price 2s.

EYRE ARMS, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—A concert was given at the Eyre Arms, on February 6, in aid of the funds for reimbursing the Rev. Mr. Irving for the heavy losses sustained through the destruction of his church at St. John's Wood. Among the various singers who gave their assistance upon the occasion may be mentioned Mr. Friswell, who sang 'Gratias agimus' in excellent style accompanied by Mr. A. Williamson on the clarinet. The performance was encored unanimously. . . . Miss Fosbrol sang (as every one else does) 'The beating of my own heart,' proving the old adage that we may have too much of a good thing; she also gave a charming ballad, 'The calm repose of eve,' by Regaldi. The concert was remarkably well attended.

MAIDSTONE.—An organ, by the eminent builder, Willis has been erected in St. Paul's Church, and was opened on the 17th ult. by H. S. Oakeley, Esq. The Maidstone Journal of the 19th says, ' . . . the organ was played on Sunday by Mr. H. S. Oakeley, who accompanied the choir with the most admirable taste, never intruding his instrument into undue notice, but supporting and assisting the voices in a manner that reminded us very strongly Dr. Wesley. He played Handel's "Occasional Overture" as a concluding voluntary in the morning; and in the evening, "I will sing unto the Lord," followed by Bach "St. Ann's" Fugue. The instrument consists of two complete rows of keys, of the compass CC to G, fifty-six notes, and a pedal board of the compass of CCC to (thirty-two notes.'

ORGAN PERFORMANCES.—On Wednesday, February 20, an organ performance took place at the manufacture of Messrs. Gray & Davison, to exhibit a new instrument built by this firm for the Church of All Saints, Kensington Park. . . . The powers of this beautiful instrument were exhibited by M. Lemmens, of the Brussels Conservatoire who is indeed a superb player. His style, however, is not English, and the extremely florid passages in which he much excels will not suit the general taste in this country. His touch is wonderfully clear and distinct, and his pedal play is perfect, but he seldom spares his right leg to give any effect to the swell, which in this organ is particularly full and rich.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

LUIGI MANCINELLI.—The sudden and unexpected death of Luigi Mancinelli, at Rome, on February 2, at the age of seventy-three, removes one of the most notable figures in the Italian musical world. Born at Orvieto, Mancinelli early revealed himself a conductor of the highest quality, and his triumphal career in this field began at the International Exhibition of Paris in 1878, where he directed the famous Turin Orchestra. He visited England soon after, and had an altogether remarkable début at Covent Garden, whilst his more famous brother Mariano had preceded him. He was very successful also in America, Spain, and Russia, and it was under his baton that 'Lohengrin' was first presented at Rome, where on April 3, 1880, the opera had an extraordinary success, so much so that Wagner, hitherto unknown personally to Mancinelli, said in an autographed photo with the inscription 'Bravissimo.' His episode marked the beginning of a friendship which lasted till the end of Wagner's life, and at his death it was Luigi Mancinelli who directed the great commemoration concert at Turin.

Bologna conservatory owes much to the brief period in which Mancinelli was its director, and he has never interrupted his activity as composer. Best known amongst his works are the operas 'Hero and Leander'—in which he enjoyed the co-operation of Arrigo Boito—and 'Francesca da Rimini,' the oratorios 'Isaiah' and 'St. Agnes,' and the Scene Veneziane. In his later years he employed his talent in writing musical commentaries for cinematograph scenes, notably for 'Frate Sole' (see Musical Times, August, 1918) and 'Julian the Apostate.' These efforts to reconcile the cinema and music have given rise to much discussion, but Mancinelli had no doubts as to the possibilities of their combination. At the time of his death he had just completed a new three-Act opera, 'A Summer Night's Dream,' with libretto by Fausto Salvini.

His sudden death has profoundly moved the people of Rome, who entertained the greatest admiration and affection for the master. At the moment of writing, an unceasing procession of visitors is passing before his house to pay their last respects to the memory of one who had gained and maintained a place amongst the foremost artists of the day.

LEONARD PEYTON
(Rome).

CHARLES GAMBLIN.—On January 7, at the age of eighty-seven, a pupil of S. S. Wesley, and for many years organist of St. Cross Church, Winchester. For forty-two years he was conductor of the Winchester Choral Society.

WILLIAM WARD.—On January 22, at the age of eighty-seven, organist and choirmaster of Hinton Baptist Church, Wetherham, for over sixty years.

CHORAL CONCERTS

Reading Philharmonic Society gave an excellent concert at the Town Hall on January 20, under the direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams. The choir sang Coleridge-Taylor's 'The lee shore,' Vaughan Williams' 'The spring-time of the year,' Quilter's 'To daffodils,' Balfour Gardiner's 'The sun is up,' Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' Ireland's 'A cradle song,' German's 'London Town,' L. S. Robertson's 'The banks o' Doon,' and Sullivan's 'The long day closes.' The instrumental numbers were German's 'Theme and Six Diversions,' Foulds' 'Celticament,' the 'Unfinished' Symphony, Jarnefelt's 'Preludium,' Sibelius' 'Valse Triste,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Ballet, and the 'Peer Gynt' Suite.

CARLISLE.—The Carlisle Choral Society gave its second concert of the season on February 3, when the programme included Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture, and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha.' Miss Cecilia Farrar, Mr. John Collett, and Mr. Herbert Smith were the principal vocalists; band and chorus numbered two hundred and forty, and Dr. F. W. Vadey conducted.

BASINGSTOKE.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was given by the Basingstoke Victory Choir at the Town Hall, on January 20, under Mr. Duncan Hume. The choral programme included also Coleridge-Taylor's 'Sea-Drift' and Stewart's 'The Bells of St. Michael's Tower.' Mr. Manuel Jones and Miss May Ashley were the vocalists.

CHISWICK.—'Merrie England' was performed by the Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society, on January 25, under Mr. David M. Davis. The solos were in good hands, and with a choir of over a hundred and an orchestra of fifty the choruses made a good effect.

FOULDS (LINLITHGOW).—The Choral Society gave a highly creditable performance of 'Elijah' on February 2. The soloists were Misses C. Mawer and R. Graham and Messrs. W. Tawse and Herbert Brown, the latter giving the very best interpretation of the Prophet's part ever heard in the district. Mr. T. Sommerville conducted.

'Samson and Delilah' made a melodious and effective programme for the Royal Choral Society on February 5, and one that did not greatly tax the powers of the choir. The choruses gained an impressiveness beyond the reach of stage performance. The chief opportunities, however, went to the soloists, and Mr. Frank Mullings and Madame Kirkby Lunn did everything that could be done with the name parts. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

Under Mr. Allen Gill the Alexandra Palace Choral Society gave 'Israel in Egypt' at the Northern Polytechnic on February 5, and added one more to a long list of triumphs. In every respect the choral singing was memorable. Miss Mary Fielding, Miss Eleanore Mowbray, Miss Elsie Chambers, and Mr. Frank Webster sang the solos.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

That amongst the students at the R.A.M. are a number of brilliant young organists was proved by the excellent organ playing which was heard at the recital on Monday afternoon, January 31. Noteworthy items in the programme were Bairstow's Toccata-Prelude (Reginald Paul), Bach's Toccata in C (William Veitch), and John E. West's Fantasia (Malcolm Boyle, Goss scholar). Other organ pieces were: Introduction and Fugue from Sonata by Reubke, two Chorals by César Franck, and Dr. Charles Macpherson's Fantasy Prelude. In addition to the organ music the programme included Mackenzie's Benedictus for violin and organ, and Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei' for 'cello and organ (Miss Lilly Phillips and Mr. Arthur Temple). 'Four Songs of Childhood' by F. Keel, sung by Miss Olive Groves, and two songs by Sullivan, sung by Miss Dorothy Collins, completed a most interesting programme.

The fourth and last of Dr. Richards' lectures on the history of music took place on February 16, when he dealt with the instrumental works of Haydn and Mozart, the illustrations being selected from the string quartets of these composers. In the two previous lectures the progress of instrumental music had been traced from the time of Bach, and the lecturer passed in review the work and influence of Bach, Handel, Couperin, Rameau, D. Scarlatti, and C. P. E. Bach. The illustrations were played by Miss Désirée MacEwan, and included Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.

At the annual general meeting of the R.A.M. Club, held on Saturday, January 29, Dr. Richards was elected as the new president. The first social meeting of the year was arranged for February 26, when the Spencer-Dyke Quartet was announced to play works by Dvorák and Ravel and Miss Winifred Christie some pianoforte solos.

A RAMBLERS' CLUB IN WARDOUR STREET

On January 20 some members of the London and Country Rambling Society made (under the auspices of Mr. A. H. Blake) an interesting 'ramble' through the printing and publishing works of Messrs. Novello. By the courtesy of the firm, the party were shown the various stages in the production of a musical composition, from the original manuscript to the printed and bound copy with which the lay public is familiar. They also had an opportunity for seeing something of the processes of type-setting, engraving, lithographing, &c.

During the course of the afternoon Messrs. Novello produced for the inspection of the visitors a number of historic books, manuscripts, autographs, portraits, &c., the history of which was explained by Mr. Augustus Littleton. Among the treasures thus on view were several original scores of Wagner, Gounod, and other famous composers, together with a number of rare and valuable volumes. As a souvenir of the occasion each guest was presented with a copy of 'A Short History of Cheap Music,' and also with copies of No. 1 and No. 935 of the Musical Times. The recipients were much interested to note that whereas No. 1 (dated June, 1844) contained only eight pages, No. 935 (dated January, 1921) runs to seventy-two pages. Tea, hospitably provided by the firm, brought a pleasant and memorable visit to an agreeable conclusion.

Other afternoon 'rambles' arranged by the London and Country Rambling Society during the next few weeks will be made to Barclay's Brewery, Child's Bank, Dr. Johnson's house and relics, and the Hall of the Saddlers' Company, &c. These expeditions are all conducted by Mr. A. H. Blake, who is a recognized expert on London's history. Full particulars as to membership, &c., are obtainable from the hon. secretary of the Society, 76, Queensborough Terrace, Hyde Park, W.2. H. W.

A TWO-STAVE MUSIC RULER, AND HOW TO MAKE IT

By J. O. THAIN

The drawing of stave-lines by hand is one of those processes which, except in cases of dire necessity, cannot be tolerated. It is a process so obviously mechanical that the mind demands that mechanical means be employed in its execution. How often, however, does it happen that either through indolence or lack of foresight the music-writer finds himself minus ruled manuscript paper just at the moment when it is most desired, and when it is neither convenient nor possible to obtain a supply! In such a case, unless he has duly equipped himself with a stave-ruler, he is placed under the necessity for doing this most tiresome and monotonous task by hand. Such a contingency, it will be agreed, is worth while providing against; and a means which will allow of this being done without incurring any pecuniary expense, will be appreciated by all engaged in MS. work of a musical character.

FIG. 1.—Music Stave Ruler, drawing Two Staves simultaneously. (Actual size.)

Before, however, entering upon a description of the article in question, it may be remarked that a single stave-ruler of similar pattern was, in the first instance, constructed. This, though it worked admirably, was found not to represent all that could be desired in the way of speed: after a few pages had been ruled, one's interest in the work began to pall, and there was a disinclination to proceed beyond a certain point. This fact naturally led to the devising of an instrument capable of drawing two staves simultaneously. With such assistance the element of waning interest was at once eliminated. Page after page was successfully negotiated, and this with that delightful feeling which is indicative of energy well expended: for the work was not merely being done at ten times the speed possible by hand, but at the same time a substantial saving was being effected in the cost of MS. paper.

That such a result can be achieved with such uncompromising materials as household pins and cigar-box wood is perhaps a matter for wonder. Yet the fact remains that this little appliance has proved itself to be thoroughly efficient and durable. Rarely does it occur that the lines 'miss'; and when this has happened such failure has not been due to any defect in the instrument itself, but has arisen from one or other of the causes enumerated below. As regards durability, it need only be said that the instrument has been in use for upwards of three years during which time some thousands of lines have been drawn. No material deterioration in the quality of the work done by it has, however, become apparent, and practically no adjustment or attention of any sort has been called for. These considerations, I think, amply justify the small amount of trouble involved in making this little time and money-saving device, instructions for which will now be given.

FIG. 2.—A and B. Side and Front Views of one of the Pins.

B. Two Pins coupled to form one Pen.

As will be seen on reference to the diagram (Fig. 1), there are only two essentially different parts which call for any special attention, viz., the holder and the pens, the principle on which the instrument works being that of a pen compass. For the holder, one of the narrow sides or cover of a cigar-box is used, the thickness of which should be somewhere between  $\frac{1}{8}$ -in. and  $\frac{1}{4}$ -in. Strip off the paper, and shape the wood in the manner shown, then with a fret-saw cut out the two oblong apertures. These are subsequently filled with melted beeswax or glue. They serve a three-fold purpose:

FIG. 3.—Sectional View of Borer. (Actual size.)

- (1.) The boring process is simplified and made more certain and accurate;
- (2.) They assist adjustment of the pins by relieving them of undue pressure;
- (3.) The subsequent wax filling ensures perfect rigidity of the pins.

For the pens, procure a packet of  $1\frac{1}{2}$ -in. pins. Twenty of these will be required. Cut off the heads and points so that a length of  $1\frac{1}{4}$ -in. remains. Holding each one carefully with a pair of pliers, with the narrow end in the jaws, file and bend it to the shape shown in Fig. 2a, care being taken to preserve as broad a point as the diameter of the pin will allow, and then round off the edge as in Fig. 2b. The quality of the work done by the instrument depends on the perfection of the pen-points and of their alignment, every care should be taken to get them uniformly true and accurate.

The pins having been shaped to the desired form, the next thing to do is to fit them into the holder. For this purpose a borer, very slightly larger in diameter than the pins to be inserted, will be required. As there may be some difficulty in procuring a ready-made tool of precisely the correct dimensions, it will be expedient to manufacture one specially for the purpose. Fig. 3 shows how this may be done. Obtain a  $1\frac{1}{2}$ -in. pin. This will probably be found to have the correct diameter. Cut off the head and bend it down at right-angles as shown. For the handle get a cylindrical piece of wood  $1\frac{1}{4}$ -in. long and about  $\frac{1}{4}$ -in. in diameter. Round off the corners, and cut a groove to the centre sufficiently long and wide to admit the bent portion of the pin. Then insert the latter and drive a short pin transversely through the wood, just above the middle of the bend. This will prevent its slipping, and the result will be a very serviceable tool. Do not touch the point; any accurate work can be done with a centre point than with a bradawl-shaped one.

The method of fixing the pins into the holder is as follows: Commence at one of the outer ends, and work systematically towards the other end. As the pins are to be arranged close up against one another (thus giving a convenient width to the spaces between the stave lines), the boring must be done in conjunction with the pins. Bore hole No. 1 straight and accurate, and let the point of the borer protrude through the opposite end of the holder. Then insert pin No. 1, curved side outwards, and press until the end lies flush against the opposite side of the holder. Now hold the borer close up to and parallel with the pin just inserted, and bore hole No. 2; insert pin No. 2 so as to make a couplet (Fig. 2c) with the first pin. Proceed in the same way until all the pins have been inserted, special care being taken that the wedged point of each lies perfectly at right-angles to the holder.

Now comes the process of adjustment. Place a straight-edge longitudinally across the points, and note those which require depressing or elevating. To depress, press the protruding member gently against a hard surface. To elevate, apply pressure to the opposite end. Do not rest content until each separate point makes contact with the straight-edge. It will also probably be found that the points are more or less out of alignment. This is readily corrected by means of lateral pressure.

Now melt a little beeswax or glue—an old thimble will excellently serve the purpose of a melting-pot—and pour into the oblong apertures on each side of the holder. After allowing it to set, scrape off the surplus wax with a knife. All that now remains to be done to complete the instrument is to insert the guide-pin (shown at the extreme left in Fig. 1). This is necessary to prevent the pen-joint from being damaged by the guiding ruler; and it also serves to keep the latter clear of ink. Cut it off about  $\frac{3}{8}$ -in. below the pen-points, so that the manuscript paper will not be marked by it when the machine is in use.

Lastly, an ink-trough sufficiently large to allow of all the pens being dipped simultaneously must be constructed. A piece of  $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. square deal 2-in. long, having a well 1-in. by  $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. by  $\frac{3}{4}$ -in., will serve this purpose very well.

Now give the instrument a trial. Underneath the paper be ruled place a sheet of blotting paper, and see that the face on which it rests is perfectly level. Fill the ink-well with a non-corrosive ink, such as Field's, and allow the instrument to remain in it for a few minutes, so that the easy reaction of the new metal may be reduced to a minimum. Then, taking it out and holding it at an angle of 45 degrees, draw it across the paper with a firm, steady, and even pressure. If any of the lines fail to come out, or are unequally spaced, or of uneven thicknesses; set to work to remedy the defects. There is ample room between the pens to allow of a file being used to good effect, and errors in alignment or spacing can readily be corrected by the application of pressure in the right quarter. Do not rest satisfied until the instrument is able to produce lines in every respect as perfect as a printed copy. Always wipe the pens dry of ink after using (a small flannel cloth being kept for this purpose), and when not in use keep in a little box together with the ink-well and the wiper. Should any 'missing' of lines occur after being in use some time, do not at once blame the instrument. It is more than probable that such defect is due to the clotting of the ink on the pens through careless wiping of these, and is especially liable to happen if precaution has not been taken to use non-corrosive ink. In such a case the remedy is to soak the pens in hot water, being careful not to wet the holder. Other causes of failure are insufficient inking of the pens, bad manipulation of the machine, and the use of greasy paper, or want of evenness in the surface worked on. Attention is therefore directed to these simple details. In case it should be necessary at any time to remove one of the pens for the purpose of repair, this can readily be done without disturbing the others by scraping off the wax immediately above the defective member, and pushing it out from the inner side with a flat-pointed pin. Replacement is equally simple.

THE SUBCONSCIOUS MIND AND THE MUSICAL FACULTY

Miss Katharine Eggar chose the above as the subject of a paper read before the Musical Association on December 7. Quoting Miss E. M. Caillard to the effect that 'The quest of origins seems to have a special attraction for the modern mind,' the lecturer remarked that this was hardly true of the modern musician, who apparently was content to get on with the music and to let other people do the thinking. The word 'subconscious' was generally familiar, though psychoanalysts talked of the unconscious mind in reference to a certain activity in man, and used the expression 'the unconscious' to describe the region in which that activity worked. The word 'conscious' meant that we knew what we were doing, but we did many things without knowing that we were doing them. The study of human behaviour under various conditions by medical scientists, and the investigation of so-called supernatural phenomena by psychological researchers, scientifically proved the existence of an enormous range of subliminal activity in man—below the threshold of consciousness. Arising out of their work we found two lines of scientific study of human nature, the one covered by the term Psychology, the other by the term Psycho-analysis. These two terms implied the scientific recognition of the soul, which animated the body but was independent of it. The great work of Psychology had been to study the subconscious of the normal, to try to learn the workings of the human soul. Gradually it had led us to study the soul acting upon, and acted upon by, forces which were not bodily, and its latest development was the study of the hitherto unexplained state of the subconscious mind—the study of the self-revelation of that mind in dreams.

What light did all this throw upon that very peculiar and mysterious mind-activity—the musical faculty? If it were worth while to study dreams, the youngest science should have something to tell us of the origins of the musical faculty. The result was disappointing. We must do our own thinking and investigating. What could we, as musicians, usefully appropriate from the conclusions of the great labourers in the various parts of the psychic field? Freud maintained that the unconscious was based upon primary impulses, the two fundamental principles of psychic life being (1) pleasure, (2) reality. These produced a constant conflict in the individual, the former always lulling him into inertia, and the latter always spurring him on to activity. There were also three very powerful tendencies in the human being: (1) the injurious tendency to repress, to drive down into the unconscious what should be dealt with in the conscious; (2) the beneficial tendency to sublimate, to convert the primary impulses into something more exalted; (3) the tendency of the mind—harmful or beneficial according to circumstances—to form a complex, i.e., to accumulate associations around an idea. The conscious mind exercised a vigilant censorship upon the unconscious, which was only relaxed during sleep or some similar passive condition. We thus arrived at the conclusion that the Phantasy was condemned as the enemy of reality. This view of the image-making faculty was a serious stumbling-block to the musician, for it deprived art of all reality.

This seemed a deplorable break-down, but the reason was not far to seek. In this new science, the primary impulses were united to physical ones, and their symbols likewise to bodily ones, from which it followed that the fundamental pressure which was the first of the two principles of the psychic life was a pleasure of the senses, and that, by the fundamental reality, the other principle, was meant that derived from a person's conscious life as a social being. But why should we stop short at our animal origins? Surely our mental origins were just as important and just as strong. The mind must have a primitive force, a law of nature just as strong as the body has, but of a different origin.

The two principles of psychic life, we are told, were pleasure and reality. Substitute the word 'pain' for the latter as a true antithesis to pleasure. In music we had the perfect echo of these psychic principles—the two principles of concord and discord—and the works of art which we created were an expression of the conflict between the two. The life of the soul and the life of music obeyed the same law. After touching upon the way in which the complex affected music, the lecturer remarked that Madame Montessori had done more than anyone to make us see the harm of repression, and how we induced it by our methods of education. It behoved musicians to consider how they treated the subconscious mind of the little child with regard to music. There was a danger of our imposing our own ideas of composed music upon the child's subconscious mind, and in an eagerness to pour in, causing a repression of that which should come out. With all her wonderful insight, Montessori, like Freud, fell foul of the imagination. To her the fancy, the image-making faculty was a hindrance to sensible development.

The idea of music being the language of the emotions had been very much overdone, said the lecturer, and she regarded the aberrations of the Futurist school as a healthy revolt against the obtrusion of conventional emotion. Without realising it, people were sick of subconscious emotion, and longing for super-conscious emotion. All artists were trying to get away from concrete complexes into the freedom of the abstract, in pursuit of that reality which was a very different thing from the counterweight to the instinct of pleasure. To sum up, the musical faculty was a primitive force, acting by primary impulse, manifesting a super-conscious pleasure by means of the reality of sound. Were it not for music, we might doubt the reality of the philosophers; but music was a proof of the sublimating power of man's nature.

Perhaps the most important of current 'movements' in London music is that which is taking chamber music into the suburbs. Occasionally a suburb joins in by giving its own chamber concerts. An example has been shown by the town of Kingston, which is happy in possessing a local String Quartet of first-class capacity. This Quartet, consisting of Miss Yvonne Mont-Clar, Mr. S. Oakley Parrott, Mr. Bernard Dudley, and Mr. Francis Hill, gave a concert on January 24 to members of the Kingston Congregational Church Guild. The programme comprised Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 4), César Franck's Violin Sonata, and a movement from the same composer's Pianoforte Quintet, the pianist being Mr. B. J. Harrison. These works were well interpreted, and the audience was helped to enjoy them by the preliminary remarks of Mr. Hill on the composers and their music. Such an evening does credit to the musical life of Kingston, and it is to be hoped that many more may succeed it.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BELFAST

The Philharmonic Society's third concert of the season, on February 4, was remarkable for the first performance of a symphonic tone-poem, 'Dunluce,' by Edward Norman Kay, a young musician who began his career as an amateur member of the Society's Orchestra. He is a Mus. Doc. Oxon., and F.R.C.O. The present work is, so far, his most important composition, and although not programme music suggests many imaginative thoughts that might animate a visitor to the romantic ruins of a feudal castle overhanging the sea near the famous 'Giant's Causeway.' 'Dunluce' contains many exquisite and original melodies developed with great skill, and the employment of most of the resources of a modern orchestra. The performance, conducted by the composer, was accorded a very appreciative reception.

The work for choir and orchestra was Brahms' splendid 'Song of Destiny,' which was performed in a manner that could scarcely be surpassed, so full was it of intelligent reading, fine phrasing, and precision. It was conducted by Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, who also conducted 'The Barber of Bagdad' (Cornelius), 'Slavonic Rhapsody' (Dvorák), and the March from 'Tannhäuser.' Mr. John Dunn (violin) played Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor with the orchestra, and solos by Schubert and Wieniawski. Miss Helen Anderton sang the Invocation from Verdi's 'Il Ballo in Maschera,' and other songs.

A Quinlan subscription concert was given on February 5, conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. Miss Jessie Munro (pianoforte) and Mr. Mostyn Thomas (baritone), assisted in the presentation of a fine programme that included a Suite for Strings (Purcell), arranged by Albert Coates, Isolda's 'Liebestod' (Wagner), Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, and Liszt's Concerto in E flat (pianoforte).

BIRMINGHAM

February brought in its wake an unusual number of concerts of various grades of which only brief mention can be made.

The fourth 'Celebrity' subscription concert, given at the Town Hall on January 18, was decidedly of an operatic character, the artists being Mesdames Rosina Buckman and Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Maurice D'Oisly and Jean Vallier, the latter a bass of the Paris Opéra. The solo violin was the young Serbian, M. Bratza.

At the third Symphony Concert, at the Town Hall, on January 19, the place of honour was once more assigned to an English orchestral conductor, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, who introduced his 'London Symphony,' the players being the City of Birmingham Orchestra. The composer appeared to be greatly gratified with the admirable ability of his local rank and file, as also was the audience, if one may judge by the splendid reception accorded to his interpretation. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted Strauss' 'Don Juan,' but it was in Bantock's poem for orchestra 'Dante and Beatrice,' that he achieved his greatest triumph. A pleasing interlude was the splendid unaccompanied singing of madrigals and part-songs—by Orlando Gibbons, Weelkes, Bantock, Elgar, and Cornelius—by the Appleby Matthew Choir.

There was a large audience present at the Town Hall on January 20 on the occasion of Mr. Herbert Brown's third concert. In addition to vocal contributions by Mr. Norman Allin, Miss Alice Vaughan, and Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. Joseph Lewis' Wolverhampton singers contribute four numbers of Bantock's choral symphony, 'The Vanities,' that were quite gloriously sung. The well-known violinist, Mr. Zacharewitsch, gave some violin solos with his customary artistic finish. Mr. Victor Benham was the solo pianist, and Mr. Michael Mullinar the accompanist.

Miss Beatrice Hewitt's third afternoon concert of the season was given at the Royal Society of Artists Exhibition Rooms on January 22, when she introduced Fauré's Pianoforte Quartet No. 1, the concert-giver presiding at the pianoforte, with Mr. J. S. Bridge, Mr. Paul Beard, and

C. Hock sustaining the string department. The same artists also contributed Brahms' Quartet in E minor, and Goossens' Trio, 'Holiday Impressions,' was included in the programme. The whole concert was pleasing and artistic.

The third City of Birmingham Orchestra's popular Saturday Night concert, held at the Town Hall on January 22, under the direction of Mr. Appleby Matthews, was somewhat of a departure from the usual orchestral concerts. The Police Band, of which Mr. Matthews is also conductor, appeared in place of the City Orchestra, in addition to which the Coventry Choral Society, conducted by Mr. John Potter, rendered madrigals and part-songs by Veelkes, Cyril Jenkins, Sakhnovsky, Coleridge-Taylor, and Harrison. It is a well-trained choir, the chief winners at the Midland Competition, Leamington Festival, &c., which was heard to especial advantage in Cyril Jenkins' six-voice part-song, 'Out of Silence.' The Police Band's selection was in every way calculated to suit popular taste, and met with the distinct approbation of the audience. Mr. C. W. Jenkins, the City organist, assisted in Elgar's 'Sursum Corda' and the Overture '1812.'

A novel programme was presented at the Sunday evening concert at the Theatre Royal on January 23. It was a mixture of chamber music and brass orchestra, the latter provided by the City of Birmingham Police Band. The two items of chamber music comprised Brahms' String Sextet in G, Op. 38, and Mozart's beautiful Quintet in G minor, performed by Messrs. Alex Cohen, C. W. Bye, Paul Beard, F. Miller, and L. G. Dennis. The tone of the band was overwhelming—indeed the Theatre Royal is not suited to organizations of this calibre. An agreeable item was Schubert's Sonatina, Op. 127, No. 2, for violin and piano, executed by Mr. Alex Cohen and Mr. Appleby Matthews.

The third Max Mossel concert of the current series, given at the Town Hall on January 26, was restricted as to artists, the vocalists being Madame Donalds and M. Mischa Leon, and the solo pianist Miss Myra Hess. The last named especially distinguished herself in the way she treated our of Scarlatti's sonatas. The vocalists gave a superb selection of vocal excerpts of all schools, the delivery of which attained a high standard of excellence. All the vocal items were most artistically accompanied by Mr. Gerald Moore.

The Birmingham Choral Union's special Elgar concert at the Town Hall on January 29 reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. Richard Wassell, and the orchestra. The Elgar items included the 'Spirit of England' and the 'Carillon,' the poem to the latter being once more recited by Miss Katrina Lund.

It is some time since Mr. Edgar L. Bainton, composer and pianist, has been at Birmingham. He came to the Theatre Royal Sunday evening concert on January 30, by special invitation of Mr. Appleby Matthews, and was heard in his Concerto Fantasia for pianoforte, which had its initial performance at Bournemouth on January 6,—with orchestral accompaniment by the City of Birmingham Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Matthews. The work is appealing, and shows a deal of inventive talent and a certain modernity of style. It was well accompanied, and the solo part was rendered by a master hand. Of considerable attractiveness were also his three short orchestral pieces, written in Ruhleben camp during the war.

The extraordinary energy and activity displayed by Mr. Appleby Matthews as director and conductor of the City of Birmingham Orchestra and conductor of the Birmingham Police Band has been officially acknowledged by the Birmingham Civic Society in presenting him with the Society's gold medal, an event that took place at the Town Hall on February 9, on the occasion of the fourth symphony concert. Mr. Adrian C. Boulton conducted.

The Midland Musical Society gave a concert at the Town Hall on February 5, conducted by Mr. John Tyler. The programme consisted of 'Acis and Galatea,' the 'Hymn of Praise,' and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, played by the rising young virtuoso, Mr. Paul Beard. The vocalists were Miss Dorothy Showell, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Sidney Lewis.

The third Quinlan concert, held at the Town Hall on February 8, had for its artistic personnel Miss Miriam Licette, Madame Guilhermina Suggia, Mr. A. Cranmer, and M. Moritz Rosenthal.

The concert-list for February also included a song recital by Miss Nancy Guest, assisted at the pianoforte by Mr. Eugene Goossens; Mr. Hubert Brown's fourth subscription concert, given at the Town Hall on February 11, the artists being Mesdames Gleeson-White and Margaret Cooper, and Messrs. Walter Hyde and Bronislaw Huberman; and Mr. Sidney Stoddard's Sunday night Town Hall concert in aid of the National Institute for the Blind, when the artists included Miss Clara Davies, Miss Alice Vaughan, Miss Patricia Rosslyn (pianoforte), Mr. Walter Messinger, Capt. Horace Stevens, and Mr. Arthur Hytch (violin).

BOURNEMOUTH

Bournemouth may count itself fortunate in that its most important concerts—the Symphony series—have not suffered up till now from the reported depression that is elsewhere overtaking the serious side of musical art. Good attendances on Thursday afternoons have been well maintained, and it is becoming increasingly evident that the town's welfare, in a musical sense, is dependent upon a continuance of the progressive policy which is pursued at the symphony concerts.

Mozart's E flat Symphony and the Brahms Violin Concerto were the central features at the fifteenth concert on January 13. Both were well played, M. Louis Godowsky's performance of the solo music in the arduous Concerto being of a very vigorous and bracing character. Two novelties were also brought forward, viz., Roger Quilter's 'Children's Overture,' which made a merry prelude to the proceedings, and the 'Worcester' Rhapsody by Alexander Brent Smith (conducted by the composer), which, however, did not quite fulfil expectations, a promising opening section giving way to a dance movement that fell short in the matter of climax.

Rarely have we heard finer orchestral playing at the Winter Gardens than that presented during the following week in Glazounov's masterly sixth Symphony. Mr. Dan Godfrey's reading of the music was extremely powerful and moving, and went with wonderful verve. The first performances here of Arthur Somervell's Variations for two pianofortes and string orchestra, and the Suite, 'Thomas the Rhymer,' brought to light two choice and well-written compositions of the lighter type. The first-named was played with much artistic finish by Miss Jessie Munro and the composer. Great pleasure was afforded by a revival of Humperdinck's Overture to 'Hänsel und Gretel.'

Elgar's most important works are certainly not being overlooked by Mr. Godfrey, and on January 27 the new Violoncello Concerto received its first performance in this town. It is undoubtedly one of Sir Edward's best works. Music of an intimate or mystical nature seems to be the repository of his most idyllic conceptions, and those true music-lovers who shun the sheer blatancy of too many concertos will find balm in the restrained and beautiful moods of this serene composition. Signor Giovanni Barbirolli was not entirely equal to the demands of the solo music, but his playing unquestionably gave a considerable amount of pleasure. A Theme and Variations (first performance here) by B. Walton O'Donnell—conducted by the composer—came as a strong contrast to the Concerto, and set the roof of the Winter Gardens reverberating right merrily. We also enjoyed a capital performance of the 'Unfinished' Symphony.

Miss Dorothy Howell made her début at Bournemouth at the eighteenth concert, and in addition to playing Mackenzie's effective 'Scottish Concerto,' for pianoforte in a very able manner, received the deserved plaudits of those who remained afterwards to hear her tone-poem, 'Lamia.' Both for its imaginative properties and for its technical accomplishment the composition is to be highly commended. If it were the product of a musician of established repute it would be spoken of in terms of general praise. When one considers that it is the work of a composer whose student days can hardly yet be over, it must be ranked as a conception of extraordinary merit and of yet still more uncommon promise. Beethoven's C minor was the Symphony at this concert, and its performance displayed unflinching discernment and a complete realisation of its emotional possibilities.

BRISTOL

Dr. Norman Sprankling, a sound and scholarly musician, gave a pianoforte recital at Henleaze, on January 22, at which he endeavoured with much success to interpret the composer's meaning without tricks or show. Liszt, Hubert Parry, Chopin, Moszkowsky, and Rachmaninoff were among the 'subjects' chosen, and he added a Rhapsody of his own composing which was of more than ordinary interest.

Those charming singers of ballads old and new, Madame Donalda and M. Mischa Leon, delighted one of the best houses the Mossel concerts have seen at the third fixture on January 25 at Colston Hall. It was largely a Scandinavian evening, and that in itself was a novelty. Miss Myra Hess played four Scariatti Sonatas, and three Chopin Studies and the A flat Impromptu.

Bristol University Settlement at Barton Hill is doing a good work for music in the poor district of that neighbourhood. At the third concert, on January 26, various classical works and old English songs were given by three instrumentalists and a vocalist.

Vaughan Williams' original 'London' Symphony was the chief item at the New Philharmonic Society's concert on January 29, at Colston Hall. A vice-president of the Society, Dr. Vaughan Williams directed his work in person. All credit to Mr. Arnold Barter, the enterprising conductor, for so remarkable a programme of modern music—once more. Bristolians were enthusiastic over Dr. Williams' big work, and in response to a request for a second hearing, voiced in the local Press, it was arranged that the Symphony should be included in the Beecham Orchestra Quinlan concert on February 25, at Colston Hall. Miss Margaret Fairless played with much expression, though at too quick a pace, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. The band, under Mr. Barter, gave with care Elgar's 'Froissart' Overture and Saint-Saëns' 'Le Rouet d'Omphale,' and the choir sang several unaccompanied pieces, such as Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's 'Smoor the Fire' and Byrd's Lullaby, sympathetically. Altogether it was a really notable programme.

Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society—that very delightful and skilful body of unaccompanied male-voice singers, under Mr. George Riseley—drew a crowd of people to Colston Hall for its seventy-seventh annual 'ladies' night' on February 3. Mr. Charles Knowles, a baritone, had been engaged instead of the usual tenor, and a local alto, Mr. John Horsell, also sang. The first was at his best in Kunze's 'Sailor's Song,' and the second in Dowland's 'Legend of the Avon.' The choir sang with nice graduation of tone such old favourites as 'Strike the Lyre,' and that fine example of Clarke-Whitfield, 'Wide o'er the brim.' It is always refreshing to listen to this wonderfully-trained body of singers.

Bristol Children's Concert Society, following Mr. Cecil Sharp's idea that folk-music renders the path of the young musician easier to walk in, gave a folk-song concert on Saturday morning, February 5, at Victoria Rooms, at which over a thousand of the older school-children of the city were present to hear Miss Dorothea Webb's interesting 'Illustrated Talk on Folk-Songs.' Miss Webb gave a number of old-world songs, and explained them, pointing out that they were much more worthy of attention than the popular songs of the day.

The Bristol Constabulary Charity Concerts arranged by Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker, are among the principal features of the Bristol year. At the second venture this season, on February 5, Miss Flora Woodman, Miss Margaret Balfour, Signor Lenghi Cellini, and Mr. Harry Dearth, a notable list of artists, contributed songs old and new to the great delight of a packed audience.

The Clifton Chamber Concert Party gave its third concert on February 8, at Victoria Rooms. These five artists—Madame Marie Faulkner Adolphi (first violin), Miss Hilda Barr (second violin), Mr. Alfred Best (viola), Mr. Percy Lewis (violincello), and Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte)—always give great pleasure by the soundness of their performance. Ravel's Quartet in F major, four pianoforte solos of Bridge, a Rachmaninoff Sonata, and a Shakespearean string quartet of Speaight, showed not only technical skill, but excellent interpretative qualities.

Under Lady Pearson's organization, a party of blind singers and players of high merit gave an interesting matinee concert at Bristol Hippodrome on February 9. Their technical skill was not less than their powers of expression. St. Dunstan's should benefit largely by their excellent musical work.

Bristol Choral Society drew once more a very fine attendance to its performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on February 12 at Colston Hall. Under Mr. Riseley's training this big choir, after fifteen years, came fresh to the melodious work and acquitted itself with all the vigour and broad tone-power, combined with due appreciation of delicacy and restraint, which its conductor so consistently instils. There was a compact and full band, and the soloists who completed the fine combination were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss May Keene (a young local contralto), Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Robert Radford.

Capt. Francis Burgess, the conductor of the London Gregorian Association, gave a lecture on January 27, to the Bristol branch of the Church Music Society, in the Museum Lecture Theatre, on 'The Beginnings of Christian Church Music.' The lecture, which was illustrated by gramophone records, was of exceptional interest in view of the fact that many of the examples were of ancient Church music, and afforded avid comparison of the various eras, ranging from the year 312 to recent times.

CHATHAM AND DISTRICT

The first real opportunity for local concert-goers to hear some of the best modern music was afforded at the pianoforte recital at Chatham by Mr. Edward S. Mitchell. The recitalist had an intensely appreciative audience, and gave to many of his hearers a first glimpse into vast territories they had not hitherto explored. He first played numbers by MacDowell, Schmitt, Ireland, and Blumenfeld; then more complex music by Medtner, Arensky, and De Falla; and rounded-off an hour-and-a-half's playing with items by Catoire, Glazounoff, and Scriabin. Mr. Mitchell was also heard in two of his own compositions, and in works by Frank Bridge and Janefelt.

The series of Chatham subscription concerts was brought to a close on January 26 with a programme sustained by Mesdames Elsa Stralia and Dorothea Vincent, and Mr. Bertram Binyon and Louis Levitus. The concert was a triumph for young Levitus, Miss Isolde Menges' protégé violinist, who possesses remarkable technique and interpretative ability for his thirteen years.

There was much to interest subscribers in the concert by Rochester Choral Society on February 2. Mr. John Ireland played his 'London Pieces' and 'The Island Spell,' his interpretations being of value to many pianists in the audience. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the vocalist, and Miss Gertrude Fuller played violin solos. The chorus, conducted by Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, sang madrigals by Wilbye, Weelkes, and Morley.

Sittingbourne Musical Society gave its first concert of the season on February 2, when the chief items in the programme were Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet' (Mr. Frederick Taylor, soloist) and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' (Mr. John Adams, soloist). Mr. H. Oscar Baker conducted.

Tonbridge Orchestral Society also gave its first performance on February 2, Mendelssohn's 'Italian Symphony,' the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, Herbert Howells' 'Minuet,' and an overture in classical form by the Society's conductor, Prof. Van Hulst, were the main features of the concert.

East Malling Choral and Dramatic Society gave a concert on February 2, at which the choir, under Mr. F. Cornford, sang a cantata and several part-songs. Members of the Society also provided solo items.

The finals in the Kent folk-dancing competitions were adjudicated at Maidstone on January 29. Eight teams competed for the banner, which was awarded to Top Hill. Maidstone Blue Triangle Club was proxime accessit.

The Federated Board of British Music Industries has given a large silver cup for annual competition at Kent Musical Festival (to be held at Folkestone in May). It is to be awarded to the best solo competitor, either vocalist, or instrumentalist.

CORNWALL

Millbrook Choral and Orchestral Society is quite a new enterprise, and its performances of 'The Messiah' on January 12 and 19 were very praiseworthy. Mr. P. P. Wedlake conducted. 'King Saul' was sung by the choral society in the tiny village of Carclaze on January 30, under the direction of Miss M. Williams. St. Ives United Choir performed the cantata 'Belshazzar's Feast' at Penryn on February 3, directed and accompanied by Mr. J. L. Jacobs. 'A Tale of Old Japan' and 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' were performed by Looe Choral Society on February 3, with the help of a good orchestra. The Rev. E. A. Saunders secured artistic results both from choir and orchestra, the singing of the former being remarkably good.

Count Goston de Merindol, a talented pianist, at a recital at Launceston on February 3, began with the C sharp minor Sonata of Beethoven, and after playing music by Schumann, Schubert, and Chopin, represented modern music by Russian composers, including a Study and Mazurka of Scriabin.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

Musical life at Coventry maintains its normal activity for this season of the year, despite the large amount of unemployment in the city, which so far has failed to prove detrimental to concert attendances.

Coventry Musical Club gave a third successful concert on January 19, when the male-voice choir presented an attractive programme under the leadership of Mr. John Chapman. The soloists included Mr. Richard Bayliss, bass soloist of Coventry Cathedral choir.

The newly-formed Rover Orchestra, ably conducted by Mr. W. R. Clarke, gave a convincing performance at its second concert, held in Albany Road hall on January 21. The programme—that sustained the standard set by its predecessor—included Mozart's Symphony No. 40 and the 'Freischütz' and 'Semiramide' Overtures.

Coventry Choral Society, led by Mr. John Potter, visited Birmingham Town Hall on January 22, and appeared at a concert organized by Mr. Appleby Matthews, and created a favourable impression.

Counter-attractions adversely affected the attendance at the Chamber Music Society's third concert of the season, which took place in St. Mary's Hall on January 25. Mr. T. Henry Smith (violin), Mr. Percy Hall (violinello), and Mr. Arthur Woodall (pianoforte) provided a trio programme which included Beethoven's Trio in C minor, Op. 1, and Tchaikovsky's Trio 'To the Memory of a Great Artist.' The vocalist was Mr. Herbert Simmonds, an established favourite at Coventry, whose selections included the 'Four Jester Songs' of Granville Bantock. Mr. William Woodall played a number of modern pianoforte compositions by Cyril Scott and John Ireland.

In aid of the Railway Benevolent Institution a well-attended concert took place in the Baths Assembly Hall on January 26. The soloists were Miss Lilian Stiles-Allen, Miss Norah Scott, Mr. Frank Webster, Mr. Norman Allin, and Miss Winifred Small (violin). A local pianist, Miss C. M. Gibbs, accompanied with success.

The Armstrong-Siddleley Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Mathew Stevenson, gave an attractive programme at Parkside on January 28. The 'Meistersinger' Overture, the 'Boabdil' Ballet (Moszkowski), and works by Dvorák, Sibelius, and Messager were performed. Miss Muriel Sotham and Mr. Kenneth Sterne were the vocalists, and Miss Cockerell played a number of harpsolos. Mrs. Gordon Vickers-Jones was the accompanist.

Considerable local interest centred round the appearance of Mr. Edgar Bainton, son of a well-known Coventry clergyman, at Birmingham, on January 30. Mr. Bainton appeared with the Municipal Orchestra, at Birmingham, when he was heard in his new Pianoforte Concerto, and also conducted three orchestral pieces, composed while he was interned at Ruhleben. Mr. Edgar Bainton had recently visited Coventry to deliver a lecture at his father's church on 'Music and Religion.'

The Centaur Boys' Orchestra, under Mr. Alfred Petty, gave another concert on January 31. Miss Alice McGowan's annual students' concert took place at St. Mary's Hall on the following evening, when a noteworthy performance of Liza Lehmann's 'In a Persian Garden' was recorded. At a concert held in the Baths Assembly Hall on February 3, Miss Joan Willis, the well-known Birmingham 'cellist, appeared.

Coventry Philharmonic Society has put into rehearsal the concert version of Gounod's 'Faust.' The announcement of Dame Clara Butt's first appearance locally is creating considerable interest.

At Leamington there is little to record except a fine performance of 'St. Paul' at Milverton Church on January 25. Miss Millicent Cooper and Messrs. A. P. Miles and D. C. Moore were the soloists, Mr. Frederick Eccles was at the organ, and Mr. George Kennett conducted.

DARLINGTON AND DISTRICT

Chamber music is doing exceptionally well with us this season. The third concert of the Darlington Chamber Music Society was given at Polam Hall on January 20, when the Beatrice Hewitt Pianoforte Trio played Brahms' Op. 8 and Goossens' 'Impressions of a Holiday,' Op. 7. At the final concert in March, the London String Quartet will supply the programme. The second chamber concert of the Middlesbrough Musical Union brought the Brodsky Quartet for the first time to the town. They played Elgar's Op. 83, Tchaikovsky's Andante Cantabile, Mendelssohn's Canzonetta, and Mozart in E flat. Miss Helen Anderton was the vocalist, and Mr. Paul Kilburn accompanied. The fourth Corbett concert at Middlesbrough, on February 9, was given by the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. The programme comprised the conductor's Purcell Suite, Beethoven's fifth Symphony (the four opening notes of which were taken Adagio), and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, Good Friday music, and 'Walkürenritt.' It was a fine concert. An operatic concert by Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, and M. Jean Vallier, forming the third of the Powell concerts, was given at Hartlepool on February 4. Miss Marie Hall was the violinist. At the fourth concert, in March, the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, with Mr. Landon Ronald, will appear, so that the district is well supplied with instrumental music this season. The Darlington Choral Society is preparing Handel's Passion Music for a Good Friday performance in St. Hilda's Church.

DEVON

Barnstaple Music Festival Society has selected 'The Creation' and Dr. H. J. Edwards' 'The Ascension' for its next concert.

Honiton Choral Society, on January 13, gave a good performance of 'An Ode to the West Wind' (Charles Wood), Mr. Lancelot Holden conducting. The choir, numbering seventy, sang with good tone and expression, and Miss F. M. Smith played the orchestral part on the pianoforte.

A Sullivan night given at Plymouth on January 19, by a choir under the baton of Mr. Percy Butchers, comprised 'The Prodigal Son' and part-songs. Dr. Harold Lake was at the organ, and played the 'In Memoriam' Overture, with Miss Rita Lang at the pianoforte. The performance was repeated on January 30.

A new choral society made its appearance at Plymouth on January 19, being the Samuel Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society, formed and conducted by Mr. Douglas Durston. The chief principle of the Society is that one work of the composer's shall be included in each concert, and at the initial event much more than this was done. The choir sang part-songs, 'Song of Proserpine' and 'The Lee Shore'; Miss Gwendolen Coleridge-Taylor, a daughter of the composer, gave musical monologues, with accompaniment for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, composed by her father, the most important being Hans Andersen's 'Clown and Columbine'; Mr. George East (violin) played the 'Gipsy' Suite; Mr. Hylton Organ (violoncello), played the Variations in B minor; Mr. Roland Hayes, a negro tenor vocalist, sang 'Onaway, awake' and 'Life and death.' Music by other composers included Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio (Mr. Durston, pianist), César Franck's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet' (with Mr. Harry Smith as soloist), and some Negro Spirituals sung by Mr. Hayes.

'The Messiah' has been sung by Bideford Musical Festival Society on January 26, conducted by Mr. E. G. Laycock; Tavistock Parish Choir, on February 9, directed by Mr. W. Clotworthy; Teignmouth Choral Society, on January 27, the choir, which has improved greatly during the season, being supported by a good orchestra, Mr. Edwin Smyth conducting. The soloists on this occasion—Miss Fifine de la Côte (who sang with the true feeling of oratorio), Mr. Roland Hayshe, and Mr. Walter Belgrove—were exceptionally good.

Holsworthy Choral Society's first concert after reconstruction, on January 27, comprised a very good performance of 'Merrie England,' Mr. H. P. Letcher conducting.

Plymouth Mayflower Pageant Choir and Ebenezer Wesleyan Choir combined under the direction of Mr. David Parkes to sing 'The Last Judgment' on February 6. The two hundred voices were well balanced, and had been thoroughly prepared in the work. Mr. H. Moreton, at the organ, compensated for the absence of an orchestra. Three thousand people were present.

Mr. M. N. Durnford, of Kingswear, has written in conjunction with Mr. L. Cawthran (librettist), a musical play, 'Caressin, a tale of Persia,' which was successfully produced on January 12, at Dartmouth.

Dr. Markam Lee is giving at Exeter a course of lectures on British Music, and when on February 4 he came to the subject of Madrigals, Exeter was not able to produce a party of madrigal singers to give illustrations. For a city of Exeter's age and traditions this surely was a disgrace—and the lecturer did not hesitate to say so.

At the distribution of certificates at Exeter in connection with Trinity College of Music local centre examinations, on January 15, String Quartets by Schubert ('Rosamunde') and Frank Bridge ('Phantasy') were admirably played by Miss Phyllis Smith, Mrs. Mathew, Miss Dean, and Mr. W. L. Sutcliffe. At Sidmouth, on January 27, Mrs. Ernest Bullock (pianoforte), Miss Phyllis Smith, and Mr. Sutcliffe gave a highly enjoyable chamber concert, including the Brahms Horn Trio and the Dvorák 'Dumky,' as well as Ernest Farrar's imaginative Celtic Suite for violin and pianoforte. Exeter Chamber Music Club has had two meetings, and purposes continuing into May. In a society of this kind, which is of private character and attracts only those who are keen, there seems no reason why operations should cease at all, except perhaps in August and September, when members are generally scattered.

On January 12, the orchestral band of the R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division, conducted by Lieut. P. S. G. O'Donnell, played the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, the 'Fingal's Cave' Overture, 'Casse Noisette' Suite, a 'Capriccio Espagnol' by Rimsky-Korsakov, and a composition for strings, 'Folk-Song Phantasy' by Dr. Harold Lake, which had more of the character than the reproduced material of folk-song. A new orchestra formed in Devonport Dockyard made a successful first appearance on February 2, playing 'Faust' and the 'Henry VIII.' dances, the Rev. F. Harrison-Smith conducting. Ilfracombe Orchestral Society has made progress under Mr. H. Watt-Smyrk, and on February 4 played the 'Tannhäuser' March, 'Othello' Suite (Coleridge-Taylor), Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques,' and the 'William Tell' Overture. Dr. H. J. Edwards played pianoforte solos.

Stanford's 'Stabat Mater'—a work that deserves more attention than it receives—was performed by the Westminster Choral Society at Central Hall on February 15, and the same programme included Cowen's 'Rose Maiden.' Mr. Vincent Thomas conducted.

DUBLIN

On January 17 and 24 there were two interesting recitals of classical music at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society. The former, given by the Catterall combination, with Dr. Esposito, and the latter by an orchestra under Dr. Esposito's skilful direction, with Signor Grossi as leader, afforded students in particular an educational treat. Ultra-modern composers were eschewed, and there were no fearful experiments with the whole-tone scale, but instead, admirable selections of old and new masters gave unstinted satisfaction, especially the Corelli excerpts. It is gratifying too, notwithstanding the decadent taste of Dublin, that so many young students from the different schools of music in the city attend these recitals.

A leading Dublin newspaper recently published a photograph of a local lady (with cap and gown), who had graduated as an Associate of the National Academy of Music, and the information was added that the fair graduate had obtained the diploma of that institution 'with first-class distinction, 100 per cent.' 'Smarvellous!

At the 'Mater' concerts on January 16 and 23, new compositions by Mr. Joseph Schofield and Mr. Joseph Crofts got a hearing, and both works gave promise of even better things in the near future, Mr. Schofield's work displaying uncommon ability. His tone-poem 'Lament' is based on an old Irish theme, worked out on unconventional lines.

Two local music firms announce the arrival of a grand selection of German pianofortes, priced at from sixty to ninety guineas. One who has tried over a ninety guinea Berlin make tells me that it is scarcely worth £50, so there must be profiteering somewhere.

Miss Joan Burke, the well-known and highly accomplished Dublin vocalist, has been appointed professor of singing in the Leinster School of Music.

Dr. G. E. P. Hewson gave an organ recital at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on January 31, and showed fine discrimination in his programme. His rendering of the Bach Prelude and Fugue in G, and of selections from Wagner, Brahms, Bonnet, Schubert, and Cyril Scott were much appreciated, although the habit of accelerating the tempo of the Fugue did not make for clarity.

The Syllabus of the Feis Ceoil has been issued, and one learns that Sir Ivor Atkins, Mus. D., Signor Denza, Mr. Spencer Dyke, Mr. Frederick Dawson, and Mr. J. Ord Hume will be adjudicators at the Festival which will take place from May 2 to 7. Last year's balance sheet showed a profit of upwards of forty-seven pounds.

The Quinlan concert on February 4 was a huge success from every point of view, the only disappointment being the absence of Miss Jessie Munro. Of course the outstanding feature was the magnificent conducting of Mr. Albert Coates. It was a revelation to many. As vocalist Mr. Mostyn Thomas created a very good impression, displaying his fine baritone to much advantage, especially in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci.' The Beecham Orchestra was superb, particularly the trombones and wood-wind.

At the 'Mater' concert on February 6, a new work, 'Slumberland' (overture and fairy-ballet), by an Irish composer, Mr. Hubert Rooney, made a favourable impression.

The Brodsky Quartet delighted a most appreciative audience at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on February 7. Although the personnel of the combination has changed, Dr. Brodsky is still the outstanding figure, and dominates his colleagues in characteristic style. Of particular interest were the Beethoven and Haydn items.

By way of variety, a goodly crowd patronised the Gaiety Theatre from February 7 to 12 to enjoy the popular strains of the 'Country Girl.' If it did nothing else, the bright and catchy music served to divert people's minds from the present somewhat gruesome times.

The British Music Society has now a branch at Sydney, N.S.W. The inaugural concert was given on December 1 with the Verbrugghen String Quartet as principal artists. The programme included Herbert Howells' Pianoforte Quartet in A minor, Frank Bridge's 'Londonderry Air,' a Violin Sonata by Arthur Benjamin, and a Suite of Dances for pianoforte by Esther Kahn.

EDINBURGH

On January 17 Mlle. Marie Aussenac was solo pianist at Atterton's orchestral concert. The Concerto was Schumann's 'A minor, and Goossens' 'By the Tarn' and 'Tam o' Shanter' proved most interesting to a Scots audience. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted.

On January 24 an ideal programme was presented, and easily stands out as one of the most interesting of the series. Borodin's 'Dans les steppes de l'Asie centrale,' Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 2, Saint-Saëns' 'Phaeton,' and Dukas' 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' all received memorable interpretations. Mr. Landon Ronald conducted.

On January 31 Mr. Harold Samuel captured the imagination of the audience by his intimate reading of Bach's concerto. It was beautiful, and contrasted well with César Franck's Symphony in D minor. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted.

On February 7 M. Bronislaw Huberman appeared as interpreter of Brahms' D major Concerto. Schubert's Symphony No. 7 received most delicate handling by Mr. Landon Ronald, and proved a delightful finale to this excellent series of concerts.

On February 8 Mr. Albert Coates conducted the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, and left nothing to be desired in Brahms' fourth Symphony. Mr. Mostyn Thomas received fine welcome at the same concert as vocalist.

But our record of orchestral music for the month is not yet complete. Prof. Tovey, whose enthusiasm knows no bounds, has transferred his Reid Orchestral Concerts to our City Hall, and is giving a series on Saturday evenings, trusting that popular prices may establish a finer taste in matters musical among the masses. His programmes are always unusually interesting, and he opened his series on February 5.

The Beethoven celebrations took the form of a Festival of his Quartets by the London String Quartet from January 18-26. No criticism of such a unique combination is needed, and it is gratifying to state that the concerts were excellently subscribed and well-attended.

On February 10 Miss Jean Waterston gave a vocal recital. unquestionably an artist with exceptional interpretative ability, she submitted an extraordinary programme drawn from Schubert, Brahms, and Wolf. Her British section included numbers by Delius, Stanford, Ireland, Boughton, Vaughan-Williams, Gerrard Williams, Davidson, and Ralph Gardiner. In breadth of outlook and catholicity of taste, Miss Waterston is possibly the greatest art-singer Scotland has yet produced.

GLASGOW

The Weir Choir, conducted by Mr. William Nisbet, gave a very good concert on January 27 in a programme of carefully selected part-songs. This choir is one of a considerable number formed in connection with large industrial concerns, and which have in recent years come into being as the result of the Competitive Festival movement at Glasgow. On the same evening, and under the auspices of the Glasgow Corporation, the Scottish Orchestra played a popular programme before a large audience in Springburn Public Hall. The annual concert of the Athenæum School of Music took place also on January 27, when the students were heard in a programme of solo vocal and instrumental music, and in some chamber compositions. On February 1 the Choral Union and Scottish Orchestra joined forces in a rendering of Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride.' It is many years since this work was heard here, and the advance of choral technique makes it sound somewhat obsolete. Mr. Warren Clemens conducted, and got the best he could from the choir. The Scottish Orchestra exhibited an occasional roughness in its interpretation of the instrumental part. Miss Siles-Allen sang the soprano airs very well, but in the tenor part Mr. John Booth was overweighted. Mr. Herbert Brown (at short notice) gave the baritone part acceptably. The Glasgow Select Choir made one of its now rare public appearances on February 5, and under Mr. Percy Gordon showed that it can still hold a good place among our local choral bodies. The last of the Choral and Orchestral Union's classical concerts took place on February 8. An excellent programme, which included the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, Schubert's Symphony in C, and Brahms' Violin Concerto in D, was played by the Scottish Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald. M. Bronislaw Huberman was solo violinist. The programme for the annual plébiscite concert on February 12, which terminates the season, included the 'Leonora' No. 3 and the 'Mastersingers' Overtures, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' Suite, Délibes' 'Sylvia' ballet music, and Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy.' Among the concerts by visiting performers have been that of the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Albert Coates, Heifetz, and several vocal stars and Miss Myra Hess under the Mossel series.

HASTINGS

A musical season of unusual brilliance will end at Easter, when Mr. Julian Clifford takes his orchestra north to Harrogate. October, it is confidently hoped, will see them back again. There are daily concerts in our beautifully appointed hall, the well-chosen programmes and first-rate playing providing music-seekers with a perpetual source of relaxation. Among many interesting events there was M. Arthur de Greef's new Orchestral Suite, which had one of its first provincial hearings on January 16. Thematic originality is not its strong point, but its melodies, though obvious, are eminently graceful, and all the more acceptable for their tasteful orchestration. The work will doubtless claim some attention from conductors. The same occasion provided an opportunity for hearing Mr. Julian Clifford in Saint-Saëns' G minor Pianoforte Concerto, in which he played exceedingly well. The 'Eroica' stands out among the symphonies of the month as being deeply impressive, and for the surprising ease of the high E flats for horn. Both conductor and orchestra revelled in Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' Overture. Mr. Vernon Warner's playing of the Schumann Concerto was more intellectual than romantic, though his pianistic sense is unexceptionable.

Both Miss Tessie Thomas and Elgar's Violin Concerto came as strangers to Hastings on January 22. The violinist should rank very high among her contemporaries if she paid more attention to absolutely true intonation, for she indicated her capacity to explore the hidden mysteries of a work which has baffled many a more experienced player. Technique has no terrors for her; she has an unfaltering sense of rhythm; and her emotional temperament was perfectly compatible with this complex example of the composer's genius.

Mr. Julian Clifford was the beneficiary of two crowded concerts on February 5, when he was also the recipient of numerous presents and public compliments. M. Siloti, who came to add glamour to the occasion, was so captivating in the Tchaikovsky Concerto that he had seven recalls. His reading of the work certainly removes it from its hackneyed groove, and though differing from all others, is perhaps the most fascinating among them. Such beautiful and distinguished playing could well afford to indulge itself in a few wrong notes at the start; but it made the Andantino a delight, and there was the authority of a master in the Finale. A violin solo by the conductor's gifted son was also one of the attractions, others being the dramatic singing of Miss Ethel Fenton, and Mr. Ceredig Walters' songs. This baritone is one of the few who sings as a man should—without effort, vibrato, or affectation. An expectant audience thoroughly enjoyed Julian Clifford's well-written 'Ode to the New Year,' performed by the Hastings Madrigal Society and the Orchestra. Organ and harp (Miss Hilda Atkinson) were pleasantly combined in Pierné's Harp Concerto at one of Mr. Allan Biggs' recitals at Christ Church, the programme also including the Allegretto from Beethoven's seventh Symphony.

The competition arranged by Colonel Somerville, Commandant of the Royal Military School of Music, at Kneller Hall, for original military band music, brought in twenty-six works, of which five will be played during the forthcoming concert season at Kneller Hall. The judges, Captain Williams (Grenadier Guards) and Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, were disappointed in the general level of the music.

LIVERPOOL

Conducted by Sir Henry Wood, the seventh Philharmonic concert, on February 1, provided golden numbers in music by two of the immortal trio of B's, viz., Bach and Brahms. The former was exemplified in the Orchestral Suite No. 6, which Sir Henry has so cleverly constructed from the clavier music. He has done real service in his happy selection and transference to the larger orchestral medium of music which makes a direct human appeal. To the Bach lover the Suite again gave pure delight, and, to judge by the applause, there were a goodly number of Bach lovers present. Remarkably fine performances were also given of Brahms' second Symphony, Elgar's masterful Introduction and Allegro for strings alone, and Tchaikovsky's passionate 'Francesca da Rimini' fantasia. Miss Flora Woodman has a flexible soprano voice of excellent quality, which was especially well used in a difficult air from Grétry's 'Zémire et Azor,' and also in songs by Weckerlin, Fauré, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Roger Quilter, admirably accompanied by Mr. Walter Bridson.

A revelation of the choral resources hereabouts was afforded by the singing of the magnificent male-voice choir of Masonic brethren, two hundred strong, which was called into being for the Masonic Festival Concerts in aid of charities, in the Philharmonic Hall, on January 26 and 27. Composed of professional singers, choirmen, and other highly-trained material, the superb choral machine evolved a simply amazing richness and deep fulness of tone that offered endless possibilities in shades of vocal colour. Very many were realised under the able, experienced, and sympathetic conductorship of Mr. J. T. Jones. And it was not haphazard finish, for great pains had been taken in a series of fortnightly rehearsals which commenced in October. Familiar pieces had been wisely chosen in view of miscellaneous audiences, and the rhythmic vigour necessary for such competitive tests as Protheroe's 'Invictus' and Maldwyn Price's 'Crossing the Plains' was effectively contrasted with the more delicate nuances of 'Sweet and Low' and 'God is a Spirit.' To lovers of unaccompanied choral music the two occasions offered a rich feast. It is something to know that such material is ready to hand. It certainly should be more frequently mobilised.

The Harmonic Choral Society carried through successfully a well-ordered programme at its concert in Picton Hall on January 29. Chorally it was interesting on account of the tuneful singing of this excellent mixed choir of eighty young voices. Under its able conductor, Mr. David Roberts, this would be a formidable competitive choir to meet in the lists. But there is a higher function open to the Society, viz., loyally to follow its conductor in his endeavour to make his choir the one to which we shall look for interpretations of choral music by English composers old and new who have written really vocal music for voices used in their proper tone-strata. Examples may be cited from the programme—'My love dwelt in a Northern land' and 'O happy eyes,' which, with Walmisley's 'Music all powerful,' were associated with Dudley Buck's 'Ode to Peace' and 'Hymn to Music.' In these pieces the choir sang with commendable expression, power, and precision. Solos were contributed by two artistic singers, Miss Doris Vane and Mr. Spencer Hayes, and Miss Jo Lamb, a clever young violinist.

Notable pianoforte players recently heard include M. Moritz Rosenthal at the Quinlan concert on January 22, when the great player gave a masterly performance of Chopin's B minor Sonata. Miss Una Truman's gifts were shown at Crane Hall on January 26. Her programme included two charming examples of English composers, 'An Ayre' (Jeremiah Clarke) and 'The Ledbury Parson' (Julius Harrison). At his recital in Rushworth Hall on January 27, in conjunction with Mr. Kennerley Rumford as vocalist, Mr. Frank Merrick also recognised the claims of native composers in pianoforte music by Orlando Gibbons and John Ireland, as well as examples of Bach and Chopin. Mr. Frederick Blundell, a finely-equipped executive artist, was heard at Crane Hall on January 28 in Chopin's Twenty-four Preludes and Liszt's B minor Sonata.

The McCullagh lady string quartet, led by Miss Isabel McCullagh, an accomplished player, enjoyed the distinction given by the co-operation of Mr. Josef Holbrooke at their concert in Rushworth Hall on February 4. A Haydn Quartet, brightly played, was a naïve introduction to a series of highly-interesting Holbrooke pieces, but the calm beauty of the old composer's slow movement found its mode counterpart in the deep and noble feeling of the Adagio in the Holbrooke Pianoforte Quintet. The quartet-suite 'British Song and Dance,' is a work of great and sustained harmonic invention, although not effective music for string quartet. The Holbrooke touch of genius is more appreciable in such works of strong individuality as the pianoforte pieces 'Barrage' and the immensely-clever Variations on 'Auld Lang Syne,' brilliantly played by the composer.

On the following evening, February 5, at the concert of the Welsh Choral Union, Holbrooke's Overture 'Bronwen' received a first performance here, conducted by Mr. Hopkin Evans. 'Bronwen' is the title of the drama which forms the third part of the trilogy 'The Children Don.' Commencing with an Irish air, 'Savourne Dheeleish,' the Overture is frankly and powerfully descriptive in depicting 'Sea Music' (with a most realistic storm, 'Irish and Welsh War Cries,' the Bronwen theme, which is known as the Welsh 'Bottle Tune' worked into the Finale). Altogether it is a clever and inspiring work which made a decidedly favourable impression. So also did Miss Tessie Thomas' performance in the Elgar Violin Concert. The true spirit and beauty of the music were generally reflected in her playing, which was note-perfect. The splendid choir had not much to do in singing with the orchestra. Borodin's 'Prince Igor' dances, and in 'Hail, bright abroad' On this occasion it was the ladies who chiefly scored, especially in the unfamiliar Borodin music. The soloist was Miss Ruth Vincent, who sang Mozart's 'Dove sono' very acceptably, and an orchestral evening was completed by Beethoven's seventh Symphony, a choice for which Mr. Hopkin Evans may be commended. In him it was again shown that the Welsh Choral Union possesses a watchful, helpful, and masterful conductor.

Conducted by Mr. F. H. Crossley, the Warrington Musical Society's choir was heard on January 20. German's 'O peaceful night,' Grainger's 'Londonderry Air' and Gardiner's 'Cargoes.' The vocalist was Miss Doris Greene, and as pianist Mr. Edward Isaacs played Beethoven's G major Concerto with the orchestra. Mr. Crossley's 'Valse Lente' was also an appreciated item.

At the West Kirby and Hoylake subscription concert of January 26, Dr. W. B. Brierley conducted Parry's 'Lac Radnor' Suite; and the 'Prelude and Call' of Norman O'Neill, based on Barrie's 'Mary Rose,' for orchestra with hidden chorus of soprano voices, was effectively heard. The solo pianist was Mr. Frank Merrick, with Miss Elsie Thurston and Mr. Ernest Williams as vocal soloists.

Mr. Ernest Newman, in his address to the local branch of the British Music Society in Rushworth Hall on January 20, drew a gloomy picture of the present state of music in England, which he described as one of 'sin and misery.' No doubt many of his attentive hearers would have preferred to listen to the distinguished man of letters on a more congenial subject; but while they had not altogether expected to find him a prophet prepared to bless, it was hardly thought that he would so trenchantly do the other thing. It was an unsparing and uncomfortable exposure which made us furiously to think. At the same time Mr. Newman is to be thanked for fearlessly stating plain facts, and for suggestions as to remedies, although in this direction he did not appear too hopeful. It is only possible to indicate in brief his chief points. The London Opera House is now a picture-house, the Palace Theatre, which was once the Opera House, is also a picture-house, and the 'Old Vic' is the only place in London where the works of the dramatists and well-known operas are given all the year round at cheap prices. It was simply no use for an Englishman to write opera, for there was nowhere for it to be performed adequately. There were not half a dozen first-class orchestras in the kingdom, and none was so good as before the war, for, while the older musicians were losing their vigour and enthusiasm, the younger men of ability preferred the cinema, which brought them more money. It was very little use for our composer to write big orchestral works when there was so little portunity for getting them played. Good music could be run at a loss. Sir Hugh Allen, who regarded the present generation as beyond redemption, advocated the education of the children. But while he (Mr. Newman) did deny that education was a good thing, he had not the same clinging faith in it that the educationists had. Elgar was self-ght, as were Delius and Hugo Wolf, and so practically was ch. Obviously there was something wrong with our thods of musical education, when at Birmingham two dred subscribers could not be found for a series of chamber erts, although ten thousand persons must have been ght to play musical instruments at the Midland Institute Music in the past ten years. The registration scheme for chers of music devised at Whitehall was a sample of the cial mind at work in musical education. The situation s Gilbertian. Whereas the teacher used to certify the mptence of his pupil, nowadays it was the pupil who tified the teacher. The teacher moreover had to be certified regard to morals, which was a characteristically English quirement. What had morals got to do with music? First- e opera would never prosper in this country until the State e municipalities or wealthy private benefactors provided e necessary means. The pianola and the gramophone were yond question going to be the most potent agents for the velopment of musical taste in this country. The public d not read the musical papers, and he advocated the ployment of first-rate musical critics on all the great ly papers. He spoke as one who had outlived all his usions. So many movements he had seen fail. Nothing y startling would be done for some time yet. We must y on struggling, and sow in the full knowledge that we ourselves shall not reap.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

The question of a municipal orchestra has been considered or some time past. A committee of the British Music ociety met the Town Hall committee during December, d late in January suggestions from the Hallé executive ere under consideration. The British Music Society eared to seek a solution by the creation of a new orchestra of not fewer than forty players for purely municipal purposes. Others thought that salvation lay in the direction o co-operation with the existing Hallé organization. ively the latter method found more favour in the eliberations of the Town Hall committee, for it reported at probably arrangements could be made whereby under e auspices of the Corporation high-class concerts could be iven by this Orchestra on other than regular Manchester oncert nights, not only during the winter but in the mmer. The full committee, however, deemed the time pportune, and the whole matter is postponed.

Support of the two leading orchestral series of concerts ere reveals no diminution, notwithstanding increasingly ismal industrial conditions. The Brand Lane Saturday enings provide a larger orchestra under Sir Henry Wood an do the Hallé series on Thursdays; but the programmes o not display the same diversity or distinction. Heifetz, n route to America, played here for the third time this eason, on February 5, under Sir Henry Wood. With the rogress of the season one is discovering Mr. Hamilton arty's enthusiasms. His overpowering one is Berlioz. On e evidence of recent concerts I should now add Strauss, lgar, and Debussy. The 'Don Juan' of Strauss, repeated n January 27, had all the joyous abandon and reckless, eadlong impetuosity and audacity that can only come from e wholeheartedly en rapport with the spirit of this music. Richter first brought Strauss to Manchester. It was then eemed wonderful that a man of his years should retain ufficient plasticity of musical nature to enable him to reveal trauss as he did; but he had no real affinity for this omposer's work, as he confessed to the late chairman of e Hallé executive, and looking back to-day we see how tited those readings really were. Whatever of nobility as to be discovered in Strauss was sure to be revealed by Richter, but the manifold revelation of Strauss' enius in 'Don Juan,' 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and 'Death and ransfiguration' has been much more clearly demonstrated a Mr. Hamilton Harty's readings than in those of his lustrious predecessor. Earlier in the season Mr. Harty played the Elgar 'Enigma' Variations, and quite recently the 'Cockaigne.' These two works have never been so superbly played at Manchester by anybody. Schalk, of Vienna, once played the 'Enigma,' with the Vienna Imperial Orchestra, at Queen's Hall, and secured greater sublimity in the closing portions, but Mr. Harty handles both works with a surer sense of balance from start to finish. The Variations can so easily appear disjointed, but Mr. Harty secured continuity of design and perfect coherence. The finest essay written on Elgar's 'Cockaigne' was from the pen of the late Arthur Johnstone, in 1901. At that time Johnstone was contributing the Manchester letter to this journal. In 'Cockaigne' he found a musical parallel to Henley's 'London Voluntaries,' and he was certainly the first to detect in Elgar's music the feature in which he is stronger than any other British composer—originality in emotion. All this came back to me with renewed power as I listened to Mr. Harty on January 27. 'Cockaigne'—the land of delights—assumes a fresh significance as one listens to Elgar's humorous work.

No other conductor gives us the essence of Debussy's 'L'après-midi' in the same degree as Mr. Harty. Here indeed is originality of emotion. One positively experiences the physical sensation of oppressive, languorous heat. Again the mind skips back to Richter's first presentation of this poem (it has been played only five times at the Hallé concerts) at Manchester, and one realises the distance since travelled in the art and science of conductorship. In the January 20 programme were Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony and Bantock's 'Sea Reivers' poem. In each work music is made to reveal the vastness of space, to explore distance, and to express tremendous natural forces. Bantock, as also in the opening phases of his 'Hebridean' Symphony, gives us in the 'Sea Reivers' the sensation of the immensity of the ocean and the tumult of mighty waters. The Dvorák Largo, in its quiet, undulating way suggests the far-away horizon. Miss Elwell, at this concert, in playing the Bach Violin Concerto No. 2, in E, did not arouse any great enthusiasm. Mr. Anderson Tyrer, on January 27, displayed a remarkable aptitude for concerto-playing (Rachmaninov, No. 2), and bids fair to make a far greater success in this branch than any other Manchester-trained soloist. The Wagner choral evening, on February 3, with selections from 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'The Mastersingers,' was quite an unsatisfactory event, despite much attractive singing by the principals, among whom was Mr. Andrew Shanks, who made a first appearance here.

The Quinlan concert on January 29 served to indicate that M. Rosenthal is hardly the same player as in pre-war days, but one must remember that the constant repetition of the same items on such a tour does not exactly make for exhilaration. Madame Suggia's work bore evidence of much more zest, and often as Miss Licette has sung here, her voice never revealed such beauty as on this occasion. Mr. Peter Dawson was scarcely convincing, save in the matter of diction.

The Co-operative Wholesale Society concert, on February 2, clashed with the Beethoven Sonata recitals at the University and with the Vocal Society's performance of Bach's Magnificat. Mr. Coates sang many beautiful songs, as he had done at the Hallé concert a week earlier. In many ways our audiences are gaining a respectable acquaintance with modern songs. The choir's main contribution was the series of Elgar's Greek Anthology part-songs and Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Great God Pan.'

The Bowdon Chamber Concert Society, situated in Manchester's principal residential suburb, is now the sole surviving evening chamber music body, and contrives with marked success to combine social and musical qualities. On January 22 Miss Charlotte Elwell and Miss Lucy Pierce played Lekeu's Sonata in G (repeated a few days later at the Tuesday mid-day series). The violin-playing had a much more confident style than in Miss Elwell's Bach performance at the Hallé concert two days earlier; indeed it appeared to be the work of quite another performer. Everything lacking in the orchestral concerto seemed to be present in the sonata, and this impression was heightened at the repetition at the Tuesday mid-day concert. Here was a conspicuous instance of the unwisdom of making up one's mind as to ability on the strength of a single hearing. Mr. Robert Radford sang, and Miss Lucy Pierce again demonstrated her steady advance as a solo pianist.

Miss Vivian Edwards is perhaps the most cosmopolitan singer in our midst to-day. To American and Continental experience has been added a close study of the music of the Near East, acquired during residence at Constantinople and in Serbia. She approaches modern songs, whether of this country or elsewhere, with considerable authority, giving—on January 21 for the British Music Society and on February 8 for the Tuesday mid-day concerts—two recitals which ranged from Greek folk-melodies (arranged by Ravel, and sung in the vernacular), to Goossens, Ireland, and other moderns.

Far and away the most interesting sonata recital of recent months was the presentation at Manchester, on January 21, by Misses Jo Lamb and Dorothy Crewe, of Goossens' Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in E (Op. 21). It was played twice during the lunch hour. My impression was that the performers were saturated with the spirit of the work, and consequently interpreted it with perfect freedom. Goossens' idiom is all his own, and in no work of his have I heard him speak with such fluency, feeling, and eloquence. Were I confronted with any sceptic of the genuine musical value of current chamber-music writing, my answer would be, 'Hear this work played twice or thrice in succession by these ladies'—there would be no scepticism left at its close. Yet to confirm him in his scepticism, I would ask the same doubter to listen to Holbrooke's Quartet (the opus number I cannot recall), in which the slow movement tortures the old Welsh melody 'All through the night.' This sort of writing is of purely negative value. Mr. Holbrooke's pianoforte playing of Havergal Brian, Scriabin, and Debussy revealed abilities of quite another order.

Some brief personal notes: Mr. Arthur Catterall has decided not to accept the post of leader to the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt has resigned the active conductorship of the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society in future competitive work. Whilst Mr. Nesbitt will continue general supervision, this important post will be discharged by Mr. Sidney Smith, an old and valued member of this experienced body of singers. A presentation is shortly to be made to Mr. Nesbitt of his portrait painted by a distinguished Manchester artist.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

The Catterall String Quartet visited the city on January 5, and gave a thoughtful performance of Beethoven's No. 15 in A minor, Op. 132. The programme was completed with Haydn's No. 75, in G, and Holbrooke's Impressions, 'Belgium, Russia, 1915.'

On January 8 the Bach Choir gave Parts 4, 5, and 6 of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' when, as in the previous performance of the first half of the work, the brilliance of the choral singing was a feature. This beautiful work ought really to be rescued from the neglect in which it has so long lain. As a prelude to the oratorio the orchestra played the Suite No. 3, in D. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

Dr. R. R. Terry delivered an interesting lecture on January 10 on 'The Mediæval Mind in Music.' He stated several facts with a view to showing that the common idea of the Middle Ages as a period at once superstitious and ignorant was erroneous. Illustrations drawn from Taverner, Byrde, and Wilbye were sung by a small choir.

The Philharmonic Orchestra gave its fourth concert on January 23, when interest centred round the first Newcastle performance of W. G. Whittaker's Prelude to the 'Chæphoræ' of Æschylus, which was written for and first performed at the production of the play by Aberdeen University in November, 1920. Under the direction of Mr. E. L. Bainton, a fine performance was given of Borodin's Symphony No. 2, in B minor.

On January 27 Mr. Julian Clifford gave a recital, playing Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata in a somewhat affected manner, and the pianoforte arrangement of Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor—handled rather too freely. The recitalist was much better in a Chopin group, and in the 'Liebstraum' of Liszt.

In connection with the local branch of the British Music Society, Mr. T. Henderson, of Darlington, lectured on January 22 on 'Folk-Songs.' He expressed the opinion that our early folk-music was not founded on the Greek modes, but on the Pentatonic scale, the melodies starting from any note in that scale. Where notes not in the pentatonic scale were present, they were probably later additions to modifications of the original tune.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

Chamber music was the order of the evening at the fourth People's Concert on January 17, when the programme was provided by the London String Quartet. Schubert's posthumous Quartet in D minor, Dvorák's 'Nigger' Quartet, and H. Waldo Warner's 'Folk-song Fantasy,' were admirably interpreted. An enjoyable sketch of Arthur Sullivan's life and work was given on January 25. Mr. William Woolley, the musical illustrations being furnished by the lecturer's choir, which was heard in 'O Gladsome Light,' 'O Love the Lord,' and several other examples, presented with good balance and tone. On the same evening the Catterall String Quartet, in conjunction with Miss Cantelo, drew a large and appreciative audience to University College. Mr. Arthur Catterall was associated with Miss Cantelo in Paderewski's Sonata in A minor for violin and pianoforte, a work distinguished by its extreme emotionalism. The other items were Beethoven's Quartet in C major (Op. 59, No. 3) for strings, and Fauré's Quartet in C (Op. 15) for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello. Mention must be made of Miss Cantelo's fine performance of the most exacting pianoforte part in the Fauré Quartet, very delightful and brilliant work. At Messrs. Wilcock's concert on January 26 the artists were Miss Carr-Tubb, Miss Margaret Cooper, Signor Giorgio Carrado, and Mr. Arnold Trowell. The fifth People's Concert, on February 5, took the form of a recital given by Mr. Florence Mellors and Mr. William Murdoch. Mr. Murdoch's songs ranged from Mozart to Charpentier's 'Louise,' and the delicacy of Roger Quilter, and Mr. Murdoch's choice of solos displayed equal catholicity.

An interesting lecture-recital was given on February 3. Mr. Charles Tree, at Castle Gate Hall. The lecturer gave valuable hints on vocal tone, correct breathing, enunciation, &c., illustrating his remarks by songs drawn from Mozart, Korby, Cyril Scott, and various other sources. In a lecture on 'Music and Life' delivered on February 5, Mr. J. S. Scott on February 5—under the auspices of the Nottingham and District Educational Study Society—the lecturer endeavoured to clear the British nation from the imputation of being unmusical; also to prove that English is in reality a singable language. Demonstrations were given by the choirs of Holy Trinity Infants' School at Sneyton Boulevard Girls' School.

In aid of St. John's Clergyhouse, Mansfield, a pianoforte recital was given on January 19 by the Rev. William Lees, Mus. Doc. Contralto solos were contributed by Miss Lucy Bingham.

The Melton Mowbray Choral Society's annual concert was held on January 20, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'A Tale of Old Japan' was well performed by a full choir and orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Malcolm Sargen. The principals were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Chrystabel Snowden, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. George Pochin.

On February 10 the Sacred Harmonic Society gave a very fine performance of Elgar's 'Spirit of England,' followed by Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha.' Under Mr. Allen Gill's direction both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves with distinction, and the solos were most effectively sung by Miss Lucy Goodwin, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Joseph Farrington. The Society is giving Elgar's 'The Apostles' shortly, and Mr. Allen Gill delivered an explanatory lecture on the work on February 14, for the benefit of the choir and subscribers.

Mr. Cyril Scott completed his American tour, which opened in November, with a recital in New York on February 4. He visited many cities in the Eastern States and in Canada, and met with unvaried success.

PORTSMOUTH

Chamber music has not up to the present been a very prominent feature of the concert season at Portsmouth, but a new departure was made on January 27, when, with the object of stimulating interest in this class of composition, a performance was given at the Albert Hall, Southsea, by a Quartet Players—Mrs. G. B. Bullin (pianoforte), Miss Edith Bunney (violin), Major R. Bullin (viola), and Mr. Frank Langmore (violoncello). Alike from the points of view of public appreciation and of musical excellence the effort was pronounced success, and signs are not lacking that other concerts of a similar description will follow in the near future. The Quartet's skilful treatment of T. F. Dunhill's Op. 16, and of works by Grieg, Oliver, and Rheinberger, could lead to a fuller local recognition of the beauties of chamber music. Major Bullin is to be commended on his initiative in the matter. Mr. Herbert Fox assisted with vocal items.

From February 3 to February 10 was a period of great musical activity, the Town Hall being crowded on four evenings for high-class concerts. On the former date the Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society gave its fourth concert of the season, the programme being principally orchestral. Mr. Arthur Bliss again deputised for the Society's hon. conductor, Mr. Hugh Burry, and incidentally scored a great personal triumph with his own composition, 'Rout,' for mezzo-soprano, flute, clarinet, string quartet, bass, harp, side-drum, and glockenspiel. His work is meant to give a carnivalesque impression of the noisy jollity of a crowd, 'Rout' being used in its old English sense of revelry. The audience insisted on the repetition of the whole composition. The solo parts in the Adagio and Finale movements of the Max Bruch Violin Concerto in G minor were ably played by Mr. Stanley Magrove, the Society's principal first violin, and the soloist in Godard's Suite for flute and orchestra was Mr. Albert Mansella. Miss Carmen Hill was the vocalist. The principals for the closing concert of the season, on March 17, when Bach's Mass in B minor will be rendered for the first time at Portsmouth, will be Miss Flora Mann, Miss Lilian Berger, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow.

The last of the 'international celebrity' concerts took place on February 8. The non-appearance of Miss Stella Power was a great disappointment, but a good programme was sustained by M. Bratza, the young Serbian violinist, Miss Leila Megane, the Welsh mezzo-soprano, and Miss Ursula Greville.

On February 9 the third of the Max Mossel series of concerts was held, the artists being Madame Donalda, M. Mischa Leon, and Miss Myra Hess (pianoforte). Act I from Massenet's 'Manon' was delightfully sung by Madame Donalda and M. Mischa Leon.

The concert given at the Town Hall on February 10 in aid of the Trafalgar Day Orphan Fund was in several respects unique. In the first place it was a rare treat to get the stringed bands of the R.M.A., the R.M.L.I., and the R.N. School of Music massed for one performance—a happy combination of three of the finest Service bands in the country—and the fact that two brothers, Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell and Mr. R. P. O'Donnell, with Mr. Samuel Fairfield, shared the conducting, also rendered the event a little out of the ordinary. The programme included the 'William Tell' Overture, Luigini's 'Ballet Egyptien,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette,' and other equally delightful orchestral pieces, in the treatment of which the performers revealed that remarkable felicity of expression which has made the symphony concerts by the Royal Marine bands so popular a feature of the Pier concert season. A pleasing interlude was provided by three organ solos by Band-Sergt. H. F. Ramsey.

The South London Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Walter Wheeler, gives weekly Saturday concerts alternately at Bruce Hall, Franciscan Road, Tooting, and at the Adult School, Benhill Avenue, Sutton. The orchestra, which includes a number of well-known professionals, has a large repertory of the best music.

SOUTH WALES

It is gratifying to know that the Cardiff Orchestral Society has been revived, with Mr. A. J. Bowns as conductor. Originally formed about 1886, it remained under the esteemed conductorship of Mr. J. E. Deacon until the services of Sir Henry Wood were secured a couple of years before the war, when the Society was disbanded under a financial cloud. The first concert of the new organization took place at Cory Hall, Cardiff, on February 2, with encouraging results. The works performed included the Overture to 'The Magic Flute,' Coleridge-Taylor's Valse-Suite, 'Three Fours,' 'The March Triomphale' from 'Aida,' 'The Butterfly' by Bendix, and a dainty Minuet, Op. 29, No. 2, by E. del Valle de Paz. Commencing thus modestly, the conductor aspires confidently to works of higher order. A most interesting feature was the first appearance in this country of an excellent violinist, Mlle. Elizabeth Wieniawska, a niece of Wieniawski.

Chamber music concerts are practically unknown even in our largest towns, such as Newport, Swansea, Llanelli, Pontypridd, &c., with the single exception of Cardiff, where for the past seventeen seasons the Cardiff Chamber Music Society—with its annual series of three concerts of the choicest works performed by artists of the highest repute—has held a light to the Principality in this respect. Prof. Walford Davies, the Director of Music for Wales, by his scheme of lecture-concerts and three quartet parties, is doing pioneer work in his endeavour to foster the love of music and to elevate its standard. It is perhaps from this class of music, bearing as it does close connection with the home, that national aspirations can best be attained, and Wales become an instrumental as well as a vocal nation.

Very welcome was the visit of the Birmingham String Quartet, with Mr. Percival Hodgson as leader, to the Hall of the Y.M.C.A. at Cardiff, on January 22. The programme was interestingly varied, and the quartets presented were Borodin's in D major, No. 2; 'Lady Audrey's Suite' (Herbert Howells—a Cardiff man), a highly descriptive work in four movements; the first movement of Ravel's Quartet in F; and Haydn's Op. 76, No. 2. Though somewhat overweighted by the lower strings, on the whole it was a fine performance and duly appreciated by a full audience.

The Cardiff Musical Society gave its second concert of the season at Park Hall on January 21, when 'Kubla Khan' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner), and Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' were given by the choir, assisted by a full orchestra, all under the baton of Mr. T. E. Aylward. As is usual at these concerts, the performances were of sustained excellence.

Mr. Arthur Hirst paid a return visit to Cardiff on January 27, and gave a pianoforte recital at Cory Hall. The attendance was disappointing, but those present evinced their appreciation in no unmeasured terms.

The Splott Male-Voice Choir, under the baton of Mr. L. Powell Evans, gave a fine miscellaneous concert on January 19 at Cory Hall.

An annual event that is always looked forward to is the concert in aid of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund of the City Police and Fire Brigade, which this year took place on January 20, at Park Hall. This was the fifteenth anniversary, and the services of artists of repute were enlisted, whose efforts were greatly appreciated by the crowded audience.

The second annual concert of the Cardiff Æolian Choral Society was given at Cory Hall on January 26. A varied and entertaining programme was gone through with great success. The proceeds were devoted to the Lord Mayor's Fund for the unemployed.

Our University Colleges are displaying great musical activity. The Thursday evening concerts at Aberystwyth, arranged by the School of Music, 'continue to attract large audiences,' and 'tend to show a growing appreciation of chamber music amongst the students.' At Cardiff chamber music is very popular. The programme for February 12 consisted of Brahms' Trio in C major, Beethoven's Trio in B flat, and a Trio by Saint-Saëns. At the annual concert of the College Choral Society, to be held in March, 'A Tale of Old Japan' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Splendente

Te, Deus' (Mozart), Bach's Motet, 'I wrestle and pray,' and various part-songs will be presented. Preparations are also being made for a Bach concert, when the scheme will include 'Phœbus and Pan,' and the master's first composition for the clavier—Capriccio in B flat—and a Concerto for two violins and orchestra, will be performed.

On January 28, at a meeting of the Cardiff Music Club (founded in 1918) at University College, an interesting performance was given of Bach's Concerto in D minor for three claviers and orchestra.

[The conductor of the Capel Als performance of 'The Messiah,' mentioned in last month's notes, was Mr. T. D. Jones, not Mr. William Richards. We regret this slip.]

YORKSHIRE

LEEDS

At the Saturday Orchestral Concert on February 5, Mr. Goossens gave an excellent interpretation of Brahms' genial second Symphony, and introduced to Leeds Frederic Austin's charming Suite, 'Palsgaard,' which has atmosphere and some originality, especially in the way in which the pianoforte is employed as an orchestral instrument. Mr. Horace Stevens was a really interesting vocalist. On February 2 the Leeds Choral Union gave a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' which hardly gained by the experiment, especially as regards the choral portions, for these lose in lightness more than they gain in sonority. Miss Beatrice Miranda, Mr. Blamey, and Mr. Norman Allin brought their stage experience to a task of which they made all that was possible in such circumstances, Miss Elson Cameron was an effective Siebel, and Mr. Hebden Foster an ardent Valentine. Dr. Coward conducted with great vitality. At Leeds Parish Church, Dr. Tysoe has been giving a series of three weekly recitals at which some important organ music has been heard, notably all Brahms' eleven Chorale Preludes and Bach's Toccatas, in addition to characteristic examples of French and English origin. The Bohemian Concert on January 26 introduced a String Quartet by Bela Bartok, the marked modernity of which seems to have exercised many who were present. It was also played by the same quartet party at one of the University recitals, on January 18. The recital on February 1 included two Pianoforte Trios by contemporary native musicians—the gracious, highly-finished Trio in G, by the late W. Y. Hurlstone, and Frank Bridge's 'Miniatures,' which Miss Purdon, Mr. Roland Wilson, and Miss Brearley played very nicely. On February 10 Miss Olive Murphy gave a vocal recital with an exceptionally interesting programme of modern songs of five nationalities. She is a very promising singer, with a good voice and an intelligent perception of the mood of what she sings, and she made a most favourable impression. Mr. Anderson Tyrer was solo pianist on this occasion. The Quinlan concert on February 11 was to have been of more than usual importance, with the Beecham Orchestra under Mr. Albert Coates, but, to the disappointment of many, it was cancelled because of an inadequate subscription.

BRADFORD

The Bradford Subscription Concert on February 4 was made of outstanding importance by the appearance of M. Busoni, who played the solo part in Mozart's fine E flat Concerto (K. 482) in masterly style, and with wonderful sensitiveness and power. He also was soloist in his own 'Indian Fantasy,' based on folk-tunes of the American Indians, a work which, clever as it is, failed to impress one, seeming to lack spontaneity and charm. Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' and Richard Strauss' 'Tod und Verklärung' were finely played by the Hallé Orchestra under Mr. Hamilton Harty's direction, the latter work making a particularly strong impression on its revival. At the Bradford Permanent Orchestra's Concert on January 29, Tcherépin's Pianoforte Concerto was the chief feature of the programme. Though not new to the West Riding, it was sufficiently unfamiliar to be of especial interest, and certainly repaid a closer acquaintance, its originality of conception and variety of moods removing it from the ordinary. The very brilliant solo part, with its remarkable cadenza, was artistically played by Miss Margaret Collin. Mr. Julian Clifford, who conducted, introduced his ton poem, 'Lights out,' an impressive and evidently since tribute to the memory of Ernest Farrar, whose promise as composer was cut short in the war. Two of the eleven series of Free Chamber Concerts organized by Mr. Midgley have already taken place. On each occasion, after the first time since the war, a work by a German composer has been given, an excuse for this return to artistic broad-mindedness being found in the hundred and fortieth anniversary of the birth of Beethoven, whose 'Kreutzer' Sonata was played at the first concert and the great B flat Trio (Op. 97) at the second. Grieg and Debussy with the native composers Parry and Ireland, furnished the other instrumental pieces. On February 9 Mr. Edg. Drake's String Quartet gave a chamber concert at which with Mr. Edgar Knight as a most sympathetic colleague, Dohnányi's delightful Pianoforte Quintet in C minor was given, H. Waldo Warner's 'Phantasy' for string quartet and a long and well-chosen series of songs—admirably sung by Mr. Harry Horner—being also in the programme.

SHEFFIELD

The second of the four orchestral concerts arranged for this season took place on January 19. The attendance though better than at the first concert, was still only moderately encouraging to the local committee, which, trying hard to secure a supply of good orchestral music at low prices. Sir Henry Wood conducted, and secured performances of Gluck's 'Alceste' Overture, Schubert's C major Symphony, and Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' which, though not by any means flawless, were of quite good standard. Miss Winifred Small played the violin part in Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' Suite very successfully, and considerably enhanced her reputation at Sheffield.

An interesting group of artists appeared at the Sheffield subscription concert on January 25. Miss Carrie Tub has never sung better here than in a group of Purcell songs which suited her perfectly. Signor Giorgio Corrad made a most successful first appearance, and his singing—especially of a very fine aria from 'Andrea Chénier' by Giordano—aroused marked enthusiasm. Mr. Arnold Trowell played beautifully, but, as is the wont of violoncellists and violinists, attempted nothing of much musical importance. The even 'lighter' music of Miss Margaret Cooper was very much to the taste of the audience.

The Quinlan concert of February 4 provided a disappointment in the absence of Mr. Peter Dawson, who, the audience was informed, had sailed on the morning of the concert for India, but as a compensation Madame Suggia, Miss Miriam Licette, and M. Moritz Rosenthal proved to be in capital form, and furnished a programme of sufficient variety and interest to make the concert quite a successful artistically. Chopin's B minor Pianoforte Sonata, Böellmann's 'Variations Symphoniques,' and operatic arias charmingly sung by Miss Licette, were the most important numbers.

The Sheffield Quartet made a first appearance at the University chamber concerts, the players acquitting themselves very well in Beethoven's Op. 74, Brahms' in A minor, and the 'Novellettes' of Frank Bridge. The Quartet comprises Mr. John Collins, Mr. John Bingham, Mr. Allan Smith, and Mr. Collin Smith. The last-named gave a very fine violoncello recital on January 20, in which he had the assistance of Miss Ivy Smith (pianoforte) and Miss Edith Groat (vocalist).

The Eva Rich Tuesday concerts, and the Five-o'clock concerts organized by the Misses Foxon, are being continued, and are of great value in furthering the musical education of Sheffield. Mrs. T. P. Lockwood, at the Five-o'clock event on February 9, gave a 'talk' on English songs, introducing in illustration a series of songs by dozen composers ranging from Dowland to Frank Bridge, capably sung by Miss Margaret Currie, Mr. Harold Woodhead, and Mr. Ernest Platts, and accompanied in excellent fashion by Miss Ethel Cook, who also played virginal music by Byrd and Farnaby.

OTHER TOWNS

The Halifax Chamber Concert, on January 28, consisted music for viola (Mrs. Rawdon Briggs) and pianoforte (Miss Lucy Pierce), the programme including Bantock's 'Colleen' Sonata, Brahms' Clarinet Sonata in F minor, and Romance by Ernest Walker. Mrs. Briggs is an artistic olist, with a fine tone; her playing, and that of her colleague, was of a high order. On January 19, the Hull Local Society, under Dr. Coward, gave a dramatic reading: Elgar's 'King Olaf,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Charles Knowles as principals. Mr. Ethel Smyth conducted her part-song 'Hey Nonny' at the same concert. The Hull Philharmonic Society's concert, on January 27, introduced two orchestral sketches entitled 'Exhilaration' and 'D'Artagnan,' by Mr. Walter Porter, who conducted them, and Miss Guendolen Roe played the solo in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in brilliant style. Mr. J. W. Hudson was the conductor. At Mr. Janssen's full Subscription Concert, on February 4, his daughter, Miss Ina Janssen, a promising and already accomplished contralto, made a very successful first appearance in a long and varied series of songs. The Modern Trio was heard in solos by Beethoven, Brahms, and Ireland.

Mr. Hallas, a Huddersfield tenor of quite exceptional artistic powers, gives very interesting recitals in that town, at one of which, on January 24, he introduced some admirably chosen and effectively grouped songs, including five of Tolst's 'Hymns from the Rig-Veda.' He had an able colleague at the pianoforte in Mr. James Stott. The York Musical Society's chamber concert on February 2 was sustained by the Catterall Quartet, the programme consisting of String Quartets by Beethoven (Op. 18, No. 5) and Debussy, with Ernest Walker's very charming 'Phantasy' Quartet. The Collingham Chamber Concerts continue to be a source of light and leading in a small village; that on January 15 presented Miss Elsie Suddaby as vocalist, Miss Kathleen Moorhouse as violoncellist, and Mr. Herbert Johnson as pianist. At the next, on February 12, César Franck's Pianoforte Quintet was given by the Leeds Bohemian Quartet, with Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith as pianist.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Much to our surprise an Italian opera season opened on February 1. The public quickly responded to the invitation, but to judge from the performances of 'Rigoletto' and 'Tosca' which I witnessed, I am not disposed to follow suit. Only Signor Schiavoni (conductor) and Signorina Cassani (soprano) made any pretensions to a first-class standard.

Dr. Karl Muck's successful first concert has been followed by quite a number of concerts in which he established for himself a reputation as a conductor who is able to hold his own among the very first of his profession. Besides giving masterly readings of classical standard works, he now and again introduces works which are either seldom heard or altogether unknown here. At the time of writing it must be stated with infinite regret that Muck has succumbed to a nervous attack which compelled him to hand over his baton to the second conductor of the Concertgebouw, M. Cornelis Dopper, who, although being a musician of considerable attainments, lacks the necessary initiative to enforce his will upon a large body of executants. By giving those members who aspire to the rank of soloist as wide a scope as possible, Muck has ingratiated himself with the orchestra. Of these, the second leader, M. Ferdinand Helmann, has to be mentioned in the first place. He distinguished himself by a downright masterly reading of Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole.'

On January 26 the R. C. Oratorio Society gave its great annual performance. This time the choice had fallen on Berlioz's grand Te Deum, a work almost unknown to most of us: at least it had never before been heard here. After listening to this rather presumptuous composition, one is able to realise why it had been suffered to fall into oblivion almost immediately after its first performance on the occasion of the International Exhibition at Paris in 1853. Without doubt it contains a few splendid passages, namely, the 'Tibi omnes angeli' and the 'Judex crederis.' Its predominating theatrical character and its exaggerated pomposity, however, make it more fitted for occasions where pomp and circumstance are placed in the foreground. The performance was on the whole very creditable, and the director, M. Théo van der Bijl, proved himself a musician of no mean ability. A discussion of the many soloist recitals I shall have to hold over till my next month's letter.

W. HARMANS.

PARIS

'CLASSIC ARCHITECTURE'

Miss Gertrude Peppercorn's recent appearance at Paris met with much success. Le Courrier Musical describing her playing as being prestigieuse. This discerning journal adds: 'La Sonate d'Arnold Bax, qu'elle nous révélait, lui convient à merveille.' The appreciative critic describes Mr. Bax's work as being 'of classic architecture, very tonal, and more a poem than a sonata.' He also neatly sums up the peculiar quality of M. Perrier's voice and the use to which it is put in 'Le Roi Candaule'—the latest Opéra-Comique production—thus: 'Le compositeur, qui doit s'y connaître, s'exprime ainsi: "Ce Candaule nous a ravi, et vous savez quel organe admirable a cet artiste incomparable." Soyons ravis.'

ASSORTED CONCERTS

At Paris concerts seem to be without end, and as a rule they meet with much favour. Mr. Fernand Pollain, for example, recently gave a violoncello recital which was admirably supported by those who appreciate a well-contrasted programme. Upon this occasion Beethoven's 'Sept variations sur un thème de Mozart' ('The Magic Flute' providing the theme), and Hillemecher's 'Aria dans le style Ancien' and 'Gavotte Tendre'—a most engaging thing—were exploited, as well as Joubert's 'Lament,' Bach's 'Musette,' Schumann's 'Chant du Soir,' Max Bruch's 'Danses Suédoises,' and Fauré's 'Elégie' and 'Sicilienne.'

M. Brailowsky, the Russian Chopin player, for whom Le Courrier Musical claims that he is amongst the finest Chopin interpreters of to-day, is another artist to whom Paris is indebted. At his last recital he again displayed a technique which is little short of perfection, while none understands the composer better than he. This was particularly noticeable in his reading of the twelve 'Etudes,' the demi-teintes (a tone which makes a strong appeal to the French) being enthusiastically acclaimed by a discerning public. A similar success awaited M. Jacques Thibaud, who, the musical Parisian declares, had remained too long in America. As a virtuoso he is without doubt the leading French violinist, for his astonishing execution is allied to a beauty and steadiness of tone such as are seldom heard. At M. Thibaud's last recital exception was, however, taken to the inclusion of Vivaldi's Concerto in the programme, one critic taking upon himself to furnish a list of compositions which might have been played in its place.

What are described as 'tactful concerts' have taken place at the Cercle Interallié, a club whose members are drawn from all parts of the habitable globe. At a recent Interallié concert old Italian and modern French music formed the programme, a Boccherini Minuet for violoncello, Tartini's 'Variations sur un thème de Corelli,' Debussy's 'Soirée dans Grenade,' and Saint-Saëns' 'Bourrée pour la main gauche' being heard. The audience, which included several Eastern representatives, enjoyed equally the 'Arietta' of Frescobaldi and 'Anne jouant de l'Espinette' of Ravel, which were sung with much taste and precisely the right expression by Madame Croiza. Altogether a singularly interesting programme. Madame Delna, who retains much of her old power to move an audience, lately took part in a concert at which many of her supporters gathered. In Berlioz's 'Mort de Dido' she gave full play to her strongly developed sense of the tragic, while the warmth and roundness of the famous contralto's lower notes inspired frenzied applause.

A LONG PROGRAMME

Paris is not accustomed to long programmes, so when M. Simon (who was accompanied exceptionally well by Madame Jenny Simon) gave a recital of no fewer than twenty-one songs, some of his hearers showed signs of impatience. Fortunately, M. Simon is a resourceful singer, and knows well how to interest the serious listener. One of his best numbers was 'Maintenant, ô Mon Dieu' (Francis Jammes); and the concert-giver's art found happy expression in 'Villanelle,' by H. Gauthier-Villars, in which the light and shade were admirably observed. Another singer, who, though slightly handicapped by a voice whose upper notes lack sympathy, makes the most of her means, is Madame d'Alheim. Her singing is essentially musical, emotional, and sincere. At a recent recital she gave remarkably fine interpretations of Moussorgsky's 'Après la Bataille,' Olénine's 'Baise-moi,' and Borodin's 'Pour ton pays lointain.' It was a valuable object-lesson to the intelligent student.

Other vocal and instrumental concerts include a matinée of 18th century songs, at which Rameau, Daquin, Martini, and Lulli, figured, Madame Marthe Renesson, Mlle. Maud Bernand, and M. Préjöl being the very capable singers. There has, in fact, been a run on early, middle, and late 18th century music, examples of which have in most cases received justice at the hands of their excutants.

As to orchestral concerts, their name is legion. The programmes were not always as progressive as could have been wished, for wherever one went the principal items were the 'Parsifal' Prelude, the 'Tristan' Prelude, and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, with a certain amount of Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin, and Stravinsky. At one of the Lamoureux concerts, however, M. Jean Bartholoni's 'La Nuit cède au Jour,' a wonderfully atmospheric piece of music, has been performed. At a Padeloup concert M. Rhené-Baton conducted the 'Pastorale' from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' and also the fine Overture to Berlioz's 'The Flight into Egypt.'

MONTE CARLO

The opera season is well under way, and the programme is an interesting one. 'Rigoletto' and 'Traviata' (that indispensable work) again figure in the scheme, but Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko' (from which the tenor air known as the 'Chant Hindou' may be extracted for concert purposes) is amongst the creations. Chapuis' 'Les Demoiselles de Saint-Cyr' is also promised, while Giordani's somewhat lurid 'André Chénier' and Wolf-Ferrari's 'Le Secret de Suzanne' are to have their first Monte Carlo performances. 'The Magic Flute' is in rehearsal, 'Le Barbier' and 'La Bohème' form a contrast to 'Les Pêcheurs de Perles' and 'Les Huguenots,' and Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust' as usual finds an honoured place in the varied repertoire. 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann' also is included in M. Gunsbourg's operatic arrangements, which may be said to cater for all tastes.

The season opened on February 1 with a very satisfactory performance of Massenet's 'Hérodiade,' Madame Grialys appearing in the title-rôle. Miss Edith Mason, whose singing of 'Il est bon, il est doux' found many admirers, was a very competent and even distinguished Salome, and the other parts were in capable hands.

NICE

Henri Busser's 'Colomba' has been recently produced at the Casino Theatre. The music is decidedly poetic, and the work is well orchestrated, exaggerations happily being avoided. The voice-parts are more vocal than is customary in modern French opera, which usually ignores the unfortunate singer's needs.

MUSIC CLUBS

During the war the various music clubs in France were closed. Life, however, having again become normal, they have resumed their activities. The members meet periodically, usually under the presidency of a local professional musician, discuss some subject of importance, illustrated in a suitable manner, and devote the rest of the evening to a short concert of more or less rarely-heard music. Lately, for example, a member of a provincial music club unearthed several little-known Ave Marias, notably one by Luzz. The member aforesaid organized an 'Ave Maria evening' at which his treasures were sung. The most modern example was that of Cherubini, which, with its classical grace, beauty of melody, and perfection of style, surely unequalled.

TEACHING IN PUBLIC

In musical circles there is some discussion as to whether a pupil's private lessons ought to take place before other pupils. A Paris teacher of the violin recently received a letter from an indignant parent whose daughter was his most remunerative pupil. The letter was as follows:

SIR,—I agreed to your terms, because, high though they are, I wished my daughter to take lessons from a professor living in a chic quarter. I did not, however, imagine that her lessons would take place while other pupils were in the room, some of whom, my daughter informs me, are common people. You will at once cease the practice referred to, or my daughter no longer will be amongst your clients.

The professor is in a quandary. To let the pupils hear each other play is part of his excellent system, for when he has occasion to correct a mistake, or to illustrate a passage as it should be rendered, everybody in the studio naturally benefits. Besides, by performing before each other, the aspirants acquire that assurance which plays so important part in an artist's equipment. The girl whose haughty parent finds the teacher's method wanting in chic, show every promise of developing into a good amateur, provide she overcomes the nervousness which causes her tone to be unsteady. Consequently, the more she appears before the other pupils the more assured is her success.

Unfortunately the harassed teacher cannot afford to give a client who eventually should prove an excellent advertisement for him. Yet if he accepts the paternal ultimatum the girl will never do him credit. Meanwhile, he is thinking hard.

IN THE PROVINCES

Opera in the provinces sometimes is more satisfactory than opera at Paris, where apparently it is difficult to dislodge old-established favourites (with vanishing voices from positions which they have too long occupied). The fact is, the Parisian public attaches so much importance to the several details of the art of singing, that it is apt to excuse lack of voice. Consequently the reign of the voiceless tenor shows no signs of coming to an end, while sopranos whose upper notes do not always bear the strain placed upon them are heard more often than is desirable. In the provincial towns, however, a percentage of very capable artists appear.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

THE AUGUSTEUM

On January 2 we had the first visit to Rome of a violinist who needs no introduction to English readers—Joseph Szigeti, the famous young Hungarian, the actual successor of Marteau and Heerman in the Geuffer Conservatorium. The programme of the concert, directed by Signor Bernardino Molinari, comprised Vitali's Chaconne, for violin, strings and organ, arranged by O. Respighi; Orfice's 'Laudi Francescane,' for orchestra; and Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D. The 'Laudi,' a new work by the professor of composition at the Milan Conservatory, proved a dismal failure. The programme explained that it was inspired by the famous Canticle of St. Francis of Assisi, and that it 'renounces every appearance of instrumental means in order to sustain its own simplicity of expression and its own austere sentimentality.' As a matter of fact, it proved void of ideas, and founded upon badly-treated imitative harmony, wearisome and monotonous in its persistent hammering of inconclusive and unoriginal motives. It is much to be regretted that such a work was presented at a concert which in every other way was a huge success. Szigeti played with a mastery and vigour which captivated and entranced the great audience.

On January 9 the programme was directed by Signor Tor de Sabata, a young Triestino who is becoming well-known as a composer, although barely thirty years of age. His opera, 'Il Macigno,' had a successful issue at the Scala in 1916. It cannot be said, however, that he made a very great impression on this his first appearance before the man public. His gestures lean to exaggeration, and he has much of a poseur. Nevertheless, in his interpretations of Wagner and Strauss he revealed much potentiality. The programme comprised the 'Magic Flute' Overture, Sibelius' symphonic poem, 'The Swan of Quonela,' De Sabata's symphonic poem, 'Inventus,' two movements from Franck's Symphonic, Pick-Mangiagalli's 'Voci ed ombre del Vespero,' and Strauss' 'Don Juan.'

An immense success was gained by Ernest Wendel on his second visit to the Augusteum. Two Sunday concerts have been held in record houses, with hundreds turned away, and a one-day concert, though less-attended, was received with equal enthusiasm. Indeed, no one who has seen Wendel can easily forget the experience, particularly his interpretations of Beethoven. Some critics did not hesitate to assert that his reading of the 'Pastoral Symphony' was not been equalled at the Augusteum. Wendel has a peculiar little way of enjoying the music he directs—he seems to listen to his orchestra, and then to distribute approving nods and smiles of satisfaction, while all the time his ardent personality is engaged in radiating the music. The first programme included the 'Egmont' Overture, Reger's variation and Fugue for strings on a theme of Mozart, the 'Pastoral Symphony,' and the 'Oberon' Overture.

The concert season at Rome is enjoying great prosperity, the halls being usually well filled notwithstanding the exorbitant high prices. At the Scala an important series of concerts has included the names of Burmeister, Casella, and Casimiri. The visit of Richard Burmeister to Rome has awakened great interest, owing to the fact that he was Liszt's last pupil. He wields a wonderful technique, but his interpretations were often lacking in warmth. By far the best part of his programme was his Liszt playing.

The concert of Casimiri was entirely dedicated to the symphonic music of the Palestrina school, and was a splendid success—so much so that the programme was repeated three days later. It contained the following works of Palestrina: 'Laudate Dominum' (five voices), 'Quantus luctus' (four voices), 'Vox dilecti mei' (five voices), 'Introdixit me rex' (five voices), 'Nigra sum' (five voices), and 'Bonum est confiteri' (five voices). Also, in addition to these items, 'Estote fortes' (five voices), by Lorenzini, and one of the Holy Week Responses of Leggeri, 'Velum templi scissum est' (four voices).

In the same hall M. Alfred Casella acted as pianist in a concert given by a young violoncellist, Signor Livio Boni, who presented Bach's Sonata in D and Beethoven's Sonata in A.

The Philharmonic Society of Rome inaugurated its season with a grand concert in honour of Sgambati, after whom the society has named its hall, and whose memory (he died in 1914) is still prized at Rome. The pianist was Signor Giuseppe Cristiani, professor of the Accademia di Santa Cecilia, and one of the foremost of Sgambati's pupils. Madame Mendicini Pasetti was the vocalist, and the programme, exclusively devoted to Sgambati, was as follows:

1. Pianoforte.—Prelude and fugue, Op. 6.
2. Vocal.—{ 'La Sirena.'
                  'Oblio.'
3. Pianoforte.—Studio di concerto, Op. 10, No. 2.
                  Boîte à musique (posthumous work).
                  Campane a festa, Op. 10, No. 8.
                  Toccata, Op. 18, No. 4.
4. Vocal.—{ 'La mia stella.'
                  'Canto d'aprile.'
5. Pianoforte.—Concerto, Op. 15 (with accompaniment on a second pianoforte).

Two concerts have been given by the Trio of the Academy, represented by Signori Cristiani (pianoforte), Accarini, and Rosati, respectively first violin and violoncello of the Augusteum orchestra. The first programme was devoted to Beethoven. The second programme included, along with a Beethoven Trio, Strauss' Sonata, Op. 18, and Schumann's Trio, Op. 63.

The last concert of the month given at the Philharmonic was devoted to modern Italian music, and had a good success. The programme was as follows:

- Two sketches for orchestra and pianoforte: (1.) 'The Death Chamber'; (2.) 'The Children's Garden.'

Storti (Warsaw, 1873).

- Sonata for eleven instruments. V. di Donato (Rome, 1877).
'Vita d'Infanzia,' suite for five instruments

G. C. Paribeni (Rome, 1881).

- Novelletta } for orchestra ... .. Reggio Calabria, 1875.
Scherzo }
'Ave Maris Stella,' Latin hymn for choir, solo, and orchestra ... .. Licinio Refice (Rome, 1885).

Mention must be made of two excellent concerts given under the auspices of the Amici della Musica Society. At the first, Signor Mario Corti, the well-known violinist, was heard in Ildebrando Pizzetti's Sonata; a group illustrative of 18th century chamber music by Porpora, Ferrari, Veracini, Pugnani, and Chiabrano; and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata.

The second concert was given by the Quartet of the Society, and besides being a splendid success, was also notable as the first quartet concert given at Rome this year. The works played were Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 5, V. di Donato's Sonata, Op. 4 (violinello and pianoforte), and Schubert's Trio, Op. 100 (pianoforte, violin, and violinello).

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

The principal musical event recently has been the production of Korngold's 'Die Tote Stadt' at the Opera, on January 10. This is a great advance on his previous works, 'The Ring of Polykrates' and 'Violanta,' and entitles Korngold at the age of twenty-three to be considered as one of the foremost of the German school of opera composers. The orchestration, though modern, is melodious throughout. The libretto is by Paul Schott, on Rodenback's play 'Das Trugbild,' and is extremely good. It is laid in Brugge, at the end of the 19th century, and deals with the resemblance between two women, one the dead wife of Paul, the hero, and the other a dancer. Paul is fascinated with the latter, but discovers his mistake in a dream.

The rôle of Paul was sustained by Herr Oestvig, a rising tenor at Vienna. Frau Jeriza, in the difficult double-rôle of Mariens (the wife) and Marietta (the dancer), was perfect both in her singing and her acting. Even Viennese opera-goers familiar with her work as Tosca and Carmen were surprised by her brilliant performance. Other artists appearing in this production were Herr Wiedermann in the part of the hero's friend, Herr Mayr as a Pierrot companion of the dancer, and Frau Kittel as Paul's house-keeper.

On January 23 a performance was given of Richard Strauss' most recent opera, 'Die Frau ohne Schatten.' This work is not up to the standard of some of the previous operas of Strauss, but can at least hold its own in the matter of noise.

The first ball held at the Opera for twenty years took place on January 29, in aid of the scheme for raising five million kroner for the Opera Pensioners' Fund. At the time of writing the returns are not to hand, but the occasion proved so successful that a second function was announced for February 8. Dancing is an obsession of Viennese life to-day, balls being held every evening in all the large halls of the city.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

It is of interest to note that Eugene Goossens' recently-published Sonata for violin and pianoforte was played at Berlin, on February 10, by an English artist, Madame Nora Drewett, and was enthusiastically received.

We have received a copy of the 1921 Rudall Carte 'Musical Directory,' now, as for so many years past, one of the indispensable books of reference for the busy musician.

The Blackheath Branch of the British Music Society gave a concert at All Saints' Church on January 22. The programme included the works of ten British composers.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher will give a lecture-demonstration of the 'Technique' at the London Academy of Music on the evening of March 17.

Answers to Correspondents

CONSTANT READER.—A small stretch is an even greater drawback in organ-playing than in pianoforte-playing. You will never quite overcome the disability, but you may reduce it considerably. Persevere with the Ridley Prentice gymnastics, and try the 'Techniquer.' When next you write, think hard, and you may hit on something fresh in the way of a nom-de-plume.

DESIROUS.—The privilege of practising on a church organ is usually restricted to the pupils of the organist. You will probably find a further difficulty in the way of obtaining evening practice at a City church, as most of them, we think, are locked up early. Can any of our readers help 'Desirous' with information or suggestions?

Apropos of a recent inquiry as to a book containing organ specifications, Messrs. Geo. Aug. Mate & Son, 83, Farringdon Street, E.C. 4, write saying that the forthcoming new edition of their 'Dictionary of Organs and Organists' will contain brief particulars of over three thousand British, colonial, and foreign organs.

In reply to an inquiry in last month's Musical Times, several readers kindly tell us that the song, 'When I survey,' by R. W. Wilson, is published by Messrs. Forsyth, Great Titchfield Street. Two keys, high and low.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
Parry as Song Writer. By H. C. Colles ( continued )	155
Some Italian Composers of To-day: II.—Franco Alfano. By Guido M. Gatti	158
The Organ Works of Bach. VI. Miscellaneous Choral Preludes. By Harvey Grace	161
The Present Place of Musical Theory. By Arthur L. Salmon	165
New Light on Early Tudor Composers: XV. Richard Hygons. By W. H. Grattan Flood	166
'The Beggar's Opera.' By Frank Kidson	167
Festival of British Music at Hastings. By Allan Biggs	169
The late Gervase Elwes and 'The Dream of Gerontius' Discovery of an Ancient Hebrew Manuscript containing Neums. By Arthur M. Friedlander	170
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	172
English Folk-Song. By Richard Capell	174
New Music	175
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	177
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	183
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	184
Village Concerts	185
The Bristol 'New Philharmonic'	185
A Gerrard Williams Concert at Bath	186
Chamber Music for Amateurs	186
Church and Organ Music	186
Letters to the Editor	188
Sixty Years Ago	190
Obituary	190
Choral Concerts	191
Royal Academy of Music	191
A Ramblers' Club in Wardour Street	191
A Two-Stave Music Ruler, and How to Make It. By J. O. Thain	192
The Subconscious Mind and the Musical Faculty	193
Music in the Provinces	194
Musical Notes from Abroad	205

MUSIC:

'Prevent us, O Lord.' Anthem for General Use. By George Rathbone	179
--	-----

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'Johnnie Cope.' Scottish Song. Arranged as a Part-Song for S.A.T.B. By E. T. Sweeting.
2. 'Bushes and Briars.' Essex Folk-song. Arranged for Men's voices (T.T.B.B.) by R. Vaughan Williams.

FOR SALE.—Bechstein Upright Grand, Overstrung oblique, Rosewood case. Apply, 6, Hitchin Street, Baldock.

ORGANIST WANTED for Leytonstone Presbyterian Church. Apply, stating qualifications and salary required, to Edward Smith, Glenairlie, Tavistock Road, South Woodford.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITE.

DAVENPORT, NATALIE.—Lady Manners Sch. Song. 4d.

DUNSTAN, RALPH.—"Diatonic Modal Countpoint." (No. 94. Novello's Music Primers.) 4s.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra (Op. 85). Full Score, 42s.

FARRAR, ERNEST.—Two Songs. 1. "Diaphenoi." 2. "The Lover's Appeal." For Medium or High voice. 2s. each key.

FAULKES, WILLIAM.—Communion Service. In (No. 64. Short Settings of the Office for the Holy Communion.) 2s.

HOWELL, DOROTHY.—"Lamia." Symphonic Poem. For Full Orchestra. Full Score, 20s.

NORTH, J. W. ALLEN.—Te Deum laudamus. Chant Form. 3d.

PARRY, C. H. H.—Toccata and Fugue ("The Wanderer"). (No. 76. Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series).) 3s. 6d.

RATHBONE, G.—"Prevent us, O Lord." Anthem. For general use. (No. 937. The Musical Times.) 2s.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 345) contains the following music in both notations: "Oh, the sweet contentment." Unaccompanied Trio. From the 17th Century French Pastoral "Dans notre village." "Fa well to the farm." Unison Song. T. P. M. BEVAN. 2s.

SWEETING, E. T.—"Johnnie Cope." Scottish Song. Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1390, Novello's Part Song Book.) 4d.

TAYLOR, LAWRENCE.—"Brotherhood." Masonic Song. 2s. 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100.

TOMBLIN, R. G.—Te Deum laudamus. In A flat. Chant Form. (No. 1008, Novello's Parish Church Book.) 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2345. "O sons and daughters, let us sing." Easter Anthem. H. A. CHAMBERS 2d.

No. 2350. "The strife is o'er." Easter Anthem. G. RATHBONE 3d.

WALLACE, J. E.—Chorale Fantasia on the tune "Heinlein." (No. 75, Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series).) 3s.

WHIMSTER, J. P.—"Prelude." For Pianoforte 2s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BARNES, E. S.—Benedictus es Domine (The "New Canticle"). 12 cents (6d.).

CLOKEY, J. W.—"The Vision." Choral Tone-Poem for Solo, Chorus, Organ, and Orchestra. $1.50 (6s.).

CHAMLIN, L. H.—"A Christmas Song." Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

KENNEDY, D. W.—"Near the Cross was Mary weeping." Lenten Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

LEMARE, E. H.—"Folk-Song." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

MASON, D. G.—"Music as a Humanity, and other Essays."

MATTHEWS, J. S.—"Dayspring of Eternity." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

"The Birth of Christ." A Christmas Pastoral for Solo and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

SHAKESPEARE, W.—Office for the Holy Communion in E flat. $1.00 (4s.).

WRIGHT, F.—"Musical Examinations. How to study for them."

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

MR. ALBERT EDWARDS (ALTO)

(Deputy Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral.)
to 45, Madeira Avenue, Worthing, Sussex.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC (St. John), at St. Anne's, Soho, each Saturday in Lent, 3.30 p.m. Full orchestra and organ: also Wednesday in Holy Week (March 23rd), at 7.30 p.m., and Good Friday at 4 p.m. Tickets free, from Rector, 28, Soho Square, W. 1. Send stamped envelope

ELKIN &amp; CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS

THREE PASTORAL SONGS

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

Original Edition (Voice, Piano, Violin, and 'Cello),
7s. net.

Edition for Voice and Piano only, 4s. net.

I will go with my father a-ploughing.

Cherry Valley.

I wish and I wish.

POEMS BY JOSEPH CAMPBELL

IN TWO KEYS.

FOR MEDIUM OR HIGH VOICE.

FIVE NEW SONGS
BY
GRANVILLE BANTOCKWORDS ADAPTED FROM THE CHINESE BY E. POWYS MATHERS.THE EMPEROR. G minor (C to E flat) and A minor.THE RED LOTUS. A minor, B minor (C to F sharp), and D minor.IN THE PALACE. E flat, F (C to F sharp), and G.THE PEACH FLOWER. G minor (D flat to E) and A minor.THE GARDEN OF BAMBOOS. G minor,
A minor (D to E), and C minor.

Price 2s. net each.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

VACANT MINOR CANONRY.

Application should be made to Mr. K. C. Bayley, Chapter Clerk,
The College, Durham, on or before 25th March, 1921. Mr. Bayley will send particulars of the Minor Canonry and of other appointments which have been and may be held with it. Preference will be given to candidates under 35 years of age.

STAINER'S "CRUCIFIXION."

"OLIVET TO CALVARY" (MAUNDER).

TENOR SOLOIST

Open for Engagements.

ALFRED HAUNTON,

"Craigville," Eastern Road, Romford.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Stainer's "Crucifixion," Passion Music,

Concerts, Oratorios, Receptions, &amp;c.

„Judas Maccabæus," „Messiah," „Elijah," &amp;c.

For vacant dates address:

67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey;

or The Studio, 317, Regent Street, W. 1.

ALTO open for engagements, "Crucifixion," &c.
"F.W.," 14, Stillness Road, Honor Oak Park, S.E. 23.WANTED.—By British composer, opera libretto.
No gruesome subjects. Preferably of the length of "Pro Patria" Apply, "P.E.," c/o Novello & Co., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.£100 SINGING, £50 PIANO, Free Scholarships, Souvenir Cup, Cash Prizes, and Medals.
Mr. CLIFTON COOKE'S COMPETITIONS, May 7th and 14th.
Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.SMALL Chamber Pipe Organ for Sale. Two Manuals and pedals, together with Hydraulic blowing apparatus Price £120 or near offer. For appointment to view write, "Organ Pedal," 60, Baker Street, London, W. 1.FOR SALE.—KINETIC BLOWER, suitable for two-manual or small three-manual organ, belt drive. For particulars apply, F. Wild, 115, William Street, Heywood, Lancs.TENOR and BASS wanted for All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £16. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, W. Norwood, S.E. 27.

THE OFFICIAL SYLLABUS

OF THE FIFTH

AYRSHIRE MUSICAL (COMPETITIVE) FESTIVAL

TO BE HELD IN THE

TOWN HALL, AYR,

On FRIDAY and SATURDAY, 29th &amp; 30th APRIL.

May be had from the Hon. Sec.—

R. D. WOOD, 81, King Street, Kilmarnock.

Price 6d., by post 7d.

Many interesting new features and Classes.

JUST PUBLISHED

No. 94.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

DIATONIC
MODAL COUNTERPOINT

BY

RALPH DUNSTAN,

Mus. Doc. (Cantab.).

Price Four Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST and Choirmaster
(Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.), leaving present London church owing to change of residence, desires post within convenient distance of North Finchley. "W. A. F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.ORGAN, Two-Manual and Pedal, by Bell. 19
Stops. Powerful tone: perfect playing condition. 85 guineas.
Moore, 54, City Road, E.C. 1.

MUSIC FOR LENT, EASTER,

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN A—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE IN E	... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS IN A	... ..	3d.
JUBILATE IN A	... ..	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E, FOUR VOICES	... ..	1s.
THE STORY OF THE CROSS	... ..	2d.

ANTHEMS.

LEAD ME IN THY TRUTH	... ..	3d.
130TH PSALM, "OUT OF THE DEEP" }	... ..	1s.
TENOR SOLO AND CHORUS	... ..	...
AMEN—CARD	... ..	1d.
IF WE BELIEVE—EASTER ANTHEM	... ..	4d.
	TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
THE GOOD SHEPHERD—FOUR VOICES	... ..	4d.
THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD	... ..	4d.

The Composer will be pleased to send specimens of any of the Compositions on this advertisement.

Address, 36, Christ Church Road, Norwich

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"SHEPHERD OF MEN"

CANTATA BY JOHN S. WITTY.

A Musical Treat. Send for Sample.

Your Choir must not miss the opportunity for rendering this attractive work.

ALSO

"THE SCENE ON CALVARY"

By F. W. PEACE.

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCTION.

Staff Notation, 2s. Sol-fa, 1s.

We allow 25% Discount to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

BROADWAY AVENUE, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TOCCATA AND FUGUE

("THE WANDERER")

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

CHORALE FANTASIA

ON THE TUNE "HEINLEIN"

FOR THE ORGAN.

COMPOSED BY

JAMES E. WALLACE.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SHORT AND EASY SETTING OF
THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

IN THE KEY OF E FLAT.

1. KYRIE.
- 1a. RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS.
2. CREDO.
3. SANCTUS.
4. BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT
5. AGNUS DEI.
6. GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 35.)

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only (for congregational use) price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE

CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE

WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

Suitable for Mission, Village, and Parish Choirs, or for a Congregation without the aid of a choir.

ARRANGED BY THE

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE COSMOS SERIES.

1. CHORAL LEAFLETS, VESPERS, INTROITS, ETC.
2. S.S. ANNIVERSARY MUSIC, HYMNS, SOLOS, ETC.
3. CHRISTMAS CAROLS, New and Original.

Specimens sent post free for 3d. in stamps. Mention this paper.

A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

GLENHOLME, THE COMMON, HESSLE, E. YORKS.

EASTER ANTHEMS.

...ove all praise and all majesty ... .. Mendelssohn 2d	Let God arise ... .. M. Greene 8d.
...leluia! now is Christ risen ... .. T. Adams 4d.	Light's glittering morn ... .. John E. West 6d.
...leluia! the Lord liveth ... .. Cuthbert Harris 4d.	Lord, before Thy footstool bending ... .. Spohr 4d.
...l hail, dear Conqueror ... .. T. Adams 2d.	Lord Christ! when Thou hadst overcome ... .. Haydn 2d.
...l men, all things ... .. Mendelssohn 3d.	*Lord, Thy arm hath been uplifted ... .. Spohr 3d.
...Christ was raised ... .. G. A. Macfarren 3d.	Lo! the winter is past ... .. *B. Farebrother and H. Gadsby, ea. 4d.
...Christ was raised ... .. H. W. Wareing 4d.	*Lo! the winter is past ... .. B. Luard-Selby 2d.
...it began to dawn ... .. M. B. Foster 2d.	Magnify His Name ... .. G. C. Martin 6d.
...it began to dawn ... .. C. Vincent 4d.	Morn's roseate hues ... .. G. W. Chadwick 4d.
...s Moses lifted up the serpent ... .. F. Gostelow 4d.	*Most glorious Lord of Life ... .. John E. West 2d.
...s we have borne... .. J. Barnby 2d.	*My beloved is mine ... .. R. Walker Robson 4d.
...the Lamb's high feast ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	My beloved spake... .. H. Purcell 8d.
...the Sepulchre... .. H. W. Wareing 6d.	My heart is fixed, O God ... .. W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.
...wake, awake, with holy rapture sing ... .. John E. West 4d.	My heart was glad ... .. A. Carnall 6d.
...wake, thou that sleepest ... .. J. Stainer 8d.	Not unto us, O Lord ... .. H. Gadsby 8d.
...wake up, my glory ... .. *J. Barnby and B. Haynes, ea. 3d.	*Not unto us, O Lord ... .. T. A. Walmisley 2d.
...wake up, my glory ... .. F. Iliffe 3d.	*Not unto us, O Lord ... .. John E. West 6d.
...wake up, my glory ... .. M. Wise 4d.	*Now dawning glows the day of days ... .. David Stanley Smith 2d.
...we glad, O ye righteous ... .. H. Smart 6d.	*Now Christ is risen ... .. G. B. Allen and John E. West, ea. 2d.
...we glad then, ye children ... .. Alfred Hollins 4d.	*Now late on the Sabbath Day ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
...ehold, the Angel of the Lord... .. B. Tours 2d.	*Now on the first day of the week ... .. H. Lahee 2d.
...ehold the Lamb—All glory to the Lamb ... .. Spohr 2d.	O clap your hands ... .. M. Greene 6d.
...lessed be the God and Father ... .. S. S. Wesley 3d.	O clap your hands ... .. J. Stainer 8d.
...lessed be Thou ... .. Kent 6d.	O clap your hands (s.s.a.) ... .. E. H. Thorne 8d.
...lessing and glory ... .. Boyce 2d.	O clap your hands ... .. T. T. Trimmell 4d.
...lessing, glory ... .. B. Tours 6d.	*O come, let us sing ... .. M. B. Foster 4d.
...reak forth into joy ... .. J. Barnby 2d.	*O death, where is thy sting? ... .. A. Herbert Brewer 2d.
...reak forth into joy ... .. T. R. Prentice 8d.	*O death, where is thy sting? ... .. Alfred Hollins 6d.
...reak forth into joy ... .. B. Steane 4d.	*O give thanks ... .. J. Goss 4d.
...Christ being raised from the dead ... .. G. J. Elvey 2d.	O give thanks ... .. S. S. Wesley 6d.
...Christ being raised from the dead ... .. S. Webbe 2d.	O give thanks to the Lord ... .. H. J. King 4d.
...Christ both died and rose ... .. E. W. Naylor 4d.	O give thanks unto the Lord ... .. W. Wolstenholme 2d.
...Christ is risen ... .. J. M. Cramment and G. B. J. Aitken, ea. 4d.	O Lord, from Whom all good things do come ... .. John E. West 3d.
...Christ is risen ... .. G. J. Elvey 2d.	O sing unto the Lord ... .. J. Varley Roberts 4d.
...Christ is risen ... .. Warwick Jordan 6d.	*O Sons and Daughters, let us sing ... .. H. A. Chambers 2d.
...Christ is risen ... .. E. H. Thorne 2d.	*O voice of the Beloved ... .. Henry John King 4d.
...Christ is risen ... .. J. V. Roberts and E. A. Sydenham, ea. 4d.	*On the first day of the week ... .. E. M. Lott 2d.
...Christ our Passover ... .. J. Goss and O. King, ea. 2d.	*Open me the gates of righteousness ... .. Myles B. Foster 2d.
...Christ our Passover ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Open to me the gates ... .. F. Adlam 6d.
...Christ our Passover ... .. G. A. Macfarren 3d.	*Praise His awful Name ... .. Spohr 3d.
...Christ our Passover ... .. B. Tours 2d.	*Praise Jehovah ... .. Mendelssohn 6d.
...Christ the Lord is risen again ... .. E. V. Hall 6d.	*Praise the Lord, ye servants ... .. B. Steane 4d.
...Christ the Lord is risen to-day ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Rejoice in the Lord ... .. *J. B. Calkin and G. J. Elvey, ea. 8d.
...Christ was delivered for our offences ... .. C. H. Lloyd 2d.	*Rejoice in the Lord ... .. G. C. Martin 8d.
...Come, let us join our cheerful songs ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Rejoice, O ye people ... .. Mendelssohn 2d.
...Come with high and holy gladness ... .. Hugh Blair 4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord ... .. W. A. C. Cruickshank 2d.
...Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord ... .. Ch. Gounod 8d.
...Come, ye faithful, raise the strain ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Sing to the Lord ... .. Mendelssohn 10d.
...Come, ye Saints (S.A.T.B.) ... .. H. Elliot Button 2d.	*Sing ye to the Lord E. C. Bairstow and C. Harford Lloyd, ea. 4d.
...Come, ye Saints (Unison) ... .. H. Elliot Button 4d.	*Ten thousand times ten thousand ... .. E. Vine Hall 4d.
...Death is swallowed up in victory ... .. Alfred Hollins 4d.	*Ten thousand times ten thousand ... .. Ferris Tozer 6d.
...Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.	*Thanks be to God ... .. J. W. Gritton and Oliver King, ea. 4d.
...For it became Him ... .. Oliver King 2d.	*The Day of Resurrection ... .. E. Vine Hall 4d.
...For us the Christ ... .. Ch. Gounod 3d.	*The end of the Sabbath ... .. A. Carnall 2d.
...From Thy love as a Father ... .. Ch. Gounod 2d.	*The first day of the week ... .. B. Steane 4d.
...Give thanks unto God ... .. Spohr 6d.	*The Lord hath brought us ... .. E. H. Thorne 2d.
...God hath appointed a day ... .. B. Tours 2d.	*The Lord hath done great things ... .. H. Smart 6d.
...God, Who is rich in mercy ... .. G. M. Garrett 2d.	*The Lord is King... .. J. Pittman 2d.
...Great is the Lord ... .. Hayes 6d.	*The Lord is King... .. T. T. Trimmell 6d.
...Hallelujah! ... .. Handel 3d.	*The Lord is my strength ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
...Hallelujah! Christ is risen ... .. B. Steane 4d.	*The Lord is my strength ... .. W. H. Monk and V. Novello, ea. 2d.
...Hearken unto Me... .. M. B. Foster 2d.	*The Lord is my strength ... .. H. Smart 2d.
...He is risen ... .. H. Gadsby 2d.	*The Lord is risen ... .. G. M. Garrett 6d.
...He shall swallow up death in Victory ... .. F. R. Greenish 4d.	*The Lord is risen again... .. B. Luard-Selby 4d.
...He that spared not His own Son ... .. F. E. Gladstone 4d.	*The Lord liveth ... .. A. W. Marchant 4d.
...He that spared not His Son ... .. W. G. Alcock 2d.	*The Lord omnipotent reigneth ... .. Thomas Adams 4d.
...He will swallow up death in Victory ... .. Wesley 2d.	*The promise which was made... .. Ed. C. Bairstow 6d.
...I am He that liveth ... .. T. Adams 6d.	*The strain upraise ... .. A. Sullivan 2d.
...I am the Resurrection ... .. Roland Rogers 6d.	*The strife is o'er, the battle done ... .. B. Luard-Selby 2d.
...I declare to you the Gospel ... .. W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.	*The strife is o'er, the battle done ... .. G. Rathbone 4d.
...If Christ be not raised ... .. Charles Macpherson 6d.	*The strife is o'er ... .. B. Steane 2d.
...If we believe that Jesus died ... .. B. Luard-Selby and J. Goss, ea. 2d.	*They have taken away my Lord ... .. J. Stainer 2d.
...If we believe that Jesus died ... .. G. A. Macfarren 3d.	*This is the day S. C. Cooke, Basil Harwood, & J. H. Maunder, ea. 4d.
...If we believe that Jesus died ... .. M. Vinden 4d.	*This is the day ... .. E. H. Lemare and E. V. Hall, ea. 6d.
...If ye then be risen with Christ ... .. Ivor Atkins 6d.	*This is the day ... .. G. A. Macfarren and *J. Sewell, ea. 3d.
...If ye then be risen with Christ (Two-part) ... .. M. B. Foster 4d.	*This is the day ... .. A. W. Marchant 4d.
...If ye then be risen with Christ ... .. H. M. Higgs 2d.	*This is the day ... .. *J. H. Maunder and J. Turle, ea. 4d.
...If ye then be risen with Christ ... .. J. Naylor 4d.	*'Tis the spring of souls to-day (Cantata) ... .. E. H. Lemare 1s. 6d.
...I heard a great voice ... .. G. F. Cobb 4d.	*Unto the Paschal Victim bring... .. John E. West 2d.
...I will always give thanks ... .. J. B. Calkin 2d.	*Upon the first day of the week... .. Myles B. Foster 2d.
...I will always give thanks ... .. J. Clarke-Whitfield 4d.	When Christ, who is our life, shall appear... .. J. V. Roberts 3d.
...I will extol Thee ... .. C. M. Hudson 6d.	When my soul fainted within me ... .. J. F. Bridge 2d.
...I will go unto the Altar of God ... .. C. Harris 4d.	*When the Sabbath was past ... .. M. B. Foster 2d.
...I will greatly rejoice ... .. W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.	*Who is like unto Thee?... .. A. Sullivan 8d.
...I will love Thee, O Lord ... .. M. Kingston 6d.	*Who shall roll us away the stone? ... .. G. W. Torrance 2d.
...I will magnify Thee ... .. *J. B. Calkin and W. H. Bell, ea. 6d.	*Why rage fiercely the heathen? ... .. Mendelssohn 8d.
...I will magnify Thee ... .. E. M. Lee 4d.	*Why seek ye the living? ... .. A. Hollins and A. Alexander, ea. 4d.
...I will magnify Thee ... .. B. Luard-Selby 2d.	*Why seek ye the living? (Two-part) ... .. M. B. Foster 4d.
...I will mention ... .. A. Sullivan 8d.	*Why seek ye the living? ... .. E. J. Hopkins 2d.
...I will sing of Thy power ... .. M. Greene 6d.	*Why seek ye the living? ... .. F. Peel 6d.
...I will sing of Thy power ... .. A. Sullivan 2d.	Worthy the Lamb—Hallelujah! ... .. Crotch 4d.
...Jesus Christ is risen to-day Alfred R. Gaul and Oliver King, ea. 6d.	*Worthy is the Lamb ... .. J. F. Barnst 2d.
...Jesus lives... .. Myles B. Foster 4d.	*Worthy is the Lamb ... .. Handel 3d.
...Know ye not ... .. Edward C. Bairstow 2d.	Worthy is the Lamb ... .. E. H. Thorne 4d.

Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st d., 2d., and 3d. each.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.

On Wings of Delight.

In C (Compass, A to C), E flat, and F.

Price 2s. each.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).

Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.

Price 1s. 6d.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.

Price 2s. each.

J. ST. A. JOHNSON—

Sandy the Piper.

In E (Compass, C sharp to F sharp).

The Fiddler.

In A minor (Compass, C to F).

Price 2s. each.

W. McNAUGHT—

The Piper.

In D (Compass, D to D) E flat, and F.

Price 2s.

REGINALD STEGGALL—

Lullaby.

In E (Compass, C sharp to F sharp).

Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

There's a pathway thro' the heath.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to F), E flat, and F.

Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

(SET II).

1. One golden thread.
2. The spirit of the Spring.
3. What part of dread eternity.
4. The blackbird.
5. The faithful lover.
6. If I might ride on puissant wing.
7. Why art thou slow.
8. She is my love beyond all thought.

(SET I2).

1. When the dew is falling.
2. To Blossoms.
3. Rosaline.
4. When the sun's great orb.
5. Dream pedlary.
6. O World, O Life, O Time.
7. The sound of hidden music.

The Series is now completed by the publication of the above Sets.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

FOR-POWER. A Cycle of Fragments or Verses by Isobel Scott Bremner ... ..

SONGS.

LOVE OUTWITTED. Phantasy Duet for Voice and Pianoforte ... ..
MARCH MORNING. For High or Low Voice each ... ..
TWO SONGS: "Absence" and "Serenade." For
High, Medium, or Low Voice ... .. each ... ..

PART-SONGS.

FAIR, SWEET, CRUEL. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..
HUNTING SONG. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..
SWEET KATE. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..
THREE SLEEPS. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..
WHEN LAURA SMILES. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams

"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES)

In keys to suit all voices. Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.
15 CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

MUSIC AND YOUTH

THE NEW MUSIC PAPER FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

MUSIC AND YOUTH is being ordered by the most progressive teachers in the country. It stimulates young people to "observe with their ears," encourages them to find out things for themselves, and develops Musical Appreciation side by side with technique.

MUSIC AND YOUTH reveals the meaning of Music to young people in their own language, tells them how it is constructed, describes the methods of its composers, shows how it should be performed, and explains the many little things you understand so well but find so hard to describe.

MUSIC AND YOUTH contains several pages of music by Dr. Walter Carroll, practical articles by Stewart Macpherson, Geoffrey Shaw, and other leading authorities, musical puzzles, competitions, stories, and pictures, &c., &c.

MUSIC AND YOUTH will lift your work out of the common rut and transform it in a way you hardly imagined possible.

POST TO-DAY.

To EVANS BROS., Ltd., Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C. 1.

Write Your

Please send me by return post:—

(A) The March issue of "Music and Youth." I enclose 8d.

(B) January, February, and March issues of "Music and Youth." I enclose 2s.

(PLEASE STRIKE OUT ISSUE NOT DESIRED.)

Name Here

Mr., Mrs., or Miss

Address

Your nearest agent can supply "Music and Youth" regularly. Published on first of each month, price 6d.

M. T. March, '21.

THE PERFECT "E" STRING AT LAST.

THE "CATHEDRAL" STEEL "E" STRING ADJUSTER.

Owing to the increasing popularity of Steel Violin E Strings a demand has sprung up for the correct adjuster without which the steel E is not capable of giving the best results. Many world-famed artists now use Steel E Strings with the adjuster, including the famous JASCHA HEIFETZ. The Cathedral Adjuster is a splendid little attachment, highly nickel-plated and built to give satisfaction; it is small and neat, and does not in any way interfere with the vibrations or tonal qualities of the Violin. Each adjuster is packed with detailed instructions for fitting.

FIXED RETAIL PRICE,
2s. 6d.

THE CRAFTSMAN says: "Violinists everywhere will welcome the new 'Cathedral' Steel E fitted with Bridge and Peg protector. This is quite a new thing in strings—a remarkable invention which is the outcome of prolonged experiments and research by our scientific departments.

"You know that a disadvantage of the steel E was its tendency to damage the bridge. This is obviated in the 'Cathedral' E by providing an ingenious sliding bridge protector which may be moved up or down the string at will. Ordinary steel E's also cut into the peg, but by covering one end of the 'Cathedral' with silk of special texture and great strength we can now guarantee complete protection for the peg.

"These two new ideas in string manufacture do not affect the vibration or tonal quality of the string in any way. Ask your Music Dealer for this unique string. It is the perfect E at last—perfect in design, finish, and tone. Cat. No. 100½. Retail price, 7d. only. Sample sent out on receipt of 7d. in stamps.

CATHEDRAL STRINGS ... SUMMIT STRINGS ...

BETTER FOR THE INSTRUMENT AND THE PLAYER TOO

Sold by Music Dealers everywhere. In case of difficulty send us your order. We will forward the strings post free.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N.4.

Telephone: North 2594.

Telegrams: "Cello, Finspark, London."

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH

HARPSICHORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)
2. Petit air tendre ... L. J. Saint-Amans
3. La Bourrée de Vincent ... J. P. Rameau
4. Tambourin Chinois ... E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BROTHERHOOD

SONG, WITH CHORUS, FOR A MASONIC GATHERING.

Dedicated to the M.W. The Pro-Grand Master of Grand Lodge of Freemasons of England,

LORD AMPHILL.

WORDS BY

FREDERICK KEELING SCOTT.

MUSIC BY

LAWRANCE TAYLOR.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND SUCCESSFUL SONGS.

"FOR LOVE AND YOU" A. Unsworth ... 2s. net.
This latest effort of Mr. Unsworth is assured of success.

"IN EXILE" J. W. Wood ... 2s. net.
A new Song of great charm.

MUSIC MSS. of every description are desired by Mr. STOCKWELL for publication. No charge for advice, and no delay.

ARTHUR H. STOCKWELL, 29, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.4.

Songs may be obtained through your Music Store or direct from the publisher, post free.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

BY

JAMES LYON, MUS. D. (OXON.)

CHAPTERS: I. Introductory; II. Primary Triads, Major or Minor; III. The Secondary Triads; IV. General Information; V. The Inversions of the Diatonic Triads; VI. Sequences; VII. The Dominant Seventh; VIII. Cadences; IX. Modulation Part I; X. Chromatic Triads; XI. Unessential Notes; XII. Suspensions; XIII. Secondary Chords of the Seventh; XIV. The Dominant Ninth; XV. The Dominant Eleventh; XVI. The Dominant Thirteenth; XVII. Chromatic Fundamental Discords; XVIII. The Augmented Sixth; XIX. Chromatically Altered Chords; XX. Modulation, Part 2; XXI. Pedals; XXII. General Hints.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOLK - SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

FIRST SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT
VOL. I.

Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY
H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY
SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

As musical compositions get more complicated, elaborate, and difficult of execution, it is increasingly incumbent upon the composer to present his meaning in a manner that will help the performer to grasp that meaning with as little trouble as possible.

The object of this book is to point out to composers, arrangers, and editors, the difficulties they often unwittingly place in the path of executants, and to suggest various means of obviating those difficulties.

Price - - Three Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW WORKS BY JOSEPH JONGEN

AQUARELLES FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO.

OP. 59.

1. LÉGENDE NAÏVE.      2. VALSE LIBRE.

Price, each 3s. net cash.

Unlike many compositions for the violin, which too often are good violin music without possessing any intrinsic musical value, these two works, which are duets for the two instruments rather than accompanied pieces, are first and foremost excellent music. That they are splendidly written for both the violin and the piano is but a secondary consideration, but one which with a master like Joseph Jongen may be taken for granted.

The "Légende naïve" is full of that fresh, clean poetry implied by its title, while the "Valse libre" has a piquant grace and a vivacity that render it brilliant and attractive without any superficial display. The contrast between the two pieces is so complete as to make them a most satisfactory group for any recital programme.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W. 1.
Tuesday, March 1, 1921.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 938.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

APRIL 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, AT 2.30 P.M.

IIAWATHA - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS CARRIE TUBB.

MR. JOHN COATES.

MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

At the Organ ... Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

A FESTIVAL CONCERT in celebration of the Jubilee of the opening of the Royal Albert Hall and the formation of the Royal Choral Society, in 1871, will be held on Saturday afternoon, May 7th. Their Majesties The King and Queen hope to be able to be present.

Further particulars will be published as soon as the arrangements have been definitely settled.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy has been quite full for the past year, no intending students whose names are not already on the waiting list can be admitted before September.

MIDSUMMER TERM begins Monday, May 2.

GORGING THOMAS SCHOLARSHIP FOR COMPOSITION.
Last day for entry, April 6.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 19th, 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., June-July, October-November, and March-April. Entries for the June-July examinations close Wednesday, May 11th (Irish entries May 4th), at 2.

Written papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 1s. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years. Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The MIDSUMMER TERM will commence on MONDAY, MAY 2.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:—

CHORAL PRELUDE, "Jesus Christ our Saviour,"

J. S. BACH. (Novello & Co., Book 17, p. 74; Augener & Co., p. 900; Peters, Vol. 6, No. 31.)

THREE PRELUDES founded on Welsh Hymn Tunes, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS. (Stainer & Bell.)

AIR AND VARIATIONS (Serenade), BEETHOVEN, Op. 25. Arrangements for the Organ by W. T. Best, No. 68, p. 895. (Novello & Co.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July A.R.C.O. Examination are the same as those set for January, 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-06, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1807-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.
Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.
Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.
Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.
Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.
The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC. FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS, LTD.

1, CENTRAL BUILDINGS, WESTMINSTER, S.W.
(formerly of 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C. 2.)

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c., Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
DEAR SIRS.—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Terms, &c., address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teacher Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition. Local Secretaries required for towns not represented. Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Countpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music. All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D., DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):
DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.)
FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London at at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

May 12th, 1921.—LECTURE: "Reminiscences of Musicians I have met." By Dr. T. J. SALWEY, J.P., LL.D.

COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM, TE DEUM, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLED CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of Dr. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED and COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTIVE WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION

RECITALS, CONCERTS, AT HOMES, GARDEN PARTIES,

Arranged and managed under the personal direction of

A. E. MILGROM.

OVER 400 ARTISTS FOR OPERA, RECITALS, CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTORS, INSTRUMENTALISTS, ACCOMPANISTS, ENTERTAINERS, CONCERT PARTIES IN COSTUME, Etc.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W. 1 (NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Mr. MILGROM can arrange the entire programme for week-ends at an country place or seaside resort.

ALISON KING

SOPRANO.

CONCERTS, RECITALS, AT HOMES, ETC.,

FEBRUARY 22nd, ÆOLIAN HALL.

"Miss Alison King has a voice of delicate purity, her softer passages being perhaps her best."—Beckenham Times.

"She starts on her career with a soprano voice of brilliant quality and an exceptionally good taste in music."—Telegraph.

"A cultured soprano."—Surrey Comet.

For terms, vacant dates, apply, MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

BORNSTEIN

THE BOY PRODIGY VIOLINIST.

CONCERTS, RECITALS, ETC.

Brighton, January 22nd, with Lyell Tayler Orchestra.

"He played the familiar Concerto No. 2, by Wieniawski. Save for an obvious, though unimportant slip during the whirl of flying passages at the end, the young man played this long work with unflinching accuracy of interpretation as well as of notes, and with tone of delicate beauty. There was something very tender and boylike in his tone that in itself was an attraction. On the other hand, a general breadth of conception, in fineness of shading, and in master over the technique of the violin, the playing was that of the mature artist."

For terms, vacant dates, apply MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

VERA SUTHERLAND

CONTRALTO.

CONCERTS, RECITALS,

.. AT HOMES, ETC. ..

"Made an impression with a voice of superb quality."—Surrey Comet.

"Sang with engaging intelligence and earnestness."—Morning Post.

"Has considerable merits as a singer."—Daily Telegraph.

For terms, vacant dates, apply, MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

PERCIVAL GARRATT

PIANIST,

ACCOMPANIST AND COMPOSER,

CAN ASSIST AT

RECITALS, CONCERTS, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

NEWFIELD PIANOS (Vertical and Overstrung) from £50.

Special discount to the profession. All instruments warranted for 20 years.

Can be seen at A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY, 324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

AGENTS OR REPRESENTATIVES WANTED ALL OVER GREAT BRITAIN.

A. E. MILGROM,

CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1

TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

MILGROM CONCERT PARTY.

MADAME FERNANDEZ BENTHAM

School of Singing and Voice Production.

(Under the immediate patronage of H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.)

MADAME FERNANDEZ BENTHAM has studied under the celebrated Giovanni Striglia, of Paris (Master of the famous rothers De Reszké Plancon, &c.), of whom she is a certified Pupil.

Voice Production a speciality. Coaching for Grand opera, in English, French, Italian, and German. German Lieder, Oratorios, Ballads, and Light Opera; also Dramatic action for either Grand or Light Opera. For terms:

E. MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION, address as above. MILGROM CONCERT PARTY. In Costume or Evening dress. At Homes, Garden Parties, Concerts, &c. Nominal sums to Hospitals and Charities. For vacant dates apply above.

THE LONDON OPERATIC QUARTET

MARY ARMSTRONG, Soprano.

WINIFRED WILLIAMSON, Contralto.

HARRY EDMONDS, Tenor.

CHARLES ROLFE, Baritone.

OPERA. ORATORIO. BALLADS.

Vide Press: "The London Operatic Quartet presented some of the gems of opera with an all-round ability and artistic completeness that aroused enthusiasm to the highest pitch."

Engagements include The London Opera House, Queen's Hall, National Sunday League Concerts.

Each Artist can be engaged individually.

All communications to A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION as above.

PIANO SALE

170 PIANOS—MOSTLY VERTICALS

To be Sold at greatly reduced prices.

Good Modern Pianos with best Tape Action from £34 net cash.

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL :

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

MATRIC.

SUCCESESSES - - 55

January, 1921.

Entries - - 3

Successes - - 3

MUS. BAC.

One Fee covers the complete degree.

A.R.C.O.

January, 1921.

66 per cent. of M.C.C. Students were successful, only 27 „ „ successful (from all sources).

A.Mus. T.C.L.

Students who take up this course receive advice and help—free of charge—for Matric. This diploma affords excellent preparation for Mus. Bac.

L.R.A.M.

AND

A.R.C.M.

Combined Course (a) Pianoforte Teaching
(b) Teaching of Singing

PRACTICAL WORK

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Students will receive help in Nottingham in the week preceding the Examination.

Revision of Compositions

Songs—Pianoforte and Organ Music
Cantatas
Operas
Symphonies

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

how to play difficult
music with ease. . . .

Artists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the best possible help.

By devoting but a little time on this system, much of it away from the keyboard is never wearisome, and after some weeks depending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard playing for several hours daily.

Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my system, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful pupils add their testimony.

From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Illustrated book. "Light on Pianoforte Playing." is gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System.
On applying, please state whether comparative beginner, beginner, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON

CLASS SINGING AND VOICE-CULTURE.—

MR. JAMES BATES, Lecturer and Teacher of Class Singing and Voice Culture, at the Royal Academy of Music and School, practices at Mr. Morris Jones' Mansions, 24, St. Vincent Street, Chelsea, and at Mansions, 14, Grosvenor Place, West London. He gives a Half-School, Wednesday evening, 7.30 to 9.0, at the Mansions in Grosvenor Place. He also gives a Half-School, Wednesday evening, 7.30 to 9.0, at the Mansions in Grosvenor Place. He also gives a Half-School, Wednesday evening, 7.30 to 9.0, at the Mansions in Grosvenor Place. He also gives a Half-School, Wednesday evening, 7.30 to 9.0, at the Mansions in Grosvenor Place.

For particulars, apply to Mr. Bates, Mansions, 14, Grosvenor Place, West London, N.W. 1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.)

DIPLOMA PAPER WORK.

Mus.Doc., Mus.Bac., A. and F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. and L.T.C.L.

COURSES ALSO IN

MUSICAL APPRECIATION,

GENERAL MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE,

SINGLE SUBJECTS

(HARMONY, FORM, TEACHING, Etc.).

For Terms, List of Successes, &c.—

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3035

THE TECHNIQUER

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL
INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

The Techniquer commended and used by numerous musicians of eminence among whom are—

OSCAR BENINGER, Esq., Hon. R.A.M.
AMBROSE COVIELLO, Esq., A.R.A.M. SPENCER DYRE, Esq., F.R.A.M.
HERBERT ELLINGFORD, Esq., Mus. Bac.
HERBERT FEYER, Esq., A.R.C.M. FREDERIC LAMOND, Esq.
CHARLES REDDIE, Esq., F.R.A.M. KALMAN ROSAY, Esq.
HERBERT WALLEN, Esq., F.R.A.M. M. ZACHAREWITSCH, Esq.

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

E. Cooper, Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

GUIDE TO A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

"A handy brochure: gives a clear idea of what is expected"—
Musical Record

"Contains most advice of this kind."—Musical Herald

"Very practical and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomson, Esq.

1s. 8d. post

Apply to the Author.

THE CREWENTON PUBLISHING CO., LTD.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

25, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. ALBERT EDWARDS

ALTO.

45, Madeira Avenue, Worthing.

MR. BEN CLARK

TENOR

c/o Park Road, Hord.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

RALPH WILLIAMS (L.R.A.M.)

(TENOR).

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

J. HENRY

BASS-BARITONE.

Soloist.

"STANLEY MASTER," BACH'S "PASSION" MUSIC, ETC.
For terms, apply to, Crossfield Road, N. 15.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7255.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.
Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Bacon Method

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 170, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Cutford Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

GIVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 55, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 5

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. FITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," &c. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

G. HUBBARD COMBE

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Viccrolini), "Within your heart"
(Tosti), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti),
"A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" (Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize), "Pedlar of Dreams" (Dr. Herbert Brewer).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS. 1,500 Songs sold. 550 Adaptations.

Librettos for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &amp;c.

"OVERBURY," FURZE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.

* The late Sir Hubert Parry kindly permitted his name to appear along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, C.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROVD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

c/o "The Faith House," 22, Enclunham St., Charing Cross, W.C.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities.
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholars' Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music)
the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations in Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.
Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Correspondence.
FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. B. (Trin. Coll., Dublin).
prepares, by post, for Theoretical Exams. Terms moderate.
28, Chanters Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dune-
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 350 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West End Studios) in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, Teaching, Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. I. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepare to Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 5.

DR. KNOWLES, Manchester 1010, Durham 1010
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of work. Address, 60, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personal or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 155, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (4 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 5d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for 21s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, Form and Teaching, &c. Lessons oral or by correspondence. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successful L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M. Tutor. (Pianoforte). More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., &c. Address, &c., Berners Street, W. 1.

R. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Certificate. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Examine. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. See preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and singing much has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.P."
A. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 26, Avenue, Nottingham.

R. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for
R.A.M. and A.R.C.O.
CENT PROCESSES:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.

Teacher, Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

100 SINGING, £50 PIANO, Free Scholar- ships. Souvenir Cup, Cash Prizes, and Medals.
CRISTON COOKE'S COMPETITIONS, April 30th and
7th. Entries close April 26th and May 1st. Prospectus,
10, 25, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

LTO late of H.M. Chapel Royal, seeks temporary or permanent engagement in Brighton area. Write "M.W." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

ARMASH CATHEDRAL.—TENOR required.
Salary, £125. Applications, with testimonials, to be sent to Master, Armash Cathedral Close, Armash.

PIANIST.—Wanted an Organist and Choir- leader for High United Free Church, Kilmarnock. Salary, £100 per annum was built by Messrs. Jardine & Co., Manchester, the fine method compass CC to A, 58 notes. Pedal organ, 10 ft. to F, 30 notes. The action is pneumatic. Apply, with experience, and qualifications, on or before April 7th, to Messrs. Hamilton Place, Kilmarnock.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (voluntary) WANTED for St. Paul's, Avenue Road, N.W. 3. Three-manual, powerful. Apply, R. Willoughby Jeffery, 347, Bath Road, Bristol.

LEITCHMAN'S Daughter seeks post as organist in neighbourhood of Ealing. Good clerical references. Salary £100 per annum. Apply, Sheldon, 98, The Grove, Ealing, W.5.

THREE-MANUAL ORGAN
By GRAY & DAVISON.

36 Stops. For early disposal.

Apply, W.M.S., 234, Ferndale Road, Brixton, S.W.9.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
All & Rep. The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
manuals. Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built.
Various stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the Church of the West. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ
Manufacturers, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual and Pedal ORGAN.
Electric. Splendid condition. Suitable Cinema or small Church.
Apply, Messrs. 30, Conisgar Road, Fulham, S.W.6.

PIAN — FOR SALE, 3-Manual and Pedal Organ,
Electric. Stops, manual couplers by Messrs. Kirkland, London, and 10 ft. 6 in. Parish Church Fleet, 5, The Villas, Stoke.

PIAN — KIAN (John Walker), suitable small organ for private use. Bi-Manual, 14 Stops. Pedal-Board Couplers, 10 ft. 6 in. Handsome case. £150. Excellent condition.
Apply, Messrs. 1, Little Office, Ross-on-Wye.

FOR SALE.—Chamber PIPE ORGAN, in oak case. Manual, four Stops, Swell, hand or foot blower.
Sweet tone. Suit small Church or Mission Hall.
Apply, Messrs. 1, Little Office, Ross-on-Wye.

PIAN PIPE ORGAN for SALE.—17 stops.
Electric. 17 stops, 11-ft. 6 in. high; 11-ft. broad; 7-ft. deep.
A most beautiful instrument. Can be seen by appointment. The present price of this instrument—which is very cheap—is £2,300. I will accept £1,700. W. Bowker, 1, Little Office, Ross-on-Wye.

WANTED.—Two-Manual Pipe Organ, pneumatic action preferred. Specification and price, and where to view.
Apply, Messrs. 1, Little Office, Ross-on-Wye.

ORGAN, Two-Manual and Pedal, by Bell.
Stops. Powerful tone; perfect playing condition. 85 guineas.
Moore, 54, City Road, E.C.1.

MUSTEL for SALE.—One-Manual, Rosewood.
Splendid condition. £275. 65, Northumberland Park,
Tottenham, N.17.

FOR SALE.—Silver FLUTE, by Ate. Bonneville,
Paris. Boehm's system. In perfect condition. Apply, 70, Canadian Avenue, Catford, S.E.6.

FOR SALE.—MITTENWALD VIOLIN, Kluck's
School. £30. "Todd," c/o A. J. Wilson & Co., Ltd., 154, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.1.

A GENUINE OLD VIOLIN FOR SALE.
Apply, Miss C. Wilton, Dean Court, Surrey.

VOLONCELLO and BOW for sale, in good condition. Price £12. Apply, "Berwyn," Monkham Lane, Woodford Green, Essex.

FOR DISPOSAL.—Autograph Letters of César
Franck, written during the later part of his life. Apply to Madame Gorska, Beau Levant, Rue Juste Olivier, Lausanne, Switzerland.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (Oakley). Two Sets: Nos. 1 to 4, and 5 to 7. Price 2s.
each set. Weekes & Co., 74, Hanover Street, W.1.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male
Quartet, by Arthur Mangelorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497,
Coventry Road, Birmingham.

WANTED. SIX COPIES second-hand of Cimarosa's "SECRET MARRIAGE." Vocal Score with English text. Please send particulars and price to Birmingham Repertory Theatre, Station Street, Birmingham.

SONGS and MUSIC placed by Experts. Terms for stamp. Cambridge Music Agency, 8, Henrietta St., W.C.2.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE
ORGAN.
(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... .. Harold E. Darke	3 6
61.	SOLEMN PRELUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
62.	INTERMEZZO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
64.	POSTLUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... .. A. C. Mackenzie	1 6
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWIRGWN" ... .. T. J. Morgan	2 3
67.	MINUET ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
68.	EPITHALAMUM ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor	2 3
70.	TOCCATA ... .. A. P. F. Boely	2 3
71.	A SOUVENIR ... .. H. Douglas	2 3
72.	LAMENT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
74.	CRADLE SONG ... .. R. G. Hailing	1 6
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... .. J. E. Wallace	3 6
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill, W.—Male ALTO required. Salary, £12 per annum, plus £4 per annum temporary bonns. Write J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W.11.

ST. MATTHIAS, Earl's Court. First TENOR
wanted, £15; and Second Bass, £12. Organist.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Nuneaton Parish Church. Salary, £100. Applicants are asked to send testimonials, and to state whether married or single, and to give particulars as to their experience. For a return of testimonials, please forward a stamped envelope to the Organist, Nuneaton.

TENOR WANTED, City Church, (Good Position).
Light duties. £12. Write, "H." 42, Bushnell Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.17.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand CLAVIER, in perfect condition. What offers? Miss Read, The Bank, Malton.

FOR SALE.—Pleydel Double Concert GRAND,
in black case. First-class condition. Heath, Ltd., 76, Queen Street, Cardiff.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION AND EXAMINATIONS.

PATRON—HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

PRINCIPAL—DR. F. J. KARN, MUS. BAC. CANTAB.

DIRECTOR OF EXAMINATIONS—G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, ESQ.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS, 1920.

The following is the List of SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATION held in London and at Provincial and Colonial Centres for the half-year to December, 1920 :—

DIPLOMAS IN PRACTICAL MUSIC.

LICENTIATES (L.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Isabella Allport, Rosaline Adams, Frederick Atherton, Doris M. Allen, Ellen Allen, Harry Baker, Ali Bloxidge, Doris K. Ball, May Booth, Doris E. Bilbe, Margaret V. Burgess, Annie Blumfield, Stanley Brown, Muriel Burke, Clara Brailstor, Mary Brookhouse, Vera Boardman, Hilda Boyton, Honora M. Barratt, Dorothy Biggin, Cora Brown, Harold Clarke, Kathleen Considir, Molly Connolly, Claris Chandler, Ella J. Coutts, Clarice Carol, Eunice Corner, Mary Conway, Ethel Cula, Annie I. Carmichael, Ruth I. Chandler, Mercy L. Cadden, George F. Davis, Harry Dyson, Alice Davies, Jessie S. Drewery, Maudie Dunn, Kathleen M. Durkin, El. Dennis, Winifred Deasey, Mary A. Devine, Patricia Duncan, Bernadette Delahanty, Ethel L. Freeman, Florence Francis, Mary Foste, Doris J. B. Fleming, Marjorie Foley, Elsie M. Fisher, Nora Gilmore, Eliza Goodwin, Charles E. Gibson, Nonie Griffin, May Gelling, Pan I. E. Gray, Elsie C. Gleeson, Eva Graham, Mary E. Griffiths, Edith M. Hodgins, Doris M. A. Horton, Doreen Haughey, Emily Hoye, Gladys Higgs, Maud Hall, Gwendoline Harkin, Ruby E. M. Harmer, Alfreda M. Inshaw, May Jovnson, Howard Jackson, Thomas Johns, Doreen James, Florence Johl, Bella Jones, Babs Kavanagh, Mary I. Koch, Gladys A. Locke, Hilda R. Lloyd, Jennie Lambert, Maure Linehan, Alexandra M. Lindsay, Harry N. Lazarus, Gwladys Mathias, Mary Morris, Elsie E. Mackie, Clara E. Midgley, Patty L. Marti, Mary Murphy, Oriol Meredith, Mary McGrath, Verna L. McGuffie, Ismay Mackey, Olga R. Morgan, Muriel Mitchell, Gwen McLeod, Mil McLaren, Brighta L. Norman, Ivy Oehlman, Edna M. O'Brien, Mary O'Donnell, Kathleen O'Hagan, Miriam Parkes, Kate Pullan, Dorot G. Pearson, Muriel M. Prince, Millicent L. Poole, Emma Perkins, Jessie M. Page, Olive L. Piggott, Ethel J. Prowse, Edna R. M. Prye, Margaret M. Page, Elsie M. Rimmer, Florence Rieniets, Ernest Roberts, Eunice Ross, Maggie Smyth, Agnes Shortill, Thelma F. Sincla, Kathleen Shortt, Beatrice A. Sewell, Florence P. Shorthouse, Lily M. Scholey, Irene M. Sykes, Stella B. Shallicross, Thelma Shaw, E. Symes, Florence Sullivan, Gladys Sawtell, Adele Secombe, Rita Suffern, Fanny Todd, Lucy Thorley, Harry Turner, Muriel Thomas, Ve Thomson, Nellie Travill, Doris Upton, Doris G. Verrall, Marjorie Vale, Eva R. Wyatt, Elsie Wilson, Jessie Waller, Verdi Waddingte, Mary Wilson, Irwyn R. Walters, Kitty Williams, Mabel G. Wright, Berenice Walshaw, Elsie E. Wadsworth, Ivy Watson, Bene Whi

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Hermia C. Barton, William T. Barkhouse, Frederick W. C. Barker, Ronald A. Cameron, Mina T. Chapma, Eileen Donovan, May Hurley, Hannah Moore, Alma Maund, Edwin J. C. Phillips, *Jack Proudman.

SINGING.—Florence A. Allsopp, Nellie Bassett, Gladys H. E. Daniel, Nellie Dunn, Winifred Dunsford, Emma E. Ellen, Margaret

Houlihan, Mary A. O. Jones, *Sarah J. Jones, Minnie McDonald, Gwendoline L. Naismith, Arthur J. Sindrey, Beryl A. J. Stevens, Ale

Sullivan, Nellie Summers.

ORGAN PLAYING.—Albert E. Tucker.

CORNET PLAYING.—Arthur Eaves, Frank Wright.

ELOCUTION.—May Beard, Ida M. Blamey, Eileen McCormack, Hazel Skinner.

TEACHERS' DIPLOMA (T.D.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Marjorie H. Creer, Hope Dalley, Clare E. Flanagan, Aileen Graves, Zilpah Jones, Richard H. Morgan, Mo O'Brien, Lucy A. Patrick, Florence L. Tanlyn, Wilhelmina von Drehnen, Doris T. Wycherley, Mary A. Williams, Gertrude B. Wallis,

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Emma A. P. Napier.

SINGING.—James M. Gullan.

ELOCUTION.—Florence Abraham, Annie C. Braund, Lily E. Bell, Alice M. Harrington, Nellie Mullin, Eddie K. Oliff, Henry F.W. Wil

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Betty Aubert, Alice M. Adams, Eva M. Absalom, Amy Atherton, Edith H. Anderson, Frank Anniss, Nel Addison, Ada D. Atkinson, Lily Attewell, Marjory Anderson, Nessie Adams, Hilda Allsop, Ivy J. Anderson, Gwladys M. Atkinson, Mabe Basse, Thelma A. Baulderstone, Janet E. Bell, Inez B. de Brotherton, Mary Bourke, Doris Banford, Ella Bell, Daisy M. Best, Gladys Bev, Mona D. Bill, Roy Barker, Dorothy Barnewall, John Borthwick, Doris Barraclough, Elsie Brimelow, Dorothy D. Barrowcliffe, Nelly Belsh, Evelyn M. Barton, Jessie Barnes, Doris Barker, Doris Bailey, Catherine M. Brown, Annie Byfom, Betsy A. Barnes, Margery Bailey, Flore V. Bickerstaff, James R. Baldwin, Winifred L. Bowler, Arthur G. S. Blatchford, Gladys Beaumont, Violet Bell, Annie Beighton, Ena J. Bowman, Doris Brophy, Lima Bradley, Mabel Battershill, Elizabeth Bryant, Vera Boyd, Jessie E. Byrne, Alma Bailey, Emily Beal, Jes Bvers, Marie F. Baker, Violet Barclay, Harold Bonamy, Marjorie Brines, Kathleen Berkeley, Thelma Butz, Mary P. Brown, Alma G. Bak, Doris M. Byleveld, Thelma Barber, Doris Baldick, Muriel I. Betts, Gladys M. Blackmore, Dorothy M. Bingham, Cecilia E. Bishop, Bri Bergin, Claudine H. Berliner, Eileen M. Boyle, Coral R. Brown, Edith C. Brindal, Herman H. Black, Kathleen Brennan, Mary Beel, Cather Bellingham, Vera M. Brooker, Constance M. Bowles, Jennie P. Bell, Emily Baldock, Coralie Brummeister, Philomena Braybon, Lillian Birr, Ivy M. Crafter, Ralph S. Child, Violet M. Coles, Bernard Collins, Katie Coggin, Ellen B. Creaser, Rosalind Cudworth, Genetta Cob, Leslie H. Chambers, Celia Caplan, Dorothy Cowley, Reginald F. Chapman, Daisy H. Collins, Emily Cartnell, Nellie Clough, Gertrude Coshaw, Florence D. Clarke, Annie Cuthbert, Kathleen G. M. Channel, Dorothy M. Crouch, Ellen M. Carter, Eileen Cleary, Ada M. Cron, Crystal Calliwell, Kitty Casey, Alma Clarke, Emma Cousin, Molly Cant, Evelyn M. Copp, Bessie M. Cooke, Doris Carroll, Anna Cavana, Glalys Case, Eva M. Cooke, Vivienne I. Cole, Myrtle Crouch, Joan Clarke, Maureen Carroll, Gladys Counsel, Gertrude Carwardine, Kathli M. Cahill, Vera D. Crooks, Adam Currie, James G. Cornell, Eleanor I. Campbell, Kate P. Currey, John C. Clinick, Tracey E. Clapha, Olive M. Carter, Winifred R. Clarke, Vera Connell, Mary B. Corrigan, Elaine Crows, Thelma Clifton, Isobel Crone, Bertram Cowley, Alex M. Cattlin, Margaret Cahill, Doris C. Costello, Nina Cattanch, Hannah Carroll, Beatrice Davies, Amy M. Dearnley, Emily F. Donnis, William Ducker, Gordon Dutton, Linda Davies, David O. Davies, Doris M. D. Duffire, Doris M. Davies, Ma Ige P. Dunlop, Jessie G. Dunc, Margaret Dunn, Lily Duncan, Kathleen M. Doherty, Elsie L. Dyer, Mary Davies, Phyllis J. Doherty, Ila C. Dowding, Muriel Davison, Ma E. Deane, Olga Davey, Gladys R. Davies, Annie Dandridge, Hazel L. Elliott, Lizzie Edgar, Janet A. Ellis, Daisy Evans, Heulwen Evans, O Embrey, Christopher Evans, Enid A. Edwards, Lucy E. Elley, David E. Evans, Maud A. Foulkes, Hazel G. Foletta, Louisa Fasse, Hi Fleiter, Anne Fitzpatrick, Irene Fregson, Rose M. P. Fowkes, John S. Foster, Millicent S. Forrester, Eric Fairhurst, Louisa F. Ferris, Albert E. Foley, Elsie E. Freeman, Elsie J. Fallon, Edna G. Foreman, Edith M. Foster, Eva Finnest, Nora Fretwell, Amy Foster, Veron Floyd, Louise Fox, Susa Gleeson, Mary Gleeson, Violet Groves, Marguerite Gipp, Nellie V. Green, Helen Galloway, Doris M. Giff, Beatrice E. Godfrey, Margaret M. Gibbons, Nellie Gardner, Robert H. Galbraith, Irene Gregg, Frances G. Grundy, Rita E. Garvey, Winif M. Garrett, Lilian G. Gargery, Kathleen Goddard, Lydia A. Gould, Olive George, Ivy M. Grebert, John Gard, Thelma Gleeson, Mary Gre May Gelling, Marjorie E. Glenn, Leila Greer, Mabel M. Gordon, Alice M. Hanlon, Sylvia H. Harrison, Lucy Holloway, Marjorie E. H. H. Edith L. Hadley, Olwen Hughes, Elizabeth M. Hooper, Ethel M. Hales, Bradley Hustwick, Ruth G. Hill, Charlotte M. Harrison, Joseph Hinson, Lily Hobbs, Elsie M. Hunt, Alma H. Hardingham, Phyllis L. Hughes, William Howood, Walter Heaton, Mary D. Hold, Eveline Harding, Edward Headon, Joseph Hedley, John H. Hunter, George Hughes, Clarice Hague, Marie Hall, Sarah Harris, Charles Henley, Kathleen Hilliam, Phyllis Hawton, Winnie Halbert, Isabella Haves, Esther Herford, Eileen Hovan, Nellie Hargrave, Beat Hentry, Myrtle Heavney, Hilda Hodge, Evelyn Horton, Hannah E. J. Hill, Gladys E. Hedges, Gladys Hathorn, Dorothy E. Holthau, Caroline Hill, Lydia Helliwell, Winifred C. Hamer, Ethel M. Hedges, Olive Holiday, Elsie N. Harve, Sylvia E. Hale, Kathleen Hurf, Nellie Herron, Dorothy M. Hallam, Stella D. Hansen, Kathleen Harrison, Mary Iveson, Ada A. Ingersoll, Ellen E. Jacobs, Gwilym R. Jo, Gomer Jones, Dora Jackson, Lillian D. F. Jones, Emrys V. Jones, Evelyn S. Jackson, Wallace Jones, Eric Judson, Frances A. Jones, Ir Jameson, Olive Johns, Clara M. Jones, Doris L. Jackson, Lorna M. James, Fred Jackson, Vera Jenkins, Eileen Jones, Sadie Jarvie, Hi E. King, Gwendoline A. Kent, Margaret Knight, Martha Knowles, Annie Knight, Kathleen Kendall, Lucy B. Kitt, Mabel A. Kitt, Ella Kersh, Josie Kean, Nellie Kenn, *Edith Kleesh, Margaret M. Kelly, Lois I. King, Lilla M. Keogh, Kathleen Klemm, Josephine Keenan, My Keegan, Gertrude P. Kettle, Gothard W. Kliche, Ada E. Lemon, Kate G. Lindsay, Maymi Leitch, Mabel Lancaster, Ruth Lincoln, Mor Lewis, Edith E. Lucas, Mavis Lynch, Cecil E. Lang, Daisy M. Long, Alma Lineham, Nelleen Lanigan, Dorothy Le Grier, Olive A. Lvo, Leila M. J. McAllister, Teresa Malone, Winifred P. Maxwell, Florence Minchin, Dorothy W. McCutcheon, May McCann, Ethel L. Ma Mary O. Morris, Marion W. Mutch, Irene Morton, Ethel Maddran, Ella Meakin, Phyllis I. Meredith, Rachel Murray, Constantine Metc, Jessie Moss, Aileen McMahon, Mary F. McKenna, Bertha E. Mitchell, Violet G. Mosby, Eveline Morgan, Irene Mulard, Ruby G. Mac, Ursula McEvoy, Clare McSweeney, Rita McIntyre, Jack McDermott, Elizabeth M. Magner, Ethel M. Murday, Kathleen Morris, Mary E.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.)—continued.

tray, Elsie Morris, Bessie Morton, Jean G. Minty, Myrtle McLaughlin, Unita McLeod, Dorothy B. McCracken, Minnie McMurray, Olive ton, Vera Miles, Jack McCarthy, Grace Miles, Mary A. Milner, Gwendoline R. Nokes, Ethel Nissenbaum, Leonora G. Norman, Eileen loonan, Nena Needham, Barbara Neuss, Pearl Nelson, Caroline Navan, Mary P. O'Grady, Gwendoline E. Oxley, Eluned Owen, Dulcie ons, Philomena O'Connor, Mary O. Kane, Dorothy Outram, Basil C. E. Osman, Frances O'Donnell, Agnes O'Keefe, Adeline D. Overton, iel O'Malley, Ruby M. O'Connell, Annie L. O'Neill, Mary C. O'Connor, Sheila O'Brien, Florence M. O'Malley, Violet O'Connell, Ena
 e, Betty O'Connor, Isabel S. Olley, Eileen E. O'Grady, Cecil G. Pettit, Gwyneth Perkins, Eva M. Parfitt, Edith Petherick, Mary Price, nces Parker, Phoebe Percival, Jack Pearson, Petronella Porter, Myra Phillips, Joyce Powys, Isabel J. Paterson, Dorothy Pitkethly, lida M. Petersen, Eileen Parker, Norma M. Ponton, Marjorie Porter, Mary Pitches, Edna Phillips, Maritta G. R. Paskett, Olive Pickford, ia V. Phillips, Eileen E. Probert, Veronica M. Peterson, Mary Peterson, Barbara E. Pigdon, Ursula M. Paatsch, Phyllis V. Quinton, ia M. Quick, Mary E. Rowley, Amy T. Rawlins, Becca Roberts, Elsie R. Rogerson, Amy Rounding, Arthur W. Roberts, Marjorie A. Rose, iers, Eola B. Russell, Dolores M. Rowe, Mary Rinaldi, Kathleen V. Rogan, Lilv Rankin, Kathleen Reidy, May B. Rynn, Edythe Roberts, iel Roper, Irene E. Roder, Mary Ross, Bertha Robb, Marie L. Suquet, Edward C. Stevens, Ernest J. Sproston, Joseph Swinney, Ethel enton, Annie J. Shepherd, Evelyn M. Stubbs, Jennie Salmon, Winifred K. Stockwell, Harold Sharpe, Dorothy F. Sparke, Elizabeth bottom, Arthur Smith, Leonard Stubbs, Margaret Scott, Olive Sadler, James Smith, Daisy Spittle, Edith Stone, Ivy Spanhake, Florence pence, Vena Swannie, Wynne Shapcott, Anita S. Smith, Norah I. Smith, Ida F. Skien, Ivy Scott, Maud Spalding, Phyllis A. Stokes, yn Sheehy, Elsie C. Smith, Dulcie Swinburn, Vera Smithurst, Ellen C. Shell, Renie V. Slater, Essie Stocker, Mary Sutton, Hope on, Claude W. Shaw, Alice M. Smith, Winnie Smith, Eleana Stonehouse, Nellie Sherry, Esther E. Shotton, Dorothy Steele, Mary Steed, R. Skinner, Muriel F. Shellew, Percy B. Smith, Vera Shannon Mainy Screen, Beulah E. Shannon, Doris W. F. Springbett, Phyllis
 r, Ethel Taylor, Muriel Thomas, Olwen Thomas, Bertha Taylor, Gladys M. Thompson, Mildred Turner, Charles E. Thompson, Phyllis Tanner, Frank Turner, Elsie Tweddale, Mary P. Thomas, Kathleen Thompson, Gladys M. Tuddenham, Eleanor S. Terry, Ellen mpson, Elma Tate, Elizabeth L. M. Thomas, Leonora Tims, Ruby Thomas, Ruby M. Thompson, Francis L. Thomson, Rosalind obald, Elizabeth Toohey, Gwen Thomas, Imogen Thompson, Helene Taylor, Dorothy R. Uncles, Jessie Upton, Ivy M. Voisey, Mona chia, Gladys M. Vial, Lilv Vallence, Lucy Vandersluys, Charles E. Vivis, Frances Vaughn, Irene M. Vandeuleur, Isobel Virtue, Edith ehouse, Lily A. Woodhouse, Doris M. Wiseman, Ruth Williams, Doris P. Whitehouse, Katie Worthing, Eleanor Williams, Marion iver, Martha H. Williams, Edward Whittaker, Florence E. Whitehead, Arthur S. White, Gladys M. Warburton, Mary H. Whalley, ph Woodcock, Hilda Webster, Dora E. Wilks, Nellie Wallace, Dorothy Westphall, Melba Weatherhill, Wilfrida Ward, Edna White,
 M. G. Watson, Madge I. Watts, Dorothy E. Wills, Harrie Wemyss, Fred Watkins, Eva Wray, Winnie E. Wall, Evelene Wilson, Jean lace, Hilda Watford, Margaret E. Whiteside, Bessie Wilkins, Mary M. Waddell, Maida Whitelock, Gladys Weidner, Ailsa M. nwright, Lola Wood, Beatrice Williams, Florence L. Whatmore, Teresa Whelan, Alice Webb, Isabelle William, Olive Winslow, Gladys
 bb, Morris E. Wallace, George Yeats.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—James W. Barnes, Mand Billson, Laurence Bendall, Margaret Bowyer, Cecil H. B. Clark, Winifred Cole, Violet man, Kathleen Cavanagh, Hilda Clark, May Cruse, Dorothy F. Camper, Phillip E. Cohen, Alice Chambers, Eileen Fitzgerald, Harold ian, Isabel C. Glen, Sidney G. Hedges, Alice E. Hooton, Hedwig von Hein, Elsie Key, Eric Martin, Henry Murtha, Gordon L. Olsen, e E. Pimm, Rebe L. Parkinson, Lillian M. Ross, Henry C. Robb, Essie Raphael, Milton Schmidt, Dorothy Stazicker, Norman Thomas, V. Thompson, Ruth J. Thomas, Annie M. Wighton, Olga Woolley.

ORGAN PLAYING.—Harold Coombs, Charles B. Cox, Ethel M. Kydd, Ernest W. Stevens, John H. G. Wilson.

SINGING.—Evelyn Astle, Gertrude A. Brindley, Hilda F. Bird, Nora Burgoyne, Jessie Brice, Daisy Craig, John A. Carter, Martin H. ng, Hilda G. Clarke, Gladys H. E. Daniel, Harold C. George, Queenie Gates, Sarah Hardern, Inez M. Haynes, Sylvia H. Harrison, old E. Josolyne, Violet Lawrence, Marguerite E. Langford, Fanny Mason, Thelma C. Mann, Doris H. Nippin, Kate M. Owen, Eileen M.
 'Shea, Marjorie A. Pain, Isabel Paterson, Winifred G. Rhodes, Alice Sleeman, Martha Taylor, George Wilson.

VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.—Alec C. Borland, Allie R. Bayley.

CORNET PLAYING.—Arthur Stender.

ELOCUTION.—Ruby Amblar, May Burrough, Violet Barker, Janet T. Boyd, Amelia J. Childs, Kitty Churnside, Frances F. J. Cooper, y S. A. Conway, Olive Cairns, Frances A. Dannock, Emily M. English, Nora E. Fuery, Sylvia Griffiths, Florence M. Gordon, Phyllis don, Beatrice M. Hoyle, Laura E. Meyer, Mary J. Mortimore, Herbert Murray, Charles H. Metcalf, Lina Obxurgh, Bessie Percy, meline Powley, Moss Runcieman, Hilda P. Royal, Mary E. Reed, Winifred Ryan, Dora Smith, Muriel G. Stokoe, Ethel A. Slater, ifred E. M. Smabridge, Ada Tate, Dorothy M. Tippet, Vera Tallent, Doris Windle, Millicent M. Woolridge.

DIPLOMAS IN THEORETICAL MUSIC.

LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L. MUS. L.C.M.).

Emlyn Edmunds.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. MUS. L.C.M.).

Ernest A. Cousins, William S. Hall, Edith E. Midwood, Thelma Mitchell, F. Paul, Filia B. de Villiers, George F. Walker.
 * Gold Medalists. † Silver Medalists.

The examiners were: Horton Allison, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Cantab., F.R.A.M.; Alfred W. Abdey, Esq., Mus. Doc.
 a. F.R.C.O.; Edward R. G. Andrews, Esq.; Wilfred Arlom, Esq., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.; Algernon Ashton, Esq.; S. Bath, Esq., Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.; Percy S. Bright, Esq., Mus. Bac. Lond., F.R.C.O.; Chas. T. Corke, Esq., Bac. Cantab., A.R.A.M.; A. E. Cottam, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; H. Bromley Derry, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac.
 et Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; Herbert J. Dawson, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab., L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.; R. J. Douglas, Esq.; R. A. Ebdon, Esq., Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.; T. C. Edwards, Esq., F.R.C.O.; Frank Ellerton, Esq., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; Sidney J.
 ish, Esq., Mus. Bac. T.C.T.; Leonard N. Fowles, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; J. Dawson Hands, Esq., Mus. Bac. Dublin; Haydn K.
 lwick, Esq., Mus. Bac. Dunelm.; A. H. Howell, Esq.; Thomas Hassard, Esq., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; H. F. Henniker, Esq., Doc. Cantuar., A.R.A.M.; G. Augustus Holmes, Esq., Director of Examinations; George Herbert, Esq.; George Hooper, Esq.,
 A.M.; Joshua Ives, Esq., Mus. Bac.; D. J. Jennings, Esq., Mus. Doc., T.C.T.; Charles E. Jolley, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; W. Juncker, Esq.; F. J. Karn, Esq., Mus. Doc. T.U.T., Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Geo. F. King, Esq.; M. Kingston, Esq., Mus. Bac.
 ab.; W. Raymond Kirby, Esq., Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; Thomas W. Lardner, Esq., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., A.R.A.M.; R. J. McLean, Esq., Mus. Bac. Dunelm.; D. J. Montague, Esq.; Thos. R. Mayne, Esq., Mus. Doc. R.U.I., M.A., L.R.A.M.;
 Misquith, Esq.; Henry Newbould, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab., F.R.C.O.; Roland Rogers, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; J. Howlett
 Esq.; Reginald J. Shanks, Esq.; Percy L. Scaife, Esq., Mus. Bac. Dunelm., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.; Sydney Scott, Esq., Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.; W. H. Shinn, Esq.; G. Gilbert Stocks, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; Reginald Toms, Esq.; John Thornton, Esq.; W. E. Thomas, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; D. W. Vaughan, Esq.; Harold E. Watts, Esq., Doc. Oxon.

There were 1,467 Candidates for Diplomas, of which number 919 passed, 524 failed, and 24 were absent.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE (A.L.C.M.) and LICENTIATE (L.L.C.M.) are held in London at certain Provincial and Colonial centres in APRIL, JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER; and for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE IN IC (A.Mus.L.C.M.), LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus.L.C.M.), the TEACHER'S DIPLOMA (L.C.M.), and FELLOWSHIP
 (C.M.) in JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER.

The NEXT LOCAL EXAMINATION in all branches of practical and theoretical music will be held in Scotland and Ireland in JUNE day of entry, May 8), and in all other parts in JULY, the last day of entry being JUNE 8.

REPRESENTATIVES are required to form LOCAL CENTRES in vacant districts in Great Britain and all other parts of the world or gentlemen willing to undertake the duties should apply to the Secretary for particulars. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.
 GOLD, SILVER, and BRONZE MEDALS and BOOK PRIZES are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed tions. Full details will be found in the Syllabus.

The TEACHING DEPARTMENT of the College provides COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION for Students, Amateur or sional. PRIVATE LESSONS are given in Piano-forte, Singing, Violin, Harp, Organ, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Musical Composition, ing Fugue, Orchestration, and Musical History), Mandoline, Guitar, and Elocution; also in Violoncello, Flute, Clarinet, and all other sional instruments. LESSONS MAY COMMENCE FROM ANY DATE.

There are CLASSES in Piano-forte, Singing, Violin, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, Ear Training, Sight-Singing, &c.; also AL COURSE OF TRAINING for Teachers of Music, and PROFESSIONAL COURSE for Pianists, Violinists, and Vocalists.
 THREE-MANUAL ORGAN (39 stops) in the College Concert Hall, available for lessons and practice.

The College is open from 9.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. The staff consists of over 90 professors.

THE ORCHESTRA, OPERA CLASS, LADIES' CHOIR, and STRING QUARTET CLASSES, DRAMATIC CLASS, and DUCIORS' CLASS meet each week.

The 262nd Students' Concert took place in the Concert Hall of the College on March 22nd.

The SUMMER TERM commences on Monday, April 18th.

Full Particulars of both Education and Examination Departments of the College, together with Syllabus and Forms of Entry, can be had n application to Telephones: 3870 Central and 3948 Gerrard.

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.
 Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London."

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

April 25th.—SUMMER TERM begins.

April 27th., at 3 p.m.—THE RIGHT REV. BISHOP MERCER, D.D., Canon Residentiary of Chester Cathedral, will deliver the Inaugural Address. Subject: "The deeper significance of Music."

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

TO ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES AND CONDUCTORS

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., LTD., desire to draw attention to the following specially attractive works for Orchestra recently issued.

SUITE FROM

"WHERE THE RAINBOW ENDS"

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

Price net. s. d.

Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 10 0

Small Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 7 0

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT.)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 2 0

Complete Orchestral List, post free on application.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

CONCERTOS FOR TWO PIANOS (4 HANDS).

(Two copies of each work necessary.)

	Net
ARENSKY, A.—Op. 15, Suite ... ..	ea. 3
BACH, J. C.—Concertos in G major, E major, D major ... ..	ea. 3
BACH, J. S.—Concertos in D major, E major ... ..	ea. 3
— Concertos, F minor, A minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concertos, D minor, F major ... ..	ea. 3
BACH, K. P. E.—Concertos, C minor, G major, D major (No. 2), E♭ major ... ..	ea. 3
BACH, W. F.—Concertos, F major, E♭ major, originally com- posed for two pianos ... ..	ea. 3
— Concertos, E minor, D major, A minor, F major ... ..	ea. 3
BEETHOVEN.—Concerto No. 1, C major ... ..	ea. 3
— Ditto, No. 2, B♭ major; No. 3, C minor; No. 4, G major; No. 5, E♭ major ... ..	ea. 2
CHOPIN.—Concerto, Op. 11, E minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, Op. 21, F minor ... ..	ea. 3
HANDEL.—Concerto, G minor, F major ... ..	ea. 3
HAYDN.—Concerto, D major ... ..	ea. 3
HUMMEL.—Concerto, Op. 85, A minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, Op. 89, B minor ... ..	ea. 3
MENDELSSOHN.—Concerto, Op. 25, G minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, Op. 40, D minor ... ..	ea. 3
MOSCHESLES.—Concerto, Op. 58, G minor ... ..	ea. 3
MOZART.—Concerto, D minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concertos, C major, E♭ major, C minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, A major ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, B major ... ..	ea. 3
— Coronation, Concerto D major ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, Rondo, D major ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerto, E♭ major, for two pianos, with the full orchestral accompaniment arranged for 2nd piano ... ..	ea. 3
RAMEAU, J. PH.—5 Piano Concertos ... ..	ea. 3
SCHUMANN.—Concerto, Op. 54, B minor ... ..	ea. 3
— Concerted Pieces, Op. 92, G major, and Op. 134, D minor ... ..	ea. 3
WEBER.—Op. 11, Concerto, C major ... ..	ea. 3
— Op. 32, Concerto, E major ... ..	ea. 3

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUT
'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS R.
TUTOR,' GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES'
Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S D
TECHNICAL STUDIES,' MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST M
LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CONCERTO

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 85).

FULL SCORE.

Price Forty-Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

APRIL 1 1921

THE JUBILEE OF THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL AND THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

I.—THE BUILDING AND ITS PURPOSE

BY HERMAN KLEIN

One of the strangest features in the growth of a great, irregularly-built city like London is the sudden uprearing of huge structures that do not in the least resemble each other, yet quickly become assimilated to the harmonious mass which constitutes our familiar landscape of bricks and mortar. What was yesterday a bare, neglected spot is to-morrow the scene of a fresh landmark. How little we there hardly know, we seldom care; our chief concern is to learn what it is there for, and to ascertain whether it be beautiful or ugly. Unfortunately it is too often ugly, though very rarely such an offence to the eye as is our one sky-scraper on the south side of St. James's Park. And even here, somehow, it does not take long for Londoners to condone the 'offence.'

Fifty-five years ago the place where the Royal Albert Hall now stands was an empty site forming part of a large estate, one corner of which was laid out for what were then called the Royal Horticultural Gardens, the whole belonging to the corporate body known as the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851. On the opposite side of Kensington Gore, just inside Kensington Gardens, stood the costly memorial erected by Queen Victoria in honour of the Prince Consort, who had died five years before. This was quite a new landmark, and few people were daring enough to describe it as beautiful. But a little later on it was added a foil to the vast coliseum-like building which had been put up over the way—an erection resembling it as little as a balloon resembles a flag-stick—a sort of amphitheatre that speedily won the reputation of being (exteriorly at least) the ugliest structure in the metropolis. Its stately solidity and size forthwith enhanced the hitherto unperceived architectural embellishments of the top-heavy Albert Memorial, and so provided a contrast not ungrateful to the eye, which speedily became accustomed to the new 'circus' (as many called it); while for the rising generation there was, whether beautiful or not, soon became a rival alternative to South Kensington as the India Office and the Cenotaph are to Whitehall to-day. But what was the idea? With what precise object was this extraordinary building thus thrust before the gaze of the astonished Cockney and the even more bewildered visiting provincial? The question was never, as the present writer can vouch, a very easy one to answer. But it is one which should be answered quite categorically now, for the reason that in a few weeks' time the Royal Albert Hall will attain its jubilee—to be celebrated in fitting fashion. Moreover, the readers of the Musical Times, whose founders were so closely associated with its early history, will naturally be anticipating something more than a brief account of its beginnings, as well as of the remarkable developments that have marked its existence. If ever an 'ugly duckling' changed figuratively into a useful and ornamental swan, the Albert Hall certainly did; and how it was made to do so is a story worth telling. To understand it clearly we must go back to the actual commencement.

SCHEME OF THE PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE

On Wednesday, July 6, 1865, a meeting was held at Marlborough House, under the presidency of the Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII.) to promote the erection of a 'Great Central Hall, the want of which for various purposes connected with Science and Art has long been felt.' A Provisional Committee was appointed, with full powers, which met a week later, the Prince again occupying the chair, with his brother, Prince Alfred (subsequently the Duke of Edinburgh) and several influential noblemen and gentlemen to support him. A statement was prepared and issued which disclosed, among other things, that the demand on the part of many official bodies for the establishment of a 'Central Institution in London for the promotion of Scientific and Artistic knowledge as applicable to productive industry,' had been laid before the Commissioners of the Great Exhibition of 1851 shortly after the closing of that Exhibition. The steps in contemplation had been arrested by the death, in 1861, of the Prince Consort, who had himself directed the preparation of the preliminary plans and suggestions. A site had, however, been secured, and the management of the Hall—the 'Central Hall of Arts and Sciences,' as it was to be called—would be vested in a governing body acting under the authority of a Royal Charter.

It was to be available, according to the same statement, for the following objects:

- (a.) Congresses, both national and international, for purposes of science and art.
- (b.) Performances of music, both choral and instrumental, including performances with organ similar to those now given in various large provincial towns, such as Liverpool and Birmingham.
- (c.) The distribution of prizes by public bodies and societies.
- (d.) Conversazioni of societies established for the promotion of science and art.
- (e.) Agricultural and horticultural exhibitions.

- (f.) National and international exhibitions of works of art and industry, including industrial exhibitions by the working-classes similar to those recently held successfully in various parts of London.
- (g.) Exhibitions of pictures, sculpture, and other objects of artistic and scientific interest.
- (h.) Any other purposes connected with science and art.

Such, then, were the very excellent aims with which the new institution was to be founded. They were duly approved, together with a broad financial scheme, which will be referred to presently, and shortly afterwards, under conditions of notable éclat and promise, the whole undertaking was laid before the public. Be it noted of subscribers came forward; Lieut.-Col. (late Major-General) Henry Scott, R.E., was appointed the architect, with Mr. Thomas Verity as his assistant; the builders, Messrs. Lucas Bros. generously contributed £30,000 (to be deducted from the £200,000 at which they estimated the cost of construction); and the digging of the foundation was begun. When the foundation-stone was laid by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, on May 2, 1867, it was expected that the building would be completed in two and a half years. It took nearly a year longer, owing to certain delays, the principal one being caused by an influx of water from a small stream that was found to flow immediately under the site of the Hall, from north to south, proceeding apparently from the Long Water in Kensington Gardens, and ultimately finding its here that the strength of its appeal was largely enhanced by the liberality of the Commissioners of the Great Exhibition. They not only paid all the preliminary expenses, but granted the site for the Hall for a term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years at the nominal rent of one shilling per annum, which grant represented a gift of £60,000 to the Hall. They also guaranteed £50,000 towards the cost of the building. Both artistically and commercially, therefore, the entire proposition wore a healthy aspect.

(From an engraving issued with the Official Statement in 1867.)

As a matter of fact, the public response was gratifying. Everyone was glad when it was announced in 1866 that the new building would be called the 'Royal Albert Hall,' and that it was to be regarded as the completion of the Memorial to H.R.H. the late Prince Consort. A large number way to the Thames. The stream flows to the day through a brick culvert, at the rate of eight gallons per minute.

THE FINANCIAL AND SEATING PLANS

Let us now examine for a moment the plan by which the necessary capital was to be raised. A sum of £150,000 was asked from the public towards the £200,000—a ridiculously small amount in comparison with what would be needed to-day—required for erecting the Hall. It was obtained in the form of subscriptions for boxes and seats that were to be held by the subscribers for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, i.e., practically in perpetuity. The price of a box with ten seats in the first tier was £1,000; of a box with five seats in the second tier, £500; of a reserved stall in the amphitheatre, £100. For the Royal box the Queen subscribed £2,000, and for his the Prince of Wales gave £1,000. Her Majesty was the Patron, and the Prince was President of the institution until, as King Edward, he became Patron, and was in turn succeeded by His present Majesty King George V. In all 1,341 seats were subscribed for, producing a sum of £134,160; and this, added to the grant of £50,000 from the Commissioners and the £30,000 from Messrs. Lucas Bros., sufficed to cover the cost (£214,460) of building the Hall.*

The members were incorporated by Royal Charter, dated April 8, 1867, and their liability limited to the amounts of their subscriptions. They were granted one vote in the management of the Hall for every seat held by them. The Hall was designed to contain about 5,600 'sittings,' as they were termed; but was expected to hold 8,000 for a time it was used for both purposes. Herein we perceive the comprehensive nature of the original project, which was to provide a building 'large enough for the effective display of industrial and other like exhibitions,' as well as for 'large musical performances' such as those whose success 'at numerous other places augurs well for the popularity of similar entertainments in London.' But, as we shall learn, the realisation of this big idea, this creation of a central home for the encouragement and display of the Arts and Sciences, was, through force of circumstances, to be only partially attained.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE HALL

Meanwhile, the late 'sixties were witnessing the steady growth of the new building. The thick red-brick walls rose rapidly in Kensington Gore,

(From an engraving issued with the Official Statement in 1867.)

persons at 'orchestral concerts,' exclusive of the singers and instrumentalists, divided as follows:

Arena ... ..	1,000
Amphitheatre ... ..	1,400
Boxes ... ..	1,100
Balcony ... ..	2,500
Gallery ... ..	2,000

It is interesting to note that the balcony, like the arena, was originally intended to be 'applied to various exhibition purposes,' or else 'fitted with seats for an audience.' The gallery was also to be available for exhibitions, but principally as a promenade or picture-gallery; and in due course with their (then) strange terra-cotta decorations and the fine frieze executed in tesserae of the same substance, forming a mosaic of simple outlines and colours. As a whole the place did not look ungainly until the roof was on, and then not a soul loved it either from near or afar. But as time went on, and the privileged were allowed their first peep at the interior, the true intent, the surprising grandeur and magnitude of Lieut.-Col. Scott's design became apparent to the eye, and soon a very different story was to be heard. Whatever else it might achieve, the Royal Albert Hall as an auditorium would be unique—as unique in its way as its ancient and bigger sister, the Coliseum at Rome.

* It may be mentioned that the Commissioners received 500 seats, while Messrs. Lucas had 300 seats, afterwards purchased by the former body. In 1908, however, these 800 seats were handed over by deed to the Albert Hall Corporation, and are therefore always included as part of the letting area.

It was built, moreover, to be the safest entertainment hall in the world. All the floors were fireproof. The spacious corridors communicated on the south side with three large crush-rooms, whence there were exits under covered porticoes, and a separate exit to the Royal Horticultural Conservatory, long since pulled down. The facilities for ingress and egress were calculated at the remarkable ratio of one door for every two hundred persons, a fact which would seem fully to justify the confidence of the latter-day London County Council when it takes the Albert Hall for demonstrations and displays given by the students and children attending its schools. What is more, it has been estimated that the corridors, staircases, and vestibules are capable of accommodating the entire audience of eight thousand. Certainly, the hall as a rule is cleared in less than three minutes from the end of a performance.

Having regard to the unprecedented size of the auditorium, the scheme of artificial heating was well devised, and so was the ventilation. For these purposes and for the blowing of the organ the necessary power was provided by three boilers and engines in the basement, where, by the way, there is a well four hundred and thirty feet deep, which supplies the Hall with water.

If the gigantic proportions of this novel structure struck the beholder with amazement half a century ago, it may truthfully be said that they never fail to convey a similar impression of extraordinary nobility and grandeur to-day. Personally speaking, the writer always experiences this sense of vastness on entering the Royal Albert Hall; nor, looking back through the long vista of years to the period when it was still surrounded with scaffold-poles, can one help wondering at the rare imagination evinced in the architect's grandiose conception, as well as the knowledge and foresight which he displayed in the working out of all its minor details.* There were some mistakes, of course. It cannot, for example, be pretended that the acoustics turned out to be all that a musician could desire. There emerged from the first a very palpable and troublesome echo, which still persists in spite of the wires that were extended across the Hall to break the continuity of the sound-waves. On the other hand the early annoyances of glare and sound caused by the glass dome were quickly remedied by hanging under it the huge velarium which most people naturally suppose to have been put up when the building was erected.

That it is the largest and loftiest unsupported dome-roof in the world can be asserted on the best authority. It was regarded as a triumph for the still youthful cantilever system when the Forth Bridge had not yet been rebuilt. The height from the floor of the arena to the 'soffit' of the dome is 132 feet 6 inches, or about a third of the height of that of St. Paul's Cathedral. The principal general dimensions of the Hall are as follows:

OUTSIDE				FT.
Length (between walls)	...	...	...	273
Width "	...	...	...	240
Height from pavement	...	...	...	155
Height from engine-room to parapet	...	...	...	104
INSIDE
Length	...	...	...	264
Width	...	...	...	231
Width of Amphitheatre	...	...	...	31
Length of Arena	...	...	...	94
Width of Arena	...	...	...	68

THE GREAT ORGAN

It had been intended from the first that the organ should be commensurate in size with the vast space of the unprecedented concert-room. Its erection—at a cost of £10,000—was not unnaturally entrusted to Mr. Henry Willis, the builder of the lovely instrument in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, whose 'Committee of Advice' including Mr. (later on Sir Michael) Costa and Mr. Bowley (secretary of the Sacred Harmonic Society) reported that 'if carried out as designed it would be by far the grandest and most complete instrument in the world.' This anticipation may have been to a considerable extent—though not literally—fulfilled. Nothing of such mammoth proportions in the shape of an organ had ever been seen before. At the same time, no impartial judge was ever known to describe its aspect as handsome, or even pleasing, still less to declare that Mr. Willis had produced a second masterpiece. The specification of the instrument is subjoined:

PEDAL				FT.
1 Double Open Diapason	...	32	12 Super Octave	...
2 Double Open Diapason	...	32	13 Furniture	5 ranks
3 Contra Violone	...	32	14 Mixture	3 ranks
4 Open Diapason	...	16	15 Contra Posaune	...
5 Open Diapason	...	16	16 Contra Fagotto	...
6 Bourdon	...	16	17 Bombarde	...
7 Violone	...	16	18 Opicleide	...
8 Great Quint	...	12	19 Trombone	...
9 Violoncello	...	8	20 Fagotto	...
10 Octave	...	8	21 Clarion	...
11 Quint	...	6
CHOIR
22 Violone	...	16	32 Flageolet	...
23 Viola da Gamba	...	8	33 Piccolo Harmonique	...
24 Dulciana	...	8	34 Super Octave	...
25 Liebligh Gedact	...	8	35 Mixture	3 ranks
26 Open Diapason	...	8	36 Corno-di-Bassetto	...
27 Vox Angelica	...	8	37 Clarinet	...
28 Principal Harmonique	...	4	38 Cor Anglais	...
29 Gemshorn	...	4	39 Oboe	...
30 Liebligh Flöte	...	4	40 Trompette Harmonique	...
31 Celestina	...	4	41 Clarion	...
GREAT
42 Flöte Conique (partly harmonic)	...	16	54 Viola	...
43 Contra Gamba	...	16	55 Octave	...
44 Violone	...	16	56 Quint Octaviant	...
45 Bourdon	...	16	57 Piccolo Harmonique	...
46 Open Diapason	...	8	58 Super Octave	...
47 Open Diapason	...	8	59 Furniture	5 ranks
48 Viola da Gamba	...	8	60 Mixture	5 ranks
49 Claribel	...	8	61 Contra Posaune	...
50 Flöte Harmonique	...	8	62 Posaune	...
51 Flute à Pavillon	...	8	63 Trompette Harmonique	...
52 Quint	...	6	64 Tromba	...
53 Flöte Octaviant Harmonique	...	4	65 Clarion Harmonique	...
		4	66 Clarion	...
SWELL
67 Double Diapason	...	16	80 Piccolo Harmonique	...
68 Bourdon	...	16	81 Sesquialtera	5 ranks
69 Salicional	...	8	82 Mixture	5 ranks
70 Open Diapason	...	8	83 Contra Posaune	...
71 Viola da Gamba	...	8	84 Contra Oboe	...
72 Flöte à Cheminées	...	8	85 Baryton	...
73 Claribel Flute	...	8	86 Voix Humane	...
74 Quint	...	6	87 Oboe	...
75 Flöte Harmonique	...	4	88 Cornopean	...
76 Viola	...	4	89 Tuba Major	...
77 Principal	...	4	90 Tuba	...
78 Quint Octaviant	...	3	91 Clarion	...
79 Super Octave	...	2

* Lieut.-Col. Scott was a charming man. I had the pleasure of knowing him, and once visited his house when he lived, I think, at Ealing.—H. K.

SOLO

	FT.		FT.
Contra Basso ...	16	102 Corno-di-Bassetto ...	16
Flûte à Pavillon ...	8	103 Clarinet ...	8
Viol d'Amour ...	8	104 Bassoon ...	8
Flûte Harmonique ...	8	105 French Horn ...	8
Clarinet Flute ...	8	106 Ophicleide ...	8
Voix Céleste ...	8	107 Trombone ...	8
Flûte Traversière ...	4	108 Oboe ...	8
Concert Flute ...	4	109 Bombardon ...	16
Piccolo Harmonique ...	2	110 Tuba Mirabilis ...	8
Cymbale		111 Tuba Clarion ...	4

COUPLERS

Solo Sub-octave (on itself).	119	Swell to Choir.
Solo Super-octave (on itself).	120	Solo to Choir.
Swell Sub-octave (on itself).	121	Solo to Pedals.
Swell Super-octave (on itself).	122	Swell to Pedals.
Unison Solo to Great.	123	Great to Pedals.
Unison Swell to Great	124	Choir to Pedals.
Unison Choir to Great.	125	Sforzando.

The compass of the four manual clavers extends from CC to C in (sixty-one notes), and that of the pedale from CCC to G (thirty-two es).

PREPARING A VAST MUSICAL SCHEME

So much for the building. As we have seen, its es were to be many and varied, and were to ge from oratorios and organ recitals to the position of pictures, industries, and even ricultural implements. But, above and beyond , it was music that was to derive profit om the resources of this Brobdingnagian nple of harmony. In order to ascertain e abundance of the measure in which it was do so, we shall for a moment have to pass er the period of completion—i.e., the spring of 71—and come to the following year, when the ovisional Committee issued its first report to the -called 'promoters,' then acting under the Royal arter, who were thenceforward to be known as 'seat-holders.'

This report, signed by the Prince of Wales, apitulated various matters with which we are w familiar and then went on to submit to the rporation—or, rather to 'specially commend to care'—three new and important schemes, viz. :

- A series of cheap concerts for the people.
- A society of amateurs of all classes for instrumental music.
- A National Training School for Music.

Of these, by far the most interesting to us at the resent moment is the third, wherein lay the germ a splendid idea, which survives in glorified form the Royal College of Music. It is, indeed, rth remembering that the existence of this titution practically began with that of the Royal ert Hall, where it was to 'have the use of one the small lecture theatres and other rooms on sonable terms as soon as responsible organization been formed to conduct the school'—all of ich was, however, to take time and pass through ood many stages of development and progress the parent idea attained fruition. On this ject, more anon.

Of the other two schemes named above, the t embodied a genuine attempt to provide weekly grammes of popular music—glees, songs, instru- ntal and organ pieces—at low prices, the scription rates working out at 3d. (gallery), (orchestra), 9d. (balcony), 1s. 6d. (arena), and s (amphitheatre stalls). It did not, however, act the public. The second scheme brought into existence the Amateur Instrumental Society, the precursor of the Amateur Orchestral Society, under the presidency of the Duke of Edinburgh, who played for a time among the first violins. The duties of conductor were shared for several seasons by Mr. Arthur Sullivan and Mr. George Mount; and when the former resigned his post Mr. Mount carried on the work until the dissolution of the Society only a few years ago. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales became president when his brother died, and was characteristically faithful in his regular attendance at the smoking concerts of the Society.

Nor did the activities of the Corporation stop here. They embraced in 1872 the holding of a series of eighteen subscription concerts in May, June, and July, which furnished an example of 'decentralization' quite on a par with anything that is being attempted in that direction to-day. No doubt the whole effort was premature—a good idea experimented with before its time. It ought to have succeeded; but, as we shall see, it did not. Imagine, however, the audacity of an enterprise that was to include in a three months' scheme the following features:

- Oratorios, given by the Sacred Harmonic Society, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa.
- Operatic and miscellaneous concerts, given by Mr. Mapleson, with the whole of the company of Her Majesty's Theatre.
- Popular concerts, given by Mr. Arthur Chappell, the manager of the Monday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall (with Joachim, Norman-Néruda, Madame Schumann, Hallé, Ries, Piatti, &c.).
- Grand choral concerts, given by Her Majesty's Commissioners, under the direction of M. Ch. Gounod, with the aid of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society (then in process of formation), consisting of above a thousand voices.

In addition, the Provisional Committee's report, from which this list is quoted, announced further concerts by the Sacred Harmonic Society, concerts under Sir Julius Benedict, thirty recitals in connection with the International Exhibition of 1872 (to be held in the adjoining grounds), and several performances of sacred music on Saturday—not Sunday—afternoons. The Sunday innovation was not to be permitted for a good many years.

THE NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR MUSIC

The coincidence of birth between the Royal Albert Hall and the National Training School for Music has already been noted. They cannot be said to have been precisely twins, inasmuch as their entry into existence was not simultaneous; but beyond question the School would never have begun life when it did had not the opening of the Hall been thought the right moment—and the place the right one—to provide it with a suitable home. Hence the proposals which occupy two pages of the report of the Provisional Committee.

Their period of gestation had already covered a good many years, and it was with the Prince Consort himself that the idea of founding such an institution had originated. That was in the 'fifties. It was then taken up by the Society of Arts, but nothing definite was done until August, 1866, when a report was issued recommending the establishment of a music school based upon the same lines as the Royal Academies of Paris, Brussels, and Naples—that is, a school for a couple of hundred students, to be trained gratuitously by aid of scholarships, grants, &c., and another hundred who should pay for their education. This document also went so far as to suggest the reorganization of the Royal Academy of Music (then situated in Tenterden Street, Hanover Square) where administrative and other reforms were certainly much needed. But the suggestion, however advisable, made enemies for the new scheme, and was probably the main cause of its being shelved for another five years. Then the Society of Arts, more in earnest than ever, came out with a statement declaring that 'the time had arrived, &c.,' and that the help of the State, the Deans and Chapters of our Cathedrals, and the various civic bodies and municipal authorities, must be secured for the effectual carrying out of this great musical purpose.

But, not until the Royal Albert Hall was actually in situ, and more or less in working order, did the Society of Arts play its final and successful trump card. That was in November, 1871, when a letter was addressed to the executive committee of the Hall, putting forward a revised scheme that would avoid any 'interference' with the Royal Academy of Music, 'because at the National Training School scholars will not be admitted by direct payment, but will receive free instruction, whereas at the Royal Academy of Music the fees paid by students constitute an essential part of its income.' The letter further inquired upon what terms arrangements could be made to enable the School to engage one of the lecture theatres, and some of the adjacent rooms on the same floor in the Royal Albert Hall. In December, the executive committee decided to recommend a favourable reply, and, if not literally carried into effect, it was that answer which led to the erection (at the expense of the late Mr. C. J. Freake) of the first building used by the National Training School on the west side of the Albert Hall, and ultimately opened at Easter, 1876.

It would occupy too much space to enter into details here concerning the early history of the School, or the process of growth and transformation whereby in 1883 it became metamorphosed into the Royal College of Music. But it is interesting to observe after this long lapse of time how, when the first jealousies had been overcome, the threatening causes of friction all removed, and notwithstanding the fact that the plan reverted to was the original one of training both free and paying scholars (the latter, indeed, always more numerous than the former), there ensued conditions of perfect amity and useful friendly competition between the new College and the old Academy which, in the belief of the writer, the years have served only to strengthen.

THE OPENING OF THE HALL BY QUEEN VICTORIA

Early in 1871 everything was ready for the opening ceremony, the date of which was fixed by Her Majesty the Queen for March 29. The arrangements were largely in the hands of Mr. Wentworth Cole (nephew of Sir Henry Cole, Bt.), a member of the Corporation under the Charter who had been appointed manager of the Hall. His position was held by him until he died in 1901, when he was succeeded by the present manager, Mr. Hilton Carter, previously secretary of the Guildhall School of Music.

The ceremonial was carried out with full attendance, the entire Royal Family being present, including four still surviving members, viz., the Duke of Connaught (then known as Prince Arthur), the Princess Christian, the Princess Louise, and the Princess Beatrice. The Prince of Wales, as President, received his mother at the hyacinth entrance,* and led her to the dais amid the peal of the National Anthem, played on the organ by the famous Liverpool organist, William T. Best. All the members of the Government were present, headed by Mr. Gladstone, together with a brilliant gathering of the aristocracy and important diplomatic personages. The whole scene, as we may imagine, was one of extraordinary splendour. There were special decorations, however, unless mention may be made of the beautiful hammercloth of Uccle velvet that hung over the front of the Royal box, and which has since been used on the occasion of all Royal visits, the initials having been changed in turn from 'V.R.' and 'E.R.' to 'G.R.' The armchair in which Her Majesty sat is still, to this day, retained in the Royal box, though no it is never used—for Queen Victoria was below the average height and required an unusually low seat.

The reporters noticed that the Prince read the address of welcome in a very loud voice. It was evident that he was afraid his words would not otherwise be heard in this new and vast milieu. The Daily News remarked next day that His Royal Highness 'naturally thought it necessary to raise his voice to a very high pitch, but he was not only heard but heard to be speaking in a loud voice all over the Hall' (sic). No doubt. But then the Daily News also declared the acoustics of the Hall to be 'perfect,' whereas most of the papers were (and justly) of a diametrically opposite opinion. The point is that everyone who speaks or sings in the Albert Hall for the first time almost invariably employs an excessive degree of force.

* It would have been interesting had someone drawn Her Majesty's attention at that moment to two empty niches, one on each side of the portico, with the names 'Victoria' and 'Albert' respectively upon them, and evidently intended to receive in due time busts of the Sovereign and her Consort. These busts have never been applied to the niches as still unoccupied. Nor will the purpose of the Albert Hall as a dual memorial be wholly complete until the missing pieces of sculpture are installed.

When the Prince said was of greater importance. He referred to the successful completion of the Hall as an important feature of a long-cherished design of my beloved father for the general culture of our people, and for the encouragement of the Arts and Sciences, an object which he always had warmly at heart.' His Royal Highness further added: 'The interest shown in the Hall by the most eminent musicians and composers of Europe strengthens our belief that it will largely conduce to the revival among all classes of the nation of a taste for the cultivation of music.' In the course of her reply, the Queen, after laying stress on the value of Exhibitions, said: 'These objects could not fail to commend themselves at all times, and in all places, to my sympathy and interest, fraught as they are with recollections of him to whose memory this Hall is dedicated, and whose dearest aim was to inspire my people with a love of all that is good and noble, and, by closer knowledge and juster appreciation of each other, to cultivate a spirit of goodwill and concord.'

These were words of deep and serious import, and they imposed a heavy obligation upon those entrusted with the task of shaping the destinies of the new undertaking. The task in question has now a history of fifty years, a history replete with chequered events—disappointments and failures, periods of disaster and dissatisfaction, followed by the returning smiles of good fortune and success. The narrative of these events must be told in subsequent articles; and as the double Jubilee is not to be celebrated until May 7, the greater part of the story will have been told in these columns before then.

TWO FUNCTIONS—A CONTRAST

Meanwhile, just a word of comparison concerning the music that was given on the occasion of the opening ceremony, and that to be heard at the Jubilee function now close at hand. The programme arranged for the latter, when the King and Queen will, it is hoped, be present, is, save as to oneardonable item, all British: it illustrates the national musical growth as embodied in those composers who have been most closely associated with the Royal Albert Hall. That is doing a good deal.

Fifty years ago, the concert listened to by Queen Victoria and her family included scarcely a single piece from an English pen. The Ode or Biblical Cantata (it had no specific title) which furnished the pièce d'occasion was composed by Sir Michael Costa, the celebrated conductor, a Neapolitan by birth, albeit a Londoner by adoption, whose oratorios might have led his critics to expect better things from him, whereas they were agreed that he never wrote anything more uninspired than this Ode. Its one redeeming feature was the quartet of native soloists, which comprised Lemmens-Sherrington, Patey, Vernon, and the happily still-living Sir Charles Santley. In all other respects the programme was quite unworthy of the inauguration of a unique and magnificent concert-hall—a wonderful place; a place with a purpose calculated to arouse the pride and emulative spirit of every cultivated Englishman.

(To be continued.)

PARRY AS SONG-WRITER

By H. C. COLLES

(Concluded from March number, page 158)

III.

The editors of the posthumous volumes of Parry's songs are anxious that it should be made quite clear that the responsibility for including 'When the Sun's great Orb' in Book XII. is theirs. It was not one of the five or six songs mentioned by the composer as among those which he meant to publish.

This was assumed by me when at the end of my first article I said: 'It was right to publish "When the Sun's great Orb," for without it we should lose an essential aspect of him.' A part of last month's article was devoted to an attempt to discover that essential aspect by a process of analysis and of contrast with other songs. It is possible that Parry would have withheld it from publication or remodelled some of its details, but we cannot be certain. For one of the contradictions of his style—almost the only important contradiction it contains—is due to the mixture of responsibility and impulse which at one moment would make him consider and weigh what he said either in words or music with an almost excessive conscientiousness, and at another allow him to pass some detail which seems incompatible with his own standard of self-criticism. It is a contradiction which cannot be ignored if we are to get anything like a discriminating appreciation of his music. It is as futile on the one hand to maintain, as some of his warmest admirers have maintained, that the whole of his output was checked by a severe self-criticism, as it is short-sighted on the other to allow his great music to sink into oblivion because its workmanship in certain instances bears signs of haste and even of makeshift. The baffling thing is that the hasty workmanship often appears in works to which he gave the closest and most carefully considered thought. If we are to get at the kernel of Parry's mind we have to recognize both sides of the case.

There was a definite cause for such defects in many of his big choral works. They were generally written against time for a special occasion in the hardly won intervals of an exceptionally busy life. In those cases he concentrated on the things which mattered most to him and which were never the details of phraseology or of instrumentation. The only pity was that he did not realise how much those details might count to the generality of his hearers.

With the songs, however, the case was different. He could, and frequently did, hold back a song with a view to polishing its expression, or, as he himself used to put it 'solving its problems.' Yet some of the songs which he did publish, in the ninth and tenth sets of the Lyrics particularly, appear with some imperfectly solved problems in the instrumental part. 'The Witches' Wood' (Mary E. Coleridge, Book IX.) and 'The City Window' (Langdon Elwyn Mitchell, Book X.) are examples. In both, the function of the pianoforte part is to enforce the descriptive qualities of the verse, and both contain ideas of great musical beauty. To discuss how far these ideas permeate every feature would be to labour a point which has been already sufficiently accentuated in the case of the later songs.

There are two ways in which a composer may approach a descriptive poem. In one his music holds a mirror to the words; their features are reflected in its form. The other takes little or no account of the features, but dwells entirely in the mood which their total combines to produce. The songs just named illustrate the first method, but the latter was the more congenial to Parry. The greatest of his descriptive songs is one in which any attempt to emphasize one image of the poem at the expense of another would have been fatal. This is the setting in Book VIII. of Langdon Elwyn Mitchell's 'Nightfall in Winter':

Cold is the air,
The woods are bare
And brown; the herd
Stand in the yard.
The frost doth fall;
And round the hill
The hares move slow;
The homeward crow,
Alone and high
Crosses the sky
All silently.

The poet makes no comment, and the musician may make none. He takes quiet note of every feature of the scene in the waning light and the growing cold. There is a numbness everywhere. It is this which Parry has caught and held in the rhythm which prevails throughout, in the long, repeated notes which fall with a dull thud on every accent, and the vocal declamation, all on the middle notes of the voice, moving constantly by small intervals. The end of the song is here quoted to show its nature, but it is only in the balance of the whole that we get the measure of his insight into the qualities of the poem:

EX. 1.

It is worth noticing particularly how the rhythm is carried through to its logical conclusion in the final cadence. There is no trace here of the conventional Coda to round off the song which is sometimes met with, and generally with regret, at the end of a deeply felt song.

'Dirge in Woods' (George Meredith), in the same volume, deserves to be placed beside 'Nightfall in Winter,' for here the words demand contrast in the picture of the wind swaying the pine-tops above, while beneath, the wood is 'quiet as under the sea.' The slow 6-8 measure prevails through the greater part of the song, but the stillness beneath is suggested in one extraordinarily subtle touch:

Ex. 2.

The pine-tree drops its dead.

the interpolation of that pair of quavers one sees the light pine-needles dropping straight to earth, unwavering though the wind sighs overhead. This is an instance of Parry's command of the magic of simplicity, the musical counterpart to the monosyllables by which Meredith gains the effect of his line.

If the study of these examples has been at all successful, it will have shown something of Parry's adaptability to types of poetry varying widely in mood and in manner. Something was said in the last article of his increasing fondness for lyrics by William Sturgis and others, which, whatever their merits and suitability for music, must be described as minor poetry. The minor poem has certain definite advantages as the text for a song. Granted that it is free from banalities of expression, it may allow a musician greater liberty of action from the fact that it gives him scope to supply the personality which it lacks. In the majority of instances where Parry chose such verse he carried through by the strength of his own impulse. He makes real even such a stanza as:

O bird flying far to the ocean,
O bird flying far to the sea,
I ask for one buoyant emotion,
One thrill of thy rapture for me.

Only a great artist could have done so. This, from 'Moment of Farewell' (Sturgis, Book X.), suggests comparison with the earlier setting of Byron's 'here be none of beauty's daughters' (Book IV.). Byron's poem has a colour of its own to which the composer must bend his mood. A quotation may show how completely he has reflected that colour in the shape of his melody:

And like music on the waters Is thy sweet voice to me When, as if its sound were causing The charmed ocean's pausing, The waves lie still and gleam-ing.

This is so apt to the mellifluous lines that one hardly finds in it the traits of the typical Parry melody as they are found in the Sturgis song. Parry rarely set the romantic poets, but this and the Keats song which follows it, 'Bright Star,' suggest that he might have added many other facets to his style as a song-writer had he chosen to do so.

But amongst the many facets which he did develop, one returns to his settings of the Elizabethans as the most completely satisfying. Of those in the earlier sets, several are among the best known of his songs. Some of the most delicate, 'Weep you no more, sad fountains' and 'Lay a garland on my hearse,' for example, should be much better known than they are. But 'On a time the amorous Silvy' (Book VII.), one of the last of the kind which he published, is scarcely ever heard:

Ex. 4.

On a time the amorous Silvy Said to her Shepherd "Sweet, how do ye.

The picture of the tender dalliance and reluctant parting of Silvy and her shepherd is completed in the following exquisite cadence:

Ex. 5.

Kiss me and take my soul . . . in keep - ing, Since I must go, . . . now day is near.

In the thoughtful poise of the few chords used, in the balance of tonality, and in the rhythm of the melody extending without straining that of the verse, we find an epitome of Parry's art as a song-writer.

MODERN FRENCH COMPOSERS: I.—HOW THEY ARE ENCOURAGED

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

Which of the modern schools of music has achieved the most and deserves best is a question often asked, almost as often answered—and a perfectly futile question: not only because comparisons of the kind seldom serve any desirable purpose, but because time alone can supply the true answer. Counting the works of a given school is useless unless one is able to weigh them. The Hungarian school, whose prominent representatives are but two, Béla Bartók and Zoltan Kodaly (possibly three, if Nikolaus Radnai, whose works prior to 1914 were full of promise, has further made good), may be considered no less important in purport and in potential influence, and perhaps even more so, than many a school whose representatives are more numerous. The contemporary German composers are many: but may be the small group headed by Arnold Schönberg will be found to carry greater significance than all the remainder. Were we able to discover to-day how many of the contemporary composers of any country will endure, and which of them will stand foremost in the opinion of posterity, it is not unlikely that most of us would be overwhelmed with surprise—exactly as most of Beethoven's contemporaries would have been had they known what his ultimate standing would be.

Even without attempting to deliver judgment as to the comparative merits of the modern French school, there is one statement that can unhesitatingly be made: of all countries that have constantly taken an interest in music, none has during the past hundred years or so made greater headway than France. Apart from the general causes that led to her progress during the 19th century and after—a synopsis of which will be found in the Musical Times for September, 1913, p. 574—we must, when attempting to investigate the circumstances in which the French School pursued its evolution, take into account the fact that in France a systematic policy of encouragement to musicians is pursued both by the State and by private initiative. Naturally enough, the methods by which that policy is carried out are not altogether flawless. A brief description will show how far they are efficient, and how far they fall short.

To begin with, the would-be composer, instrumentalist or vocalist, receives his professional education free in the Conservatoires of Paris, or of the provinces. Competitions—whose results are neither more nor less infallible than those of other musical contests—regulate his or her progress in the ranks. The highest award for composers, the Prix de Rome, ensures several years of modest independence (enough for the composer to make a good start), and carries with it the certainty that an opera or other similar work from the composer's pen will some day be produced under the best available conditions at one of the State-subsidised theatres, the Opéra or the Opéra-Comique.

These theatres, in exchange for the grant-in-aid which they receive, are compelled, among other things, to produce a determined number of works by French composers, and specially by laureates of the Conservatoire. More recently, the Gaité Lyrique, subsidised by the City of Paris, has come to widen the field thus offered.

Here, again, the methods of selection—methods strictly determined by official regulations—are not infallible. Indeed, the list of high-class works by French composers which remained neglected—if not permanently, at least for a time—by the managers of the Paris theatres, is striking enough. Saint-Saëns' 'Samson and Delilah,' Chabrier's 'Gwendoline,' Vincent d'Indy's 'Fervaal' and 'L'Etranger' were produced abroad before being introduced to the French public. On the other hand, the number of important works produced under the same regulations is not small.

The great defect of this system is that it constitutes an artificial and altogether disproportionate stimulus to opera-writing. The catalogue of new works by French composers produced during the past twenty-five years or so is a most depressing document. It shows that a considerable number of composers who had neither the slightest natural inclination nor genuine capacity for writing operas have been induced to attempt the impossible; that their energies, which might have been better employed in other directions, have been wasted, as well as the sums expended in producing and in publishing their still-born works. Even efficient opera-writers such as Saint-Saëns or Massenet have obviously overwritten themselves, many a score from their pen faring no better than the average effort of the average 'Prix de Rome.'

Not long ago the composer of concert-music received very different treatment. No official encouragement was provided for him. The very education given at the State Conservatoires converged exclusively towards opera-writing, and no provisions similar to those mentioned above were made to ensure the performance of instrumental works written either by laureates or others. But in proportion as the modern French school progressed things began to improve in that respect. The first great step was taken by private initiative. In 1871 a number of composers and music-lovers founded the Société Nationale de Musique, with the object of performing new works. This Society has pursued its course with the greatest steadiness and efficiency. The annual subscription (25 francs before the war) entitles each member to free seats at all the concerts; the average number of concerts given each year is about eight of chamber music and one or two of orchestral music. The services rendered by the Society to the French school and to others are enormous. Together with its younger rival, the Société Musicale Indépendante, it remains the centre where the modern course of musical art can best be followed.

That both the Société Nationale and the Société Indépendante are really live organizations is shown not only by their programmes, but by interesting initiatives taken by them. For instance, the Société Nationale provides, for the benefit of inexperienced composers, orchestral readings of works judged too crude for public performance. The Société Indépendante, in order to protest against the (alleged) prejudiced attitude of concert-goers and critics—or, to put it more charitably, in order to prove that opinions on new works were often influenced by the composer's name—gave a concert the programme of which remained silent as to the authorship of the works produced—with the result that most of the critics refrained from mentioning the affair at all.

It was at a much later date that the French State extended to concert-music the advantages provided for operas and lyric dramas, stipulating that the symphony concert associations which received a grant-in-aid should be compelled to produce each year a determined proportion of new French music. That measure, it is true, came at a time when modern French works were by no means overlooked by conductors, and it is doubtful whether it was really necessary. One of its consequences was an increase in the number of indifferent works produced—chiefly short pieces or excerpts, as the regulations merely stipulated that the total time to be devoted in the programmes to the production of new French works should be three hours per annum.

An interesting sidelight on that regulation is provided by the deliberations of the committee of the Concerts-Lamoureux in 1908, when the question was debated as to whether it would not be more advantageous to give up the grant-in-aid (then 15,000 francs, or £600) and be released from the obligation to produce the three hours of new music. The decision, however, was that the grant-in-aid be retained.

Another factor of importance was the foundation of substantial prizes (Prix de la Ville de Paris, Prix Crescent, prizes awarded by the Société des Compositeurs de Musique, &c.) for concert-music of various kinds, all of which prizes carry with them a public performance of the successful works. But far more vital was the evolution, from the late 'nineties onward, of musical education—both for professionals and for the public.

Here again the initiative was taken by private enterprise. While the Conservatoire pursued its inadequate and obsolete course, three musicians—Vincent d'Indy, Charles Bordes, and Alexandre Guilmant—decided to organize 'a school of music fit to meet the requirements of the time.' They speedily carried out their purpose, and in 1894 the Schola Cantorum was opened for the double purpose of providing courses of education and of giving concerts devoted to works of all schools and periods, but chiefly to old masterpieces overlooked by other concert institutions. Works by Monteverdi, Marc-Antoine Charpentier, Bach, and Rameau, were 'by the activities of the Schola Cantorum added to the usual pabulum provided for Parisian concert-goers. For the students, Vincent d'Indy devised a method of teaching, partly historical and partly analytical, of which his published 'Treatise of Composition' gives a full synopsis. The influence, direct or indirect, of the Schola Cantorum soon proved far-reaching. To that influence can be ascribed the remodelling of the Conservatoire, to the directorship of which was appointed Gabriel Fauré, a peerless instructor whose pupils stand foremost among the younger generation of French composers.

As regards the education of the public, the propaganda work accomplished by the founders of the Schola Cantorum (one of whom, Charles Bordes, had previously organized the 'Chanteurs de Saint Gervais' in order to propagate old a cappella music), by the Société Nationale, and by the Société Indépendante, has achieved precisely all that could best serve the cause of the modern French school and of modern music in general. It has created a wider and deeper interest in music; it has accustomed concert-goers to the idea that it is a mistake to restrict their interest to the works of masters acknowledged as household classics, or possibly to extend it only to the works of a few modern writers raised, perhaps prematurely, to the rank of classics ; it has taught these concert-goers that even unknown composers, or composers whose works have given rise to adverse criticism, may deserve the same amount of attention, of patient and unprejudiced investigation, as is bestowed with one consent upon the most famous composers of the past.

Another institution founded by private initiative, the École des Hautes Études Sociales, has also done a great deal to disseminate that fundamental but often overlooked principle, and to supply more positive elements of knowledge relative to modern music. Its Art section comprises a music school which provides a wide range of public lectures and concerts. Ever since its foundation (1902, or thereabouts) the School has devoted special attention to the study of contemporary French works. In 1904, for instance, M. Laloy delivered a course on the evolution of the French lyric drama, as illustrated by the works of Vincent d'Indy, Alfred Bruneau, Debussy, and Charpentier. Works by Ravel, Florent Schmitt, Déodat de Séverac, Inghelbrecht, and many others, were performed, and commented upon during the subsequent years. And it may be added that the courses on modern music have included the performance and study of many works by foreign composers, such as Schönberg, Stravinsky, Scriabin, Ornstein, Bartók, Kodaly, Binenbaum, Egon Wellesz, Gniessin, and Senilof.

A systematic survey of all that has been done in France to encourage native composers, and to increase the receptivity of the public, ought to comprise many names and the record of many deeds. Enough has been said to show that a considerable amount of initiative and perseverance has been devoted to that duplicate task, with results on the whole as satisfactory as could be expected. Any composer—whether a laureate of the Conservatoire or not—has a reasonable chance of having his works performed, and perhaps attentively considered. Strong party feeling, it is true, prevails, and does a good deal of harm, new works being not infrequently judged from the point of view of the tendencies they embody—or are supposed to embody—rather than on their actual merit. Independent composers, who appear in the field without followers, occasionally run the risk of encountering indifference, or, maybe, of finding all cliques, great or small, united against them. But that, when all is said and done, is a minor matter.

The répertoire of modern French music—even excluding all that was not written in pursuance of a genuine artistic purpose—comprises so wide and so varied a range of works that we need not be surprised if, even under the comparatively very favourable conditions obtaining in France, a good many have not received due recognition, and some are totally or almost totally unknown. There are composers of great merit who, for various reasons, or for no particular reason, remain in the background. Others are known only by a few of their works, and perhaps not the works that would, if given a fair trial, be most highly esteemed in France and abroad. Among the former might be named Albéric Magnard, whose music one may like or not, but whose loftiness of purpose and uncompromising faith in his ideals cannot be denied ; Paul Dukas, less austere, but equally earnest and genuine ; Paul Ladmirault, spirited and poetic ; Charles Koechlin, powerful and glowing. The composer of many works that have not yet come into their own. Among the latter I would name Vincent d'Indy first, although it is hard accurate to describe him as little known. He is well-known enough, but he shares with at least one other very great composer, Franz Liszt, the misfortune of being the victim of a few catch-words. The world's répertoire of lyric drama comprises few finer works than his 'Fervaal,' and indeed few that are as fine. Many of his orchestral works are far less known than they deserve to be.

In further articles I shall refer to these composers more fully, and also to other representatives of the modern French school.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from March number page 165.)

VII.—THE CHORAL PRELUDES IN THE 'CLAVIERÜBUNG'

The 'Clavierübung' is a comprehensive work in four parts, the first of which appeared in 1731 and the fourth about 1742. Bach borrowed the title from Kuhnau, who produced a 'Neue Clavierübung' (New Clavier Exercises), in 1695. Part 3 of Bach's work (1739) consists of organ music—the great Prelude in E flat, followed by twenty-one choral preludes, the whole being rounded off by the Fugue in E flat popularly known as 'St. Anne's.' Special interest attaches to the 'Clavierübung': it shows Bach at his best both as organ and clavier composer, and it was almost certainly the first of his works to attain the glory of print. Impatient young composers of to-day, with somewhat less to say than Bach, may probably reflect on this latter point, remembering that John Sebastian was at that time well past his fortieth year.

Consideration of the E flat Prelude and Fugue may well be deferred until we come to the final group of works in that form. It is not easy to see why these two movements were included in a collection of pieces based on chorale melodies. The Fugue is not out of place, because its subject might well pass for the opening strain of a chorale, but the Prelude is obviously an intruder. It is earlier in style than its companion, and belongs to the self-contained concerto type of movement rather than to the prelude family. Perhaps the two movements got in by chance. The conjecture is by no means wild, for this part of the 'Clavierübung,' planned to contain organ works only, contains also four duets for clavier—really the part inventions—which it is generally agreed were included by mistake.

In the 'Clavierübung' set of chorale preludes, as in the 'Little Organ Book,' Bach had an ecclesiastical scheme in view. Not only did he aim at an organ version of the Lutheran Catechism hymns; he even went further, and just as Luther provided a greater and a smaller Catechism—the former for adults and the latter for children—so Bach wrote two versions of each chorale, one in extended form for manuals and pedals, the other short and for manuals only. The single exception to this double treatment is 'Allein Gott in der Höh' sei Ehr,' which, being a metrical version of the 'Gloria in excelsis,' is appropriately given three versions as a symbol of the Trinity.

The original order of these preludes has been little regarded by editors. The point is not of great importance to English players, who will naturally be concerned with purely musical considerations. But all this side of Bach's work is so peculiarly intimate and personal that we can ill afford to ignore any details that throw light on his intentions. So far as I am able to discover, the Novello edition (Book XVI.) is the only one that gives this part of the 'Clavierübung' in Bach's own order. Putting aside the Prelude and Fugue, the scheme falls into seven sections: The Trinity: the threefold Kyrie (three large and three small movements) and 'Allein Gott' (three movements); the Law: 'Dies sind die heil'gen zehn Gebot' (These are the holy Ten Commandments); Faith: 'Wir glauben all' an einen Gott' ('We all believe in one God'); Prayer: 'Vater unser' (The Lord's Prayer); Baptism: 'Christ, unser

Herr' zum Jordan kam' ('Christ our Lord to Jordan came'); Penitence: 'Aus tiefer Noth' ('In deepest need'); and Communion: 'Jesus Christus unser Heiland' ('Jesus Christ our Saviour')—twenty-one movements in all.

The set as a whole appears to have been written specially for the collection, though some of the smaller movements probably date from an earlier period.

The three preludes on the Kyrie are notable for fine polyphony of a type that suggests the influence of the Palestrina school. The third piece is so much the biggest in every way that it overshadows its companions. These are heard at their best if played with the chorale melody given to a powerful reed against a solid diapason background. The vigorous counterpoint demands a good deal more than the quiet registration usually suggested. The third, 'Kyrie, Gott heiliger Geist,' must rank among the handful of Bach's grandest works. It would be difficult to find a better example of his power of taking a bald series of notes and developing from them a towering edifice of sound so perfect and satisfying that there is nothing to be said by those of us who dislike dealing in superlatives. Let the reader who does not know this piece study it—like most five-part writing it is by no means easy—and compare it with some of the hackneyed fugues that are popularly supposed to display the genius of Bach. Plenty of tone is called for, with a powerful pedal for the cantus. There are some fine climaxes in which the swell pedal may play a big part. The grindingly discordant Coda is best phrased thus:

Following as it does a long spell of animated heavier movement, the effect of this weighty variation, with its insistent two-note motive and daring harmony, is quite extraordinary.

The three settings of the Kyrie for manuals only are admirable little studies in part-playing.

The first of the three preludes on 'Allein Gott' is a rather dry affair for manual only, and may well be left alone. The second is a lengthy Trio, owing Bach at his happiest, as the form usually goes. It is well worth a place by the side of the best of the Trio-Sonatas. For its proper performance three uncoupled manuals and pedals are called for—two of the manuals for the delivery of the two semiquaver parts, the third for a rather more telling stop for the phrases of the chorale. This beautifully finished piece is a fine study, and with good registration can be made into an attractive solo. The third piece on this melody is a bright little fughetta for manuals only, calling for a neat finger and good phrasing.

The long movement on 'Dies sind die heil'gen zehn Gebot' is an interesting failure. Bach writes two parts for the right hand, and a pedal part, all three moving freely. In the middle of this trio appears the chorale melody, in long notes, worked as a canon in the octave. The result is unsatisfactory, both from a musical and a descriptive point of view. The chorale contains so many repeated notes that its delivery in augmentation, especially in canon, gives an impression of stagnation. As programme music the work fails because Bach seems to have tried to do too much. No doubt Schweitzer is right when he says that the free parts represent the moral disorder of the world, while the slow canon which forms the core of the piece stands for the law. But if Bach aimed at a musical picture of the eternal conflict between order and disorder he was asking too much of his medium. Music, above all the arts, excels at showing chaos and cosmos in alternation, but it cannot show them together. Only the painter can do that.

The manual piece on this chorale is a gay fughetta. What does Bach mean here? Perhaps he set out to do no more than enjoy himself in toying with the engaging subject evolved from the first phrase of the tune. Still, we cannot overlook the fact that this subject appears ten times, so there must be some reference to the Commandments. There may even be significance in the fact that the subject is inverted in entries 5-8, the Commandments from No. 5 onwards being concerned specially with human relationships. This is just the kind of childlike symbolism Bach indulged in all his life. We may smile at it, just as we smile at Samuel Johnson touching the tops of posts as he rolled his way down Fleet Street, but we like great men none the less—rather the more—for such little weaknesses. One thing seems to be clear in regard to this prelude. Bach surely meant its cheerful animation to express the idea that liberty, not bondage, is the result of obedience to the Law—'whose service is perfect freedom.'

The Prelude on 'Wir glauben all' is one of the most familiar of all Bach's organ works in this country, owing to its having had the good fortune to be included in the earlier books of preludes and fugues in the Novello edition. Its popularity makes one regret that the chorale preludes as a whole have hitherto played so small a part in the organ students' curriculum. There are dozens of preludes more attractive than the so-called 'Giant fugue.' Had our organ students during the past thirty years played them as often as the 'Giant' both players and public would have a far juster estimation of Bach than at present obtains. There is no need to dwell long on 'Wir glauben all.' I may be well to point out that the ground bass is obviously intended to typify faith, and that the less we think of a giant walking upstairs and tumbling down again (vide some programme notes) the better. The subject of the fugue is based on the opening phrase of the chorale, and Bach rounds off the movement by introducing the final phrase of the tune in the tenor, beginning on the E in the ninth bar from the end. The words to which this phrase is sung are 'All things are governed by His might.' This thoroughly Bachian stroke is usually overlooked, because the chorale is not well-known in this country.

The first of the two pieces on 'Vater unser' is one of the longest, most complex, and most difficult of all the chorale preludes. The writing is in five parts—an almost continuously moving quaver bass, and four manual parts, two consisting of the chorale melody in canon, and two highly florid counterpoints of unusual rhythmical variety. The latter are treated imitatively, and as developments of an ornate version of the opening phrase of the chorale. This piece has to be known and lived with for some time before one realises its undoubted beauty. Here is an extract showing the entry of the first phrase of the chorale and a portion of the canon in the tenor:

Ex. 2. Choral.

Note that we have here one of several examples of Bach's feeling for the modes. The key is E minor with a C sharp in the signature—that is, the Dorian mode transposed up a tone. Free as is the harmony, the modal flavour is evident, just as it is in the Dorian Toccata, despite its modulations.

The flow of a river is one of the easiest subjects for musical treatment, so we are n surprised to find Bach seizing on the word 'Jordan' in 'Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan Kam.' The tune is played by the pedals with 4-ft. or 8-ft. tone, while the river is represented by an undulating passage of semiquavers on the manuals, generally in the bass. The piece should be played at a good pace, and with fairly loud tone. The left hand may well be played on a separate manual with a soft 16-ft. added to 8-ft. and perhaps 4-ft. as well. At anything less than a quick pace the music loses on the descriptive side, and, moreover, one is conscious of a lack of originality in some of the sequential passages. The manual prelude on this chorale is a very skilful little piece in which Schweitzer sees an attempt to represent big and little waves rising and falling. As he says, the effect is one for the eye rather than the ear, and it must be confessed that the musical result is on the dry side.

It is sometimes said that architecture is frozen music. In the first of the two preludes on 'Aus tiefer Noth' (a massive six-part affair with double pedal) we surely have the reverse—architecture in sound, and church architecture at that. The ecclesiastical type of polyphony, the pronounced flavour of the Phrygian mode, and the dark effect due to four of the six voices lying in the lower half of the keyboard, combine to produce a masterpiece of impersonal gloom. Of emotion in the ordinary sense of the term there is none: the music is simply a tremendous abstraction. The method of treating the chorale is that associated with Pachelbel, but there is a closeness of texture and a skill of which Pachelbel never dreamt. A quotation of the passage containing the first phrase of the melody augmented, in the first bass part, will repay examination. It will be seen that the first treble and the second tenor also deliver the theme, so that it appears in three parts simultaneously:

Ex. 3.

Opinions differ as to whether 16-ft. stops should be used for the pedal. I believe Best used to play the piece ff with heavy pedal stops. A good deal depends on the size of the building, but as a rule a safe plan will be to use loudish 8-ft. diapasons for the manuals, and 8-ft. and soft 16-ft. for the pedals. This gives the right sombre strength without rigidity. Spitta says of this monumental piece that it is the crowning point of the collection, 'from the ingenuity of the part-writing, the wealth and nobility of the harmonies, and the executive power which it requires.'

Its companion prelude, for manuals only, is in some respects even more skilful. Each phrase of the chorale is treated imitatively in the three under parts before being introduced at the top in long notes, and in every instance one of the imitations is by inversion. Nor is this all. In most cases the melody on its appearance in the treble is accompanied by itself in diminution and by inversion. The most astonishing fact, however, is that the result is beautifully expressive music. Here is the final phrase of the tune, with three diminutions in the under parts, one inverted:

Ex. 4.

In the Breitkopf & Härtel edition the bass is given to the pedals, and the tenor played on a separate manual, with good effect. The long prelude on 'Jesus Christus unser Heiland' is much less appealing. It consists of a kind of two-part fugue, the voices being played on separate manuals, around the chorale melody in the tenor, delivered in long notes on the pedals with 8-ft. stops. The subject is a wide-straddling, energetic figure entirely devoid of feeling or grace, and its treatment does nothing to soften its rough outlines:

Ex. 5. Allegro moderato. ♩ = 88.

Schweitzer truly says that it is characteristic rather than musical, belonging as it does to the family of 'step' motives with which Bach was wont to depict faith. The prevailing bleakness of the work was probably evoked by the hymn's reference to the Passion. Schweitzer complains that the theme is developed at too great length, and that the work is not organic because the cantus, appearing in fragments at long intervals, fails to hold the music together.

There is something in this, and yet the genuine power of the piece, and its bigness (despite the fact of its being largely in two-part harmony) get hold of one on due acquaintance. I quote a few bars, showing the first pedal entry. In bars four and five observe how, by the simple expedient of retarding the right-hand passage a quarter-beat, Bach keeps up the semiquaver motion, though both hands are concerned with a subject in quavers:

The companion Prelude and the last of the set is a well-worked fugue, for manuals only, on the first phrase of the tune. In the Breitkopf & Härtel edition it appears with the bass played by the pedals—an arrangement which justifies itself by increasing the solemnity of an already impressive movement.

Taking the 'Clavierübung' Preludes as a whole it must be admitted that they make a less ready appeal than do most of Bach's other ripe essays in this field. From a technical point of view they show him at his greatest, but there is a lack of the intimate feeling of the 'Little Organ Book,' and only at intervals do we find the depth of expression that is so pronounced in the set of eighteen preludes collected and revised by Bach in his last years.

Perhaps this comparative coldness may be ascribed to the fact of the pieces being written as musical illustrations of a series of doctrinal formulæ. The choice of material was thus not in Bach's hands, having been settled long before by Luther. Moreover, as we have seen, the collection appears to have been written in a comparatively short period with a view to inclusion in a work already partly published. Bach's technical and intellectual faculties were then at their height, so he had no difficulty in carrying out his project in a manner that compels admiration. No doubt the task was a congenial one, but it was task-work none the less, and so with a few notable exceptions it was accomplished by brain rather than by heart. The height to which Bach could rise in treating a chorale when both these factors played an equal part we shall see later.

(To be continued.)

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from March number, page 161.)

By GUIDO M. GATTI

III.—VICTOR DE SABATA

Victor de Sabata cannot complain of the way Fortune has treated him: she smiled on his first steps, she was ever at his side throughout his vigorous youth, and fame was his when, at eighteen, his Suite triumphed in all parts of the world. The composition which was fresh and vigorous then is not less so to-day, when de Sabata has published other works and the public has come to recognize in him one of the most gifted of contemporary Italian composers. Since 1913 the Triestine composer—de Sabata was born at Trieste in 1892, although he may be considered a citizen of Milan by adoption—has written other works, some of which doubtless show a greater artistic maturity; but for many, perhaps for all, he remains the composer of the symphonic Suite with which he gained his laurels ten years ago.

The Suite is not the work of unskilled youth, much less is it a student work. It is a page vividly felt, wherein—as is inevitable in the work of a young composer—the influences of other great masters are evident. But they are fused by a fire of spontaneity which almost dissolves them, for here are freshness of colouring and plasticity of tone that, allied to instrumental vigour, help to define a personality which we can reconstruct to perfection when considering the composition as a whole. A pedantic critic seeking to analyse the constructive elements of de Sabata's Suite would trace therein echoes of Wagner in the harmonic elaboration—especially in the Idyll—side by side with a mixture of tone and sonority dear to Richard Strauss. But the listener who abandons himself to his emotions feels that through study of and love for these two great symphonists, de Sabata has succeeded in finding his own individuality and making his own voice heard. Moreover, the Straussian influence in the Suite—an influence which has been, and still is often mentioned in connection with the works of de Sabata—will surely appear quite insignificant when we think of the moderation and balance shown in the four pieces (moderation is a quality Strauss often forgets in his orchestral music!), and even more so when we remember that the inspiration of the Italian had its source in the calm, contemplative outlook of a refined nature that found lyric charm in little bits of landscape and an imaginative symphony in the rustling of leaves.

The music of de Sabata is imposed on a strong framework, resilient to every movement, but unyielding in its quality of predominance. It is sufficient to examine the score of the second number of the Suite, of that 'Tra fronda e fronda' so beloved by orchestral conductors, to be convinced that de Sabata does not imagine he can create an atmosphere of colour by liberating his impressions and sending them unbridled into the world of sound, but that he is at all times master of his imagery; or, rather, his imagination is of a quality that never goes astray nor becomes fantastic or incoherent. In the movement above-mentioned we seem to be present at a conversation of little creatures hidden in the forest; they are the voices of the wood, talking while the old trees listen in fatherly fashion to the chatter of the little dwellers in their lofty branches. The score is all one utterance, one tremor: here the rustling of the leaves, here the idyll of a nightingale and the twittering of a lark; here a sunbeam which penetrates through the branches and sketches arabesques on the ground below, there the resonant tapping of a leaf upon the bark of a tree. The voices alternate, then mingle; call follows call, to merge in a fanfare of reawakened life, a diffusion of happiness—the happiness which pervades all created beings attending themselves once again in the light of the morning sun. It is an alternation of voices and of silences—of vibrant bass, of delicate tunes for the celesta, of iridescent luminosities for the harp, and, dominating all, a solemn chant, none the less vivid because not expressed by a theme, running underground and overhead at the same time, gathering together all the whispers in one serene prayer.

The work has been performed by the most famous conductors. Written for full orchestra, and revealing a knowledge of instrumental effects and potentialities marvellous in a student from an Italian Conservatory of Music, it is still modern and charming to-day, and displays a freshness and spontaneity rarely to be found in works possibly more interesting in development but betraying the effort of conception and labour of production.

This Suite, though the first work to make de Sabata well-known, was not his first chronologically. Without compiling a complete list, we will recall only the two Overtures for orchestra, some compositions for the pianoforte, a Quartet, a Jig (written when he was twelve), a Symphonic Prelude and Fugue, and a Theme with Variations, also for orchestra. All these works were composed during the years in which de Sabata was a pupil of Saladino, of Giacomo, and of Orefice for harmony, counterpoint and fugue, and composition respectively.

On leaving the Conservatory de Sabata essayed an important theatrical work. With characteristic boldness, and as an artist sure of his skill, he attacked a ponderous, weighty poem of Alberto Colantuoni, not very happily entitled 'Il Macigno' ('The Rock'). The work was neither short nor easy; above all, the composer felt the responsibility of worthily responding to the trust placed in him, as is proved by the fact of the opera being about four years on his desk, and undergoing revision again and again. Announced for a lyric season at the Scala at Milan—in 1914, if I am not mistaken—it waited more than two years longer to be performed, and had its première on the evening of March 31, 1917. Doubtless the war contributed to the delay, but I believe that the difficulty of contenting the composer was also a factor. The work was not well received, and the critics were not entirely favourable. Given at the end of the season, it had, too, to fight against the indifference and satiety inevitable after a lengthy series of lyric performances.

The libretto has undoubted literary value. Revealing an exquisite refinement, it has also passages of fine verbal musicality; but it is not a drama at all, nor does it possess those qualities of emotion and theatricality (in the best sense of this word, i.e., synthesis of action, along with rapid but sure delineation of the characters) which often form the sole asset of famous musical libretti.

It is evident that the composer imagined that he could put life into the libretto by the fervour of his music. But at the moment of translating into the language of music his ardent but vague feelings, his vast and vigorous but hazy vision, de Sabata missed his way, and rather gave himself over to facile writing and to the memory of other operas at like moments.

It is this which has destroyed what should have been the finest quality of the work: the freshness and spontaneity which we found and loved in the Suite. De Sabata has been preoccupied not with creating a living work, but with following a libretto that he considered dramatic; he has kept in view certain effects which he had admired elsewhere and which at no cost would he relinquish. Now these effects, even when attained—which is not always the case—although giving the impression of life, have neither the depth nor the repercussion of sensory things, and, beyond all, are not in the least characteristic of our musician's personality.

It would not be right, in speaking of a mystic like de Sabata, to keep silence on these errors, especially when he himself must be the first to recognise them. Of some of these lapses he has already repented publicly, suppressing in the printed score the entire third Act of the opera. At bottom they are errors deriving more than anything else from inexperience and exuberance. In every young artist is hidden a virtuoso of form, i.e., a craftsman who cannot relinquish certain voluptuousnesses, passing but brilliant, and who is always eager to show his capacity. Now the opera was written in the years immediately following the 'twenties, the years which (with rare exceptions) I should call critical in every artist's output, inasmuch as he is no longer the boy poet—absolutely ingenuous and unconscious, and yet spontaneous—and he is not yet master of his own powers.

Victor de Sabata has been working for some years at a new opera, the subject of which Forzano, the author of the libretto, has taken from Aristophanes' 'Lysistratus,' and this will doubtless be the work by which the composer will establish his footing in the field of lyrico-dramatic art. Meanwhile he has given us a second symphonic work, which, from more than one point of view, shows real advance on 'Il Macigno' in the direction already mentioned. Between these two works we find some short compositions written in leisure hours: three charming pieces for the pianoforte, 'Câline' (a study in legato), 'Habañera,' and 'Do you want me?' (the latter almost a cake-walk), and a simple effective Melody for violin.

The second orchestral work is the symphonic poem 'Juventus,' performed several times in Italy and abroad, and recently included in the répertoire of Toscanini's orchestra. 'Juventus,' as the title tells us, is a sort of biography of a young man, who might be the composer himself. It resembles in outline a drama for orchestra. In this work, de Sabata, freed from literary ties, has reached a far more intense warmth of emotion than in the past. He has really lived through these phases of youth, alternately madly exultant and desperately miserable, and has succeeded in finding for each the just expression. The work, although notable for the recurrence of its themes and for unity of style, comprises four movements depicting characteristic states of mind. The four episodes might be defined thus—the joyous leap towards aspiration, love, the sorrowful pause, and the triumphant return to life—and each is characterised by a theme which brings out its essence in bold relief. Here is the rousing theme of the first episode, declaimed by three trumpets:

Ex. 1. Allegro impetuoso, con slancio.

The violins melt into tenderness at the voluptuous love-theme, in the warm tonality of F sharp:

Ex. 2. Moderato molto, con sentimento.

The wood-wind and horns accompany the martial rhythm of the ascent to conquest and triumph.

'Juventus' must, however, be judged—nay, better heard—as a whole. In analysing it, not only is there the risk of finding some quite unimportant affinities,* but one loses sight of the chief charm, which consists in a constant reaching towards the goal, a sweeping dynamism whereby all is fused and wrought into one great flame of enthusiasm and passion.

Whatever interest the score of 'Juventus' may awake as the work of a composer who really hears the orchestra and knows all its voices, all its potentialities; however much we may admire the mastery with which by imperceptible gradations he piles up magnificent bursts of sonority, we think that the value of de Sabata's last symphonic poem is even more manifest in its musical essence and in the spirit of poetry which pervades it from beginning to end.

In such characteristics lies the chief merit of Victor de Sabata's work, for which reason although he has not written a great deal, he is likely to take rank among the principal composers of the future. Consummate artistry distinguishes his every page, allied with a seriousness of aim that is so much the more notable in that it is almost a rarity in Italian musical life. Lastly he reveals a critical acumen and a divine discontent with achievement that prevent him writing 'pot boilers.' It should be added that all his compositions are published, both in score and in pianoforte arrangements, by Messrs. Ricordi, Milan

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XVI.—WILLIAM WHYTBROKE

The name of William Whytbroke is familiar to all students of John Day's 'Certaine Notes set forth in foure and three partes to be song at the Mornyng Communion and Evening Praier,' published in 1564, a rare work containing his 'Let your light so shine' and other pieces by him, including a beautiful Latin Motet, 'Audiui media nocte' (to be found in Add. MSS., Brit. Mus., 17802-17805), and a well-known Mass, 'Upon the square' (Add. MSS., Brit. Mus.), testify to his powers as a composer. But, again, as has been so frequently stated in the present series of articles, the biography of Whytbroke

* As, e.g., with Strauss' 'Don Juan,' a comparison with which, however, is in any case wholly extrinsic and casual. So little was this to be feared that de Sabata, in a most successful concert recently given at the Augusteum, at Rome, did not hesitate to place 'Juventus' side by side with Strauss' work. Such affinity as there is between the two composers lies perhaps in their common fondness for certain ascendant rhythmic designs (anacrusis)—a matter of no importance as long remained a desideratum. Mr. Royle Shore,* an excellent paper on 'The Early Harmonized Chants of the Church of England,' recently admitted that 'as regards Whytbrooke and Knight, nothing apparently is known.'

As will be seen, it is quite a mistake to imagine that Whytbrooke composed to any extent under Elizabeth: the fact is that his creative period was during the years 1530-56, and all his best work was written on the lines of the ancient Catholic liturgy. He indulged also in secular music, as may be evidenced from an imperfect copy of 'Hugh Ashton's Maske,' now in the Manuscript Collection of Christ Church, Oxford (Arkwright's 'Catalogue,' Part 1, 1915).

Of the birth and early education of Whytbrooke too particulars whatever have come down, but we find him at Cardinal College, Oxford, in 1525—a contemporary of Taverner—and he was ordained a priest in 1538. At this date he must have exhibited musical powers of no mean order, for in May, 1530, Dean Higden, of Cardinal College, entrusted him with the delicate mission of investigating the reported encomiums on a Mr. Benbow, who was a candidate for the post of Master of the Choristers, in succession to John Taverner. From the 'Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII.' we learn that Whytbrooke was sent to Manchester to report on the fitness of John Benbow, and, if suitable, to bring him to Oxford. Evidently Whytbrooke's report was favourable, for on May 29 of that year, among the items of expenses in the household books of Cardinal College appears the following:

To Benbowe coming from Manchester to be Master of the Choristers, 29 May, 2s. 9d.
Expenses of Dom Whytbrooke riding for Benbow at the Dean's command, 6s. 8d.

On the suppression of Cardinal College, Whytbrooke's services were rewarded by the important appointment of the sub-deanery of St. Paul's Cathedral, a post almost invariably bestowed on a musical cleric. From the official records we learn that on June 29, 1531, William Whytbrooke was presented to the post of sub-dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, being also appointed Vicar of All Saints', Stanton, Suffolk, with licence for non-residence. Apropos of this latter appointment, there is an interesting note in a MS. in the British Museum (Add. MSS., 5813, f. 93) which says that Whytbrooke 'does not reside at his vicarage, and is not a graduate.' No doubt he had the influential support of Thomas Cromwell, and that was sufficient to satisfy any objections.

The next notice of Whytbrooke is his name appended to the 'Declaration of the sub-dean and Canons of St. Paul's Cathedral of allegiance to King Henry VIII. and Queen Anne Boleyn, and that the Bishop of Rome has no authority in this Kingdom' (June 30, 1534). This document was not signed by the dean, Richard Pace, nor by any of the canons, though doubtless the Declaration was capable of meaning the temporal authority of the Pope, and as such could lawfully be signed by orthodox Catholics. The first four names appear as follows:

Wilhelmus Whytbrooke, Sub-decanus; Johannes Smyth, Cardinalis; Thomas Balgay, Cardinalis; and Joannes Haward, Succentor.

In the document as calendared no names are given—merely the numbers, thus:

8 canons, sub-dean and 2 cardinals, 1 succentor, 6 minor canons, 31 chanters (cantharistae), and 29 others.

Through the courtesy of my friend, Mr. J. M. Rigg, I was able to obtain a copy of the original Declaration, giving all the names. I may add that the translation of chanters for cantharistae is not correct: cantarista means a chantry priest, not a chanter.

Whytbrooke resigned the post of sub-dean of St. Paul's in 1535, and was succeeded by Robert Astlyn, minor canon, while Richard Sampson, who had replaced Dean Pace, was appointed Bishop of Chichester in June, 1536. It would seem that he retired to his vicarage of All Saints', Stanton, and spent the remainder of his days quietly.

His setting of the Magnificat in John Day's 'Certaine Notes' (1560) is highly prized; but it is well to note that the English adaptation clearly points to the fact that it had been originally composed to Latin words. The music would seem to be of the same period of composition as Whytbrooke's beautiful Mass, 'Upon the square'—that is, in four parts, as Mr. Barclay Squire explains—a term also used by William Mundy for two of his Masses. Somehow, I hardly imagine that Whytbrooke lived as late as 1561, and all the music by him that I have traced bears evidence of a period twenty years earlier. He was a contemporary of John Shepherd, who is said to have died in 1561, and was also of the same period as Hake, Ockland, Johnson, Redford, Ludford, W. Parsons, Alcock, and Gwynneth.

In the Library of Peterhouse, Cambridge, there is a Motet by Whytbrooke, probably dating from about the year 1535. It is entitled 'Sancte Deus,' set for five voices, and is included in Dr. Jebb's Catalogue printed in the Ecclesiologist for 1859.

BARBELLION ON MUSIC

BY HAROLD RAWLINSON

Musicians should be grateful to John o' London's Weekly for its recent symposium on music. Besides being very entertaining reading, it brought to light a state of affairs that is worth considering, because it is serious that such a lack of musical appreciation should exist. When we have got over our surprise that 'artistic and literary folk' should have such curious and erroneous ideas of another art, we should see if there are not some means at hand to combat these beliefs.

If a musician loves his art, he should do all he can to help others to appreciate his ideal of beauty. Any art or creed that has only a select following is not much good to the world; just as any type of music that is supposed to be for the select few will not help music much in the long run. Never before have we needed the 'musical appreciation' class and lecture so much as we do to-day.

Musicians must not take up an attitude of smug indifference to the tone-deafness that seems to exist in so many people. Our art is one that has the power of giving most pleasure and happiness, but the great difficulty with music is that it is hard for one not musically educated to criticise and discriminate between good and bad. Literature does not present this difficulty to the average educated man, because the most elementary system of education teaches him the principles that underlie our best literature. Therefore do not try and get unmusical people to like Stravinsky's latest compositions or some works of other contemporary composers (some modern composers seem only content when depressing us), but start by giving them, for instance, Beethoven's C minor Symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. See the appeal that these two works make immediately to one who delights in calling himself 'unmusical,' and our first step forward is accomplished.

* Whytbrooke's Magnificat (edited by Burgess and Shore) has been issued as No. 898 of Novello's Parish Choir Book.

A good maxim of war is that the 'best means of defence is offence,' and I have found that the most convincing arguments against an opponent are your opponent's points. In other words, we shall best convince unmusical people by giving them some thoughts on music by unmusical writers.

To some of my friends who profess that they do not like good music I have quoted passages from Barbellion's Diary, and having noticed the effect these have had upon them I think it worth while bringing some extracts before the readers of this paper, who have perhaps had no opportunity for reading his 'Journal of a Disappointed Man.*' He was not a musician, not even an amateur, but one who was intensely interested in music; one who could give us some fresh and original pen-pictures of his attitude towards music.

Barbellion (Bruce Cummings) was born at Barnstaple, and started his life with the ambition of becoming a biologist. He pursued his studies until his death, which occurred in 1917, at the early age of twenty-eight. Very few of those who knew him realised when he died that we lost not only a brilliant naturalist, but a very gifted writer. All his struggles and misfortune find place in his Diary, which from beginning to end is full of interesting entries, and there is an 'unpremeditated and exquisite beauty' running through the book. His father was a journalist, and so Barbellion became a reporter for a local paper before he took up a position in the Natural History section of the British Museum. I believe at one time he had a desire to be a musical critic. Had this desire been gratified we should have had some brilliant criticisms, as the extracts which follow amply show. His knowledge of natural history was remarkable, and besides this his writings abound with gems of literary criticism. He seemed to have had a memory especially adapted to retain curious and out of the way facts, and beyond all this he had an imagination both fanciful and beautiful.

'So Heine and Schubert out of their great sorrows wrote their little songs,' Barbellion remarked, and so out of his life's pain we have 'undoubtedly one of the most remarkable human documents of the generation.'

The extracts, with the exception of the last but one, are in chronological order, and need no comment:

June 29, 1914.

Went with R—to the Albert Hall to the Empress of Ireland Memorial Concert with massed bands. We heard the Symphonie Pathétique, Chopin's Funeral March, Trauermarsch from 'Götterdämmerung,' the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and a solemn melody from Bach.

This afternoon I regard as a mountain peak in my existence. For two solid hours I sat like an Eagle on a rock gazing into infinity—a very fine sensation for a London Sparrow. . . .

I have an idea that if it were possible to assemble the sick and suffering day by day in the Albert Hall and keep the orchestra going all the time, then the constant exposure of sick parts to such heavenly air vibrations would ultimately restore to them the lost rhythm of health. Surely, a single exposure to, say, Beethoven's fifth Symphony, must result in some permanent reconstitution of ourselves body and soul. No one can be quite the same after a Beethoven Symphony has streamed through him. If one could develop a human soul like a negative the effect I should say could be seen. . . . I'll tell you what I wish they'd do—seriously: divide up the arena into a series of cubicles where, unobserved and in perfect privacy, a man could execute all the various movements of his body and limbs which the music prompts. It would be such a delicious self-indulgence, and it's torture to be jammed into a seat where you can't even tap one foot or wave an arm.

The concert restored my moral health. I came away in love with people I was hating before, and full of compassion for others I usually condemn. A feeling of immeasurable well-being—a jolly bonhomie enveloped me like incandescent light. At the close, when we stood up to sing the National Anthem, we all felt a genuine spirit of camaraderie. . . .

November 23, 1914.

Went to the Albert [Queen's] Hall,* and warmed myself at the orchestra. It is a wonderful sight to watch an orchestra playing from the gallery. It spurts and flickers like a flame. Its incessant activity arrests the attention and holds it just as a fire does—even a deaf man would be fascinated. Heard Chopin's Funeral March and other things. It would be a rich experience to be able to be in your coffin at rest, and listen to Chopin's Funeral March being played above you by a string orchestra with Sir Henry Wood conducting.

December 12, 1914.

Went to the Queen's Hall, sat in the orchestra and watched Sir Henry's statuesque figure conducting through a forest of bows 'which pleased me mightily.' He would be worth watching if you were stone deaf. If you could not hear a sound, the animation and excitement of an orchestra in full swing, with the conductor cutting and slashing at invisible foes, makes a magnificent spectacle. . . .

Rodin ought to do Wood in stone—Chesterfield's ideal of a man—a Corinthian edifice on Tuscan foundations. In Sir Henry's case there can be no disputing the Tuscan foundations. However swift and elegant the movements of his arms, his splendid lower extremities remain as firm as stone columns. While the music is calm and serene, his right hand and baton execute in concert with the left perfect geometric curves around his head. Then as it gathers in force and volume, when the bows begin to dart swiftly across the fiddles and the trumpets and trombones blaze away in a conflagration, we are all expectant—and even a little fearful, to observe his sabre-like cuts. The tension grows. . . . I hold my breath. . . . Sir Henry snatches a second to throw back a lock of his hair that has fallen limply across his forehead, then goes on in unrelenting pursuit, cutting and slashing at hordes of invisible fiends that leap howling out towards him. There is a great turmoil of combat, but the conductor struggles on till the great explosion happens. But in spite of that, you see him still standing through a cloud of great chords, quite undaunted. His sword zigzags up and down the scale—suddenly the closed fist of his left hand shoots up straight and points to the zenith—like the arm of a heathen priest appealing to Baal to bring down fire from Heaven. . . . But the appeal avails nought, and it looks as though it were all up for poor Sir Henry. The music is just as infuriated—his body writhes with it. . . . He surrenders—so you think; he opens out both arms wide and, baring his * Chatto & Windus. 1919.

* Barbellion here refers to a concert held at Queen's Hall on November 22, 1914, in memoriam Lord Kitchener.

breast, dares them all to do their worst—like the picture of Moffat the missionary among the savages of the Dark Continent!

And yet he wins after all. At the very last moment he seems to summon all his remaining strength, and in one final and devastating sweep mows down the orchestra-rank by rank. . . . You awake from the nightmare to discover the victor acknowledging the applause in a series of his inimitable bows.

One ought to pack one's ears up with cotton-wool at a concert where Sir Henry conducts. Otherwise, the music is apt to distract one's attention. R. L. S. wanted to be at the head of a cavalry charge—sword over head—but I'd rather fight an orchestra with a baton. . . .

BEETHOVEN'S FIFTH SYMPHONY

This Symphony always works me up into an ecstasy: in ecstatic sympathy with its dreadfulness I could stand up in the balcony and fling myself down passionately into the arena below. Yet there were women sitting alongside me to-day—knitting! It so annoyed and irritated me that at the end of the first movement I got up and sat elsewhere. They would have sat knitting at the foot of the Cross, I suppose.

At the end of the second movement, two or three other women got up and went home to tea! It would have surprised me no more to have seen a cork extract itself from its bottle and promenade.

TCHAIKOVSKY'S FIFTH SYMPHONY

Just lately I've heard a lot of music including Tchaikovsky's Pathétique and fifth Symphonies, some Debussy, and odd pieces by Dukas, Glinka, Smetana, Mozart. I am chock-full of impressions of all this precious stuff, and scarcely know what to write. As usual, the third movement of the Pathétique produced a frenzy of exhilaration; I seemed to put on several inches around my chest and wished to shout in a voice of thunder. The conventions of a public concert-hall are dreadfully oppressive at such times. I could have eaten 'all the elephants of Hindustan and picked my teeth with the spire of Strassburg Cathedral.'

In the last (sic) movement of the fifth Symphony of that splendid fellow Tchaikovsky, the orchestra seemed to gallop away, leaving poor Landon Ronald to wave his whip in a ridiculously ineffective way. They went on crashing down chords, and just before the end I had the awful presentiment that the orchestra simply could not stop. I sat still, straining every nerve in the expectancy that this chord or the next or the next was the end. But it went on pounding down—each one seemed the last, but every time another followed as passionate and emphatic as the one before, until finally, whatever this inhuman orchestra was attempting to crush and destroy must have been reduced to shapeless pulp. I wanted to board the platform and plead with them, elderly gentlemen turned their heads nervously, everyone was breathless, we all wanted to call 'For God's sake stop'—to do anything to still this awful lust of annihilation. . . . The end came quickly in four drum beats in quick succession. I have never seen such hate, such passionate intensity of the will to destroy. . . . And Tchaikovsky was a Russian!

Debussy was a welcome change. 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' is a musical setting to an oscillatory exercise. It is an orchestral yawn. Oh! so tired.

Came away thoroughly delighted. Wanted to say to every one 'Bally good, ain't it?' and then we would all shake hands and go home whistling.

January 19, 1915.

. . . After giving a light to a Belgian soldier whose cigarette had gone out, farther along we entered a queer old music-shop where they sell flageolets, serpents, clavichords, and harps. We had previously made an appointment with the man to have Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony played to us, so as to recall one or two of the melodies which we can't recall and it drives us crazy. 'What is that one in the second movement which goes like this?' and R— whistled a fragment. 'I don't know,' I said, 'but let's go in here and ask.' In the shop, a youth was kind enough to say that if we cared to call next day, Madame A—, the harp player, would be home and would be ready to play us the symphony.

So this morning, before Madame's appearance, this kind and obliging youth put a gramophone record of it on, to which we listened like two intelligent parrots with heads sideways. Presently, the fat lady harpist appeared and asked us just what we wanted to find out—a rather awkward question for us, as we did not want to 'find out' anything excepting how the tunes went.

I therefore explained that as neither of us had sisters or wives, and we both wanted, &c. . . . so would she . . . ? In response, she smiled pleasantly and played us the second movement on a shop piano.

Meanwhile, Henry, the boy, hid himself behind the instruments at the rear of the shop, and as we signed to her she would say:

'What's that, Henry?'

And Henry would duly answer from his obscurity, 'Wood-wind,' or 'Solo oboe,' or whatever it was, and the lad really spoke with authority. In this way I began to find out something about the work. Before I left, I presented her with a copy of the score, which she did not possess and because she would not accept any sort of remuneration.

'Won't you put your name on it?' she inquired.

I pointed gaily to the words 'Ecce homo,' which I had scribbled across Schubert's name, and said, 'There you are.'

Madame smiled incredulously, and we said, 'Good-bye.'

January 30, 1915.

To the Queen's Hall and heard Beethoven's fifth and seventh Symphonies.

Before the concert began I was in a fever. I kept on saying to myself, 'I am going to hear the fifth and seventh Symphonies.' I regarded myself with the most ridiculous self-adulation—I smoothed and purred over myself—a great contented tabby cat—and all because I was so splendidly fortunate as to be about to hear Beethoven's fifth and seventh Symphonies.

It certainly upset me a little to find there were so many other people who were singularly fortunate as well, and it upset me still more to find some of them knitting and some reading newspapers as if they waited for sausage and mashed.

How I gloried in the Seventh! I can't believe there was anyone present who gloried in it as I did! To be processing majestically up the steps of a great, an unimaginable palace (in the 'Staircase' introduction), led by Sir Henry, is to have had at least a crowded ten minutes of glorious life. . . .

I love the way in which a beautiful melody flits around the orchestra and its various components like a beautiful bird.

May, 1916.

Arrived at Queen's Hall in time for Pachmann's recital at 3.15. . . . As usual he kept us waiting for ten minutes. Then a short, fat, middle-aged man strolled casually on to the platform and everyone clapped violently—so it was Pachmann: a dirty, greasy-looking fellow, with long hair of dirty grey colour reaching down to his shoulders, and an ugly face. He beamed on us, and then shrugged his shoulders and went on shrugging them until his eye caught the music-stool, which seemed to fill him with amazement. He stalked it carefully, held out one hand to it caressingly, and finding all was well, went two steps backwards, clasping his hands before him, and always gazing at the little stool in mute admiration, his eyes sparkling with pleasure, like Mr. Pickwick's on the discovery of the archaeological treasure. He approached once more, bent down and ever so gently moved it about seven-eighths of an inch nearer the piano. He then gave it a final pat with his right hand and sat down.

He played Nocturne No. 2, Prelude No. 20, a Mazurka, and two Etudes of Chopin, and Schubert's Impromptu No. 4.

At the close we all crowded around the platform and gave the queer, old-world gentleman an ovation, one man thrusting up his hand, which Pachmann generously shook as desired.

As an encore he gave us a Valse—'Valse, Valse,' he exclaimed ecstatically, jumping up and down in his seat in time to the music. It was a truly remarkable sight: on his right the clamorous crowd around the platform; on his left the seat-holders of the orchestral stalls, while at the piano bobbed this grubby little fat man playing divine Chopin divinely well, at the same time rising and falling in his seat, turning a beaming countenance first to the right and then to the left, and crying 'Valse, Valse.' He is as entertaining as a tumbler at a variety hall.

As soon as he had finished, we clapped and rattled for more, Pachmann meanwhile standing surrounded by his idolaters in affected despair at ever being able to satisfy us. Presently he walked off, and a scuffle was half-visible behind the scenes between him and his agent, who sent him in once more.

The applause was wonderful. As soon as he began again it ceased on the instant, and as soon as he left off it started again immediately—nothing boisterous or rapturous, but a steady, determined thunder of applause that came regularly and evenly like the roar from some machine.

September 5, 1917.

A perfect autumn morning—cool, fine, and still. What sweet music a horse and cart make trundling slowly along a country road on a quiet morning! I listened to it in a happy mood of abstraction as it rolled on further and further away. I put my head out of the window so as to hear it up to the very last, until a robin's notes relieved the nervous tension and helped me to resign myself to my loss. The incident reminded me of the Liebestod in 'Tristan,' with the robin taking the part of the harp.

Zoology on occasion still fires my ambition! Surely I cannot be dying yet.

Whatever misfortune befalls me I do hope I shall be able to meet it unflinchingly. I do not fear ill-health in itself, but I do fear its possible effect on my mind and character. Already I am slowly altering, as the Lord liveth. Already, for example, my sympathy with myself is maudlin.

Whenever the blow shall fall, some sort of a reaction must be given. Heine flamed into song. Beethoven wrote the fifth Symphony. So what shall I do when my time comes? I don't think I have any lyrics or symphonies to write, so I shall just have to grin and bear it—like a dumb animal. . . . As long as I have spirit and buoyancy I don't care what happens—for I know that for so long I cannot be accounted a failure. The only real failure is one in which the victim is left spiritless, dazed, dejected with blackness all around, and within a knife slowly and unrelentingly cutting the strings of his heart.

The above are not all the passages in the book which refer to music, but if they have awakened a desire for more, the desire is well worth appeasing. It is a remarkable record. Barbellion finished his Diary with what is like the last flutter of a melody before the close of a symphony:

It is winter [he writes], no autumn this year. Of an evening we sit by the fire and enjoy the beautiful sweet-smelling wood-smoke, and the open hearth with its big iron bar carrying pot-hook and hanger. I—knits warm garments for the baby, and I play Chopin, César Franck hymns, 'Three blind mice' (with variations) on a mouth-organ, called 'The Angels'

Choir' and made in Germany. . . . You would pity me, would you? I am lonely, penniless, paralysed and just turned twenty-eight. . . . but I have telescoped into those few years a tolerably long life. I have loved and married and have a family. I have wept and enjoyed; struggled and overcome, and when the hour comes I shall be content to die.

Barbellion died two months afterwards!

[Since the above article was written, a 'Last Diary' by Barbellion has been published, giving the date of his death as 1919—not 1917. Ed., M.T.]

A MODERN CLASSICIST: ROGER-DUCASSE

BY ALFRED J. SWAN

It is curious that while the imitators and followers of the impressionist movement in modern music have gone their rampant way—borrowing from Asia and Europe harmonic supplies had come to an end—there has quietly grown up, scattered broadcast on the musical surface of Europe, another school, which counts among its members some of the most highly gifted contemporary composers. Impressionism is only partially affected these neoclassicists, as they have been styled. This is particularly true in the case of Roger-Ducasse, a typical Frenchman, who succeeded in welding impressionism and classicism into one organic whole.

It is only a decade or so ago that the name of Roger-Ducasse came into prominence. A pupil of Gabriel Fauré, and, like Ravel, a bolder of the second Grand Prix, he pursued a marked style of his own from his early works. The latter comprise some songs, preludes, a Petite Suite for four hands, a set of orchestral variations, the Suite Française for string and a pianoforte quartet (finished last year), several choruses, and the big symphonic poem, 'Le Chorus,' 'Au jardin de Marguerite,' which shows much originality that it was rejected by an official and pedantic jury when presented by the composer for the Concours du Prix Crescent in 1906.

But he had not yet quite found himself. He voluntarily subjected himself to the influence of Debussy, of which the only effect was to enhance the extreme beauty of his own musical personality, and not until the year 1910 (at the age of thirty) did he fully reveal his creative powers. This was the year of the composition of the exquisite 'Prélude d'un Ballet' (a short inspiration which vanishes like a dream of fairyland after twenty-bars), and the majestic 'Sarabande,' a work almost mediæval in its austere grandeur, mingled with sweet and intimate melodic outline. A peculiar delicacy prevails in the orchestration of these remarkable works. They were followed in 1911 by a small output of religious vocal works: a 'Missa Regina' and an 'Ave Regina Cælorum' for soprano and organ, and three Motets for soprano, alto, and four-part mixed chorus. A strikingly religious style is evident in these works. The contours of the melody are subtly delineated, the modulations are as natural as they are novel, and the different parts move with consummate ease and grace:

Then comes 'Orphée' (1913), a lyric mimodrama in three Acts, 'an ingenious combination of pantomime, choreography, and the richest developments of music—choral and symphonic' (I. Carraud). Its own work of excessive beauty and profoundly contrapuntal—resources. What wise distinction Roger-Ducasse has shown in the treatment of the well-known legend! How modestly he makes any attempt to excel Gluck's wonderful scene by letting this part of the story pass between the Acts. In doing so, however, and in realising the tragic fate of Orpheus, Roger-Ducasse has come immeasurably nearer to the cosmic conception of the ancients than the Chevalier who exults in the mortal happiness of Orpheus and Eurydice. The score of 'Orphée' throughout is stamped with the mark of genius. The leitmotif idea has given Roger-Ducasse ample scope for his technical mastery. The themes of Orpheus, Eurydice, Thanatos, and Eros, Hymen, intertwine in endless variety, giving the music a unique poignancy. But the most distinctive feature of the work is the chorus that in the third Act acclaims Orpheus' return to earth—the chorus reaching here such depth as can only be found in the choral works of J. S. Bach, a model that Roger-Ducasse has constantly kept before his eyes. After 'Orphée' came a period of production for the pianoforte: Etudes, Esquisses, Arabesques, Sonnettes, 'Sonorités,' Variations, &c., a considerable part of very complex work, sometimes making great demands on the player, and requiring minute analysis and acute penetration. Roger-Ducasse's pianoforte technique is, notwithstanding his peculiar traits, always more or less akin to the great German 18th century contrapuntist. Here is, for example, the beginning of one of the 'Variations sur un Choral.' It is like the old master suddenly brought to life again into a 20th century musical sphere, and operating freely with modern resources.

4e Variation sur un Choral (1915).

As if to do parting homage, Roger-Ducasse closes this period with a pianoforte transcription of Bach's Organ Passacaglia (1918).

Among the most recently-published works of Roger-Ducasse is a 'Nocturne du Printemps,' for orchestra, dedicated to his 'dear country-house, le Taillan.' His writing-desk is at the present moment full of new manuscripts awaiting publication. He is still a comparatively young man, and we can confidently expect still greater things from him.

What are, then, the main characteristics of Roger-Ducasse's style? In the happy expression of M. Laurent Ceillier:

'Roger-Ducasse has arrived at a point where the most daring harmony mingles with the most mobile counterpoint: his antique process of writing he places at the disposal of a highly-modern conception of sound, with the result that with him there is no discord that does not resolve itself with charm and ease, and no harshness that does not glide away into the sweetest of motions . . . his work, so classic in its origin, is a triumph of force, of life, of sanity, and of balance.'

To demonstrate these words, I may be allowed further to quote from a number of Roger-Ducasse's works.

Here is the beginning of the slow movement of the string quartet (1909) which, were it not for its modern harmony, would be in outline not unlike some of the slow movements in Beethoven's last Quartets, e.g., the Largo assai in the last quartet or the Cavatina in the B flat, Op. 130. The sonorous effect achieved herein with very sparing means is peculiar to classic writing:

Ex. 3.

Quatuor à cordes Très lent.

The same strict economy is applied to all modulations in which the works of Roger-Ducasse may be said to abound. He is extremely fond of enharmonic changes, which he handles with rare delicacy.

Here, on the other hand, is an instance of a sudden modulation producing a striking effect after graceful meandering in remote regions (Prélude, 1907):

Finally, mention must be made of a particularly attractive peculiarity of Roger-Ducasse's harmony cropping up in a multitude of works, and that is the combination of chromatic progressions in 3rds or 6ths with arpeggios on the tonic, the two parts generally intersecting. We find this device in the scene of Orpheus' nuptials with Eurydice, in the third Motet, and in the first Esquisse for the pianoforte:

Roger-Ducasse's rhythmical ingenuity is developed in a sufficient degree to stand him in good stead for contrapuntal and harmonic purposes. Yet it would be too much to say that he has rhythmically achieved as much as some other neoclassicists—for example, Medtner or Prokofiev.

And this brings me to my last point. The modern classicist or neoclassicist movement is pregnant with possibilities in the realms of harmony, counterpoint, and rhythm. Impressionism, brought to such significant efflorescence in the works of Debussy and Ravel, is likely to prove evanescent through the fact of its using colours where classicism uses granite and marble. Granite and marble can be coloured; but colours, however brilliant, can never become substantial. Of all modern classicists, perhaps none is more successful in combining colour and solidity than Roger-Ducasse. All the best qualities of the French musician are combined in him—an abundantly rich imagination, clear and deep thought, graceful and precise workmanship, and an unerring taste.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

Where politics are concerned it may or may not be a good plan to follow the advice shouted at from the hoardings, and 'write to John Bull' 'see what Bottomley says about it.' In music matters it will be easy to find more authoritative courts of appeal. In a recent issue John Bull ventilated a grievance from a mandolin band who had entered for a string band contest at a Midland Eisteddfod and had had its entry refused on the ground that a mandolin band was not eligible for this particular class. No doubt the thousands who weekly and weakly sit at the feet of Horatio though he had said all there was to be said when he repeated the claim of the aggrieved party that 'mandolins have strings.' But the matter is not quite so simply settled. A good deal of the correspondence between the band and the Eisteddfod Committee was published in a local paper, from which it appears that in answer to the secretary's remark that 'they didn't understand how a mandolin band could play all the parts of a piece for string band, the conductor replied:

'Our instrumentation in this respect is identical, and as one of the objects of our Society is to show what is possible on our instruments, we are quite prepared to stand in open competition with any string band, and abide by the decision of the judges. . . . We conclude that there is no objection to the harp playing the pianoforte part.'

There is a good deal more disputation which need not be quoted, as it does not affect the real point. This is one that should be settled, otherwise competition festival committees will be having trouble. The mandolin band in question is clearly a crack body, having competed successfully against the best bands on the Continent, where the combination is evidently more esteemed than here. The players are to be sympathised with in their disqualification, and they certainly have a grievance in the fact that their entrance was not declined until nearly three months had elapsed, during which time they had assiduously practised the test-pieces.

But they and their champion Horatio are wrong, supposing that because mandolins have strings therefore a collection of such instruments constitutes a string band. If they will turn up 'String Grove, they will learn that in England the terms 'Strings,' 'Stringed Instruments,' 'String quartet' and 'String trio,' are applied to instruments of the violin class only, agreeing with the German 'Streichquartett' and 'Streichinstrumente.' The term 'string Grove' is understood to exclude strings that are bowed, such as the harp and pianoforte—and, may add, the mandolin. This classification is no new thing. Berlioz in his 'Orchestration' groups stringed instruments under three heads—those played by a bow (the ordinary string quartet), with the harp (the harp, guitar, mandolin), and with keys (the pianoforte). The fact that all the notes of a string quartet or string band are obtainable on a mandolin band matters little. The notes are nothing in comparison with the effect. I learn from one of the Eisteddfod officials that the mandolin band entered also for string quartet class, the test-piece being a work by Frank Bridge, who was one of the adjudicators.

may imagine Mr. Bridge's emotion had he heard string quartet tinkling on four mandolins. Let the aggrieved mandolinists consider these parallel cases: The pianoforte, as we know, is a stringed instrument. All the notes of a string quartet are available on it. Are we therefore to propose that four people may enter for a string quartet class, playing the various parts on one or more pianofortes? Or, as the harp is, like the pianoforte, a stringed instrument, would a competitive festival committee be expected to allow harpists to enter in the solo pianoforte class, or pianists in the harp class? Logically, that is what must follow if the mandolin's claim be allowed. Again, the ocarina is a wind instrument. Would a band of ocarinas of various pitches expect to compete in a class for wind band? As the organ is also a wind instrument . . . but the farther we go the more we become involved in absurdities. Yet these absurdities are no more wild than the mandolinist's claim to compete with a string band on the ground that their instruments have strings, and can play the same notes. And what of the poor judges? Are they to decide between a performance in which one set of players agitates the strings with a tremolo (a legato being thus impossible), and one in which a bow is the implement? The technique and effects are entirely different. 'What Bottomley says about it' matters less than nothing in this case. Let the disappointed mandolinists spread the cult of their instrument so that there may soon be sufficient mandolin bands in a district to form a class for competition. (When that happens, what a lark it will be if a string band enters for the mandoline Challenge Cup on the ground that their instruments have strings, and can play the same notes as the mandolins! Can't you see the mandolinists up in arms again, and once more writing to John about it?)

A reader complains more in sorrow than in anger at a paragraph in this column last month 'sneered at' at the London Society of Organists. I can assure him that the last thing he will find me doing is sneering at organists and their societies. Looking for the paragraph in question I find nothing in any way reflecting on the Society. I merely compared its fame with that of the London Symphony Orchestra, in order to show that the anonymous member who wrote a scurrilous post-card claiming the initials 'S.O.' for the former body was absurd as well as abusive. The fact that the Orchestra is known all over the world, whereas the Society is comparatively local, has no relation to their respective merits. It is a performing body ever in the public eye, the other is mainly a social organization which necessarily keeps its good work at most semi-privately. The content of this good work has been pointed out in this journal and elsewhere, and by the writer who is supposed to have sneered at it. Music in the past has flowed far more to the organist than to the fiddler, pianist, or the singer—or even the mandolinist. Even to-day, when the art has developed so enormously and in so many directions, the organist is one of its most vital factors, chiefly because he really has what most of his brilliant rivals have not—well-round musicianship. He need wish for no former champion than yours truly—in fact, I don't need admitting that I do a bit in the organ line myself. In writing the paragraph complained of I was merely answering an ass according to his foolishness. I am sorry if the shrapnel spread a bit and grazed some of the crowd. But it's an ill wind, &c., and the Society will be none the worse for the consequent publicity. There are probably plenty of organists in London who ought to be members and are not. If my paragraph makes them severely ask themselves, 'Why not?' and brings them into the fold, I shall be delighted.

A letter in our correspondence columns on works by British blind composers deserves general attention, but has a special claim on organists, seeing that some of the most accomplished members of their profession are blind. Let me recommend organists to show their interest in the National Institute for the Blind by attending one of the free organ recitals given in the Armitage Hall of the Institute (224-6-8, Great Portland Street), every Wednesday, at 3. The main object of the recitals is to bring to public notice the work of blind musicians, both as performers and composers. The recitals last half-an-hour, after which visitors have an opportunity for being conducted over the building, and seeing the machinery and processes used in the embossing of music and literature in Braille type. I spent a thoroughly interesting afternoon there recently, and can assure readers that their visits will be warmly appreciated.

A friend tells me that he has just received a letter from M. Quef (Guilmant's successor at La Trinite, Paris), bearing the good news that Louis Vierne has sufficiently recovered from his long and serious illness to be able to resume his duties at Notre Dame. Vierne has a host of admirers in this country, and they will all wish him a full and speedy return to good health. A few months ago it looked as if we had had the last of this brilliant composer's works. We may now hope there will be many more.

Last month we were considering the very slender relationship between the musical press and the general musical public. The present unsatisfactory state of things would no doubt be partially solved if the daily press included more articles on music, especially articles written in a popular style. I am glad to note that a move in this direction has been made by the Federation of British Music Industries. The Federation has not only started an excellent journal of its own for circulation among its members; it has also formed a propaganda committee, which body, among other activities, has produced a number of articles in leaflet form for free use by the provincial press. These articles are written by Mr. H. B. Dickinson, the well-known music critic (or, as Mr. Sorabji would call him, 'newspaper reporter'), and are in the free-and-easy non-technical vein that should ensure their enjoyment by the general public. The subjects so far dealt with are 'Music in Industry,' 'Music the Universal Language,' 'The Frig in Music,' 'The Dumb Pianoforte,' 'The Dumb Organ,' 'Curative Music' (with special reference to the work of the Vocal Therapy Society), and 'Boys' Bands.' I have just been reading 'The Dumb Organ,' a convincing plea for a better use of our organs generally, especially our numerous concert organs. Readers who have any influence with the proprietors of their local press should write to the Federation (101, Mortimer Street, W. 1) for such leaflets as they think would be most useful. It is good to learn that the pamphlet on 'Music in Industry' has already begun to bear fruit. More power to the Federation, especially on the propaganda side—the side that must always open the scoring.

The question of 'Music and Industry' is very much in the air just now. Our columns from time to time contain notices of excellent concerts given by the staffs of business houses. I have just received news of the Choral Society attached to the Manchester factory of Sir H. W. Trickett, Ltd., where the shoes and slippers come from. Thanks to crowded audiences and liberal backing by the firm, the Society is able to give its patrons opportunities for hearing our best soloists. At recent concerts the following have appeared: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ruth Vincent, Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Adela Verne, and Dame Clara Butt, and Messrs. Herbert Browne, Norman Allin, Frank Mullings, Bratza, Kennerley Rumford, Albert Sammons, William Murdoch, &c.—an astonishing list. But after all, in organizations of this kind the most important feature is the music the members make for themselves. The Society so far confines itself to the smaller choral forms, but these are of excellent quality, and judging from press reports, the standard of performance is high. The choir has lately been heard in Wilbye's 'Sweet Honey-sucking bees,' Stewart's 'The Cruiskeen Lawn,' Fanning's 'The Miller's Wooing,' Stewart's 'The Bells of St. Michael's Tower,' Stanford's 'The Blue Bird,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Viking's Song,' &c.

It is worth noting that these musical activities are mentioned in the report of the annual meeting of shareholders, the managing director alluding in complimentary terms to the choir and its conductor (Mr. George Firth), and mentioning that the singers had made themselves responsible for the raising of £750 towards the cost of the firm's War Memorial—a public playground.

This is the kind of thing the country needs to-day. It will be a fine thing for both music and industry when the staffs of our big manufacturing houses are as keen about their bands and choral societies as they are already about their football and cricket clubs. That this enthusiasm already exists is proved by the National Brass Band Festival. But it needs to be developed in a good many fresh centres, especially on the choral side. After all, only a limited number of people can play in a brass band, whereas any number may form a choir. Moreover, brass and reed instruments are costly to buy, house, and convey. A choir has its instruments ready provided, free of charge, carried without trouble, and always ready for use.

MR. HUNEKER AND THE MELTING-POT

In these days we in Europe seem more and more compelled to turn awed eyes towards the Melting-Pot on the other side of the Atlantic, and when the gazing European happens to be a musician his eyes often have a special glitter. The interest, should you be a Milanese tenor or a Slav violinist, is apt to be the particularised, 'What is there for me in the pot?' For others it is more philosophical, 'What of general wonder and beneficence is the great pot brewing?' And the question is an incentive to turn to the pages of such a document as the late James G. Huneker's reminiscences of half-a-century of musical America.* We yearn to know what sort of flowers European art, transplanted and acclimatised to that virgin soil, will put forth, and in this spirit confront our author and the somewhat intimidating idiom which he used.

He sprang from a family mainly Irish, and was born at Philadelphia. The implications in the birthplace favour our inquiry. Had it been Boston the persistent clear English strain must have dominated; if New Orleans or California, a lingering trace of French or Spanish tradition. But Philadelphia half-a-century ago already offered complete mixture in fermentation, the chief of many elements being German, Jewish, and Irish. What is the new crystallisation? Brought up in the amalgamating society, a versatile youth, who was musical critic already at quite a tender age, he helps us with indications that are not to be overlooked because they are not the expected ones.

We gather in fact that the accepted phrase 'The Melting-Pot' has perhaps been accepted too easily. There undoubtedly is the pot, and there the riotous confusion of ingredients, but our author leaves without any sign that the mixture is really melting, and doubting indeed what possible force will ever bring it 'to the boil.' This very book is typical, in proportions kept, of the fierce transatlantic scene. So was the author's culture. His pages are sprinkled with such names as Bergson, Nietzsche, Strindberg, Flaubert, d'Annunzio, and Bernard Shaw, and the effect is too much that of a row of showy flowers drooping because they are stuck with the bare stalk and not with roots in the soil. His English? Whatever new engaging dialect may be there in the making, the air of Philadelphia seems not to favour literary English, and this indefatigable writer declares that having 'battled with the English language, charmed tongue of Chaucer, Shakespeare, and Swinburne,' these many years he was 'always defeated in the verbal fray.' His reproach is not the regional local term (even though he may sometimes make such dark assertions as, 'No bed-spring-chicken I'), but rather an excess of emphasis and ornamentation. He piles recklessly richness on rarity, but it is top-heavy and falls with an abject flatness of effect.

The musical activity described by the New York chapters makes a somewhat similar impression of extravagance without solidity, flowers without soil. All the virtuosos and all the prima donnas cross the scene, perform a dazzling trick or two, and vanish. Imagine the most bizarre aspect of London musical life on a huge scale, and you have the idea. A touch of exotic colour has its value, imposed on the background of ordinary local life. But in default of compensation, a crowd of inharmonious exotics is a flatness, the dreariness of international opera companies and cosmopolitan concerto players, taken in any but the smallest doses. Home fare is best for every day. Yes, but what if every bite of sup has to be imported?

Dvorák's memorable visit to New York, as recorded by Huneker, showed no great assimilative properties of the Melting-Pot. The Bohemian in no wise added a string to the American lyre. What happened was that he simply gathered and took back to the Muse of his homeland the one indigenous blossom visible, namely, negro dance and song. Huneker on Dvorák (called for convenience 'Borak') is amusing. He escorted the composer round the gaieties of New York. 'After nineteen cocktails' Dvorák was asked, 'Master, don't you think it's time we ate something?' 'He gazed through the awful * 'Steeplejack.' By James Gibbons Huneker, 2 vols. London: T. Werner Laurie.

iskers which met his tumbled hair half-way: at? No, I no eat."

Huneker knew many celebrities. He had occasion throw a glass of beer (or at least the beer from a ss) at Pachmann. He dined at a boarding-house table d'hôte next to Helena von Doenniges heroine of 'The Tragic Comedians'). He is cursed by Strindberg, whom he sought to interview in the middle of the night. And Mr. Bernard Shaw acknowledged him 'a likeable old fán' in a letter here printed (with Mr. Shaw's permission). 'Towards the end of her life she looked like a large, heavily upholstered couch'—so reservedly could he speak of a famous singer, whose name is mentioned.

Balzac and Flaubert in letters, Chopin and Wagner in music, appear in the long run to have been the staple delights in the life of this clever and experienced American. Such men are great enough 'tell' even when deprived of their European background, amid the strange phenomena of a new continent. Huneker, who was a pianist, tells us that from one end of his life to the other he never tired of playing Chopin. The sources of Chopin's talent were a pleasure in the qualities peculiar to the pianoforte's tone, together with suggestions from current operatic arias and the folk-dances of his native land. America knows all about pianofortes and operatic arias, while the whole world of to-day's borrowed her folk-dances. When the melting-pot 'gets going' and Americans manage a home-made art, should not an American Chopin be reasonably expected? But Huneker had nothing to say about fox-trots.

James Gibbons Huneker was born in 1860. His mother and paternal grandfather were organists at Philadelphia, and his maternal grandfather an Irish poet. On leaving school he worked in an engineering shop and then in a lawyer's office before devoting himself to music and journalism. At eighteen he went to Paris, travelling steerage, and acquired there a taste for French literature.

He settled in New York in 1887, and wrote for the Musical Courier during the next twelve years, as well as teaching at the National Conservatory of Music, and later he criticised music, the theatre, painting, and letters in the daily newspapers. His books number sixteen, of which the two most useful are studies of Chopin and of Liszt. But all afford proof of his remarkable verbal exuberance, of which these extracts (from the Courier) are examples:

ON BRAHMS

Brahms dreams of pure white staircases that scale the infinite. A dazzling, dry light floods his mind, and you hear the rustling of wings—wings of great, terrifying monsters; hippogriffs of horrid mien; hieroglyphic faces, faces with stony stare, menace your imagination. He can bring down within the compass of the octave moods that are outside the pale of mortals. He is a magician, spectral at times, yet his songs have the homely lyric fervour and concision of Robert Burns. A groper after the untoward, I have shuddered at certain bars in his F sharp minor Sonata, and wept with the moonlight tranquillity in the slow movement of the F minor Sonata. He is often dull, muddy pated, obscure, maddeningly slow. Then a rift of lovely music wells out of the mist; you are enchanted, and cry: 'Brahms, master, anoint again with thy precious melodic chrism our thirsty eyelids!'

THE NETHERSOLE 'CARMEN' KISS.

Olga Nethersole was the gypsy Paula Tanqueray, and a large audience held its breath when she kissed Don Jose. And how she kissed him! Ye tutelary vestals of osculation, ye canthariditic deities, who swoon to Swinburnian dithyrambs in secret groves, and all ye Paphian bowers that resound with amorous lays as the moon rises!—avaunt thee all for dullards and 'prentice hands at the sacred art of kissing when compared to Nethersole's supreme, everlasting, and sonorous labial assault. All heaven shudders as she, with incomparable virtuosity, hovers over the victim's mouth. You hear the whirr of her vampire wings; then she pounces on the fortunate man's lips, and a sound like the sob of a New Jersey mosquito is heard. The rest is sigh and silence!

J. G. Huneker was not only greatly admired in the United States, but also much beloved, for as a critic he was as slow to anger as he was quick to be generous. He was twice married and once divorced. He leaves a widow and a son, Erik.

C.

THE MUSIC OF THOMAS HARDY

BY F. HADLAND DAVIS

Thomas Hardy has revealed the spirit of the country more intimately than any other writer, and not only the country but those born and bred upon Wessex soil. Brooding over his men and women, his lanes, woods, and hills, is the Supreme Intelligence, an inexorable Being to whom the little tragedies and comedies of life present so many pictures that never awaken a moment's pity. Jude and Tess move forward to their appointed end, and it would be easier to change the face of Egdon Heath than to change the fate of this sorrowing man and woman.

If Hardy has emphasised, perhaps over emphasised, the darker side of country life, he has not forgotten the sunshine of laughter. In 'Under the Greenwood Tree' he has written a delightful comedy from start to finish.

With the exception of 'Jude the Obscure,' the music introduced into Hardy's stories, and also into 'The Dynasts,' is full of jollity. It is as racy of the soil of Wessex as Liszt's Hungarian rhapsodies are racy of the soil of Hungary. We hear the fiddler playing a merry tune: the patter of feet dancing upon a polished floor, and Sergeant Stanner, in 'The Trumpet Major,' roaring out 'Rolli-Cum-Rorum.'

The most famous references to music in the Wessex novels are to be found in 'Under the Greenwood Tree.' In the chapter entitled 'Going the Rounds' we get a delightful description of carol-singers assembled outside the tranter's house. In those days, not later than the 'seventies, Christmas always seemed to bring seasonable weather. We are told that

The older men and musicians wore thick coats, with stiff perpendicular collars, and coloured handkerchiefs wound round and round the neck till the ends came to hand, over all of which they just showed their ears and noses, like people looking over a wall.

The younger men and boys wore 'snow-white smock-frocks, embroidered upon the shoulders and breasts, in ornamental forms of hearts, diamonds, and zigzags.'

When the cider mug was passed round nine times, the music-books arranged, the horn lanterns put in order, the snow began to fall, and those without leggings made use of wisps of hay wound round their ankles.

When these preparations were completed the rustic choir set out to play and sing in the parish of Mellstock. We read:

Old William Dewy, with the violoncello, played the bass; his grandson Dick the treble violin; and Reuben and Michael Mail the tenor and second violins respectively. The singers consisted of four men and several boys, upon whom devolved the task of carrying and attending the lanterns, and holding the books open for the players.

Old William Dewy could not have flourished his baton after the manner of Sir Henry Wood; but nevertheless he had his opinions on music, and expressed those opinions with extreme frankness:

'Now mind, naibours,' he said, as they all went out one by one at the door, he himself holding it ajar and regarding them with a critical face as they passed, like a shepherd counting his sheep, 'you two counter-boys, keep your ears open to Michael's fingering, and don't ye go straying into the treble part along o' Dick and his set, as ye did last year; and mind this especially when we be in "Arise and hail." Billy Chimlen, don't you sing quite so raving mad as you fain would; and, all o' ye, whatever ye do, keep from making a great scuffle on the ground when we go in at people's gates; but go quietly, so as to strik' up all of a sudden, like spirits.'

Just before midnight the little party moved forward, the glow of swinging lanterns shining through the thickly falling snow. As the men trudged along they talked of country musicians. Among the last of the string-players, they spoke with some heat of 'barrel-organs, and they things next door to 'em that you blow wi' your foot.' Another member of the choir observed that 'They should have stuck to strings, as we did, and keep out the clar'nets, and done away with serpents. If you'd thrive in musical religion, stick to strings, says I.' Mr. Penny rejoined '... a serpent was a good old note: a deep rich note was the serpent.'

Michael Mail, in support of his contention that 'clar'nets ... be bad at all times,' relates the following story:

'One Christmas—years ago now, years—I went the rounds wi' the Weatherbury choir. 'Twas a hard frosty night, and the keys of all the clar'nets froze—ah, they did freeze!—so that 'twas like drawing a cork every time a key was opened; the players o' 'em had to go into a hedger-and-ditcher's chimley-corner, and thaw their clar'nets every now and then. An icicle o' spet hung down from the end of every man's clar'net a span long; and as to fingers—well, there, if ye'll believe me, we had no fingers at all, to our knowing.'

The final argument in favour of strings was delivered by Dewy:

'Your brass-man is a rafting dog—well and good; your reed-man is a dab at stirring ye—well and good; your drum-man is a rare bowel-shaker—good again. But I don't care who hears me say it, nothing will speak to your heart wi' the sweetness o' the man of strings!'

Having described harmoniums and barrel-organs as 'miserable sinners' and 'miserable dumbdories,' they arrived at the schoolhouse, re-tuned their instruments, and played 'number seventy-eight,' which Hardy describes as 'an ancient and time-worn hymn, embodying Christianity in words orally transmitted from father to son through several generations down to the present characters ...' The opening lines are as follows:

Remember Adam's fall,
O thou Man:
Remember Adam's fall
From Heaven to Hell.

The choir then sang lustily 'O, what unbounded goodness' and 'Rejoice, ye tenants of the earth; but these efforts awakened no response from Farmer Day, the new schoolmistress. Somewhat crestfallen, the men and boys, as a last resort, shouted the old familiar greeting: 'A merry Christmas to ye!'

Then it was that Fancy Day opened her window and expressed her thanks. Her brief appearance gave much pleasure, for Michael Mail observed, 'she'd been rale wexwork she couldn't ha' been comelier,' while Dewy added: 'As near a thing to spiritual vision as ever I wish to see!'

Farmer Shiner did not give the Mellstock Choir a friendly welcome, and when the members had sung 'Behold the Morning Star,' he roared fiercely, 'Set up, woll 'ee! Don't make your blaring row here! A feller wi' a headache enough to split his skull like a quiet night!'

Dewy did not take kindly to this sally, and said: 'Gi'e it him well; the choir can't be insulted in that manner!'

"Fortissimly!" said Michael Mail, and the music and singing waxed so loud that it was impossible to know what Mr. Shiner had said, was saying, or was about to say; but wildly flinging his arms and body about in the form of capital X's and Y's, he appeared to utter enough invectives to consign the whole parish to perdition.

Passing over other incidents connected with the carol-singers we meet the choir assembled in the gallery of Mellstock Church on Christmas morning, with neither voices nor instruments in the best condition. The girls sang with unwonted vigour, and when the sermon commenced the aggrieved choir discussed the matter with some vehemence. 'What I want to know is,' said the tranter, 'what business people have to tell maidens to up like that when they don't sit in the gallery, and never have entered one in their lives?'

The same characters appear at the tranter's party, where, instead of playing sacred music, they play country dances with considerable zest. During a much needed interval for rest and refreshment Mr. Penny gives the following description of his 'Dead March':

''Twas at Corp'l Nineman's funeral at Casterbridge. It fairly made my hair creep and fidget about like flock of sheep—ah, it did, souls! And when they had done, and the last trump had sounded, and the gun was fired over the dead hero's grave, a' icy-cold drop moist sweat hung upon my forehead, and another upon my jawbone. Ah, 'tis a very solemn thing!'

Michael Mail, anticipating, perhaps, the Huneker's gastronomic interpretation of music, is of the opinion that 'there's a friendly tie of some sort between music and eating.' He relates the following story:

'Once I was a-setting in the little kitchen of the D. Mariners at Casterbridge having a bit of dinner, and a brass band struck up in the street. Such a beautiful band as that were! I was setting eating fried liver and lights, I well can mind—ah, I was! And to save my life, I couldn't helping chawing to the tune. Band played six-eight time, six-eight chaws I, willynilly. But plays common, common time went my teeth among fried liver and lights as true as a hair. Beautiful were! Ah, I shall never forget that there band!'

The famous chapter, 'Interview with the Vicar,' describing the Mellstock Choir assembled in the vicarage, is too well known to need quotation. We laugh over those homely musicians, but our laughter is kindly. They had to give way, whether they sang rings or serpents, to the newer musical methods introduced by Fancy Day. They fell, but they glorious with a bit of a flourish at Christmas, dignity of their ancient calling was respected, they were not allowed to 'dwindle away at some useless, paltry, second-Sunday-after or Sunday-before something that's got no name of its own.'

'Friends Beyond,' from 'Wessex Poems,' where that William Dewy and many others 'lie in Mellstock churchyard now':

'Gone,' I call them, gone for good, that group of local hearts and heads;
Yet at mothy curfew-tide,
And at midnight when the noon-heat breathes it back from walls and leads,
They've a way of whispering to me—fellow-wight who yet abide—
In the muted, measured note
Of a ripple under archways, or a lone cave's stillicide.

Under the Greenwood Tree' was dramatised by A. H. Evans under the title of 'The Mellstock Tree,' and was produced in London by the Dorchester Acting and Dramatic Society, on December 1, 1908. The excellent programme contains three songs with music: 'O what unbounded goodness, and behold! good news to man is come,' and 'Behold the Morning Star arise.' The play was so well performed, the spirit of the original so faithfully served, that when I had the pleasure of seeing it, all the other Hardy plays, I doubted if William Wyndham Porter and the other carol-singers 'lie in Mellstock churchyard now!' It seemed to me that Mr. T. P. O'Connell had made them very much alive.

The finest of the Wessex novels, 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles,' does not lend itself in the main to musical interpretation; but d'Erlanger wrote an opera based upon this story, and it was produced at the Garden some time ago. It was not, in my opinion, a success. The composer caught the lighter side of country life admirably. He made us realise the magic of an early morning with the singing of the birds, but it was beyond his power to convey the idea of the tragic life of Tess herself. Tess was sad to sing, and a Tess singing in opera is not likely to please a lover of Hardy's works.

'The Trumpet Major,' the first of the series of Hardy plays adapted by Mr. Evans, was produced at Dorchester (Casterbridge of the novels) in 1908. It was revived at the Cripplegate Institute, London, on December 5, 1912, and is of special interest from a musical point of view. The play contains Hardy's 'Alli-Cum-Rorum,' air by Harry Pouncy, harmonized by Boyton Smith, 'Valenciennes,' from 'Wessex Poems,' with music by Boyton Smith, and 'Budmouth Dears,' from 'The Dynasts,' with music by the same composer. 'Budmouth Dears' is a fine song. I give the concluding verse:

Shall we once again meet them,
Falter fond attempts to greet them?
Will the gay sling-jacket glow again
Beside the muslin gown?

Will they archly quiz and con us
With a sidelong glance upon us,
As our spurs clink, clink, up the Esplanade and down?

In 'The Three Wayfarers,' from 'Wessex Tales,' we can be found 'The Hangman's Song.*' In the dramatised version, written, I believe, by Hardy himself, the song was sung by Charles Charrington, and set to a tune described as 'a traditional one in the County of Dorset, and very old.' When the play was produced in London the musical programme included a chanson, 'Dorset—our Dorset,' by Stanley Galpin, while Boyton Smith's 'Praise of Dorset' was played at the production of 'The Woodlanders.'

When 'The Dynasts' was performed at the Kingsway Theatre, London, and this year at Oxford, the songs were set to folk-airs selected and adapted by Cecil Sharp.

There are references to music in 'The Trumpet Major.' Henchard observed that 'Hymns, ballets, or rantipole rubbish; the Rogue's March or the cherubim's warble—'tis all the same to me if 'tis good harmony, and well put out.' When he suggested that the musicians assembled in the 'Three Mariners' should play the hundred-and-ninth Psalm, the leader strongly objected. He said:

'We chose it once when the gipsy stole the pa'son's mare, thinking to please him, but he were quite upset. Whatever Servant David were thinking about when he made a psalm that nobody could sing without disgracing himself, I can't fathom!'

'The Soldier's Joy' is referred to in 'Far from the Madding Crowd.' Hardy writes:

As to the merits of 'The Soldier's Joy,' there cannot be, and never were, two opinions. It has been observed in the musical circles of Weatherbury (Puddletown) and its vicinity that this melody, at the end of three-quarters of an hour of thunderous footing, still possesses more stimulative properties for the heel and toe than the majority of other dances at their first opening. 'The Soldier's Joy' has, too, an additional charm, in being so admirably adapted to the tambourine . . . no mean instrument in the hands of a performer who understands the proper convulsions, spasms, St. Vitus's dances, and fearful frenzies necessary when exhibiting its tones in their highest perfection.

Hardy is familiar with many country dances, and during rehearsals of the Wessex plays at Dorchester has been seen to dance a rustic measure himself.

When Mr. Phillotson, the schoolmaster, sent for his pianoforte, Jude placed inside the case of the instrument a letter asking his friend to send him some second-hand grammars. Some time after the pianoforte had been despatched, and after calling frequently at the cottage post-office, he received a parcel containing the books he wanted.

There is a satirical reference to music in 'Jude the Obscure.' Jude Fawley had sung 'The Foot of the Cross' in the choir of a church near Melchester (Salisbury). Pleased with the work, he went to see the composer in order to express his appreciation. When he said: 'I—like it. I think it supremely beautiful!' the composer observed, as many before him have done and will continue to do in the future, that publishers 'want the copyright of an obscure composer's work, such as mine is, for almost less than I should have to pay a person for making a fair manuscript copy of the score.' The composer told Jude that 'music is a poor staff to lean on—I am giving it up entirely. You must go into the trade if you want to make money nowadays. The wine business is what I am thinking of. This is my forthcoming list—it is not issued yet—but you can take one.' What a note for Prof. Saintsbury's 'Cellar Book'!

In the closing scene of 'Jude the Obscure,' music plays a most dramatic part. It is made to emphasise the terrible irony of Jude's life. As the poor fellow lay dying at Christminster (Oxford), he heard the bells, celebrating Remembrance Day, ring merrily. He heard the notes of an organ mingling with the shouts and hurrahs of the people, and as he listened to these things that unwanted failure, who had failed in love and work, that buffeted soul tossed into the world before his time, whispered:

* In 'Wessex Poems' it is called 'The Stranger's Song.'

'Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, There is a man child conceived.'

(Hurrah!)

No writer of fiction has used music with more poignancy than in this memorable scene. In 'Under the Greenwood Tree' Hardy has made music express rustic comedy, and even described his heroine's eyebrows 'as two slurs in music.' But under the crushing hand of the Supreme Intelligence, Hardy has made music express a cry too deep for words.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE

BY CHARLES TREE

So simple! Yes! Easy singing is as simple as easy golfing, yet how great is the proportion of easy golfers to that of easy singers! Correct singing (physically) is, perhaps, much easier than is correct golf. The foundation of the former can, probably, be more unified, because we have naturally the real foundation—correct speech. Of course we must admit that in most things simplicity, up to a point, is difficult; but in vocal work it appeals to us as being difficult only because its simplicity is so simple. Except to the very few, it is difficult to believe that 'that's all there is in it.' We persist in making it difficult. We set out to find the intricate byways, with the direct open road staring us in the face. On the finger-post is writ large, 'True speech—direct road to true vocalism.'

Take any of the old singers, those upon whom time had comparatively little effect—Patti, Melba, Maurel, Sims Reeves, Santley. Listen to Melba and Calvé to-day: note the ease and simplicity of their physical work; the close connection between speech and song in their vocalisation. Note the excellence of their diction—due to that close connection. Their voices go on the same, year in, year out, with all that delicious ease which makes for long life of the voice, and which alone allows of true temperamental art having full play. Unfortunately the great public does not object to a bit of 'neck-swelling' and 'face-bursting.' It is inclined to look upon these as necessary adjuncts to art. But a voice which is 'back' cannot 'paint.' It can make use of ff or pp, but it has a great sameness of colouring, and its life is likely to be short.

It is a deplorable fact that the great mass of vocal teachers do not know that something is wrong. Yet if they will realise that only one in a thousand trained singers keeps his voice fresh during a period of, say, thirty years' public work, it will be seen how important is the matter of correct vocal placing and consequent ease. As already said, the difficulty of singing is its simplicity. The fact is, we are working largely on the indefinite, whereas true, easy singing can be brought about by a very definite means—that of true speech changed into song. Here is the real key to ninety per cent. of all the trouble.

We are a nation of voices, but until this generally realised we shall not become a nation of singers. When we diagnose the cases of vocalists who complain of want of ease and whose enunciation is poor, we find that the cause is usually that such voices not being sufficiently 'forward.' They are not necessarily 'throaty': some might even think them 'forward.' But compare the correct speaking position with that of the singing position they are using, and it will be found that in ninety-per cent. of cases the speaking is by far the more forward. And, moreover, the patient immediately realises that difference, and is able in an extraordinarily short time to obtain the correct position. Nature is ever ready to avail itself of the correct adjustment.

Now in this correct adjustment the voice will grow in quantity and quality, whereas in the backward position such development is impossible. I repeat this is the vital point—the one simple cure for most of the difficulties that beset the path of the student.

Quantity, quality, enunciation, variety of colour—long life of the voice, nearly everything that is worth anything on the physical side of singing depend very largely on this 'forward position' (as true speech). And this ultra-vital point is simple itself. It is merely a matter of not altering the 'apparatus' or position of true production when passing from speech into song. Speech is continuous in its flow of tone—song is.

Let the singer speak easily, in the front of the mouth, a phrase of the song. Repeat this seven times, and realise mentally the position and physical feeling of this speech. Make this gradually louder, using great care that no physical change takes place, and then gradually break into song. It will be found a ridiculously easy procedure. But this very ease is at first a drawback, because the student almost invariably imagines there is not sufficient sound, whereas the voice is in reality carrying to all parts of the hall instead of being boxed up in and around the executant.

Now think for a moment of the camouflage which exists to-day in connection with vocal tuition. Here is one of the great enemies of vocal education. Another is the pianoforte—a good accompaniment covers up the faults of both teacher and student. All teach the 'Italian production,' yet it can safely be said that only a very small percentage of teachers know what that means. The great majority of Italian 'teachers' themselves do not know. Every ice-cream vendor in Italy teaches singing if he can get people to believe in a particular 'method.' And cajole them he does. The results of this are evident in the numerous singers who return home with badly produced voices. The fact is, we may term the correct method Italian, French, English, what we will, still remains the correct method—there is only one. And its foundation is common-sense. The one great need is to refrain from building a wall of difficulty round vocal art.

But let us not overlook the fact that speech must be perfect in order to be the foundation of true singing. Here is work to do. Look at the position of our churches to-day, chiefly through the incompetence of the clergy in the matter of vocal delivery. It is a crying shame that our Church authorities do not insist on a thorough knowledge of the voice, being one of the principal studies of our ordination

(Continued on page 263.)

A PART-SONG FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words from Francis Pilkington's
"First Book of Songs or Ayres," 1605.

Composed by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Con moto.

Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . the Daff - down - dil - ly, White as the

Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . the Daff - down - dil - ly, White as the

Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . the Daff - down - dil - ly, White as the

Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . the Daff - down - dil - ly, White as the Con moto.  $\text{♩} = \text{about } 152.$

sun, fair . . as the li - ly; Heigh - - ho, how . . I do sun, . . fair . . as the li - ly; Heigh - - ho, how . . I do sun, . . fair . . as the li - ly; Heigh - - ho, how . . I do

sun, . . fair . . as the li - - ly; Heigh - - ho, how I do

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

love thee! I do love thee as my lambs Are be - lov - ed of their dams. How love thee! I do love thee as my lambs Are be - lov - ed of their dams. How love thee! I do love thee as my lambs Are be - lov - ed of their dams. How love thee! I do love thee as my lambs Are be - lov - ed of their dams. How blest were I if thou would'st prove me. Di - a - phe - ni - a, like blest were I if thou would'st prove me. Di - a - phe - ni - a, like blest were I if thou would'st prove me. Di - a - phe - ni - a, like blest were I if thou would'st prove me. Di - a - phe - ni - a, like the spreading ro - ses, That in thy sweets all sweets en - clo - ses; Fair

the spreading ro - ses, That in thy sweets all sweets en - clo - ses; Fair

the spreading ro - ses, That in thy sweets all sweets en - clo - ses; Fair

the spreading ro - ses, That in thy sweets all sweets en - clo - ses; Fair

ten. pp cres.
Sweet, how . . I do love thee! . . I do love thee as each flow'r Loves the

ten. pp cres.
Sweet, how . . I do love . . thee! . . I do love thee as each flow'r Loves the

ten. pp cres.
Sweet, how I do love thee! . . I do love thee as each flow'r Loves the

ten. pp cres.
Sweet, how I do love thee! . . I do love thee as each flow'r Loves the

poco rit. dim.
sun's life-giv-ing pow'r, For . . dead, thy breath to . . life . . might move me.

poco rit. dim.
sun's life-giv-ing pow'r, For . . dead, thy breath to life . . might move me.

poco rit. dim.
sun's life-giv-ing pow'r, For . . dead, thy breath to life . . might move me.

poco rit. dim.
sun's life - giv-ing pow'r, For . . dead, thy breath to life might move me.

p a tempo. cres.
Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . to all things bless - ed, When all thy

p a tempo. cres.
Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . to all things bless - ed, When all thy

p a tempo. cres.
Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . to all things bless - ed, When all thy

p a tempo. cres.
Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . to all things bless - ed, When all thy

p a tempo. cres.
Di - a - phe - ni - a, like . . to all things bless - ed, When all thy prais - es . . . are ex - press - ed; Dear joy, how . . . I do prais - es . . . are ex - press - ed; Dear . . . joy, how . . . I do prais - es . . . are ex - press - ed; Dear . . . joy, how . . . I do

prais - es . . . are ex - press - ed; Dear joy, how I do love thee! . . . As the birds do love the spring, Or the bees their care-ful love . . . thee! . . . As the birds do love the spring, Or the bees . . . their care-ful love . . . thee! . . . As the birds do love the spring, Or the bees . . . their care-ful love thee! . . . As the birds do love the spring, Or the bees their care-ful

King, Then . . . in re - quite, . . . sweet Vir - gin, love me.

King, Then . . . in re - quite, . . . sweet Vir - gin, love me.

King, Then . . . in re - quite, . . . sweet Vir - gin, love me.

King, Then . . . in re - quite, . . . sweet Vir - gin, love me.

(Continued from page 258.)

ndidates. The man with good 'delivery' and od 'matter' commands a big congregation, in any cases an overflowing one, and 'delivery' is of r greater importance than 'matter,' because for a w pence can be obtained some of the finest rmons ever preached.

If there be one section of the vocal art which ight be termed 'difficult,' it is undoubtedly that of taining good nasal resonance, i.e., nasal resonance hout nasal quality. This should not be essayed til each note of the voice has been brought to the ntal position, and singing in that position has come 'second nature.' Then the nasal resonance comes reinforced tone, and is the means to that rrying power, with ease, of which such comparatively small use is made. True nasal resonance a great aid to long life of the voice.

It is no exaggeration to say that this matter of rrect voice production is of national importance.

WARRING SCHOOLS IN FRANCE

Echoes of the warring schools of French musical sthetes reach us here in England, and we even ave debates more or less on their model, debates owever which never seem quite to ring true, no ount because we have never sufficiently wanted to aster the rules of the game. We most of us are too rmaginative ever to doubt a perfect right to admire mbracingly such disparities as Monteverde's Orpheus,' Bach, 'Tristan,' and 'Pelleas.' (Pragmatism is the philosophy of those who have no need of philosophy.) Here then, it may generally seem not o much audacious as rather natural and obvious for musician to defend a measure of eclecticism and to stify an esteem for the various good things of o matter what source. Don't let us depreciate however he courage of M. Charles Koechlin, who essays his task in twenty-three strenuous pages of the Paris Revue Musicale (March), wherein the eclectic may and the comforting support of philosophy.

He calls his paper, 'Music: a Joy of the Spirit or Sensual Pleasure?' For the warring schools are hese: the 'sensitives,' for whom music is a mple physical pleasure in the shock of vibrations in the ear, a sheer joy in sound—who hold every vowed emotion, intention, or preconceived form as a derogation; and against them the 'intellectuals,' for whom appreciable music must be demonstrably an edifice of sounds and a satisfaction to the analytical reason, who cannot listen to music for the pure fun of it but must be convinced of its adherence to a logical system and of proportions and symmetry as it vere architectural. There are actually many persons whose musical preferences are given on the strength of the one attitude or the other, and M. Koechlin seeks to bring it home that both are wrong. To the sensitives he declares that even if the concept is possible of a musical pleasure analogous to a well-cooked dish or a 'beautiful red,' even supposing one ould momentarily isolate a concept of pleasure so simplified, never could that pleasure be of itself sufficient. A true joy of the ear does not last, does not even exist (asserts he, risking the wrath of all he advanced people), without an emotion of the heart.

Our author then turns his guns on the more substantial target of the intellectuals and their appreciation of fugues with regular entries, cyclic sonatas and symphonies, and operas strictly written on the leading-motive principle. These good folk are simply confusing two different planes, the logic of science and the quite unrelated logic of art. Already sixty years ago the philosopher Dollfus told them:

'It is the business of science and of philosophy to satisfy the reason; the artist has to speak to the soul, and the soul cries out to be stirred. Doubtless a perfect logic presides at the creation of an artistic masterpiece, but it is an interior logic that is unaware of itself. That unawareness is precious, and every artist must guard himself from its loss; let him respect that intimate mystery of his soul wherein creation is accomplished, let him guard it with jealous care and keep himself free, untrammelled by systems.'

By no demonstrably logical build alone can a fugue be saved. Some irreproachably cyclic sonatas are intolerable as music, and leading-motives may well be a bore. The ground is now clear for permission to like all the music which appeals to you, without the sanction of a conscious theory. How shall we say what is good and what bad? In this mystery—you have seen it coming, that M. Koechlin is about to rally to Bergsonism—intuition must and will guide us. He says:

'The infinite diversity of music remains far from this discussion, it blooms on a plane other than the physical or the intellectual. True musical logic is not to be defined as the other logic may be. It is mysterious and complex. It depends on all sorts of things, on the sentiment, the development, the nature of the author, and on the character of the work itself. It is less definable even than that of the most symbolical poetry. It is not created, nor is it to be perceived by the intelligence but by the musical sense. It lives in an enchanted realm of modulations, chords, and rhythms. To group these in a right manner is not the job of a reasoner but of a poet-musician, working with the intimate gift he possesses of the particular beauty of his art. (Thus never the intelligence but only the instinct of a musician will point out whether it is necessary to add or cut away a bar in a development.) The root of it is not apparent symmetry but a very diverse harmony, incapable of definition because it is the function of that simple element the Beautiful, which is linked to no other.

'It is not the logic of the philosophers, but another sort, interior, more subtle, immaterial and not to be analysed by the process of the intelligence. All true musicians have it as a gift, possess it unconsciously. They realise it by instinct. Sometimes they sin against it when they seek to subordinate it to reason or to forms too rigid. In art what the mind requires (not consciously but with a deep instinctive desire) is to find itself not distracted by irrelevancies nor by lengthiness or monotony.

'This harmonious logic, sometimes called the equilibrium of reason and feeling, is quite another thing than the presence of the so-called intellectual element. In the period of artistic creation, properly speaking, the intellectual consciousness must oftentimes efface itself before other inventive powers; it can never be logical that it should rule over the musical sense. The craze of giving the place of honour to music deemed intellectual has had the sorry result of exalting certain works that have been manufactured, industrially as it were, in series, according to established recipes and principles; and again, the reduction of listening to an analysis of forms.

'What acts, what creates, is Intuition the mysterious. If inspiration and musical creation remain unfathomed mysteries, it is seemingly because the subconscious plays therein a primordial part, without for an instant the work ceasing to be that exactly which corresponds to the moral and intellectual personality of the musician as he is in the depths of himself. Let the musician go straight towards beauty without a priori ideas to pin him down, or the no less dangerous imposition of literary thought factitiously added to his art. Let the listener dispense with extra-musical criteria and hearken with the ear, the imagination, and the heart. Deep beauty alone matters, and alone, emotion leads there through instinct, secret and indefinable.'

In the same number of the magazine are articles on d'Indy (Mauclair) and Béla Bartók (Kodaly). In the February number M. Paul Landormy describes 'The Decline of Impressionism.' Debussy belongs to the past, Ravel's taste for distinction and 'preciousness' is going out of fashion. The young men seek to evade 'the sweetness, softness, and suavity proper to Debussysm, to renounce dreaming and to come down to earth.' C.

New Music

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Chaminade still remains one of the few composers able to turn out good salon music. Her idiom is less honeyed than of old, but there remains much of the spirited rhythm and neat workmanship that made so many of her works far more enjoyable than a good deal of music that was nominally on a higher plane. Two new pieces have just been published by Enoch, 'Chanson d'Orient' and 'Danse Païenne.' Both are so animated that one is hardly conscious of some lack of freshness in their material.

Cyril Scott's 'Ballad' (Elkin), though not free from some irritating mannerisms, shows a coherence and sustained power that have been absent from most of his recent pianoforte works. The piece is based on a few bars of an old Troubadour song—a phrase of no great moment—and suffers from an overdose of harmonic shocks, but there is a suppleness of rhythm and a growth of intensity towards the close that make it an arresting and powerful piece of work.

'From the 18th Century' is the title of a collection of harpsichord and clavichord pieces transcribed by MacDowell (Elkin). There is a bit too much of the transcriber in the music as a whole. Works of this slender type rarely gain by any kind of amplification. Even the transference from their original medium to a modern pianoforte is more than some of them can stand without loss. Still, these transcriptions will no doubt please many who would be bored by the originals, so they justify themselves. By the by, we hardly recognise an esteemed old writer under the name Jean Baptiste Loeilly. What's the matter with 'Lully'? or is Loeilly somebody else? Grove knows him not.

Augener's have just issued Beethoven's Pianoforte Concertos, edited and fingered Thomas F. Dunhill (in separate numbers), a Liszt's edition of Schubert's Fantasia in G—produced in the neat and helpful way expected in this house.

Pleasant music for youthful players is Al Rowley's 'Kew Garden Scenes,' five pieces (Winthrop Rogers), and Hubert Bath's 'The Island of Heart Desire,' a suite of four (Augener), the former being slightly the easier.

G. H. Clutsam's fifth book of cinema music (Metzler) leaves one depressed. Mr. Clutsam do write so well that we are sorry to see him do his talent a good deal less than justice with work of this kind. The series is entitled 'Original Cinema Music,' an unfortunate choice, for originality of a kind is entirely lacking. No doubt music of a great complexity, or even freshness, would be out of place as an accompaniment to the 'pictures'; but it is hard to believe that the average audience is ripe for something a good deal better than this.

C. W.

ORGAN MUSIC

Marcel Dupré's gifts as a composer were well shown in the set of Fifteen Versets recently published by Novello. His Three Preludes and Fugues, issued under one cover by Leduc, are finer—because more sustained—efforts, and place him in the forefront of living writers for the organ. Two of the Preludes, Nos. 1 and 3—are in the brilliant toccata style of the modern French school. In the former, a jangling bell-like effect is produced by a daring use of 4th and 5ths in the manuals; in the latter we have rapid semiquaver work divided between the hands as background for a simple cantus. There is also good deal of triple and quadruple pedalling, with 8-ft. stops, with an effect of sustained wind passing against the manual passage work. The first Fugue carries on the bell-like character of the Prelude with a subject very unusual, and at first sight not so tractable. But the composer handles it with such skill and resource that the result is brilliantly successful. Like its Prelude it demands technique above the average. The third Fugue has a somewhat conventional subject alla giga, with each hand repeated—a doubly unpromising start. The working out, however, is so fresh harmonically, that the commonplace character of the subject is forgotten. Typically French is the liberal use of the chord of the augmented 6th in its most pungent forms. The cantus of the prelude is introduced as a counter subject towards the end, with imposing effect. Perhaps the second Prelude and Fugue is in some respects the finest of the three. Elegiac in style, its expressive character is a welcome contrast to the somewhat hard brilliance of its companions. On the whole, too, it is more original thematically. The Prelude contains some beautiful colour, both in harmony and registration, and the Fugue is a worthy pendant. These works are so difficult (and, by the way, so expensive) that they are not for the rank amateur file organist. More's the pity! It is to be hoped that the few players able to buy and play them will do so—especially the latter.

Dupré's Scherzo in F minor (Leduc) is another tough proposition. No indication is given as to pace, but apparently vivacissimo is called for. There is but one theme, and that is little more than a mere figure. Dupré makes an astonishing moment out of it, and a player with brilliant manque (the pedals have an easy task) could have a great effect. But it is to be hoped that the gifted young composer will soon give us music as easily negotiable. A set of pieces like Vierne's quatre-vingt-quatre in Free Style would have a warm welcome on this side of the Channel.

The very interesting organ music has lately been published by Chester. Arthur Honegger's Two Pieces are rather strong meat, but there is real interest mixed with the discord. Both are short and snappy and have a good deal of the character of modern music. Some uncomfortable moments in the Andante are amply atoned for by the exquisite Allegretto. The Choral has no theme of the hymn-like nature suggested by the title, but it has something in the highly expressive main subject, with its simple harmonization. The more one plays these little pieces the more one likes them.

Edouard Maleingreau is already becoming well known in this country through his Christmas Carols. His 'Offrande Musicale' is much less snappy and perhaps more immediately attractive. It consists of two pieces, published separately. They show a fund of melody, and a good deal of interest in the way of harmony. The composer does not always join his sections well, being content to end there with some rather weak links—the end of Je Suis of No. 1, for example—but the pieces as a whole will give great pleasure to all with a taste for modern music. Of the two, No. 1 is the easier and more pleasing. Maleingreau, like Dupré, is a composer of whom much may be expected. It is an excellent augury for the future of organ music that writers of this calibre should recognise the instrument as a fitting medium for their best efforts.

H. G.

SONGS

The work of Ernest Farrar is the best of answers to those who still hold the out of date view that an artist's post is the grave of freshness and originality. The more one sees of Farrar's songs in chamber music the more one realises the loss of creative music suffered by his untimely death. We are so plenty of composers able to give us all we want—a more—of long and complex works, and heaven knows there is no shortage of writers of popular music. We need minor poets in music—men able to say the happy thing briefly, and in a manner above reproach on the score of musicianship. That Farrar possessed this lyrical talent in an unusual degree is shown once more in three songs just issued by Novello. His setting of 'O Mistress Mine' has a part delightfully simple and singable, with an accompaniment that, touched off with the right neatness, well expresses the spirit of the text. The song is published for medium and high voices, and is far better suited to the latter. The two remaining songs are the last works Farrar wrote, 'Dithenia' and 'The Lover's Appeal,' published under one cover. The first, a buoyant setting of a noble's well-known lyric, owes much of its effect to a delightful springing figure in the accompaniment. A wide range of ample range and vigour is required. The second, a union song, with its alternations of quasi recit. and ad libitum, strikes a deeply expressive note. The pianoforte part contains some felicitous harmonic touches. These songs are available in two keys, low and medium.

Ceridge-Taylor's popular 'Eléanore' has just been republished in two additional keys, making four in all—A, B flat, C, and D (Novello).

Felix White's 'Sing, care away' (Novello) is a very bright and attractive setting of some jolly lines from Morley's Madrigals. An excellent feature is the tricky accompaniment, which, though not difficult, calls for a good player.

Some songs by Gerrard Williams recently published by Curwen show the composer at his best. He has a genuine vein of melody, an unusually good knack of writing accompaniments—his familiarity with the modern keyboard idiom stands him in good stead here—and ample resources in the way of harmony. Like a good many other modern composers, he makes liberal use of modal flavouring. With no space for details, it must suffice to bring the following songs to the attention of singers and players with a taste for the original and imaginative: 'Reflection,' 'The Crooning from Inisfail,' 'Aubade,' 'The Dilemma,' and 'An Inconsequent Ballad.' The words of the last named are ascribed to Shakespeare, with a '?' in brackets. The '?' can hardly be made too large. It would be safer to put the words down to that even more prolific poet 'Anon.'

C. W.

STRING MUSIC

M. André Pascal's 'Pastorale' for violin and pianoforte (Durand) is typical of much that is being written to-day. It is good in parts, and it is new—in parts. That which is pleasant points to a certain talent for not uncommon but rather charming combinations of sound, and for careful and tasteful workmanship. But M. Pascal insists on being on the side of the pioneers. Apparently he would rather be the last of the innovators than the first of the conservatives, and accordingly sets out on uncharted ground to seek originality. His adventures, the perils he encounters, and his escapes are only moderately thrilling. There was a time when the harmonic progressions he uses would have appeared daring and surprising. Since it has been decreed that every common chord must have a 7th, that every C must have its B, and every F an E, a few extra atrocities are not enough to arouse our enthusiasm. Directions to the players are abundant and sometimes a little puzzling. For instance, can a p be followed by a p subitement? These may be trifles, but they give us the measure of the composer's intentions.

Very different in aim and method is Mr. Arnold Bax's 'Folk-Tale' for violoncello and pianoforte (Chester), which begins and ends with a common chord and in the same key! Yet Mr. Bax contrives to be quite original and pleasant. This does not mean that his harmonic scheme is that of Sullivan or Bellini; but he knows the value of reticence, and his daring strokes are all the more telling since they are the exception rather than the rule. One may like the composition or not—tastes are bound to differ. Yet Mr. Bax never gives the impression of a man sitting down to a banquet but having no stomach for it, feeding on dainties and avoiding the nourishing foods. Composition is for him a natural function to be performed without prejudice or bias. His own thoughts and ideas—not the means of identifying them with any particular school or movement—are the main concern.

Of the smaller pieces, Sir George Henschel's 'Gavotte' for violoncello shows the good taste and deft handling of a theme which characterise all this composer's work. Two 'Pièces classiques' for violin and pianoforte—Grétry's Gigue 'Denys le tyran' and the same composer's Tambourin 'Aspasie'—edited by M. Erkki Melartin (Chester), add to the already considerable catalogue of peptonized classics. Both are of moderate difficulty, but the Gigue demands slightly firmer grip of bowing technique.

In 'The Violin and its Technique' (Macmillan & Co.) M. Achille Rivarde has perhaps attempted more than can possibly be accomplished in an essay of fifty pages. Most qualified teachers have some idea how technique can best be acquired, and although a particular method may appear especially valuable to one man there is no denying that other methods have also given excellent results. The technique of the violin, moreover, has its roots in the technique of composition, and one subject cannot be adequately discussed without reference to the other. M. Rivarde has limited his field to the technique of the present day, collating a number of rules to be followed by aspiring students. The advice is, on the whole, sound. But the author himself has realised the need to add practical exercises to the theory, and promises to publish the necessary appendix at some later period. That publication will add considerably to the value of the present volume.

F. B.

CHURCH MUSIC

Thanks to the indefatigable labours of a few enthusiasts, it is gradually being brought home to us how little we have really known of the work of our great English polyphonic composers. It is only within recent years that we have begun to appreciate such composers as Byrd, Gibbons, &c., at something like their true worth, while others, who in some cases were little more to many of us than mere names, have, in the light of recent discoveries, shown themselves to be worthy rivals of even the greatest of the Elizabethan writers. Messrs. Novello have recently published Gibbons' Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor, edited by Royle Shore. In a preface the editor writes with reference to Thomas Tomkins (1586-1656), who died some thirty years after Gibbons:

When this great composer's one hundred and five verse and full anthems, including one in twelve real parts, and five services, are made known, after entirely dropping out of the Cathedral tradition, he may even challenge the position of more than one of his eminent predecessors.

Mr. Royle Shore, whose labours in bringing to light hitherto unpublished works of the old composers are so well known, deserves the sympathetic encouragement and support of all English Church musicians. Under the title of 'The Cathedral Series of Church Service Music, chiefly polyphonic and unpublished, of the 16th and early 17th centuries, he has edited and published services and other works by William Mundy (d. 1591), Thomas Causton (d. 1569), Thomas Tallis (d. 1585), John Ward, and others. The latest additions to the series are the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor by Orlando Gibbons (1583-1625), and some chant settings for the Morning and Evening Canticles adapted from Gibbons' music.

From the Preface to the first of these we gather that Gibbons' great 'Morning and Evening Service in D minor,' save in the folio collection of the ecclesiastical works of Gibbons edited by Sir Frederick Ouseley, and published in 1873, and not now readily obtainable, has not been printed since it appeared in John Barnard's collection of 1641. Unlike his popular Service in F, one of the class then known as 'short services,' it is practically unknown, having somehow dropped out of the Cathedral repertory, which was almost entirely determined by what appeared in the 18th century collections of Boyce and Arnold. The independent organ part is taken from Sir Frederick Ouseley's collection, verified with the original in 'Batten's Organ Book' in Sir Frederick's library at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and the John Bishop transcript of Barnard in the British Museum. Latin words have been added to increase the usefulness of the services, and make known the ecclesiastical music of England on the Continent:

This [writes Mr Royle Shore] is apparently the first occasion on which an effort has been made to bring the ecclesiastical music of the English Church before continental musicians with the view to a practical performance. . . . This particular service, besides coming as a revelation to English musicians—few even have ever heard of it—will be of special interest to those abroad, because contemporary musicians there, when they began to add independent organ accompaniments, too often, it is understood, 'went all to pieces,' musically speaking. On the other hand their English contemporaries maintained the high level that they had inherited from the pure vocal polyphonists.

The setting is for five voices, with frequent 'vers parts' for one, two, or more voices. Owing to its length—it runs to twenty-eight pages—suggestions are made for shortening it on occasion by substituting for any portion of it, particularly the verse parts, the chant settings, adapted from chant-like phrases in the Service; or, for certain verses of the Magnificat, the solemn form of Tone II. is provided after the chant settings. This follows pre-Reformation custom.

The chant settings referred to above are published separately in the 'Cathedral Series' of Mr. Royle Shore (Novello). No. 116, provides effective chant in extended form for Te Deum and Benedictus with descant for soprano. By the way, the first bar note of the last Te Deum chant should be D and not B; a ledger line is missing.

No. 110 gives us three sets of chants for the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, two of which are for five voices, and also a plain-chant setting—the solemn form of Tone II.—for certain verses of the Magnificat which, like the chant settings, may be used as mentioned above when it is desired to shorten the big Service in D minor. A descant for soprano is provided for two of the chants. All these settings are lithographed.

Many churches should find a use for the admirable adaptations. As Mr. Royle Shore wrote in the Musical Times in 1919: 'However inevitable the Anglican chant may seem to be for the psalms in most churches, something more dignified ought to be provided for the canticles . . . . Extended forms of modern chants could certainly be popularised, with some occasional embellishments in Faux-bourdon.'

These chant settings are a successful attempt to meet this want.

Maurice Vinden's anthem, 'If we believe that Jesus died' (Novello), is admirably designed to meet present-day needs. Here we have music that is interesting and well-written, is not unduly prolonged, and, while quite easy, yet affords plenty of scope for artistic treatment at the hands of a good choir. It opens with a soprano solo, 'If we believe,' with smoothly flowing organ part. A few instrumental bars lead—with an abrupt change of key—to a vigorous passage for baritone solo, the full choir entering shortly afterwards (ff) unaccompanied. A fine passage for the full organ, developed from the ening instrumental phrase, is followed by a section which is commenced by tenors and basses divided. The dramatic and effective writing follows, culminating in a big climax. A short organ passage leads to the final section—an unaccompanied quartet of all the voices entering for the closing phrase. The composer knows how to write effectively for voices, and his treatment of the organ part is always excellent, and to the point. The anthem is suitable for Eastertide, Burial Services, or general use.

Mendelssohn's familiar 'O for the wings of a dove,' as arranged by John E. West (Novello), makes an effective duet for female or boys' voices. Choirs, ladies' singing classes, &c., will welcome its appearance in this form.

A short and easy setting of the Office of the Holy Communion in the key of E flat, from the penitential hand of Dr. Basil Harwood (Novello), is primarily intended for the use of village choirs and congregations. In those places where simple, straightforward music is essential it should supply all that is wanted. Where a full choir is available opportunity is provided for occasional singing in harmony, and for trebles and men's voices alone. It may, however, be sung throughout in unison or by trebles only. A five-fold Kyrie is provided in addition to the responses to the Commandments. For the use of the congregation the voice-part is published separately. With the aid of this and a few congregational practices the few difficulties of this excellent setting will soon be overcome.

Several numbers of 'The Passion' composed by the late Dr. Varley Roberts may now be obtained separately (Novello). These include 'Is it nothing to you?' (tenor solo and chorus), 'For a small ment,' 'God so loved the world,' 'Let us go forth' (four-part chorus), and 'Whosoever shall do the will of My Father' (unaccompanied chorus). They are simple and tuneful in style, and will prove acceptable to choirs unable to cope with more elaborate works of this kind.

For his setting in A flat of the Te Deum (Novello), Arnold G. Tomblin has provided a selection of tunes, mainly in unison but with occasional verses in harmony. To those accustomed to the freedom of unsung chanting, settings of this sort are apt to prove unsatisfactory owing to the limitations imposed by a strict adherence to the Anglican chant form. The composer has afforded a little rhythmical relief by an occasional extension of the second half of the chant. A comparison with the adapted chanting settings of Mr. Royle Shore (noticed above) would show the advantage gained in the case of certain short verses by modification in the opposite direction—i.e., the elimination of unnecessary bars. Apart from this the music is well written and tuneful, and the tunes well varied in style.

On a plane far above much of the Church music of the present day is Dr. Charles Wood's setting of the Passion of our Lord according to St. Mark, arranged as a liturgical devotion by the Rev. E. H. White, Dean of King's College, Cambridge (see Faith Press). A deeply devotional spirit pervades the whole, and the music maintains a high standard throughout. Not the least noteworthy feature of a very fine work is the masterly treatment of the various hymns which play an important part in the setting. The music needs a well-equipped choir to do it justice, but given that, and attention to the directions given for the conduct of the service, the result should be truly impressive.

William Faulkes' setting of the office for the Holy Communion in E (Novello) is well suited to the needs of the average parish church choir. The composer indulges in no complexities and treads no new paths, but is content to write music that is melodious and straightforward. A commendable feature is the absence of verbal repetition except in the case of the Kyrie, where the repetition of the words 'have mercy' is likely to prove irritating by the time the tenth Commandment is reached. G. G.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Two Philharmonic concerts have taken place since the last issue. On February 24 Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted. The principal feature of the concert was the first performance in London of W. H. Bell's Symphonic Variations. Mr. Bell is Principal of the School of Music at Cape Town, but since he left England for South Africa not much of his music has been heard here, although his 'Mother Carey's Chickens' had made a great impression. During his absence his musical personality has matured considerably, and he uses the modern orchestra skilfully. His style is somewhat eclectic, without being open to the charge of plagiarism, and the principal foundation of it remains English. Perhaps in South Africa it is possible to observe the effects of various tendencies with more detachment than for us in Europe. The clearly marked theme is indisputably of native origin, and there is considerable variety in the modifications it is made to undergo. The livelier Variations made a greater effect than the more emotional ones. Mr. Bell conducted his own work well, and it had a cordial reception. Mr. Harty's conducting of Debussy's 'La Mer' is far the best thing he has done in London up to the present. The music itself was a surprise to those of us who think that Debussy is always vague and elusive, and shuns anything more sonorous than a mezzo-forte. The soloist was Mr. Lamond, who played Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto. Both Mr. Lamond and the 'Emperor' Concerto are so well known that it is superfluous to say more.

At the concert on March 10, two works of native origin secured ovations for their respective composers. The first was Mackenzie's 'Scottish' Concerto for pianoforte, in which Miss Myra Hess played the solo. It will probably rank as one of Sir Alexander's best works, and the slow movement in particular deserves to live. Miss Myra Hess played it with admirable taste and refinement, though possibly the Finale was rather too suave, and might have had a little more rugged Highland energy. As an encore, Miss Hess gave a delightful little piece delightfully. Some of the audience repented that they had been pleased with it when they discovered that it was by Richard Strauss. Next, the Philharmonic Choir took part in a very brilliant and picturesque performance of Delius' 'Appalachia,' which not a few critics consider his best work, because his tendency to vagueness had not fully developed when he wrote it, and is somewhat kept in check by the exigencies of the variation form. This last concert of the season ended brilliantly with Scriabin's 'Prometheus.' It has never been heard in London before with a choir of such a size. The effect of the close was greatly enhanced thereby.

Many musicians are beginning to ask themselves whether Scriabin's work really has enduring qualities. It is said that he comes rather at the end of a great series of orchestral magicians than at the beginning of a new school which will enlarge the bounds of music. This sort of thing has, as we all know, been said about every great composer in turn, and it is too early yet to form any definite judgment. There are many devout disciples of Scriabin who do not consider 'Prometheus' the equal of the 'Divine Poem' or of the 'Poem of Ecstasy.' Others, however, feel that the close, where the great chord of F sharp gradually overpowers the mass of strange harmonies in the orchestra and ends triumphantly, is his most impressive musical inspiration.

M. Sibelius has conducted more than once at Queen's Hall since our last issue. With his readings of his familiar works we need not concern ourselves here. At the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on

Photo by]

[Sidney J. Loeb

SIBELIUS

February 26 he conducted his third Symphony—for the sake of convenience it may be labelled the 'Birmingham Symphony'—which was produced at the Festival of 1912 and performed in London under Sir Henry Wood in March, 1920. This Symphony contains all the characteristics which mark the fifth Symphony in an even stronger measure. I dealt with it fully when Sir Henry Wood conducted it,* securing a performance more vigorous than that heard under the composer. Sibelius failed to convince us that the policy of leaving out what his admirers choose to call the 'superfluities' stands the test of practice. It is as if Shakespeare had written: 'Quality mercy not strained droppeth like dew Heaven.' It may be argued that the words left out are superfluous, and that the sense is clear without them; but we are entitled to ask ourselves whether the charm and beauty of the language do not go with them. After all, a piece of music is not a telegram.

One of the most interesting things with regard to Sibelius' visit has been the pæan of praise contributed to The Times by Prof. Granville Bantock. Prof. Bantock, with his opulently ornamented style and his genius for arabesque and decoration, is the very last musician from whom one would expect enthusiasm over the dry austerity of Sibelius. It is true that Mozart has been praised by composers who differ from him as widely as Tchaikovsky and Strauss, but the analogy does not hold, for what aroused their enthusiasm was the sheer beauty of Mozart's work. When all is said and done, one must admire the consistency of Sibelius in pursuing a course which he must know by now does not win universal sympathy. He has proved by the 'Valse Triste' and 'Finlandia' that easy rewards are within his grasp and it is not every composer who has the strength of character deliberately to resign them.

Busoni was the soloist at the concert in question and he played a Concerto of Mozart with amazing control and variety of tone-colour, which, however, left the impression that it was more a question of brain than of heart. He also played his own 'Indian Fantasia.'

The German papers have recently been telling us that Franz Schreker is the most original and the strongest personality that Central Europe has produced during the War. He is an Austrian of over forty years of age, and has come to the front only recently. His latest opera, 'Der Gezeichnete' ('The Branded Man') has been a conspicuous success. I was therefore with some interest that one looked forward to hearing his 'Prelude to a Drama' performed under Sir Henry Wood at a Queen's Hall concert on March 12. It may have been due to the fact that it was not played until a quarter to five, but it proved very disappointing. There is no doubt that Schreker is a clever workman with large masses of sound. He uses Straussian and Wagnerian materials with ease, but there seems to be very little in the music which is not directly inspired by one or other of these two. He has not succeeded in combining them into something of his own.

The only concert of the London Symphony Orchestra to be mentioned here took place on March 14. The programme began with the Symphonic Poem of Laurance Collingwood, which was first heard about a year ago at a Patron's Fund Rehearsal.* I then praised the resourcefulness shown by the composer, and the impression was enhanced at this second performance. Mr. Collingwood has no programme, but the work bears internal evidence of being inspired by a strongly dramatic story suggesting violent emotions. He has studied for some time under Scriabin, and the teacher's influence is easily traceable, but the Anglo-Saxon in Mr. Collingwood acts as an antidote to Slavonic neuroticism. We are justified in expecting something good to come out of the fusion of the two, especially as Mr. Collingwood is still young.

The Symphony was Tchaikovsky's No. 5, of which there was a remarkable performance. One may be excused for guessing that here we had another * Musical Times, vol. 61, page 314, column 1.

* See Musical Times, vol. 61, page 248, where, by an oversight the composer's name is printed as 'H. Collingwood.'

tance of Mr. Coates' habit of over-rehearsing; favourite number, for the difference between the work of the orchestra in the Symphony and the of the programme was very striking. And it is difficult to explain the ragged accompanying of the Double Concerto on any other supposition. The soloists in that work were Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. Felix Salmond. They had originally announced Delius' Double Concerto, which I am sure nine-tenths of the audience would rather have heard, for the Double Concerto of Brahms is really loved only by the very straitest sect of Brahmins. The Beecham Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Herbert Coates gave a recital at Kingsway Hall on the evening of February 27 with a more or less familiar programme. Mr. Mostyn Thomas, the Welsh baritone, made a good impression. With this recital the series of Quinlan concerts has—for the time being, at any rate—come to a sudden close, which much to be regretted both for the sake of the orchestra and for Mr. Adrian C. Boult.

THE PATRON'S FUND.

There was a rehearsal of the Patron's Fund on February 17, at which we heard a pleasant Suite by Arnold Rawlinson describing his impressions of the Essex Hills, and an exceedingly cheerful orchestral piece by Howard Bliss, in which he succeeded in proving, whether intentionally or not, that jazz need not be vulgar. In another rehearsal, on March 8, the most interesting of the pieces played was the 'Northern Folk Suite' by Captain Van Someren Giffery, who has studied under Mr. Bell in South Africa. The 'Little Domestic Suite' by Mr. Lebach had sufficient qualities to show that his music should be borne in mind for future reference.

THE SINGERS

Of the vocal recitals which have taken place since our last issue, the most interesting was that given on March 9 by Miss Ethel Frank. Her father occupies an important post in connection with the Boston Conservatoire, and she has studied mainly in Europe. She is one of the most finished singers who have come from across the Atlantic, besides which her singing shows fine musicianship and fastidious taste. Her vocal technique is exceptionally strong, but the actual quality of her voice, though good, is not such as to make a universal appeal. Possibly her nervousness affected her somewhat, but there can be no doubt that a singer who can be equally effective in 'Regnava nel Silenzio' and Ravel's 'Asie,' is an artist to be reckoned with. Ravel's 'Asie,' which is one of the group of 'Scheherazade' songs, is a fascinating study in Oriental orchestral colour, and the voice part, which must be one of the most difficult ever written, is really subsidiary. Miss Frank began with 'Lusinghe più care' of Handel, and 'My mother bids me bind my hair,' the last of which, nine-tenths of the audience had by this time probably forgotten. In both these Miss Frank seemed to be not quite at ease with the orchestra, under Mr. Coates, but the orchestral part of 'Asie' was superbly played, except that it was now and again too loud, which was probably the composer's fault. Delages' 'Le Sapin Isolé,' Miss Frank's bouche fermée effects were remarkably clever.

The orchestral part of this concert was unusually interesting. We heard for the first time Mr. Gerrard Williams' orchestral arrangement of his own pianoforte pieces, 'Pot-pourri.' They are very small pieces, each illustrating a flower, with an epilogue which represents the dreams with which the 'Pot-pourri' inspires an old lady. Mr. Williams writes with great charm, and has an unusual talent for dainty orchestral effects. It is no small achievement to be able to produce so many pieces each with an atmosphere of its own. The orchestra also played a Suite from 'The Good-Humoured Ladies,' arranged by Tomasini. This was the first time that Scarlatti's music had appeared in this guise in a London concert-hall. Here it seemed that Mr. Coates was led astray by his desire to make everything that he tackles sound big, whereas in the 'Pot-pourri' he had resisted the temptation satisfactorily. Possibly he argued to himself that the music was not originally intended by Scarlatti as ballet music, therefore there was no logical reason why it should all be light and airy. He made a great hit with the 'Cortège des Noces' from 'Le Coq d'Or.' But why not 'Wedding Procession'? London is not Paris, and Rimsky-Korsakoff was not a Frenchman.

There has been great activity among the singers, but comparatively few striking new songs have been heard. At the first public performance the Bax arrangements of French Folk-Songs which Mrs. Anne Thursfield had introduced at a meeting of the Music Club again made a great impression. Last month I recorded that Mr. Plunket Greene had sung five hundred songs in his London recitals. This month it has to be chronicled that M. Rosing gave his hundredth recital, which took place at the Albert Hall on March 6. It is a remarkable record considering the comparatively short time he has been in England. There is nothing new that can be said about Dame Clara Butt's last concert at the Albert Hall on February 19, at which a pleasing young soprano, Miss Vivian Roberts, made her first appearance. Mr. Bertram Binyon had an interesting concert, and sang with the most refined art, and another artistic singer whose return to England is welcome is Madame Munthe Kaas.

MANY PIANISTS

It is impossible within the limits of space to do justice to all the good pianoforte recitals we have heard. M. Pouishnov has given a series of recitals, and has shown us that in addition to the qualities which were praised last month he possesses apparently boundless versatility. His playing of Liszt is not only remarkably brilliant, but he also refrains from making his performance a mere exhibition of virtuosity. His interpretation of modern Russian music has the right kind of flexibility and sensitiveness.

It is difficult to form an opinion of a new player from a Chopin recital, for obvious reasons. There is no music which is so over-familiar to the critic. By his playing of Chopin (on February 22), however, M. Brailowsky, one of the latest pupils of Leschetitzky, showed that he too is a pianist very decidedly to be considered. He played with imagination, and with avoidance of the over-sentimentality which has become so fashionable among pianists. Miss Olga Carmine is a young pianist trained in England. The distinguishing quality of her art is a sane, healthy outlook on music, combined with cultured taste. Her playing of modern French music was particularly good. Another English pianist with many artistic qualities is Mr. Norman Wilks, and Miss Irene Scharrer's performance delighted a large audience.

Both gave Chopin recitals. Mr. Charles Copeland, the American pianist, has also returned, and the fine rhythmic sensibility he showed in his playing of Spanish dance-music was notable. His arrangement of Debussy's 'Après-midi d'un Faune' did not win universal approval. On the other hand, Mr. Leonard Borwick's paraphrase of the same piece has been generally praised, even by some who have conscientious objections to arrangements. Mr. Borwick's series of recitals has been among the most pleasing artistic events of the season. His Schumann playing has been, as always, most completely satisfying, and with the progress of time his artistic outlook has broadened. Last, but not least, there have been two Busoni recitals. Among the things best worth remembering was his playing of his own 'Toccata' and his Fantasia 'Super Carmen.' His command of varieties of tone-colour has now become more extraordinary than ever. His attempt to revive public interest in a Sonata of Weber did not apparently achieve its object, partly because he seemed to be striving too self-consciously to put into the music more than is really there.

CHAMBER MUSIC, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

In the realm of chamber music the most important happening has been the series of concerts by the Chamber Music Players. There is no better combination now before the public in this country, probably not in Europe; and it is good to know that their excellence has been recognised by the public. They have so far not produced any absolute novelty, but have played some unfamiliar things. The sonata recital of Mr. Sammons and Mr. Murdoch on March 12 was also full of musical interest. At his recital on March 3, Mr. Hubermann played with mature artistry. He introduced two new pieces, one by Tansman, and another by Le Borne, both of which proved worth listening to. On February 24, at her first appearance, Miss Jenny Blank, a young pupil of Madame Adila Fachiri (d'Aranyi), gave evidence of so much talent that the date of her début at the age of fifteen should be recorded.

NOTES FOR APRIL

On Monday, April 4, the London Symphony Orchestra and the Philharmonic Choir perform Bach's B minor Mass, and the soloists are Mesdames Elsa Stralia and Astra Desmond, Messrs. John Coates and Norman Allin. On April 18 they give a Bach, Beethoven, Brahms Concert. On April 16 Sir Henry Wood conducts a concert at Queen's Hall of the New Queen's Hall Orchestra, of which the programme contains Dorothy Howell's 'Lamia,' and at which Mr. Lamond plays Liszt's E flat Concerto and 'Totentanz.' At the concert on April 30 the principal item is Bantock's 'Hebridean Symphony,' conducted by the composer. Miss Myra Hess plays Schumann's Concerto in A minor, and Dr. Ethel Smyth conducts the 'Love Duet' from 'The Wreckers,' in which the soloists are Miss Rosina Buckman and Mr. John Coates. On April 5 the Westminster Choral Society produces Roger Quilter's three new Choral Ballads, and the programme also includes the once popular 'The Swan and the Skylark' of Goring Thomas. At its last concert of the season (April 23) the Royal Choral Society performs 'Hiawatha,' the soloists being Miss Carrie Tubbs, Mr. John Coates, and Captain Herbert Heyner. During this month the London Chamber Concert Society begins its season of five concerts which take place on Tuesday April 5, 12, 19, 26, and May 3, at Wigmore Hall. The Sévick Quartet makes its first appearance since 1913, and plays at three of the concerts; the Philharmonic Quartet appears at the remaining two. The programmes include Holbrooke's 'Pickwick' String Quartet, Dr. Ethel Smyth's songs with orchestral accompaniments, the seldom heard Grieg Quartet, Cyril Jenkins' String Quartet, Arnold Bax' String Quartet, and Beethoven's Serenade. The soloists include Miss Harriet Cohen, Miss Margaret Tilly, Baron Frederic d'Erlanger, Mr. Howard-Jones and Mr. Ivan Philippowsky; Miss Gertrude Blomfield, Miss Olga Haley, Mrs. Anne Thursfield, and Miss Gwendolen Mason.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

All that there has been of opera during the month has belonged to lighter representations of the form. It is satisfactory to find that there is a desire to re-establish representation of British effort in opera that comes within the category of light. Mr. Montague Phillips is the first to enter the field and it is to be hoped that his example will be freely followed. He comes, with Mr. A. M. Thompson as esquire, bearing a shield emblazoned with the words 'The Rebel Maid.' This is the title of the piece styled very explicitly 'romantic light opera' which was produced at the Empire Theatre on March 12. There is a clean and effective story of the days of the landing of William of Orange built on a few gleanings from the path of history. The hero and heroine are at cross-purposes so far as their love affairs are concerned owing to their allegiance to the Dutchman. They do a little signalling on their own account, but it all comes right in the end.

Mr. Phillips has written a quantity of music that is appropriately light in style and transparent in texture. He does not reveal himself as a great melodist, nor is his handling of the tuneful brush as firm as the form demands. But his work is musician-like and perfectly honest in its intention. He has capable exponents in Miss Clara Butterworth, Mr. Thorpe Bates, Mr. Hayden Coffin, Mr. Leslie Carter, Mr. W. Cromwell, Mr. Walter Passmore, Miss Betty Chester, and Miss Ada Blanche. There is some delightful scenery that well exemplifies British ability in that direction; the costumes are most attractive, and the whole is a sane and straightforward entertainment that makes a good beginning to what we all hope will be a new era in British light opera.

Choral Notes and News

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

At its concert on March 5 the Royal Choral Society produced a new work by Sir Charles Stanford, 'At the Abbey Gate,' which is a setting of some verses of Mr. Justice Darling which appeared originally in The Times on the day of the burial of the Unknown Warrior. It represents a dialogue between the souls of the Unknown Dead and the nation represented by the congregation at the Abbey. The words are simple and dignified, and simple dignity is also the key-note of the music. The composer might, however, have been less studiously simple without sacrificing the dignity necessary in dealing with so great a subject. The most impressive part of the whole is the Funeral March with which the composition opens. At a first hearing, however, it seemed too lengthy in proportion to what follows. Plunket Greene sang the music allotted to the solo with extraordinary dramatic intensity, a quality which the singing of the choir was unfortunately deficient. As the composer conducted, however, it may be presumed that his intentions were carried out. The rest of the afternoon was devoted to a performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which was so lacking in imagination and colour. The soloists were Miss Olga Haley, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow, all of whom sang with fine and emotional feeling. The programme bore the superlative 'In Memoriam Gervase Elwes,' who had originally been announced to sing the name part.

A. K.

ANSTON (near Sheffield).—Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was given at the Anston Musical Society's eleventh concert on March 5, Mr. Edwin Presswood conducting. The vocal numbers were of interesting diverse periods and styles, including Benet's madrigal 'Come, shepherds, follow me,' a shop's 'Now tramp o'er moss and fell,' and Eaton's 'Moonlight.' Miss G. Parker-Machon sang songs by Granville Bantock and Rimsky-Korsakov.

BIGGLESWADE.—'The Messiah' was performed at St. Andrew's Church on February 24 by the Biggleswade Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Lewis. General satisfaction was expressed with the work of the choir, and the soloists, Miss Elsie Trussell, Miss Ruth Cooke, Mr. G. H. Thomas, and Mr. F. Aireton.

CROYDON.—'Blest Pair of Sirens' and 'Merrie England' provided the Croydon Philharmonic Society with ample opportunity for showing its worth at its last concert. The choir sang with spirit under Mr. Alan J. Kirby, and the Croydon Symphony Orchestra was heard separately under Mr. W. H. Reed.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The performance of 'A Tale of Old Japan,' given by the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society under Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, was one of the best evenings of choral singing in the Society's excellent record. The tone was agreeable, and the expression notably plastic and responsive. Mr. Joseph Farrington was the most impressive of four capable soloists. The same programme included the 'Hänsel and Gretel' Overture, and other orchestral pieces.

DUNEDIN (NEW ZEALAND).—The Choral Society gave concerts on December 14 and 15 under the direction of Mr. Sydney Wolf. The programme included 'Hear my prayer,' part-songs by V. Galway, Pinsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls,' and the orchestra played Coleridge-Taylor's 'Othello' suite and W. H. Reed's suite 'Venitienne.' Arrangements are being made for a festival in 1922 to commemorate the Society's jubilee.

EWELL.—The programme of the concert given by the Ewell Choral Society on February 14 included G. B. Allen's 'I love my love in the morning,' Dunhill's 'The Meeting of the Waters,' German's 'The Chase,' Stewart's 'The Bells of St. Michael's Tower,' and Pinsuti's 'Good-night, beloved.' Mr. A. E. Davies conducted.

GRANTHAM.—On March 10 the Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin,' Goring Thomas' 'The Sun-Worshippers,' and the 'Unfinished' Symphony. The orchestra was largely augmented for the occasion, as the choir was larger in numbers than usual. The soloists were Miss Doris Vane, Mr. Barrington Hooper, and Mr. Harold Williams. Mr. Edward Brown conducted, and a high standard was achieved.

LLANDUDNO.—On February 17 the Llandudno Autumn Choral Society gave a performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' at the Pier Pavilion. The principals were Madame Annie Goodwin, Madame Annie Owen, Mr. Evan Lewis, and Mr. Joseph Griffin. The work was sung to the Latin words, and accompanied by the Pier Pavilion Orchestra. Dr. Caradog Roberts conducted.

PERTH.—The Choral Society gave an excellent account of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Fletcher's 'Meister-singer' selection in the City Hall on March 2. The soloists of the concert were Miss Florence Mellors, Mr. Frederick Blamey, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Stephen Richardson conducted.

CANON PEMBERTON

By J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND

The death of Canon Pemberton, which took place on January 31 at Trumpington Hall, Cambridge, not only leaves a gap in the life of the University, but is a serious loss to music, since his far-reaching influence was exerted up to the end of his long life, and on his eighty-eighth birthday in December last, his interest in the art he loved was as keen as it had ever been.

Thomas Percy Hudson was born at York, December 16, 1832, and was the son of William Hudson, Registrar of the Northern Province. He was educated at St. Peter's School, York, and, gaining an exhibition, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1851. In 1855 he was bracketed sixth wrangler, and was placed in the third class of the Classical Tripos. A Fellowship and Tutorship of his College followed, and in 1870 he accepted the College living of Gilling East, York, which he held for thirty years. For a great part of this time he was Rural Dean of Helmsley, and he had been a Canon and Prebendary of York from 1879.

From a portrait by Sir William Llewellyn, R.A.

CANON PEMBERTON

In 1870 he married Patience F. S. Campbell, only daughter of W. H. Campbell, Captain 20th Foot, and Mrs. Pemberton, of Trumpington. On his wife's succession to the estate in 1900, the well-known surname was changed to Pemberton, and he returned to the neighbourhood of Cambridge, and was again part of the social life of the University. His membership of the Cambridge University Musical Society covered a period of sixty-eight years, and he was its President from 1905 to 1920.

His musical career, the most important side of his useful life, was a triumphant example of what may be accomplished by an amateur, and many hundreds of professional musicians must bless the day when they made his acquaintance. Throughout his life he lived in musical surroundings. His brother, Frank, was a violinist of rare attainment, and his three sisters were accomplished in various branches of music. He himself at first, as well as singing, played the violin and viola; but from about his twenty-seventh year he devoted himself to the violoncello, and became a first-rate artist, studying under Grützmacher at Dresden. The time of his training, and periods of study at Munich and elsewhere, brought him distinction as an interpreter of classical music, and in the department of ensemble playing he was extremely skilled. For many years he was a worthy colleague of his intimate friends, Joachim and Ludwig Straus, at their frequent performances at Cambridge, and an even greater opportunity for serving his art came to him in 1887, when, with the co-operation of Sir William Worsley—who lent the riding-school of Hovingham Hall for the performances—he founded the Hovingham Festival. At the twelve Festivals held at various intervals until his departure from Yorkshire, many of the greatest artists of the time took part in the works which he conducted. Of hardly less artistic importance was his tenure of the conductorship of the York Musical Society, 1896-1900.

The record of the work done at the Hovingham Festivals, the music performed, and the artists taking part, is here summarised:

(1.) 1887. 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah,' Stanford's 'Revenge,' and a miscellaneous concert in which Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was included.

(2.) 1888. 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' the 'May Queen,' and 'Judas Maccabæus.' (It is noteworthy that Parry's work, like Stanford's the year before, was given within a year of its first performance.) E. W. Naylor's 'Weird Lady,' a ballad for choir and orchestra (first performance). Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies made the first of many appearances at Hovingham.

(3.) 1890. Parry's 'Judith,' with Miss Anna Williams and Miss Marian McKenzie, and 'Elijah,' Miss Alexandra Thomson's 'Battle of the Baltic' (first performance).

(4.) 1891. 'St. Paul,' 'Samson' (abbreviated), and 'By the Waters of Babylon' (Part I of Stanford's 'Three Holy Children'), conducted by the composer.

(5.) 1893. 'The Golden Legend,' Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' and Alan Gray's 'Rock Buoy Bell' (first performance, conducted by the composer). Andrew Black and Leonard Borwick were among the soloists.

(6.) 1894. 'The Spectre's Bride' and Parry's 'St. Cecilia' Ode. Miss Esther Palliser sang.

(7.) 1896. Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and 'St. Paul,' and two new works, conducted by their composers, were brought forward: Somervell's 'Elegy' and Alan Gray's 'Vision of Belshazzar.' Madame Clara Samuelli and Miss Nora Clench made their first appearances at Hovingham.

(8.) 1898. Brahms' 'Requiem' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' The soloists included Miss Agnes Nicholls and Messrs. Plunket Greene, Francis Harford, J. Kruse, Henry Bird, and Leonard Borwick. Joachim played the Beethoven Concerto.

(9.) 1899. Stanford's 'Te Deum,' conducted by the composer; the 'Song of Destiny'; Charles Wood's song, 'Ethiopia saluting the Colours,' was sung for the first time with orchestral accompaniment; and Mrs. Tom Taylor's setting for chorus and orchestra of Keats' poem, 'A Prophecy.' A selection from 'The Flying Dutchman' was also given.

(10.) 1900. The 'Song of Destiny,' Beethoven's Mass in C, and Goring Thomas' posthumous 'Swan and Skylark.' Joachim was again a performer, and took part in a remarkable revival of Bach's Concerto for violin, flute, oboe, and trumpet. Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Gregory Hast were added to the soloists.

(11.) 1902. Parry's 'Judith,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls in the title-part, and Charles Wood's 'Song of the Tempest.' Beethoven's Violin Concerto was played by Joachim, who also conducted his own March in C. A 'Coronation March' by Alan Gray was conducted by the composer. Bach's Concerto for clavier, flute, and violin was played by Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Eli Hudson, and Joachim. Bach's 'God's time is the best' and Stanford's 'Last Post' were also performed.

(12.) 1903. Verdi's 'Requiem' and S. S. Wesley's 'The Wilderness.'

(13.) 1906. In consequence of Canon Pemberton's departure from Yorkshire, the Hovingham Festival lapsed for three years, and when it was resumed the conductorship was taken by Mr. T. Tertius Noble. Canon Pemberton conducted the 'Eroica' March, in memory of John Rutson, one of the most generous patrons of the Festival, and also directed part of Haydn's 'Seasons.' The other works were Elgar's 'Black Knight,' Dvorák's 'Te Deum,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Kubla Khan' (conducted by the composer), and Stanford's Serenade, Op. 95. The soloists included the Kruse Quartet, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Mr. Gervase Elwes.

After this the Hovingham Festival, which had done such good work for twenty years, ceased to exist.

As he had enjoyed the friendship of all the greatest musicians of his time, from S. S. Wesley T. A. Walmisley, and Sterndale Bennett, and the succession of University professors, down to such illustrious masters of his own instrument as Piatti and Hausmann, the counsel which he was always ready to give to young aspirants had the fullest authority. There never was a man more absolutely free from conceit or the habit of self-glorification, so that his advice and example were eagerly followed, and the extent of his artistic usefulness cannot be estimated. His age, and his complete adherence to the classical tradition, made it impossible for him to form a very favourable opinion of the newest developments of music; but with this exception, all that was good in every branch of the art appealed to him strongly, and his eagerness in regard to new works or performers was just as great at the end of his life as it had been in his earlier days, although he never quite recovered his old vivacity and energy after the death of his only son in the early days of the war.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Pianist (male) wishes to meet others, for study of chamber music. Romford or Ilford district preferred.—A. H. MENDHAM, 68, Mildmay Road, Romford, N. I.

Pianist wishes to join violinist and 'cellist for enjoyment of Trios, classical and modern.—'AUTHOR,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced pianist would be pleased to hear from good violin, viola, and 'cello players who would be willing to join him for practice of chamber music.—W. MEACHAM HALEY, 39, Springfield Gardens, Upper Clapton, E. 5.

Intermediate pianist-violinist (young lady) would like to accompany violinist (lady or gentleman); or, alternatively, is desirous of meeting pianist who would accompany her violin. Is willing to help violinist commencing pianoforte study, or to assist pianist beginning violin study. City of Nottingham.—'SNEINTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Cornetist (trained) desires to join good orchestra.—J. SYDNEY, 9, Birdhurst Road, S.W. 19.

Gentleman (Bristol) with numerous classical and modern original pianoforte duets and arrangements of orchestral scores, seeks gentleman pianist's assistance in same locality, evenings or week-ends. Facility at sight-reading essential.—'INSATIABLE,' c/o Musical Times.

Tenor wishes to arrange with pianist, trio, or quartet, for practice of chamber-music. Balham or Wimbledon districts.—'CLARINETIST,' c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet with good violinist and 'cellist for regular weekly practice of chamber music (classical and modern). Plymouth (central).—'AVILIO,' c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist would like to join trio (pianist and 'cellist), for study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury districts.—F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice.—L. B. B., 24, Acol Road, N.W. 6.

Gentleman, violinist, wishes to join trio, quartet, quintet, &c., or local orchestra at Croydon, or immediate neighbourhood. Good classical music only.—C. C. D., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to meet violonist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Good music only.—CLASSICAL, 5, Lulworth Road, Peckham, S.E. 15.

Violinist, with a few years' orchestral practice, would like to join trio, orchestra, or small concert party. North Kensington district.—A. M., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced violinist wishes to meet experienced pianist to enjoy good music, classical and modern.—M. S., 2, Mile End Road, E. 1.

A good amateur 'cellist wanted for chamber music (string quartets, &c.—W. A. MARSH, 35, Murchinson Road, Leyton, E. 10.

The Musician's Bookshelf

BY 'FESTE'

Hard on the heels of the numerous demonstrations—London and provincial—of Dalcroze Eurhythmics come two volumes by M. Jaques-Dalcroze, 'Rhythm, Music, and Education' (Chatto & Windus, 15s.), and 'Rhythmic Movement,' vol. i. (Novello, 6s.). The first is not only an exposition of the method, but also a history of its inception and growth, the opening chapters being reprints of articles written about twenty years ago, describing the author's early experiments and his uphill fight against conservatism. Inevitably some of this matter is redundant, for teachers as a body have moved a long way since M. Jaques-Dalcroze began his crusade. Not many of us, surely, still regard learning the pianoforte as synonymous with learning music. A percentage of fond parents perhaps hold to the quaint old belief. They should read Chapter III., 'The Young Lady of the Conservatoire and the Pianoforte,' a dialogue between an enlightened teacher and a papa still in darkness. Fortunately, it would be impossible for a damsel to study the pianoforte at any of our leading schools of music for twelve years, and at the end have nothing to show for it but the ability to play two or three stock show pieces. But a generation ago such an experience seems to have been not only possible, but fatally easy. By the way, a stray remark dates this chapter. Speaking of improvisation, the Teacher says to the Parent: 'But can she improvise? It's so useful, after finishing one piece, to be able to lead up to the next by a few modulations.' Is it? The most useful thing between a couple of pieces is a little bit of silence. A pianoforte recital in which the performer led us from one item to another by a series of modulations, would be an even greater inflection than a good many at which he doesn't. I remember hearing some twenty years ago an organist of the old school do this kind of thing. He gave us no rest from beginning to end, and of course we got the minimum of key contrast. He evidently thought such a plunge as (say) that from C major to F sharp minor would be offensive. No doubt our forefathers thought so too, and showed it by choosing closely-related keys for the various movements of a sonata. But to-day we welcome a violent change of key, and if a player starts providing extemporaneous buffers in order to let us down lightly, we shall feel inclined to throw things other than bouquets. Two excellent chapters are those on 'Music and the Child' and 'Music, Joy, and the School.' I wish space allowed of quotation and comment. But the whole book is one that calls for such exhaustive discussion that it would be useless to embark on a detailed review in an article which has somehow got to find room for mention of at least half a dozen books.

'Rhythmic Movement' is purely practical, having been written for the use of pupils taking courses in Eurhythmics at the Jaques-Dalcroze Institute or at schools where the system is taught. The author points out that 'only those who have personal experience of this special form of education can make use of the book,' chiefly because it deals only with the rhythmic side of the subject. The musical side, and the relationship between the two, are presumed to have been already studied. The book is very copiously illustrated by sketches, diagrams, and musical notation.

There has lately been a revival of interest in Grétry, so the publication of his 'Reflexions d'un Solitaire' is opportune. Grétry left this work in manuscript, having written it during his last years. It has now been published by the Belgian Government with introduction and notes by Lucien Solvay and Ernest Closson, and the first two volumes are to hand (G. van Oest & Co., Brussels and Paris). The original is in six MS. volumes, each containing about six hundred pages. Grétry was a vain man, and shows it nowhere more plainly than in his assumption of the rôle of Montaigne. He does not confine himself to musical subjects, but executes a roving commission, glancing lightly at art, religion, morals, philosophy, literature, &c., and giving us a queer mixture of shrewdness and platitude. It is to be hoped that an English version of the best of these chapters will be forthcoming. Literary musicians are not so common that we can afford to miss any of their writings—even the case of so unequal a writer as Grétry. It should be added that the edition under notice is beautifully printed, and is limited to four hundred and twenty-five copies.

The first two volumes of 'The Musician's Handbooks' published by Grant Richards have been received. In 'The Piano-Player and its Music' (6s.) Mr. Ernest Newman makes out a strong case for the instrument. He has no difficulty in disposing of the 'mechanical' bogey. After all, nothing can be more mechanical in effect than (say) a violin or pianoforte at the hands of a player who is a technician and nothing else. On the other hand, the so-called 'mechanical' piano-player can be so manipulated that the keenest of listeners, placed out of view of the performer, would find it difficult to determine whether the effect was produced by the player's fingers or by the roll. Two of the best points made by Mr. Newman are in the matters of transcription and of composition specially for the piano-player. On the former question he has an unanswerable case. By means of music-type examples he shows that roll-cutters have made a fatal mistake in going to pianoforte arrangements of organ and orchestral works instead of to the original scores. As a result, distortions that were inevitable in a transcription for two hands have been carried on to the piano-player, where no such limitations exist. It seems incredible that there should be musicians so conservative as to defend the procedure; but a recent newspaper correspondence has recently proved that there are. Here is a typical case. Liszt, in arranging for pianoforte solo Bach's G minor Organ Fugue, was compelled to omit some important fragments of the contrapuntal texture, because even the nimblest pair of hands could not entirely take the place of the hands and feet of the organist. One would have thought that the obvious procedure for the roll-cutter would be to collate the organ version with Liszt's arrangement, and produce from them a third version which should give us all Bach's notes, amplified in such a way as to supply as much as possible of the 16-ft. and 4-ft. effect of organ registration. So far this has not been done, with unfortunate results, as Mr. Newman shows. The piano-player will never come into its own until we give up thinking of it in terms of finger technique. That is why it is to be hoped that composers will begin to write directly for it. Judging from the newspaper correspondence mentioned above, it seems to be hastily assumed that the result will be mere noise. But, as Mr. Newman says, the most important results would be that thousands of new sonorities would be available through the use of wide spacings impossible to the fingers. Think, too, of the widespread polyphonic texture that could be employed, giving us effects that have been impossible on any keyed instrument, even with four hands. Mr. Newman's book is so full of commonsense and all-round interest that it should be read by musicians other than pianolists.

The second volume of this series is 'The Complete Organist,' by Harvey Grace (7s. 6d.). I understand that the author has some official connection with the Musical Times, so perhaps a review in these columns would be out of place. It must suffice, therefore, to give bare details. About one half of the volume is drawn from a series of articles that appeared in the Musical Times a few years ago under the title of 'The Compleat Organist.' The new chapters deal with such subjects as 'Choirmen,' 'Accompaniment,' 'Recitals,' 'The Organist's Position,' &c. There is an exhaustive bibliography, and a brief preface by Prof. P. C. Buck.

From this book, written by an organist, we turn to one with a parson as author, 'Church Music,' by the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones (Robert Scott, 3s. 6d.). Mr. Duncan-Jones very rightly puts the accent on the word 'Church.' After all, we demand of operatic music that it shall be unmistakably operatic—music with a sense of the theatre, we call it—so it is only reasonable that our church music should be as ecclesiastical in style as the building in which it is sung and the text to which it is set. 'Church music,' says Mr. Duncan-Jones, 'should not be sought in the Encyclopædia as a sub-heading of the article Music, but rather under the letter L, as a department of Liturgy, for that is its proper place.'

Having thus defined his attitude, Mr. Duncan-Jones maintains it consistently throughout a very readable book. On only one point do I feel disposed to part company with him. Speaking of the introduction of plainsong Communion services, he recommends that a start be made with the old Sarum Creed and the simplest Gloria in excelsis. This advice is dangerous. In plainsong, as in most other branches of music, appreciation of the extremely simple comes only after a fair amount of education. The uninitiated usually object to plainsong on the ground that it is crude, rough, and unmelodious. To begin by giving them a Creed and Gloria which consist of little more than inflections is to confirm them in their objection. Such tough fare can be appreciated in the most unlikely quarters, but only after the way has been prepared by some tuneful specimens, such as the Missa de Angelis or Missa Regia. Nor will an average choir or congregation be beaten by so fairly florid types. The best answer to people who say that plainsong is not melodious is surely to let them singing some the tunefulness of which is beyond dispute. Bating this one point, Mr. Duncan-Jones' book is thoroughly practical and commonsense, and it has the further merit of being written in a fresh and easy style.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

The success of such a series of records as H.M.V. 'Beggars' Opera' lot is a foregone conclusion. Eighteen numbers are recorded—three 12-in. d.s., each containing six. The results are excellent throughout. True, we do not hear all the words, as they are supplied in an eight-page brochure, but we are able to make ourselves acquainted with them, at which the text comes through well enough. The accompaniments to these capital old songs are a delight, scored as they are for a small orchestra that includes a harpsichord, viol da gamba, and violin d'amore. There is some excellent ensemble singing, including some rousing solo-and-chorus work in 'Every glass' and 'Let us take the road.' It might be thought that the records would appeal only to those who have been present at the opera. I thought of myself, and as I am one of the few who so far have been unable to get to the 'Lyric,' I put the discs with no great anticipations. But the jolly old tunes took hold of me as they have taken hold of other audiences for hundreds of nights. It should be added that the brochure above mentioned is embellished with some very fetching drawings of characters and scenes from the opera, and is so tasteful an affair that it is worth possessing for its own sake.

Of recent vocal records lately issued by H.M.V. I have space to mention only three. Eva d'Acqua's 'La Villanelle,' sung by Galli-Curci, with orchestral accompaniment, is a brilliant affair, in which all the honours do not go to the vocalist. The most effective passages are those in which the voice and flute are duettists. Galli-Curci is heard at her best, but let one bloom from our bouquets be thrown to the flautist—a real artist whose name might well have appeared on the label.

Caruso pours out his voice lavishly as ever in 'Granada'—in fact he pours out so much of it in a small room one instinctively looks round for shelter. This stirring record owes a good deal to the excellent orchestral part, in which some of the work is done by the castanets.

That fine baritone, Titto Ruffo, is heard to advantage in 'Nemico della patria?' ('Andrea Chénier'). The H.M.V. instrumental records are a varied lot. The popular Adagietto from 'L'Arlesienne' is played with delightful effect by Kreisler and string quartet (10-in.). Cortôt is brilliant in Chopin's 'Pavane' without quite making us forget that the record shows the composer a long way below his best. A pleasant old fiddle work in Tartini's G minor is excellently played by Madame Chémet, with Miss Marguerite Delcourt at the piano. On a 10-in., d.s., are recorded two 'Bridal' Folk-songs, arranged for violin and piano by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, and beautifully played by Miss Marjorie Hayward. 'The Island Lullaby' is a lovely melody. The Columbia record (12-in., d.s.) of Gervase Hughes singing Farrar's 'Brittany,' and the capital record of Hook, 'Listen to the voice of Love,' are excellent in itself, will be doubly prized as 'the sound of a voice that is still.'

From the same firm comes a fine record of the 'Foreboding Song' from 'Carmen,' sung by Riccardo Zucchi, and a Columbia 10-in., d.s., gives us the London String Quartet, in the first two movements of Mozart's Quartet in D minor. The second movement is more successful of the two, owing to some of the soft passages in the first being too soft. The playing throughout is notable for delicacy and finish. Some capital string records come from the Aeolian Company. Sammons plays brilliantly in a couple of pieces by Kreisler, 'Tambourin Chinois' and 'Caprice Viennois' (12-in., d.s.). The same player joins Frank St. Leger in the first movement of Grieg's C minor Sonata for violin and piano, fine bit of playing, with the instruments well-balanced.

Save when treated as a purely melodic instrument, the violoncello offers a problem which composers frequently fail to solve. Here for example is a record of the slow movement of Rachmaninoff's Sonata in flat for violoncello and piano, played by Felix Lomond and Frank St. Leger. The violoncello part as a whole lies rather low, and the piano part consists largely of big chords rather high on the keyboard. The result is that the violoncello part comes badly off, and the expressive movement suffers from this displacement of the centre of interest.

Mr. Frederick Ranalow's singing of a couple of 'Folk-songs,' 'Bingo' and 'Admiral's Bow,' arranged by Cecil Sharp, is recorded on a 10-in., d.s. E.V. 'Bingo' is particularly jolly.

E. B. & T. E. G.—I have not heard the records you mention, but will look out for them. If they lead me to modify my opinion as to the reproduction of brass tone, so much the better.

URTON.—(1) For obvious reasons I cannot use this list for the recommending of any particular 'make' of gramophone. (2) I believe there are very few records of vocal music of the type you mention. I will make inquiries.

The MS. score of J. L. Hatton's opera 'The Queen of the Thames,' has been presented to the Liverpool Public Library by Mr. G. L. Hatton, the composer's grandson. L. Hatton was a native of Liverpool.

Church and Organ Music.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The following letter has been sent to the members:

The Royal College of Organists,
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

DEAR SIR (or MADAM)—Owing to the increased cost of musical periodicals the Council find it financially impossible to supply the Members with a weekly musical paper as heretofore. After much consideration they have decided to substitute the Musical Times for the Musical News and Herald. The Council hope the Members will not be inconvenienced by this new arrangement, which will come into operation on April 1 and continue until further notice.—Yours obediently,

H. A. HARDING,
Hon. Secretary.

SIR WALTER PARRATT

At the meeting of the R.C.O. Council on March 12, the following resolution was proposed by Sir Frederick Bridge, seconded by Dr. W. G. Alcock, and carried unanimously:

That the hon. secretary be requested to convey the hearty congratulations of the Council to Sir Walter Parratt on the honour recently conferred upon him by His Majesty The King, and to express their pleasure that he is still able to render such valuable service to the art he has so long adorned.

RHYTHM IN HYMN-TUNES

BY C. F. ABDEY WILLIAMS

Old customs die hard. Naturally, for man is instinctively conservative. We have lately discovered flourishing in country districts an interesting survival of the idea that in hymn-tunes the printed notation is sacred and inviolable: that it is to be adhered to with metronomic precision at all costs; that if the choir and congregation find it difficult to cope (for example) with Long Measure tunes, so much the worse for choir and congregation. The tune is all right, for it is printed so. Each musical phrase ends with a minim; no pause or rest is printed; therefore, with breathless haste, we must proceed to the next phrase. Only at the end of a verse may we pause and recover something of our breath; but the pace having been once set, it is sometimes a little difficult to check it even here.

So the choir is trained to sing the Long Measure tune without a break, getting its breath as best it can, and the congregation, whose æsthetic sense rebels, pants after choir and organ, like a dog chained to a gig behind a fast-trotting horse; but, more fortunate than the dog, it can retire from the contest when it will.

Musical rhythm certainly consists, as some define it, in an orderly array of equal time-divisions. On the whole this definition is as good as any other. But there is a thing called human nature which is always upsetting our theoretical calculations; and human nature, while it accepts a well-regulated arrangement of time-divisions, rejects, both on physical and æsthetic grounds, an unbroken succession of thirty-two equal notes. In the first place, such a succession has no breathing places; in the second, the mind has no resting places. This necessity for the mind can be shown in other than musical matters. For instance, let anyone place thirty-two pins in a row at a small but equal space from one another, and let him retire to a little distance and count them with the eye alone. He will find that the eye requires 'resting-places for the mind' in order to carry out even so simple an operation as this.

No doubt it will be said that the harmonic construction of such a tune affords 'resting-places for the mind' in its closes. But this is not enough. To satisfy human nature there must be some kind of break in so long a succession of equal sounds, apart from the physical necessity for providing breathing-places.

When did this tendency to observe the letter of the print to the detriment of the spirit of the music arise? It must have been comparatively recently, we think. We are all acquainted with 'traditional' alterations of the written notes in Handel's music. Some of us can remember old organists who still carried on the 'tradition' of inserting unwritten ornaments in the compositions of Handel and Bach. Did the hymn-tune compilers of the middle of the 19th century trust to a traditional rendering of Long Measure and similar hymns? We are not familiar with earlier collections, and know not whether the pause sign was ever used. Did the editors of, say, 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' consider that, since printed fermate were unnecessary in the majority of cases, they need not appear at all, for the musical sense or traditional training of the choir-master would teach him what to do? Has the more general spread of musical education resulted in a worship of the deadly letter of the notation?

Human nature rebels against what is mechanical and 'strictly according to theory,' whether in art or politics. There must be give and take. The give and take in the Long Measure tune, with its thirty-two theoretically equal notes, consists in a slight pause on the last note of each phrase. A congregation, if left to itself, will do this instinctively. It was done in the hymns of the ancient Greeks, as sung in their temples, at least three hundred years before the Christian era. They called this very slight pause chronos alogos (unproportioned time). Church musical writers of the 13th and succeeding centuries of our era require the last note of a phrase to be slightly dwelt on, calling this unwritten nuance the mora ultimæ vocis (delay of the last note). This was in Plainsong, with its free rhythm. The Mensural writer de Garlandia alludes to a pausatio (rest), called the suspiratio (breathing place). It may or may not be marked by a vertical line across the stave. Other writers mark the suspiratio by two vertical lines across the stave: these, in course of time, became the double bar as used for breathing spaces in our modern hymn-tune.

The singing of hymns in the vulgar tongues of the several northern nations that accepted the Reformation seems to have commenced with what is now known as the 'chorale.' It was introduced into the churches by Luther and his musical friend Walthers, and its popularity soon caused it to spread rapidly through the other reformed churches. Now the German is nothing if not thorough. He takes nothing for granted, even the artistic powers of organists. Hence he has from the beginning invariably printed the fermata sign over the last note of every phrase in every chorale. Bach even retains this sign in his organ arrangements, chorales, though he makes it impossible to observe it. This seems a hint that the great Bach himself was no worshipper of the printed text to the detriment of the musical spirit. It is possible the English editors were fearful lest fermata signs should be overdone and become a nuisance; they undoubtedly considerably lengthen the Lutheran service. Ar some of our organists, looking to the text, the who text, and nothing but the text, ride roughshod over æsthetic considerations, in spite of the shoals of books and articles and lectures that are constant being published dealing with the proper rendering of Church music.

When the type of organist we have in mind sees a printed fermata he is puzzled as to its exact 'value' in terms of the notes that are being sung. We have heard it suggested that the choir should count so many beats on the pause, in order to 'come in' together when it is over. This astonishing method seems to be rather widespread. How surprised would an audience be at Queen's Hall if they saw Sir Henry Wood striking the empty air with his baton during the pauses in the second and fifth bars of Beethoven's fifth Symphony! Yet the orchestra has an infinitely more difficult entry here than a choir has in any conceivable hymn-tune.

Rhythm is a definite succession of easily understood 'times.' The pause is an interruption, for some special purpose, of the definite succession; it is an indefinite break in the 'times.' If 'so many beats' are allotted to the pause it loses its who character, becoming 'measured,' whereas it should be ultra mensuram (outside the measure), as the old writers express it. Probably the organist, having lost the keen edge of his natural rhythmical sense, acquiring the command of his very complicated non-rhythmical instrument, thinks that the choir or congregation cannot come in with him at the right moment after the pause. If, however, he will trust the pause as a means of expressing something that requires special expression; if he will trust his instinctive musical feeling apart from theory; and, most important of all, if he will trust the innate rhythmical sense of his choir and congregation, he will find them respond quickly enough, and, what more, he will be in artistic sympathy with them, of the most delightful of human experiences.

A new form of hymn-tune has arisen during, say, the last fifty years or so, which has a marching lilt. Here the organist can most effectively and properly indulge his desire to play the notes exactly as written that is to say, in strict time. We allude to such tunes as Sullivan's 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' Woodbury's 'For ever with the Lord,' Dykes' 'Ten thousand times ten thousand,' and a few others which may occur to the reader. The march-like rhythm of such tunes undoubtedly contributes very largely to their great popularity, for strongly-marked rhythm is always capable of arousing strong excitement. Tunes such as the above are in keeping with what is called the 'spirit of the age,' a spirit which is never absent, but merely manifests itself in various ways in various ages. Music naturally reflects the contemporary spirit of the age, as do the other arts. Strange to say, however, while in process of writing this paper we have heard an organist in one of our churches we may call the march-rhythm hymns, doing precisely what he will not allow in Common or Long Measure tunes. He slackened the time by making pauses at every final note, thus destroying the lilt on which the he depends for most of its effect. The result was performance sentimental and mawkish to a high degree, in which the congregation eagerly seized the opportunity for indulging in the semi-hysterical expression of religious emotion that one so often finds.

There seems no doubt that the organ, taken as the only instrument of study, with its impossibility of repair and its complicated mechanism, is somewhat calculated to rub the keenness off the edge of the natural rhythmic sense of the student, unless this is maintained by other means. Perhaps some day all young organists with any aspirations will see the advantage of learning some orchestral instrument sufficiently to take a place in the ranks of a decent orchestra, or will get opportunities for singing in choral works of high calibre. This would enlarge their outlook, not only on rhythmical, but other musical developments, and would make them far more useful musicians than the 'one-instrument' man, and would lay a solid foundation for the artistic training both of their church choir and of their possible choral society.

EXETER CHORISTERS' SCHOOL

We shall be doing a service to our readers if we remind them that in these days of inflated school fees the advantages offered by some of our Cathedral Choir Schools are worth consideration. We have just received, for example, an excellent report of the Choristers' School at Exeter, where the educational successes recently achieved prove that the charge frequently brought against choir schools, of subordinating the claims of general education to those of music, is in this case without foundation. The educational training provided at this school are evidently first-class, and yet, after the brief period of probation (which seldom exceeds three terms, and is frequently less) during which the fee is at the rate of £35 per annum, board and education cost no more than £15 a year! The school consists of sixteen choristers and four probationers. The latter succeed in vacant places in the choir if their progress (both in music and in class) and conduct are satisfactory, the order of promotion being determined by such progress. Examinations are usually held twice or thrice in the year, according to the number of vacancies, &c. Travelling expenses are allowed in the case of unsuccessful candidates. The principal is the Rev. R. W. B. Langhorne, one of the best-Vicars of the Cathedral, to whom all communications should be addressed.

EINSTER SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS AND CHOIRMASTERS

The February meeting of the above Society was held on Monday, February 7, by kind permission of the Governors, in the Organ Room of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. There was a large attendance of members, and a paper was read by Mr. C. L. Murray on 'Reminiscences of the late Sir R. P. St. John.' After the reading of the paper and a discussion, members of the Society were invited to give performances on the organ, and Mr. Weaving responded most happily by selecting Sir R. P. Stewart's Organ Fantasia, and performing it in brilliant style. In pursuance of the subject of organ trios, raised at a previous meeting, Mr. J. Verner played a movement from Bach's first Sonata, which exemplified how attractive trios may be made when rendered with a clear, crisp, and finished technique. Mr. Verner is ever ready with his Bach, and gave also, by request, a very fine performance of the Prelude and Fugue in A minor, in memory.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

At the recent Annual General Meeting of the London Society of Organists it was reported that there had been a large accession of members during the past year and that excellent work had been accomplished. To fill vacancies on the committee through retirements by rotation the following were elected: Dr. John E. Borland, Messrs. E. Stanley Roper, T. J. Crawford, Herbert Weatherby, and John E. West. Mr. E. T. Cook (Southwark Cathedral) succeeds Mr. S. H. Nicholson as president for 1921.

After presenting to the Parish Church of Ross-on-Wye a magnificent new organ that cost £2,600—as a thank-offering for the safe return of so many Ross men from the Great War—the donor, Mrs. H. Edith Purchas, a well-known Ross lady, passed away without ever having seen or heard the instrument. The deceased had suffered a long illness, and died on February 17, at the age of seventy-nine. The Parish Church of Ross-on-Wye thus loses one of its greatest benefactors, and certainly one of its keenest devotees to music. Some years ago Mrs. Purchas gave a large tract of land for the purpose of extending the churchyard, and her generous action saved the Parish several thousands of pounds. To organists her name will be especially worthy of remembrance by reason of the stipulation accompanying the offer of the new organ, viz., that the organist's salary be raised from £50 to £125 per annum. The organ was dedicated at the end of January, and exactly a month later its donor was laid to rest. The entire choir was in attendance at her funeral as a last affectionate tribute to one who had taken such a real interest in the church of which she was so fond. As a musician, Mrs. Purchas, in her younger days, was a capable singer, pianist, and composer. Chamber music interested her greatly. Bach was one of her favourite composers, and she had a strong taste for such modern writers as Debussy, Grovlez, B. J. Dale, York Bowen, &c. She kept two pianofortes in one room, and delighted in hearing duets written for two pianofortes. For many years Mrs. Purchas was an habituée of the Three Choirs Festival. This remarkably cultured lady was an excellent artist with brush and pencil. Literature and science also had an interest for her. Amongst her activities in the latter were horticulture, botany, geology, and meteorology. She had a fluent knowledge of Greek, French, and Latin.

F. J. P.

On March 12 the City Temple Choral Society performed Stainer's 'The Crucifixion' at the City Temple. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, and Mr. F. W. Holloway was at the organ. The soloists were Mr. Leonard Livesey and Mr. Edward Dykes. The Society will sing 'Judas Maccabæus' at the City Temple on Saturday, April 9, at 3 p.m., when the soloists will be Miss Bessie Lang, Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

The Summer School of Church Music will be held this year at Fishponds Training College, Bristol, from September 12 to 17. The lecturers will include Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Captain Francis Burgess, Messrs. Martin and Geoffrey Shaw, Mr. Hylton Stewart, the Rev. Maurice Bell, Mr. E. G. P. Wyatt, Mr. Harvey Grace, &c. Full accommodation at the College can be provided for not more than eighty, so early application should be made. The hon. secretary is the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones, St. Mary's Vicarage, Primrose Hill, N.W. 3.

A new organ, built by Messrs. Blackett & Howden, of Heaton, was dedicated at Leighton Primitive Methodist Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on March 7. The new instrument has two manuals and pedals, and twenty-five stops and couplers. Mr. James W. Preston gave the opening recital, his programme including John E. West's 'Song of Triumph,' Renzi's Toccata in E, Stuart Archer's Caprice de Concert, and Reubke's Fugue.

The second annual Festival of the London Baptist Association (Eastern group) Festival Choir took place at East Ham Central Hall on March 3. The choir, conducted by Mr. E. W. Harbott, sang excellently in 'Hallelujah' ('Mount of Olives'), Bridal Chorus ('St. John's Eve'), and Chambers' 'Bread of the world.' The soloists were Miss Margaret Balfour and Mr. David Ellis. Mr. F. J. Heckford and Mr. Arthur Scott accompanied.

Easter carols will be sung at Southwark Cathedral on April 2, at 3 p.m. No tickets required.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. J. Matthews, St. Stephen's, Guernsey—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'The Curfew,' Horsman; 'Finlandia'; Symphonic Poem, Matthews.
- Mr. William Algie, St. Columba's, Glasgow (two recitals)—Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Church, Nottingham—Concert Overture in C minor, Hollins; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Toccata, de la Tombelle; Fugue on B A C H, Schumann; Toccata in F, Widor.
- Mr. B. D. Hylton-Stewart, All Saints', Hertford—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach.
- Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Church of the Holy Communion, New York (four recitals)—Elegy, Noble; Two Versets, Dupré; Meditation, Harvey Grace; Symphony No. 4, Vierne; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Saint-Saëns; 'Les Heures Bourguignonnes,' Jacob; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Symphony No. 1, Fleuret; Petite Pastorale, Ravel.
- Mr. W. J. Comley, All Saints', Hertford—Toccata in F, Bach; Larghetto with Variations, S. S. Wesley; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'St. Cross,' Parry.
- Dr. Thomas Keighley, Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne—Prelude and Fugue in F, Bach; 'Pilgrim's Progress' (Part 6), Ernest Austin.
- Dr. H. G. Ley, Christ Church Cathedral (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Prelude 'Jesu, my only Joy,' Karg-Elert; Pastorale, Frank; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. C. H. Trevor, Christ Church Cathedral (two recitals)—Entrée Pontificale, Bossi; Dorian Toccata, Bach; Two Versets, Dupré; Epilogue, Healey Willan; Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge.
- Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury (two recitals)—'Finlandia'; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; 'A Song of Sunshine,' Hollins.
- Mr. A. E. Howell, Parish Church, Trowbridge—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Idyll, Alan Gray; Rhapsody No. 3, Howells.
- Mr. Fred Gostelow, St. Paul's, Luton—Fugue in D, Bach; Overture in C, Hollins; Barcarolle, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata, Reubke; Scherzo, Jongen; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Cantilène, Rheinberger.
- Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—First Rhapsody, Alec Rowley; Villanella, Ireland; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes, Vaughan Williams.
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (five recitals)—Pontifical March, Tombelle; Fugue, Alan Gray; Triumphal March, P. J. Mansfield.
- Mr. James M. Preston, Hexham Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fantasia on two English melodies, Guilmant; Pastorale, Claussmann.
- Mr. J. G. Bamborough, South Parade Wesleyan Church, Grimsby—Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant; Sonata da Camera, Peace; 'Finlandia.'
- Mr. Robert Head, Peterborough Cathedral—Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; Toccata, Wood; Prelude in D and Fugue in G minor, Bach.
- Mr. S. Maurice Popplestone, Boulevard Congregational Church, Weston - super - Mare—Symphony No. 1, Guilmant; Evening Song, Bairstow; Meditation-Elegie, Borowski; Toccata, Widor.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Claremont Central Mission, Pentonville—Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Grand Chœur in C, Hollins; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Beckenham Congregational Church—Toccata in F, Bach; Allegro Vivace (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley. St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia on 'Urbs Beata,' Faulkes; Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (three recitals)—Carillon, Vierne; Adagio and Final from 'New World' Symphony; Prelude in D minor, Mendelssohn; Rhapsody No. 2, Howells.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (five recitals)—'Now thank we all,' Karg-Elert; Concerto, Stanley; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Sonata in D flat, Rheinberger; Chromatic Prelude, Meale.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Adagio (Sonata No. 3), Bach; Agitato and Tem. variato, Rheinberger; Lament, Sowerbutts; Prelude of 'Melcombe,' Parry; Meditation and Final, Shippey; Barnes; Prelude on 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. H. S. Middleton, Truro Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in B minor and Pastoral Symphony, Bach; Fugue 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Choral No. 3, Frank.

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn (three recitals)—Toccata in F and Fugue in D, Bach; Sonata Nos. 1 and 6, Mendelssohn.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Maze Hill Congregational Church, Greenwich—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Toccata, Dubois; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme; Imperial March, Elgar.

Mr. Allan Brown, Wesleyan Church, Dartford—Symphony in E minor, Holloway; Aubade, Bernard Johnson; Fugue, Reubke; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Fantasia on 'Forty days and forty nights,' Wallace; Prelude 'O Lamb of God,' Bach; Chorale No. 2, Frank; Scherzo, Gigout; Prelude on 113th Psalm, C. Wood.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT

Mr. William H. Stocks, organist and choirmaster, S. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Newlands, Glasgow.

Letters to the Editor

THE LATE GERVASE ELWES

SIR,—I am desired by Sir Edward Elgar and the committee of the Gervase Elwes Memorial to ask you you would be so kind as to insert this notice in your next edition.—Yours, &c.,

6, Howley Place, W. 2.
Paddington 5588.

February 28, 1921.

H. ELWES, Hon. Sec.
(Mrs. Rudolph Elwes.)

GERVASE ELWES MEMORIAL

President: SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

Vice-Presidents:

His Eminence Cardinal Bourne.	Rt. Hon. & Most Rev. The
Field-Marshal Lord Grenfell,	Archbishop of York
G.C.B., &c.	The Earl of Plymouth, G.B.E., C.I.

COMMITTEE.

Chairman: W. H. Leslie, Esq.

Mrs. W. Arkwright.	Viscountess Northcliffe.
W. A. Atkin, Esq., M.D.	Roger Quilter, Esq.
Victor Beigel, Esq.	B. Lytton Richmond, Esq.
Walter Carlile, Esq.	Miss E. L. Robinson.
Hon. Norah Dawnay.	Hon. Mrs. Sandars.
Hon. Everard Feilding.	Mrs. Rudolph Elwes, Hon. Sec.
Baroness H. von Hügel.

It is proposed to raise a public memorial to Mr. Gervase Elwes, and a committee is being formed for that purpose. The precise form of the memorial must depend on the support obtained. But the general idea before the committee is that a man so eminent for generosity and self-effacement would be best commemorated by some scheme in the cause of music which has those characteristics. An appeal for support will be issued as soon as the general committee is constituted and a definite scheme decided upon.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

SIR,—I fancy in playing his 'Ein' fest Burg' Prelude Bach would nowadays couple the Tuba to the Choir organ (if it were not already there) and 'thumb' on the lower keyboard the tune in the last eight bars. This is wonderfully easy if one freely uses both thumbs.—Yours, &c.,

6, Roebuck Road,
Rochester, ALFRED H. ALLEN.

March 3, 1921.

THE SACKBUT, ETC.

SIR,—It is surprising to me to find 'Feste' suggesting that I think 'advanced' has, necessarily, any connection with his attempts to prove that he meant what he did not mean more laborious than convincing. A musician is said to be 'advanced' in the same way that a writer on ethics, politics, or psychology is similarly referred to—i.e., he is pursued by his researches or work further along certain lines than other people, either his predecessors or contemporaries. The word has this especial significance in that it is understood and accepted by most educated people—entirely distinct from the idea of supersession implicit in 'Feste's' use of the word in connection with Satie and Wagner. It is difficult to resist the conclusion that our contributor is juggling with the varying implications of the word.

'Feste' is surprised that anyone should be able to describe 'Totentanz' as a superlative masterpiece. There are many of us who are surprised that anyone with any critical acumen should be able to find anything in the 'Planets' but a salmagund of trivialities, current clichés, and bombast. The fact that this can gain the frantic approval of a Queen's all audience, signifies in itself nothing. An erotic contralto belching the moving strains of 'Homing' can achieve as much. The point about my counterblasting review is that one and all of them are critics of cultured taste and penetrating discrimination. Any one of them is worth a dozen newspaper reporters. I am unfortunately not at liberty to reveal the identity of the 'young British composer,' but his name is one of power in 'progressive' musical circles in England.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens,
Regent's Park, N.W. 1.

'Feste' writes: Having been familiar with the Sackbut from cover to cover since its appearance, I may claim to know rather better than Mr. Sorabji what I meant when calling it 'advanced.' Nobody knowing its attitude over the later Stravinsky works could regard it as 'advanced' in the sense of its being ultra-modern. In the March Sackbut, by-the-by, 'P. H.' says that I expressed surprise at the fact that 'a work unanimously applauded by the press in general ["The Planets"] should have seemed other than a masterpiece to the representative of the Sackbut.' On the contrary, I said I had no difficulty in realising that one may hear 'The Planets' and dislike it. What puzzled me was that an experienced musical critic should be able to describe Liszt's 'Totentanz' as 'a superlative masterpiece.' It still puzzles me. Mr. Sorabji's summary disposal of those who saw anything good in 'The Planets' is amusing. The three people who agree with him are 'critics of cultured taste and penetrating discrimination.' The others are waved aside as (1) a gang easily moved by a sloppy ballad, and (2) 'newspaper reporters.' This method has an advantage over argument in that it is easy and expeditious, but it may lead to embarrassment some day if, in one of his not infrequent disputes, Mr. Sorabji finds 'the newspaper reporters' on his side, and the 'counterblasting three' against him. Where then will be the 'cultured taste and penetrating discrimination'? I think I can guess.]

'TA-RA-RA-BOOM-DE-AY'

SIR,—Your correspondent Mr. Horwill, in referring the Trios to Beethoven's Clarinet Trio, presumably indicates that therein is to be found the tune of the verse of its once popular song. I have forgotten how the verses go, so cannot verify this, but neither he nor your amusing contributor 'Feste' seems to be aware that the vital part of the famous 'chorus' is found arrayed in gorgeous orchestral apparel as one of the principal themes of Wagner's Huldigungsmarsch.

'Surely there is Something, if we could but find out what it is! O unfathomable depths!' as Sir Owen Seaman makes Miss Marie Corelli say, for in South Africa, among the natives, I have heard this tune given with great gusto on the 'Kaffir piano' (a series of empty Lyle's golden-syrup tins nailed to a board), whereon, together with 'God save the King,' it represents 'Englishman's music' to the Kaffir and Hottentot.—Yours, &c.,

FELIX WHITE.

28, Hildrop Crescent, N.7,
March 7, 1921.

BLIND MUSICIANS AND THEIR WORK

SIR,—The National Institute for the Blind, in drawing attention to a unique edition published under its auspices, viz., the 'National Institute Edition of the Works of British Blind Composers,' desires to make it known that it exists solely and entirely for the benefit of the blind composer, and that the Institute itself derives no profit whatever—very much the reverse—from sales. None but serious works are eligible for its catalogue, no inducement being held out for anything cheap or second-rate. Every one of its contributors is a professional blind musician of known and genuine ability and training. The utmost pains have been taken by skilled experts to secure a faithful transcription from the composer's original 'Braille' copy into Staff notation. The National Institute believes that a worthy contribution to musical art will be the result, and its catalogue may be obtained on application to the Institute, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1. The one and only object of the Institute has been further to assist blind composers to secure that recognition which by their ability and indomitable courage they have assuredly won for themselves amongst the musicians of the land.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD WATSON

(Music Publications Adviser to the National Institute).

224-6-8, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.
February 15, 1921.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of April, 1861:

A PROFESSIONAL LADY wishes an engagement in a Catholic Church (in town) as principal Soprano. Can also take the entire management of the choir, organ included. M. A. P., 7, Wilton Terrace, Wilton Road, Pimlico, S.W.

A MATEUR SINGERS (Gentlemen) are required to form a Choir for a City Church, which is well attended. Apply to A. B., 5, North Place, Gray's Inn Road.

MISS J. J. CRUICKSHANK

(Member of the Bach Choir, under Professor W. Sterndale Bennett, Mus. Doc.), Teacher of the Pianoforte and Singing. Terms, Two Guineas per Quarter for two hours a week; One Guinea for one hour a week. Address, 4, Thurlow Place, Hackney Road, N.E.

NEWBURY.—A new organ, built by Messrs. Hughes & Co., of Albany Street, Regent's Park, for the Wesleyan Chapel at this place, was opened on March 17. The instrument is a small one, with a single manual, and a separate row of Bourdons for the pedals. Mr. Wheeler presided on the occasion. Much satisfaction was expressed by the congregation at the tone and finish of the organ.

STINCHCOMBE.—On Tuesday, the 5th ult., 'The Messiah' was performed here under the superintendence of Captain Prevost. The performers consisted of a number of the Captain's friends, together with the Stinchcombe and Risley Choirs. The performance took place in a barn, which was ornamented and converted into a concert-room for the occasion, and the audience were highly gratified with the treat provided for them. On the following evening a secular concert was got up under the same auspices, which was very successful.

WANTAGE.—A new organ, built by Mr. Allen, of Bristol, has been erected in the Old Parish Church of this town. It is a large instrument, and has thirty stops—that is to say, it will have thirty stops some day, but at present only twenty stops are in the case. The rest are delayed for additional funds. It is reported that the organ, as far as it goes, is a fine one.

SIXTY YEARS AGO—continued.

Now ready, the 35th thousand of

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN, for use in the Services of the Church; being the New Hymn-book that has been long in preparation by a Committee of Clergymen. Price, in cloth, 10d.; in limp roan, 1s. 6d.; or per dozen, from the publishers, 8d. and 1s. 2d.; or per 100 (in cloth), 6d. each, to clergymen only, on application to Rev. Sir Henry W. Baker, Bart., Monkland Vicarage, Leominster.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Rev. W. MEREDITH MORRIS, B.A., Vicar of Clydach Vale, Tonypandy, South Wales, on March 4, aged sixty-eight. This distinguished musical cleric was a fiddle enthusiast whose reputation was not confined to these countries. For close on forty years he had been investigating the history of violin-making in Great Britain and Ireland, and in 1904 published his book on 'British Violin Makers,' of which a second edition, enlarged and revised, was published last year. Of the latter work, it is the barest justice to say that it is the best book of its kind before the public, and must have entailed enormous research. All his spare time and most of his holidays for thirty-six years were given to the pursuit of his favourite hobby, and he had been known to travel two hundred miles to examine an old fiddle. 'If I have laid myself open to the charge of having written too enthusiastically about the fiddle,' he wrote in the Preface to his famous book, 'my apology is that I could not write coldly about a dear, blessed, little "creature" that has been of untold comfort to me.' He contracted a severe illness in the spring of last year, and though he rallied somewhat in the autumn, there was really no hope from the start. In private life he was a most lovable character, and his loss will be keenly felt.

BENJAMIN CARELLI, which took place at Naples on February 15, at the age of eighty-eight years. In him, Italy loses one of her most famous singing masters, famous not only for the host of Italian singers who have passed through his hands, but also for the large number of foreigners, especially Americans, who flocked to his studio to learn his secrets. A Deacon of Naples Conservatory, he was also well-known at Rome, particularly during the last few years, since the management of the Costanzi had been in the hands of his daughter Emma, one of his foremost pupils. Carelli published various text-books of singing, the best known perhaps being 'Storia di un respiro' (History of a Breath). An indefatigable worker, he was actively engaged in teaching up to a few years ago, and his death has been the occasion of affectionate tributes to his memory from innumerable old pupils in all parts of the world.

J. E. VERNHAM, on March 3, at the age of sixty-seven. He was for many years organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's, Wilton Place, S.W., and succeeded Dr. Monk at King's College, London, in 1889 as professor of vocal music and organist of the College Chapel. He was the author of primers on musical theory and the training of boys' voices.

SOME RECENT TENDENCIES IN COMPOSITION

A good audience assembled to hear Sir Charles Stanford's paper on the above subject before the Musical Association on January 18. The lecturer said he was and had been always essentially a Progressist, and welcomed every innovation, however unfamiliar, provided it made for the enhancement of beauty; but certain facts jumped to the eyes. There was an inordinate love of writing 5ths consecutively. This was not progress, but retrogression; it was going back to the old diaphony. No sensible man disliked nice 5ths—and there were such—but of all things in music, 5ths were the most difficult to handle without discretion and without intimate knowledge, and too many wrote them indiscriminately—many for the reason that they were 'told not.' 5ths were prohibited because they were ugly. They were as ugly now as they had ever been, and ever would be, world without end, because most probably their ugliness depended upon natural phenomena and not upon individual taste. The return of diaphony vs. the return of a relic of barbarism, or, rather, an attempt to advance music upon lines which later genius found to be as impossible for beauty as it was disagreeable acoustically. If it prevailed, then good-bye to beauty.

The second tendency was to worship and enlarge upon the idea of the whole-tone scale, which was applicable only to the pianoforte, the organ, and the harp. For stringed instruments it was a physical impossibility. If it were true that it relied upon every note in the scale, except the octave being out of tune, it would not exist at all. To rely upon it was to emphasize all the worst features of equal temperament. Much of the difficulty experienced in preventing choral singing flattening was due to the ascendancy of pianoforte tuning. All the great masters from Palestrina to Brahms and Wagner, were trained upon the true scale. From Bach onwards they accepted equal temperament for such instruments as were essential to its existence; but they wrote for the true scale and not for the compromise. The tendency of the whole-tone scale was to make for impurity of intonation. That was not progress, but retrogression. If it prevailed, good-bye to nature.

The third tendency was to overcrowd modulation. The physical ear was by nature incapable of assimilating too rapid and too closely-textured modulation. If modulation which seemed on paper to be perfectly feasible and workable proved too rapid, it was impossible for the ear to differentiate them and to give each of them its proper value. The result upon the listener was fog. Even in his very latest work Beethoven was supremely careful upon this point. Music may have become more complicated, but the human ear was now as it ever had been. For extra complication it wanted extra time. Some ears were more experienced and quicker than others, but it was no use to write music solely for the highly cultivated ear. It was not by such procedure that the great masters made their appeal and ensured immortality.

Another modern tendency was to neglect Diatonics and rely upon Chromatics, but if the latter were made the basis where were we to turn for superchromatics? We were yet incapable of grasping a third- or a quarter-tone. Though Wagner was chromatic by nature, when he wanted to accentuate his great movements he returned to diatonic Music which relied upon colour rather than upon drawing might have its fascinations, but as all pictures which have done so had failed to hold the field, so would chromatic music. If chromatics prevailed, then good-bye to simplicity.

Music sprang of two essential elements, rhythm and melody. The lecturer feared that melody was nowadays anathema. Why? Not because it had been there and was rejected, but because it had never been there at all. No one who had ever written a good melody rejected it. He might improve upon it, but he would not turn his back upon it. Many could concoct a well-sounding score, but very few could write a melody. To this paucity of invention was largely due the prevalent seeking after programme music. The story was often relied upon to supply the lack of form and of theme. Writers forgot that such compositions must rely on themselves and not on their analyses or their titles.

One of the most curious and inexplicable signs of our times had been the hero-worship of Mozart by the disciples of so-called modernity. Of all the composers of the past he had chosen the very one who represented the complete antithesis of all their theories. He was a great master of technique, but also a great master of concealing it, and the new admiration for him cannot but be on the basis of an absolute opposition to his principles. We lived in the day of Monteverde, not in those of Palestrina. Experiment was worshipped. It was not without its uses, nor was the music of Monteverde, but Palestrina lived and Monteverde was no more.

What we wanted to see was if under the gorgeous panoply of colour there lay a real invention of beautiful music without which all was vanity. The most naturally gifted composer would never progress unless he knew his technique so completely to perfection that he had reached the point of forgetting. It was once truly said, 'We cannot write any more with such beauty as Mozart, but let us write with such cleanliness.' We could not do better than write as well cerely felt, which meant we were trying to attain beauty, pure, and simplicity; and not for effect, which would lead to unhealthy extravagance. If we could not attain to the former, let us at least eschew the bizarre.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The R.A.M. Club held its first social and musical evening, under the presidency of Dr. H. W. Richards, on Thursday, February 26, when an exceptionally large gathering of members and friends, including Sir Edward Elgar and Lady Cooper (who with the president received the guests), filled the Duke's Hall and spent a most enjoyable evening. The musical part of the programme included two string quartets by Dvorák and Ravel, played with beautiful tone and finished ensemble by the Spencer Dyke Quartet, and Mussorgsky's 'Tableaux d'une Exposition,' of which Miss Winifred Christie gave an interesting interpretation and cured a double encore.

During the interval the president said how delighted everyone was to see Sir Alexander Mackenzie again with him after his enforced absence during the previous term. After thanking the secretary, Mr. Percy Baker, and the committee for their efforts in bringing the evening to such a successful issue, he said that he felt the Club should fulfil a most important part in the social life of the R.A.M., and hoped it would do this in the future even more than it had done in the past. He looked forward to the Club rendering great assistance in celebrating the centenary of the founding of the R.A.M., which was taking place next year.

A chamber concert took place on Wednesday, March 2, the programme of which included several compositions by present students. The most interesting of these were three pieces for two pianofortes, entitled, 'On the War-path,' 'Pastorale Scene,' and 'Heard at the Cinema,' admirably played by the composer, Mr. Alan Bush, and Mr. Reginald Paul, who also contributed pianoforte pieces by Bach, Leonardo Leo, and John Bull. The other instrumental items included the movement from Saint-Saëns' Sonata for pianoforte and cello (Misses Lillian Southgate and Vera Mitchell), a movement from Dvorák's Pianoforte Quartet, and Swinestead's Sonatina for pianoforte (Miss Irene Hyman). The vocal items included Mackenzie's 'Lift my spirit up to thee' and Bantock's 'Song of the Genie,' in addition to songs by Miss Claudia Lloyd, Mr. Russell Chester, and Miss Kathleen Levi, all of whom showed much promise.

On Friday and Saturday evenings, March 11 and 12, the students gave two performances of Goring Thomas' opera, 'Nadeshda,' under the direction of Mr. Cairns James and Mr. Henry Beauchamp. On Monday evening, March 14, an invitation performance of 'David Garrick' was given in connection with the endowment fund to establish a musician's fund in the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Hospital. The cast was selected from those who took part in the performances of last term, and the production was under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.

In July, 1922, the R.A.M. will celebrate its centenary, it having been founded in 1822. There are various schemes under consideration by which the completion of a hundred years of invaluable work in the cause of music and musical education in this country may be adequately marked. Full particulars as to the form which the celebrations will take will be announced in due course. At the present time the only definite arrangement is that these shall culminate in a Celebration Festival extending over the week commencing July 17, 1922, and ending with the Annual Prize Distribution. In order that all the arrangements may be carried out in a manner worthy of such an important landmark in the life and history of the Academy, a large representative General Committee is in process of formation, and smaller committees are already considering preliminary arrangements.

The following awards have taken place:

The Charles Mortimer Prize (Composition) to Cecil M. White (a native of London). The adjudicator was Mr. John E. West.

The Sterndale Bennett Prize (Pianoforte) to Cicely Hoyer (a native of London), Denise Lassimonne being highly commended, and Irene Hyman and Vera Rimmington commended. The adjudicators were Miss Harriet Cohen, Miss Dorothea Vincent, and Mrs. Marion J. H. Cole (née White).

The Goldberg Prize (Contraltos) to Isobel McLaren (a native of Edinburgh), Gladys M. Rolfe being very highly commended. The adjudicators were Misses Lydia John, Hannah Jones, and Phyllis Lett.

The Walter Wilson Cobbett Prize (Quartet Playing) to Harold Gilder, Mary Holmes, Eileen Wright, and Leonard Vallange. The adjudicator was Mr. W. W. Cobbett.

The Lent Term ends on April 2, and the Academy re-opens after the holidays on Monday, May 2.

THE GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR

We are glad to hear of the proposed visit to London of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir. This body of singers, conducted by Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, has won a great reputation in the North, and echoes of it have often reached London. Once the Choir came to Queen's Hall; last season its activities extended from Birmingham to Aberdeen. Since 1912 the Choir has made a speciality of Scots music—traditional and modern—and in consequence of the great popularity of its programmes the concerts at Glasgow have sometimes to be expanded into three- or four-day festivals. It is to sing at the Albert Hall on April 9, when the programme will include old Scots Psalm Tunes, arrangements of folk-songs—Lowland, Highland, and Hebridean—and part-songs by Holst, Elgar ('Death on the hills'), and Rutland Boughton.

THE CARNEGIE TRUST

The seventh annual report of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust contains matter of great interest to musicians. It is well known that the Trust undertakes to publish six British compositions each year. Out of fifty-two that were submitted in 1920 the adjudicators chose the following:

E. L. Bainton	Concerto-Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra
Ina Boyle	Rhapsody for orchestra, 'The Magic Harp.'
Learmont Drysdale	Overture, 'Tam o' Shanter.'
Ernest Farrar	Suite, 'English Pastoral Impressions.'
Herbert Howells	Rhapsodie Quintet for clarinet and strings.
Cyril Scott	'Nativity Hymn' (Crashaw), for baritone, chorus, and orchestra.

The trustees announce that for the future, beginning with the adjudication of 1922, they will offer publication of chamber music, but in the case of orchestral and operatic works only MSS. copies of the full score and sets of parts will be available.

Other musical activities of the Trust are to include:

- (1.) The further assistance of Choral Competition Festivals. A grant of £2,000 has been sanctioned for 1920-21 to the committee presided over by Lady Mary Trefusis.
- (2.) Guarantees to orchestral and chamber music parties and to dramatic parties touring in the smaller towns.
- (3.) A further grant to the Royal Victoria Hall.

There is still to be mentioned the great scheme for the publication of Tudor music. MSS. from Cathedral and other libraries are being collated by experts. The arrangements for publication are completed, and the first volume is being engraved. The edition will be in ten volumes, which will contain about a third of the MSS. collated. The following is a quotation from the words of Sir Henry Hadow in the prospectus:

'I do not know whether it is quite realised that it is not a question of a mere library edition of a classic; it is the most important musical discovery ever made—far more important than Grove's discovery of the Schubert manuscripts at Vienna. If you could imagine that the Elizabethan drama had been lost and now rediscovered, it would not be an extravagant parallel.'

BRITISH MUSIC AT PARIS.

It is still difficult for British musicians to persuade any but themselves that our composers are producing music to compare with that of any other nation. The only way to convince the foreigner at present is to take British music to him and make him hear it, but so far there have been few with the courage to do this. There ought to be as many recitals of British music at Paris, for instance, as there are of French music in London. Until this form of international exchange becomes a habit we have to be content with acclaiming the pioneers from this side, and among them we now place Miss Gladys Moger and Mr. Lloyd Powell. Their recital at the Salle Pleyel on February 25 was—with the exception of two Italian songs—entirely British. We have not learnt how it impressed the audience and the Parisian critics, and can only show how it ought to have impressed them by giving a summary of the programme. The pianoforte works were Ireland's Sonata in E minor, pieces by Cyril Scott ('Water Wagtail'), and Beckett Williams, Herbert Howells ('Procession'), and Holbrooke, and four by Frank Bridge. The songs were by Lawes, Purcell, Albert Mallinson, Herbert Howells ('Gavotte'), Arthur Bliss ('The Thistles'), Lord Berners, Denis Browne, John Ireland ('Earth's Call'), Goossens ('Epigram'), Armstrong Gibbs, and Gerrard Williams ('An Inconsequent Ballad').

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BELFAST

The Belfast Symphony Orchestra has continued to give excellent concerts, with Mr. E. Godfrey Brown as conductor. On January 29 the programme comprised Nicolai's overture to 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Schubert's Overture to 'Rosamunde,' two Ballets from the same opera, Walford Davies' 'Solemn Melody for strings and organ,' the 'Othello' Suite by Coleridge-Taylor, vocal solo by Miss Eva G. Lynes, and solos by Miss Carrodus Taylor (violin) and Mr. Laurence McCann (violin).

Another concert of the same series, on February 26, comprised the 'Freyshütz' Overture, Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and a new Overture, 'Andrea del Sarto,' by a local composer, Mr. Cyril Shepherd. Mr. Frank Mullings was the solo vocalist, and Miss Taylor contributed violoncello solos.

A chamber concert, on March 1, had a very well-selected and well-performed programme, including Bach's Concerto for two violins, Elgar's Quintet, Schumann's Quartet in A minor, and songs by Mrs. Harry Martin. The instrumentalists were Mr. J. B. Gray (first violin), Mr. F. E. Clarke (second violin), Mr. W. H. Conroy (viola), Miss Carrodus Taylor (violin), and Mrs. Herbert Warnock (pianoforte).

The season of the Philharmonic Society (which has been a most successful one) was brought to a brilliant conclusion on March 1, when Gounod's 'Faust' was presented for the first time by this Society. Berlioz's 'Faust' had been several times performed, but not Gounod's setting of the strange old story. There was an overflowing audience, and general appreciation of the performance. An excellent cast of artists took the solo parts, comprising Miss Marjorie Claridge, Mrs. John Seeds, Mr. Maurice d'Oisy, and Mr. Robert Radford. The minor parts were sustained by Mrs. Pickering, Mr. F. M. Stevenson, and Mr. William Curran. Mr. E. Godfrey Brown conducted, and choir and orchestra showed how carefully they had been prepared by him.

'The Cries of London' are keeping their reviver, Sir Frederick Bridge, busy. He is announced to lecture on them at the Royal Institution on March 18, at Crosby Hall, Chelsea, on the following day, and at Leighton House in the near future in aid of a charity. The 'Cries' have recently been given with great success in various parts of the country, in some cases under Sir Frederick's direction.

BIRMINGHAM

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society once more relied on Bach's B minor Mass at its concert at the Town Hall on February 16. The occasion was the thirteenth annual performance of the work by this Society, and a most severe test of a choir's capabilities could not be found than this great classic, whose enormous difficulties only the best equipped choral bodies can hope to cope with. It was gratifying to record that our premier Society's laudal efforts reached a high standard of excellence. Sir Henry Wood was in his element, and was well served by the orchestra and principals, the latter comprising Miss Car Tubbs, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Sidney Pointer, and Mr. Edward Dykes. Mr. C. W. Perkins was the organist.

The last of the 'international celebrity' concerts of the season was given at the Town Hall on February 17 before a large and enthusiastic audience. The Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Henry Wood, made its first appearance here on this occasion. Its splendid constitution and masterly technique were a veritable revelation, more than anything was the engrossing sonority of the In Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' with its striking Finale, the players reached a climax of almost superhuman intensity. There was no symphony, but on the whole the programme was well chosen and attractive. Miss Le Megane was the vocalist.

The fourth Quinlan concert of the current series, given at the Town Hall on February 18, was the most enjoyable orchestral concert held this season, but unfortunately failed to attract music-lovers. Yet the public is hardly to be blamed for this, because at Birmingham we have no moving population as at Manchester or Liverpool, and the grand orchestral concerts on three successive evenings in big order when it is considered that the attendance at these events depends on practically the same patron who are not likely to be able to support three concerts in succession. The absentees, however, missed hearing a very fine orchestral programme. The executive was the Beecham Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. The rank and file of this splendid organization would be hard to surpass, especially if directed by so great a conductor. Brahms' fourth Symphony and the Prelude and Liebes from 'Tristan and Isolde' were the chief items. Miss H. Dederich played the solo part in César Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for pianoforte and orchestra. The solo displayed splendid technical skill and musicianship. Mr. Mostyn Thomas was the vocalist.

M. Sibelius honoured Birmingham on February 20 by conducting the Sunday concert at the Theatre Royal. His third Symphony, the tone-poem 'En Saga,' 'Valse Triste,' the 'Valse Lyrique,' and 'Finlandia,' the City of Birmingham Orchestra quite distinguished itself and seemed to give the utmost gratification to the composer. The songs were very pleasingly sung by Miss Doris Watkinson. An extra contribution to the concert, that was not announced in the programme, was the slow movement from the great conductor's Violin Concerto, played by Mr. Alexander Coburn, the excellent leader of the Orchestra, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Appleby Matthews. Sibelius' music was easily grasped, and denotes great originality of treatment. It is generally believed that his thematic material is largely derived from folk-melodies; but Madame Rosa Newman, the writer of a most interesting brochure on the composer, was informed by him that the melodies in 'Finlandia' and 'En Saga' are entirely his own.

Another musical event of special interest was a 'Bantock' vocal recital given at the Town Hall on February 21, arranged by Mr. Appleby Matthews, who shared with Mr. Bantock the duties of accompanist. The 'Sappho' songs, the beautiful 'Songs from Arcady,' some Chinese songs, along with the musical settings of several of Browning's poems from the 'Dramatic Lyrics' and the Epilogue from 'Frishtah's Fancies' made a splendid selection, in which the composer was fortunate in having for its interpretation two such fine artists as Miss Astra Desmond and Mr. Frank Mullings. The concert stands out as a unique event in this season's music. M. Sibelius was one of the musicians present.

another welcome function was the very fine concert by Birmingham Chamber Concert Society at the Royal Society of Artists' Exhibition Rooms on February 22. With a group of such accomplished artists as the Catterall String quartet, and the refined pianist, Mr. Wilfred Senior, the performances of Elgar's Quintet, Op. 84, and César Franck's Quartet in F minor—both works for pianoforte and strings—the finest yet heard in this city. Perfect unanimity, clarity of tone, and expression were never lost sight of. The Birmingham City Orchestra has extended its activity by inaugurating orchestral concerts for children, two of which (afternoon and evening) were given at the Town Hall on February 26, under Mr. Appleby Matthews' conductorship. Chief items presented were Elgar's 'Wand of Youth', No. 1, the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and the 'Unfinished' Symphony. But probably the most appreciated item was the 'Pavane for Delibes' 'Sylvia.' Considering the success the concerts attained, the experiment will not be repeated.

Another concert in aid of the Institute for the Blind was given at the Town Hall on Sunday evening, February 27, under Mr. Sidney Stoddard's direction. The artists were Miss Bennett, Miss Nancy Guest, Mr. Walter Messenger, Ernest Brian, Miss Florence Hillier (solo pianoforte), Paul Beard (solo violin), and Mr. Michael Mullinar (pianist). A welcome feature of the occasion was the admirable singing of the Wolseley Male-Voice Choir, under W. E. Robinson.

Owing to the success of 'Cosi fan Tutte,' as revived at the Gaiety Theatre last year, two more performances were given at the same venue on February 28 and March 1, with the same cast of principals as before. It may be recalled that the opera was first produced at Vienna in 1790. In spite of its foolish libretto, its sparkling music is still so effective that its revival by most capable artists was quite justified.

At the Grosvenor Rooms, Grand Hotel, Miss Rosemary Hage, a pianist of more than ordinary artistic attainments, gave a pianoforte recital on March 2, assisted by Miss Margaret Harrison (vocalist).

At the Royal Society of Artists' Exhibition Rooms on March 3, Miss Marjorie Sotham, a clever and versatile pianist, gave a drawing-room concert at which she introduced for the first time here Ildebrando Pizzetti's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, played with skill and technical facility by Miss Murray Lambert and Miss Sotham. Mr. Goodey gave a somewhat unique vocal recital before the local branch of the British Music Society on March 4. Songs, which covered a wide range of vocal art, were introduced by some interesting explanatory dissertations.

Mr. Paul Beard, our local violinist, gave a highly interesting chamber concert at the Royal Society of Artists' Rooms on March 8, when he introduced Herbert Howells' Quartet in A minor, Op. 21, played by Messrs. Michael Mullinar, Paul Beard, Frank Cantell, and Leonard C. Dennis. Miss Dorothy Howell, the pianist and composer, introduced three of her own pieces and the pianoforte part in Neville Bantock's Sonata in F ('Colleen') for pianoforte and viola, Mr. Paul Beard undertaking the viola part. The pianist was Miss Eveline Stevenson.

The outstanding event of our musical season was undoubtedly the performance of the 'Choral' Symphony at the Town Hall on March 9, on the occasion of the City of Birmingham Orchestra's fifth symphony concert. The indefatigable conductor, Mr. Appleby Matthews, had left no stone unturned to make its representation worthy of a great city. While it could not be expected that Mr. Matthews and his rank and file could in any way realise the grandeur of the memorable performances under Richter, in justice to his enthusiastic efforts and of those under whom it must be stated that the results were surprisingly good and in some instances wonderful. The chorus was drawn from Mr. Appleby Matthews' choir, which is rich in sopranos and contraltos. They certainly showed remarkable sustaining power, and the orchestra too is entitled to a just appreciation of its laudable efforts. The programme also contained the Overture to 'Egmont,' and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part of which was played by Mr. Alexander Cohen, the leader of the orchestra, with consummate artistry.

BLACKBURN

The Blackburn Philharmonic Choral Society gave an excellent concert at the Public Hall on February 14. The two choral items were Stanford's 'Ave Atque Vale' and Parry's 'Pied Piper.' With Mr. John Booth as the Piper, Mr. Tom Barker as the Mayor, and the Hallé Orchestra playing the accompaniments, the ensemble effects were excellent.

An interesting feature of the programme was Dr. F. H. Wood's new Violin Concerto in three movements, played by and dedicated to Mr. E. Romaine O'Malley, the deputy leader of the Hallé Orchestra. The cordial reception of this new work, and the obvious interest taken in it by the orchestral players, were alike encouraging to the composer, who conducted this first performance of his work. Miss Margaret Balfour made her first appearance before a Blackburn audience, and was warmly received.

BOURNEMOUTH

By the time these lines appear the Bournemouth Symphony Concerts will have entered the last lap of the 1920-21 season, for the opening days of May herald the approach of the town's less active period in musical affairs.

On the five Thursdays falling within the period February 10 to March 10 there has been no lack of interest in the ingredients of the various programmes nor in the manner in which they have been served up. A revival of Elgar's second Symphony at the nineteenth concert provided a theme for considerable discussion among musicians. This important work had not been heard here for several years, and its performance on February 10 again gave occasion for much argument regarding the position it occupies in comparison with other symphonies of modern times. The E flat Symphony is unquestionably a very impressive work, and is also, in the writer's opinion, a distinct advance on the composer's earlier symphony, but in both compositions much that is moving, and even inspiring, is overshadowed by the many pages that sound ponderous if not somewhat laboured. Mr. Dan Godfrey and his remarkably alert instrumentalists were in splendid form at this concert, and the performance of the Symphony was a triumph for all concerned. The rest of the programme was made up of an attractive reading of Mozart's Violin Concerto in A, by Miss Leila Doubleday, and a very acceptable transcription by Dalhousie Young of Schumann's Toccata, which the arranger himself conducted.

It was a happy thought of Mr. Godfrey's to invite Mr. Sibelius to participate in the concert proceedings on February 17. Sibelius is one of the composers of to-day whose works—or, at any rate, a few of them—are to be found in the repertoire of almost every amateur musician, and this fact, coupled with the natural public inquisitiveness to view an eminent personage at close range, accounted for an enormous house at the twentieth concert—indeed, the audience was the largest ever known at a Bournemouth Symphony Concert. The distinguished Finnish composer conducted three of his works—'Valse Triste,' 'Finlandia,' and the Symphony in C major (No. 3). The last-named composition had not previously been heard at Bournemouth, and while it is possible to conceive a more convincing reading than that which the composer presented, yet it is at least presumable that we could have had no more authoritative one. Unfortunately, the Symphony did not make a great impression. The preponderance of so much music of a coldly bleak and desiccated type chills as would the sight of brittle, sapless limbs of trees in a dead forest. Mr. Godfrey's modest share in the proceedings consisted only of the accompanimental responsibility in Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, the solo music in which was played with the utmost resource and dexterity by Mr. Edward Isaacs, who proved a decided acquisition to the list of solo performers at these concerts.

On February 24 Brahms' Symphony in F was played with rare finish, the fine reading being greatly appreciated by a warmly approving audience. A noteworthy event on this occasion was the first performance of a Violoncello Concerto by John David Davis, the soloist being Jacques van Lier. The composition has many good points, but is rather overloaded with technical difficulties which really do not add anything in effect to the expressiveness of the music. The extremely exacting passages were, however, cleverly surmounted by the soloist, who undoubtedly presented this ingenious Concerto to its very best advantage. Nor must we overlook Mr. Godfrey's unfailing reliability from the orchestral point of view.

Schumann's D minor Symphony, Strauss' 'Don Juan,' Saint-Saëns' Piano-forte Concerto in C—played by Mlle. Juliette Folville in an exceedingly vigorous and brilliant manner—and MacCunn's 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood' Overture comprised the programme for March 3. That 'Don Juan' rivals 'Till Eulenspiegel' as the high-water-mark of Strauss' genius is the opinion of many. At the concert under review the first-named work was played so exceptionally well that even the most determined opponents of the composer's methods must have been hard put to it to resist its appeal. Schumann's romantically conceived Symphony was also played with much insight into its poetic issues.

Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony was an attraction to many on March 10. To those persons, however, who prefer classic poise and architectural symmetry to extravagant sensationalism à la Gustave Doré the Beethoven Violin Concerto, cleverly played by M. Zlatko Balokovic, must have provided keener enjoyment. Mr. Godfrey's well-drilled forces gave us an exciting performance of the highly-coloured Symphony, but it is not a work that nowadays will bear very frequent repetition.

BRISTOL

The last month brought some very good music that was quite well supported considering the number of first-class concerts. At the Quinlan fixture on February 14, at Colston Hall, there was a splendid attendance for the third concert of the season, when Mr. Mostyn Thomas, the new Welsh baritone, sang for the first time here. His quality of voice may be characterised as extraordinarily good, but he has much to learn in the matter of using it. Miss Miriam Licette sang Bemberg's 'Nymphes et Sylvains' daintily. Rosenthal paid a long anticipated visit, and his remarkable technique was again evident in Chopin's C minor Sonata, Op. 58, as in his own humoresque on Straussian themes. Madame Suggia, Casals' most notable pupil, played as exquisitely and surely as ever, and had a hearty reception.

West Bristol Choral Society creditably sang Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' at St. Alban's Church on February 18, before a fairly good attendance. Mr. Charles Read conducted. The singers need a deeper insight into the art of choral interpretation to overcome manifest inequalities.

It was unfortunate that Colston Hall was so poorly attended on February 21, the occasion being the fourth 'international celebrity' concert. For those present at this event it proved a glorious 'evening with the past,' the contributions by Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Maurice d'Oisy, M. Jean Vallier, and Madame Edna Thornton recalling many old songs and old operas. Miss Marie Hall, whose early days were so bound up with Bristol, played in finished manner a number of pieces with foreign names, but none of the English music for which she has been appealing.

By personally bringing down from London the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Albert Coates as conductor, Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker, Ltd., on February 25, prevented the fourth Quinlan concert from proving a fiasco. Such spirited conduct, that at the last hour saved the situation, deserves every commendation. As it was, the very large audience at Colston Hall, which knew nothing of this, enjoyed to the full the finest orchestral concert of the season so far. Dr. Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony was played for the second time this season, and revealed a new meaning in parts, and Rimsky-Korsakov's glittering 'Scheherazade' tone-pictures were brilliantly presented. Miss Hilda Dederich played charmingly in César Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques,' and Mr. Mostyn Thomas presented an exaggerated idea of the 'Pagliacci' Prologue. Verdi's 'Credo' was more in his grasp.

The choir of Trinity Wesleyan Church, specially augmented, gave a praiseworthy performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the church on February 26, under Mr. H. H. Dennis.

Miss Gladys Moger (vocalist), Miss Helen Cavell (violin), and Mr. Vivian Langrish (piano-forte), gave an unconventional programme at Victoria Rooms on March 3, when M. Langrish, a Bristolian who has made his name heard in London, played with masterly ease the slow movement from B. J. Dale's Sonata in D minor. Holst's four son for voice and violin were also noteworthy.

The Glastonbury Players presented an entertainment folk-songs at the Folk House on March 6. These of old ballads and some Kennedy-Fraser Hebridean numbers were sympathetically received.

The Clifton chamber concerts concluded on March 8, Victoria Rooms, with a programme that showed the advantage made at Bristol by this class of music, alike in execution and in appreciation. Madame Adophi (violin), Messrs. Herbert Parsons (piano-forte), Alfred Best (viola), a Percy Lewis (violin-cello), were heard under the happiest conditions.

On March 9 and following days, Mr. Louis J. Morle, the organist of Clifton Pro-Cathedral, produced in the spacious hall his new light opera, based on an ancient Egyptian script. A mummy, and the American agent of the Mummy Trust, Ltd., of New York, form the central relief to a story which is as well told as the book of many grand operas of the day. The musical setting appeals to its lyrical charm, and the choruses are broadly written. Chorus and orchestra of about fifty, aided by a number of principals, gave a performance of 'The Prince of Kulav' well above the amateur average.

On March 10, Madame Beverly Skemp and Dr. Norm Sprankling, respectively a vocalist and pianist of much merit, gave a very pleasing recital at Victoria Rooms, their selections and interpretations showing discrimination of judgment and excellent technique.

The third fixture of the Bristol Children's Concerts Society was held at St. Mary Redcliff Church on the morning of March 12, when the senior children of the city in large numbers listened to an organ and violin recital by Mr. R. Morgan (St. Mary's) and Mr. Hubert Hunt (the Cathedral). Mr. R. O. Beachcroft (Clifton College) gave the explanatory lecture upon the beautiful in music and the art of listening intelligently. The whole idea of the Society's work is admirable.

'Elijah' was chosen for the Bristol Choral Society concert at Colston Hall on March 12, and there was a magnificent house. The choir is this year better than ever, and, directed by Mr. George Riseley, their performance of the old and favourite oratorio has rarely been surpassed in volume and sweetness of tone. Miss Lillian Dillingham, Madame Edna Thornton, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Herbert Brown were the soloists. Bristol's premier choral society has vigorously set to work to get back to the normal after the war's ravages—as, indeed, was only to be expected from such a virile organization.

Dame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford gave a concert at Bath Assembly Rooms on February 16, and had an enthusiastic welcome.

CORNWALL

Launceston Choral Society, which, under Mr. C. Stan Parsonson's direction, does valuable work in the district, gave a programme of unaccompanied part-songs on February 10, the male members making a hit with their interpretation of 'Simon the Cellarer.' 'The Revenge' was sung artistically, but without the necessary energy, chiefly through numerical weakness of the male voices. Concert and solo instrumental music added to the interest of the occasion.

Callington Male Choir, conducted by Mr. J. Jenkin, sang part songs and glees on February 17; and on March 2 the Ladies' Choir associated with the same village was conducted by Mrs. T. P. Thomas in part-songs (including Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Vikings') and a cantata, 'The Legend of Bregenz' (Wilfred Bendall). The choir, numbering over forty voices, deserves encouragement.

Mr. J. H. Trudgen was prevented by illness from conducting Marazion Male Choir on March 7, and his place was taken by Mr. E. Round. The choir sang glees and part-songs excellently, though of course under some disadvantage.

the periodical hymn festivals arranged at various centres. The choirwall by Lady Mary Trefusis are producing tangible results. On February 21, 22, and 23, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw amalgamated choirs and congregations at St. German's, St. Peter, and St. Gluvias, his collaborators as organists being Mr. H. S. Middleton (organist of Truro Cathedral), Mr. Harold Pinches, and Mrs. Blamey. Mr. Shaw gave good advice on the choice of hymns and tunes, and a fine performance.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The spring season in Coventry and district is yielding a large quantity of concerts of varying interest.

At the Coventry Musical Club concert on February 9 the voice choir gave an excellent account of itself under Mr. John Chapman, and occasion was taken to inaugurate an interesting discussion concerning the promotion of day evening municipal concerts in the city in winter. It was pointed out that the Corporation week-end park concerts in summer were very successful, and that the introduction of similar concerts from September to April would be a valuable addition to the musical life of the community.

In aid of the Musicians' Orphanage, Miss Margaret Carter promoted a concert at the Coventry Hippodrome on February 12, when Mr. Cecil Lewis and Mr. Harry Denton appeared, heard in convincing performances of tenor and baritone parts respectively. Mr. Albert Fransella contributed flute solos, and Miss Carter played some pianoforte numbers. Other solos were sung by local vocalists with much success. The Coventry Musical Club male-voice choir drew a crowded audience to the Baths Assembly Hall on the occasion of their annual public concert on February 17. The choir fitted itself well, singing with admirable expression under the direction of Mr. John Chapman. Several local instrumentalists also appeared.

The Rover Orchestra, under Mr. W. R. Clarke, gave its 12th concert at Albany Road Hall on February 18. The programme included compositions of Schubert, Saint-Saëns, Elgar, Amy Woodford-Finden, Coleridge-Taylor, and others. Mrs. Oldham and Mr. Walter White, both well-known in the city, were the soloists.

Two concerts given by Dame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford at the Empire Theatre on March 2 attracted very large audiences. This was Dame Butt's first appearance at the theatre since her marriage in 1900. She was supported by Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Melsa (violin), and Vivian Roberts (piano). Miss Grace Torrens was the accompanist.

Mr. Mathew Stevenson conducted the Armstrong-Gray Orchestra at Parkside, on March 5, in a well-versed programme. The selections given included the 'Hänsel and Gretel' Overture, 'Carmen' Suite, 'Gopak' (Russian), and Gilbert and Sullivan operatic music. The soloists were Miss Nellie Ferguson and Mr. J. H. Campbell. Mrs. Gordon Vickers-Jones accompanied.

The Ordnance Works male-voice choir gave a successful concert in the Baths Assembly Hall on March 10, when Mr. Charles Tree was the principal soloist. In the same evening the Coventry Co-operative Select Choir submitted an interesting programme under the baton of Mr. Alfred W. Mr. Walter Hyde, of the Beecham Opera Company, was the chief vocalist.

The Coventry Chain Company's Amateur Operatic Society presented 'Ruddigore' in the Works Canteen during the week commencing March 14.

During the Lenten season an attempt has been made to raise the standard of music sung in various Coventry churches. St. John's, under Mr. John Baker, the choir has sung a Eucharist each Sunday morning to an unaccompanied organ by Ludovico Viadana, a contemporary of Palestrina. The Cathedral and other churches in the city have some interesting music arranged for Easter.

At Leamington a concert given by Dame Clara Butt and Mr. John Kennerley on March 1, in the Theatre Royal, was largely successful.

Miss Joan Cross recently made a great success at Leamington with a vocal recital. Her programme ranged from Bach to Negro Spirituals.

DEVON

Choral societies during Lent are mainly heard only in the practice-room, and after Easter a burst of choral song is anticipated in all districts. Here and there, however, events of occasional interest may be reported. Barnstaple Church choir recently gave an appealing performance of Dr. H. J. Edwards' cantata, 'The Epiphany,' one of the very best of his choral works. The composer, who is organist and choir-master, accompanied at the organ. A choir of a hundred voices, with orchestra, at Newton Abbot on February 11 were conducted by Mr. Coleridge D. White in a good performance of the cantata, 'Daniel before the King' (Harris), given in aid of the War Memorial. On the same date Sidford Choral Society sang glees and choruses under Mrs. Prendergast. On February 23, 'The Holy City' was sung by Millbrook Choral Society, supported by an orchestra under the conductorship of Mr. E. J. Cooper, the soloists being members of the choir.

Exeter Chamber Music Club has advanced in standard at each music-making, and Dr. Ernest Bullock has been appointed permanent director of the music, he having been the initiator of the enterprise. Membership now numbers two hundred and fifty. An informal concert in February held in the Guildhall was interesting as showing what could be done without previous design. On March 2, a formal concert produced music and performance of distinctly high order. Beethoven's second String Quartet; violin music by Tchaikovsky, Purcell, and Handel; duets for two pianofortes by Bach (C major) and Schumann (Andante and Variations in B flat); vocal quartets by Stanford ('Diaphenia'), Parry ('Music, when soft voices die'), and Elgar ('Spanish Serenade'); and songs by Tchaikovsky ('A pleading' and 'Oh! but to hear thy voice') and Whinfield ('To Althea, from prison'), comprised the programme.

Exeter and district organists have had two meetings recently, the first of which was held in February, when the Rev. R. W. B. Langhorne read a scholarly and helpful paper on 'The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures' and Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe (hon. secretary) gave an organ recital. The second meeting took place on March 12, when Mr. F. J. Widgery talked on 'Art and Music' (a rather unfortunate title), and Dr. Ernest Bullock (president) gave a recital.

Mark Hambourg gave a pianoforte recital at Plymouth on February 20, the chief items of interest being by Cyril Scott ('Caprice Chinoise'), Rimsky-Korsakov (dance from 'The Midnight Sun'), and Grainger ('Shepherd's Hey'). At an orchestral concert at Torquay on February 16 a band of thirty-five performers played Schubert's fifth Symphony, Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto (Mrs. W. H. Mortimer being the soloist), the 'Coriolan' Overture, and Suites by Grieg and Lawrence Travers. Dr. H. G. Crocker conducted. On February 20 the Plymouth Division of the R.M.L.I. Orchestra played the 'William Tell' Overture and a suite by Luigini, and was also heard in other enjoyable music. Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell conducted. It is a blow to orchestral music in the district that Mr. O'Donnell should have left in March to take up his appointment as Director of Music to the Grenadier Guards. Under his direction the R.M.L.I. band has reached a superlatively high standard of performance, which has reacted favourably on other organizations. While Mr. O'Donnell is to be congratulated on his promotion, his removal will be a distinct loss to the west country. His successor is Mr. F. J. Ricketts, of the 2nd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, now stationed at Claremorris.

Plymouth Centre of the British Music Society had an enjoyable music-making on March 5 that included concerted and solo instrumental items and vocal solos.

The second of a series of instrumental recitals at Maynard College, Exeter, on March 12, arranged by Miss Mary Alcock, was chiefly interesting by reason of the Brahms Sonata in A, for violin and pianoforte, artistically played by Mr. Milani and Miss Alcock, and some Palmgren pianoforte music contributed by Miss Alcock. Of the latter, 'The Sea' arrested and held attention, and the 'Refrain de berceau' was idyllic in mood. These two artists were joined by Mr. W. L. Sutcliffe in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in D minor.

DUBLIN

Dr. Esposito's pianoforte recital in the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on February 14 was a delightful treat. His virtuosity is surprising, although it is now almost forty years since the genial Michele settled in the Irish metropolis. Although many were impressed with his reading of the Beethoven Sonata, yet the delicious interpretation of Chopin's Berceuse was a revelation.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company had a two weeks' engagement at the Gaiety Theatre, from February 21 to March 5, when the popular taste was well catered for. No novelties were presented, but the old fare proved acceptable, especially 'La Bohème,' 'Tales of Hoffmann,' and 'Madame Butterfly.' A most satisfying performance of 'Mignon' was admirably conducted by Mr. Cuthbert Hawley.

Mr. Carl Fuchs' pianoforte and string combination gave a recital at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on February 21. It can hardly be said that the ensemble was perfect, but the Schumann Trio in D minor was convincing. Strange to say, the Brahms Trio was not at all adequately interpreted. It is to be feared that the Brahms cult is fast becoming a thing of the past.

Much interest was centred in the string recital at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on February 28, when some delightful ancient and modern items were presented. The Scarlatti excerpts were most arresting, and sounded surprisingly modern, while the Handel selection was also very acceptable. Nor did Dr. Esposito forget Mendelssohn, whose works have been strangely neglected in recent years.

The Quinlan concert at the Theatre Royal, on March 1, provided a feast of good things. The names of Mesdames Marie Hall and Evelyn Parnell, and Messrs. Rosing and Mostyn Thomas are quite sufficient to ensure a house. Yet for some reason or another the audience was not enthusiastic, and probably the only item that evoked unstinted applause was Rosing's interpretation of the Russian famine song. As an accompanist Mr. Ivor Newton was satisfying.

Curfew regulations during the winter were hard enough on theatres and concert-halls, but the drastic order of March 3, fixing 9 p.m. as the hour for being within doors, has had a paralysing effect on all social functions, including concerts.

The Dublin University Choral Society gave a very impressive performance of Mozart's 'Requiem' in the Examination Hall on March 4, under the able conductorship of Dr. Hewson. Principals and chorus did their work well, and the orchestra was most capably led by Mr. Arthur Darley. The general impression—although some may consider Mozart's wonderful inspiration (it was composed in November, 1791) as that of a spent genius—endorsed Jahn's verdict, namely, that 'it is the true and legitimate expression of his artistic nature at its highest point of finish—his imperishable monument.'

Miss Culwick's concert at the Abbey Theatre on March 8 was remarkable by reason of the production of a new choral composition by Dr. Larchet, entitled 'The Legend of Lough Rea: the Death Sign,' the words of which are by the late Very Rev. Canon O'Hanlon, under the pen-name of 'Lageniensis.' The piece was well received, and will doubtless be heard of later. Miss Culwick has inherited the gift of keeping together a good choir, and also possesses the magical charm of her lamented father.

Evidently those responsible for the musical services of the churches do not yet realise that organists ought to be paid a much larger salary than in pre-war days. As a proof, a recent advertisement for an important Anglican organ appointment in the city announces the lure of '£40 a year'!

EDINBURGH

The third Reid concert, on February 19, introduced two beautiful works—a 'Serenade' for flute, with string orchestra, and an Elegy for strings, both by F. S. Kelly.

On March 5, Bantock's songs for contralto, 'Sappho,' were excellently sung by Miss Denne Parker, and on March 12 a notable feature was the performance of Madame Adila Fachiri and Miss Jelly d'Aranyi in Bach's Double Concerto. This concert completed an excellent series, and Prof. Tovey is again to be congratulated on his enterprise.

Miss Jean Jackson, a young soprano, submitted an excellent vocal programme on February 16, and on February 23 another promising soprano, Miss Ethel Cai, gave a similar recital.

The outstanding event of the month was, however, the programme presented by Prof. Tovey and Mr. Huberman on March 7, that comprised Brahms' three Violin and Pianoforte Sonatas, the performance of which was prefaced by some illuminating remarks by the Professor.

GLASGOW

The annual concert of the University Choral Society under Mr. A. M. Henderson, took place on March 1. It seems a pity that such a small body should represent the musical life of a great University numbering so thousands of students, but doubtless this is due to the peculiar conditions of Scottish University life. The Society was heard in a quite unambitious selection of part-songs, but a gratifying feature of the evening's music was present in the customary groups of pianoforte solos unexceptionally played by the conductor. Miss Denne Parker, a liege singer of distinction, contributed some vocal solos very acceptably. Attendance at this concert debarred the present writer from hearing Mr. Harvey Grace's excellent lecture, delivered under the joint auspices of the British Music Society and the Glasgow Society of Organists. The subject, 'Voluntaries,' was treated in practical fashion, a particularly useful feature being the illustrations admirably played by the lecturer on the fine organ of College and Kelvingrove Church.

The William Morris Choirs (Mr. W. Robertson and Miss M. C. Greig, conductors) gave a concert of outstanding merit on March 3. The programme, designed on first principles, embraced concerted music ranging from Byrd, Morley and Weelkes, to modern examples by Rutland Boughton, H. Waldo Warner, and Gustav Holst, and the interpretations were all on the plane of a premier class in competitive festival. Special mention should, perhaps, be made of Rutland Boughton's 'Early Morn' and Arcaded 'Ave Maria,' the Senior and Junior organizations being heard in combination in the 16th century music. The Junior Choir also sang charmingly some accompanied and unaccompanied three-part songs, and members of the Senior Choir gave vocal solos. The programme was also varied by violin solos played by Miss Bessie Spence. The music classes so long and so efficiently conducted by Mr. R. Reid in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, gave their annual concert under their music instructor, Mr. Hugh Hunter, on March 10. The standard oratorios form the staple of these programmes, and on this occasion 'The Creation' was presented. The singing revealed particularly good soprano and bass sections, the accurate and bright reading of the choruses—always a feature of these performances—was again notable. Praise is certainly due to an organization which succeeds so well in interesting large numbers of young people in good choral music. The solo items were given by Miss Elsie Suddarth, Mr. W. A. Ferguson, and Mr. Robert Murray, and the instrumental part by the Fellows Orchestra, ably supplemented by Mr. Herbert Walton at the organ.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. H. A. Carruthers, gave a successful concert on March 1. Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony was the main item in the programme which also included Berlioz's 'Carnival Roman' Overture and the Overture to Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel.' Mr. Robert Watson was solo vocalist.

GLOUCESTER

The end of the musical season at Gloucester was marked by the annual concert given by the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society on March 3, and the crowded attendance bore testimony to the popularity of this musical function. The success achieved reflected great credit on the society's orchestral education these amateurs receive at the hands of Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, ably seconded by Mr. W. H. Reed.

Following the custom adopted during the war, the Gloucester Choral Society gave two concerts this season instead of three as in pre-war days. The first was held on January 6, when the two principal works chosen were Parry's 'The Music-Makers'—its first performance at Gloucester—and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean' (Hubert Parry). In both works band and choir rose to the occasion and achieved a brilliant success.

The second appearance of the Society, on February 24, provided a masterly performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.' Included in the programme were C. V. Stanford's companioned Motet in eight parts, 'Ye Holy Angels Light,' and Elgar's Serenade for strings in E (Op. 20). The season has also been distinguished by a successful concert of the Gloucester Orpheus Society on January 27, under Mr. S. W. Underwood. Many hundreds of children were profited by Dr. Brewer's scheme of organ recitals in the Cathedral arranged specially for their benefit.

HASTINGS

Within a fortnight the Symphony series has included 'London' Symphony and Hamilton Harty's Violin Concerto, both new to these concerts. Mr. Julian Clifford, it may be noted, was the first provincial conductor to perform Vaughan Williams' much-discussed work, when he reduced it a year or two back at Harrogate. To some ears it has its vague moments, or it is indefinite, secure, remote, aloof—all these things, but there are pages of rare beauty which seem to promise that the dark places will be made clear by further familiarity. It had a really fine performance, the Scherzo-Nocturne with its unique themes and orchestral combinations making a direct and lasting impression. Hamilton Harty's Concerto has a unique melodic contour, pleasing enough at first, but after a while the ear longs for the curves to be straightened out. The Finale, with its frankly Irish thematic basis, is the most convincing movement, and owes much of its effectiveness to the composer's knack of writing violin passages, and his impeccable orchestration. Miss Murray Lambert interpreted the solo part with rare perception and emotional intensity, though some lapses from perfect intonation marred against its complete enjoyment.

Piano recitals, each one including a concerto, have been given by Miss Fanny Davies, M. Pouishnoff, and M. Siloti. The 'Emperor,' with Miss Fanny Davies at the keyboard, was inimitable for the beauty and dignity of its position. Some solos, notably the 'Kreisleriana,' were not so successful, though she might have left Chopin's A flat Sonata to the sinews of those who cannot approach her in many other ways. Compared with Liszt's Concerto in A flat, Rachmaninoff's in C minor was a dreary affair, even with such an exponent as M. Pouishnoff, whose two visits have excited such enthusiasm here. His Liszt playing was technically beyond criticism, as also was the Chopin Ballade in A flat, but such feats of virtuosity seldom go with the more subtle qualities of tenderness and finesse which in this instance are in abeyance. M. Siloti was never more characteristic than in the 'Wanderer' Fantasia. With the aid of Liszt's adornments he made it live again, and held his hearers spellbound. Incorrigibly original in all he does, he knows just where to draw the line. His playing, too, of some Russian pieces was unexceptionable.

Brahms' Violin Concerto disclosed some of the great powers of Mr. Albert Sammons when, on March 5, with Mr. Clifford's orchestra, he impressed us as one of the very few who can interpret the work with perfect ease and understanding of its real magnitude. Technically it was without flaw, and we were once more entranced with the player's maîtrise. Concerts have also been given by the London Trio, M. Zacharewitsch, and Dame Clara Butt, who, with her distinguished party, packed the Royal Concert Hall with an enraptured crowd.

Haydn did not appear at his best in his familiar Symphony in D, which sounded singularly childish. Brahms in the same key received complete justice at another Symphony concert, while Glazounov's 'Carnival Overture' found the orchestra at the zenith of its form. Weber's Concertstück was really well-played by Mr. Harold Columbatti, and Miss Marguerite Macintyre's remarkable rhythmic instinct found a congenial outlet in Saint-Saëns' C minor Concerto.

The last symphony of the season—the 'Unfinished'—was, in view of the mutability of corporations and ratepayers, perhaps a happy augury for the future, hinting at the return of the Clifford organization next winter. Meanwhile their activities will be exercised at Harrogate, whither they go in Holy Week. M. Pouishnoff and Mr. Julian Clifford swapped horses on March 13, when the Persian pianist appeared as the conductor of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in which, as soloist, the Hastings conductor surpassed even his wonted standard of excellence. It was no mere mid-stream exchange, for each one was well-nigh as happy in this transposition of rôles as in his own particular sphere.

Nearly every church here has essayed one or more performances of Stainer's 'Crucifixion' during Lent, and each of the Christ Church organ recitals attracted an attendance of nearly a thousand.

KENT

Miss Daphne Ring, a pupil of the famous Prof. Sevcik at Prague Conservatoire, gave a violin recital at Canterbury on March 5, when she revealed technical attainments of a high order, along with resonant and enforced tone.

Hythe Choral Society's concert, on March 9, drew a large audience. Conducted by Mr. F. Gilbert Lamb, the choir was heard in a number of modern part-songs, and the vocalists were Miss Mildred Southgate, Mr. Roland Cook (a newly-appointed lay-clerk at Canterbury Cathedral), and Mr. Neville Fletcher. Bassoon solos were played by Mr. Geoffrey Page.

Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a recital at Maidstone before a large audience on March 3, prior to his departure on a South African tour. Chopin was the backbone of the programme, and modernists were represented by Balfour Gardiner, Debussy, and Rimsky-Korsakov.

The Association of Free Church Choirs of Rochester, Chatham, and District made its first appearance at Chatham on February 23, and, conducted by Mr. Leslie Mackay, gave a thoroughly well-rehearsed performance. The massed choirs numbered five hundred voices, and some fine effects were obtained. The main object of the Association is the raising of the standard of music in church worship, and for this reason only music suitable for performance by the choirs in their individual churches was sung.

Mr. Leslie Mackay's choir gave a delightful concert at Chatham on March 21, when 'The Cries of London' (arranged by Sir Frederick Bridge) and madrigals were a feature of the programme. Miss Lilly Phillips, a student at the R.A.M., played 'cello solos.

The final concert of the season by Rochester Choral Society brought the London Symphony Orchestra to Rochester on March 23. Conducted by Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, the players gave particularly fine performances of excerpts from 'Parsifal,' 'Die Meistersinger,' and 'Ride of the Valkyries.' The choir sang the Grail scene from 'Parsifal,' with Mrs. Walter Clapperton and Mr. J. B. Fearnley as soloists, Charles Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans,' and a new work for soprano solo, female chorus, and orchestra, entitled 'The Island,' composed by Rochester's distinguished young musician, Percy Whitlock. The work is short, and is characterised by lightness and delicacy. Effective use is made of the harp, and where any 'influence' can be traced it is that of Debussy. Miss Doris Tomkins was the soloist. An enthusiastic reception was accorded the young composer, who is studying composition at the Royal College of Music.

LIVERPOOL

Signor Busoni was the bright particular star at the Philharmonic Society's eighth concert, on February 15. He appeared in the dual rôle of composer-pianist, and took the solo pianoforte part in his own 'Indian Fantasy' for pianoforte and orchestra. This is a work of clever construction based on pentatonic melodies of the North American Indians, collected by Miss Natalie Curtis. The music gives brilliant opportunities to the soloist, and the orchestral part is in keeping. But all the same, Busoni made the deepest impression by his exquisite Mozart playing in the Concerto, K. 482.

The music of Richard Strauss is creeping back into our programmes with its old acceptance. Mr. Eugene Goossens' fine performance of 'Till Eulenspiegel,' for instance, was received with great enthusiasm. Mr. Goossens' own 'Tam o' Shanter' gave five minutes of vivid descriptiveness, and two other English works, also heard for the first time here, made a deeply favourable impression. These were the orchestral pieces by Delius, 'On hearing the first Cuckoo in Spring' and 'Summer Night on the River.' Both are charming, especially the first, which is captivating in its restrained suggestion and imitation. It is programme-music not too much subject to modern tendencies, but sufficiently so to point to freshness in thought and harmonic expression. In moving along natural lines of development in his art, Delius in these two pieces carries his hearers with him. Special mention is due to the delightful singing of the choir in the part-songs 'O happy eyes' (Elgar) and 'Corydon, arise' (Stanford). The audience demanded a repetition, a rare compliment which Dr. Pollitt might really have accepted as applying to both pieces.

Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted the ninth Philharmonic concert on March 1. His new Violin Concerto, played by Mr. Arthur Catterall, proved an immediate and triumphant success. Never has a more favourable verdict been expressed here upon the first hearing of a native work, and for good reason, as the Concerto entirely sustains interest throughout its half-hour's duration, not only for the musician's but also for the popular ear. To the former, the fine first movement will probably hold most attraction by reason of the sheer beauty of its themes, especially the second, and the skill of the workmanship. The slow movement hardly sustains its opening inspiration, and on an even lesser plane in this respect is the Finale, but its lilting rhythms and glittering gaiety stir the pulses very pleasantly. The composer has in him a great fund of real music, and gives it out freely and naturally. Mr. Harty also found a receptive audience for his reading of Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and later Percy Grainger's contribution to the gaiety of nations, 'Molly on the Shore,' had to be repeated. The tenor singer, Mr. Lauritz Melchior, used his fine voice a trifle vehemently in Lohengrin's 'Narration.'

In Mr. Joseph O'Mara's opinion, 'Liverpool is the most musical city in the three Kingdoms,' and in his speech on March 3 at the conclusion of the greatly successful opera season of ten weeks which the O'Mara Opera Company gave in the Shakespeare Theatre, he furnished good reasons for making this pronouncement. During this time no new works were presented, but the management relied on consistently good performances of established favourites, in which it appears that the box office profited most from 'Madame Butterfly' and 'Lily of Killarney.'

It is proposed to hold the fourteenth Festival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association in October, and in view of the impending consecration and opening of the Choir and other completed parts of the great Cathedral next year, it is probable that the coming Festival will be the last held as formerly in St. George's Hall. Established in 1900, mainly through the exertions of Mr. Ralph H. Baker, who still happily retains his position as hon. secretary, the Festivals were successfully held year by year until the thirteenth, in 1913, at which Sir Hubert Parry was the guest-conductor.

Among recent musical happenings at Rushworth Hall have been the series of trio recitals given by Miss Emily Giles (pianoforte), Mr. G. V. Roche (violin), and Mr. E. A. Wright (violoncello), three skilful players whose excellent ensemble was shown in Beethoven's Trios in C minor, Op. 1, and D major, Op. 70, and also in Ireland's 'Fantasy' Trio in A minor, a work of freshness and vitality. Duet pieces extremely well played included Franck's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata, and the Delius Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte.

The interest of the popular Wednesday afternoon recitals at Crane Hall has been well maintained by various pianists. Mr. Anderson Tyrer ('Night Fancies,' B. J. Dale), Miss Marion K. Snowden (pieces by de Falla, Turina, and Granados), and Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith (Variations on a Bach theme and 'Orange,' Liszt). The McCullagh String Quartet was welcome on February 16. Violin soloists have included Zacharewitsch and Miss Nannette Evans. The singers were Mesdames Gladys Lord, Kathleen O'Nora Delmarr, S. McCoy, and Betty Tattersall, Messrs. Joseph F. Griffin, Randolph Giles, and V. Helliwell, with Messrs. Sandberg Lee, A. E. Workman, and J. G. Freeman as expert accompanists. A line is due to record Miss Ethel Pell's vocal recital at Crane Hall on March 12, when she was assisted by Miss A. Johns, an accomplished pianist and pupil of Godowsky, and Miss A. Bergsma (violin).

Elgar's Cantata, 'The Black Knight,' was sung by the Post Office Choral Society on March 9. Conducted by Mr. Arthur Davies, the singing in this work, and also Stanford's 'Phaun and Crocodile,' while creditable, is something to be desired in choral balance of tone, the of male voices, especially of tenors, being apparent.

Prof. Walford Davies addressed a highly-interesting gathering of the Welsh National Society at the Institution on March 11. He dealt with the present state of music in Wales, a subject upon which, as Professor of Music at Aberystwyth University, he is specially qualified to speak. Prof. Davies is profoundly and optimistically impressed by the wealth and quality of musical material in Wales, which is only waiting for proper guidance. Unlike another eminent authority, he believes in education and in teaching the principles and meaning of music to the children of Wales in the eighteen hundred elementary schools. Prof. Davies also commended the psalm meetings, and advocated county festivals, given by combined forces from six or seven towns.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Most of us interested in the musical life of this district have realised only too bitterly in recent weeks what 'a city without opera' has really meant as an æsthetic deprivation. War-days inured us to months sans butter, sugar, or meat, but musical folk have endured that much more cheerfully than opera-less weeks and months. War-time hurt our artistic endeavours, but it brought us opera in greater measure than before, only to fade away with the coming of peace, and the longer one ruminates on this situation the more incongruous it appears. Maybe the near future has still sterner lessons in store, but we all will realise how, in the full sense of the word, our æsthetic life has this winter been impoverished. The old school of symphonic music-lovers here will have it that pure music yields more lasting joys—that opera is merely ephemeral, one tires of it as of a merely pretty face. Well, it may be something in that view, but one might just as well expect to rear a musical family on shop-ballads, and produce a community having sane, well-balanced art views on musical matters without continuous opera experience. Until Beecham came along Manchester was absurdly lop-sided in its musical appreciations. The change of this has slowly dawned on its consciousness, and disappointment makes one correspondingly despondent. In writing thus it is not for a moment desired to undervalue the work done by the Carl Rosa or O'Mara Companies. These fill a place, but economic conditions never allow to them such developments as we experienced under the Beecham régime.

The outstanding features of recent weeks have been the personal side—the visits of Sibelius, Busoni, and Alcega Coates (the two latter on the same day), and, music-wise, Busoni's 'Indian Fantasy' and Hamilton Harty's Violin Concerto, now revised and issued in final form. Those who heard and saw Sibelius in 'Finlandia' and 'Valse Triste' gained a fresh conception of both in thus viewing them from a new angle. Busoni could hardly have indulged in a more violent contrast of styles than Mozart's E flat Concerto No. 6, and his own Fantasy. His Mozart was greatly calculated, almost reasoned out, austere at times, revealing any bright or sparkling spontaneity; but in the end expect again to hear such spirituality pervading a Mozart Andante. Perhaps because of a reading of this kind did we feel the unearthly beauty and poignancy of the woodwind interludes. With a brief interval occupied with the performance of Bakirev's 'Russia' (hardly big enough for its theme), we plunged into the splendidly audacious mental fantasy on North American Indian melodies. My impression was of stark, sinewy themes decked in almost garish, colouring. For me it was a tremendously ting work, appealing by its intense virility rather than nationalism. One came to this concert (February 12) from a luncheon afternoon, where Coates conducted a symphony orchestra—unhappily placed on the Hippodrome—on the flat, and running back deeply so that some tone went up and not out into the auditorium. I make no comparisons. Brahms' fourth Symphony is notoriously difficult of interpretation. My remembrance of it in this work is that despite its fragmentary character he did somehow secure cohesion and a sense of where others left the impression of dissipated effect. On his occasion the slow movement provided the best of the afternoon, save for the 'Tristan' Prelude and the 'Tristan' Prelude. Miss Dederich played the Franck Symphonies with Cortot-like clarity and refinement, and the pianism under Coates was beyond praise. This was the best day of this winter's music, and Manchester then enthusiastic from far and near.

Julius Harrison's original scheme for the Hallé which he conducted on February 24 (in which Pizzetti's 'Stral' suite from 'La Pisanella' ballet was a 'first in England' novelty) was somewhat disturbed in balance by the inclusion of Eric Fogg's 'Golden Eriy' Suite, originally intended for an earlier concert. There was also Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Introduction and Marche de Noces' from 'Coq d'or,' we had an evening of music, with César Franck in D minor and Brahms' 'Idemmus Igitur' Overture as ballast. A banquet where 'piquantes' replace more substantial dishes is apt to be some, and despite the glorious playing in Brahms and Mr. Harrison's programme scarcely escaped tedium. Eric Fogg has all current orchestral mannerisms in his art, and can trot them out as desired. His orchestral is on its technical side somewhat uncanny. He has a secret of sonority without distressing blatancies, and his acting was cool and efficient in an equally surprising way. The matter of his Suite is extremely thin, and spins in the 'Dance of Chrysalises' frankly to wearisome. The Introduction and 'Dance of Insects' are freshly and, here his scoring rarely misses fire. Mr. Fogg has been much to the fore in his chamber compositions. There are no more than sketches—frank experiments many seem—and it is questionable if student sketches are displayed so profusely during pupilage. The Suite for violin, violoncello, and harp, played by Mr. Charles and Misses Jo Lamb and Kathleen Moorhouse (February 25) was very easily the one work that reveals some promise. Study and less publicity would probably work wonders.

February 17 we had Mr. Albert Sammons playing the Concerto, and a fortnight later Mr. Arthur Hall introduced the new version of the Hamilton Harty concerto—thus we had the two best young British violinists of the three concerted pieces best worth playing. Mr. Sammons was wonderfully fine in the slow movement, and in both these concertos Mr. Hamilton Harty added a strength of style and adaptability not often met hitherto. Elgar and Hamilton Harty have both enriched the solo violin literature in quite a remarkable manner. Hamilton Harty's writing is vivid, intense, bright with fancy, and in the slow movement light with exquisite delicacy and sureness in the low, red wood-wind harmonies. His work would make a wider appeal than either Brahms or Elgar use of its irrepressible buoyancy. For me an ideal would be to hear the Brahms, Harty, and Elgar Concertos in succession, with quiet intervals for tea.

A surprising development of our noontide music has this year been more notable than before. Frequently every except Saturday is occupied. Our debt to Dr. Brodsky's respect is very great. Early he saw the potentialities of a noontide scheme and boldly went in where others shied. Now the majority of the performers have sat at it in the matter of ensemble, and we are seeing the fruits of patient tilling of our native musical soil, which a short time five years ago was a barren waste. His Beethoven Sonata recitals at the University, along with Mr. R. J. Forbes, showed that his hold on the life there was as sure as it was upon the mercantile element to whom the mid-day concerts chiefly minister. The duets-for-two-pianos recital on March 1, by Miss Lucy Pierce and Mr. C. H. Kelly, was an ideal programme of its kind: the antiphonal effects in the Mozart D major Sonata were exquisitely realised and revealed a fine sensibility for balance in such work. This was a superb foil for the poetic jubilation of the 'Moy Mell' of Arnold Bax. In pianola music I am accustomed to playing four-handed arrangements for one instrument, but at its best this is poverty-stricken alongside such writing as Bax's, where the parts race together, mingle, cross, part, and rejoin and fill the hall with the sense of the multitudinous in song that is tremendously exhilarating. Variety was imparted to the Tuesday series by the Co-operative Wholesale Society's male-voice choir on February 15, in a recital ranging from 18th century writers via Schumann to Bairstow, Bantock, and Elgar. More numerous than at festivals, the singing of the choir was not of festival quality. If its upper voices lack suppleness, its deep basses are really profound. In involved music its technique is not yet adequate, and in attack sterner discipline is badly needed. Probably concentration on works of bigger poetic content would draw out more surely the latent possibilities in this body. Bantock's 'Lucifer' in their reading was promising but far from convincing.

Miss Chilton-Griffin played here on March 10 and 15. No Englishwoman excels her in technique: in the difficult art of grading a towering crescendo, she has few equals among men, but she has insufficient natural discernment to warn her as to where tone degenerates into noise. Like some organists of my acquaintance, she should get hold of a candid friend of judgment who could criticise her tone-gradations and signal when that omnipotent left-hand is drowning everything else. If the curb can be applied satisfactorily, there is hardly a limit to her possibilities.

I learn from Blackpool that the Chamber Society there is flourishing strongly, the Edith Robinson and the Brodsky Quartets having played recently, to be followed by the Catterall Quartet after Easter. The Easter musical provision at Blackpool is to be on a lavish scale. The work of preparation of the next Festival syllabus is well in hand, and the music selections for the great choral classes are to be issued early in April.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

Newcastle music-lovers made a belated acquaintance with Elgar's second Symphony on February 20, when the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. E. L. Bainton, was heard in a broad, well-balanced performance. The 'Bartered Bride' Overture whirled along with wonderful precision, and such items as the Gavotte from 'Idomeneo' and a 'Humoresque' of Dvorak were a thoughtful catering for the untrained listener, in that they were popular without being cheap. Miss E. Scorer sang 'Che Faro' somewhat stiffly, but atoned by a charming interpretation of the 'Slumber Song' from the 'Christmas Oratorio.' The evening was concluded with the 'Meistersinger' Overture.

On February 20, at a meeting of the local branch of the British Music Society, Mr. H. V. Dodds gave a talk to students on 'The Message of Music.' Taking examples from the pianoforte compositions of Schumann, Chopin, Debussy, Scott, Bridge, Ireland, and others, he described the mental pictures suggested by each piece, and went on to say that while the message of a particular composition would not be the same to every listener, some image or mood ought to be called to life by its performance.

On March 5 Mr. G. T. Holst visited the city and conducted a splendid performance of his 'Hymn of Jesus,' given by the Bach Choir. He was particularly pleased with the flexibility of the choir, which, he said, rivalled that of a first-rate orchestra. Mr. E. J. Potts sang groups of Hebridean and Northumbrian folk-songs in his usual convincing style, and the string orchestra, with Misses E. Pringle and F. Gavin, under the direction of Mr. W. G. Whittaker, gave a charming performance of Bach's Concerto for two violins.

The Monkseaton Musical Society, under Mr. A. F. Milner, gave Stanford's 'Revenge' on March 8.

On March 9 and 10 the Armstrong College Choral Society sang Holst's 'Hymns from the Rig Veda' (Group 1), and three of Whittaker's North County Folk-song arrangements. The choral work was well done, but the Veda hymns lose much by being robbed of their orchestral accompaniment. The pianoforte version was almost entirely smothered by the voices. The newly-formed orchestra—composed of students, assisted by one or two professionals—gave Mozart's 'Haffner' Symphony, Gluck's 'Alceste' Overture, and dances from Rameau's 'Castor and Pollux' with well-balanced ensemble and crispness of attack. The wood-wind was particularly good. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The programme of the 'international celebrity' concert on February 15 was of the very popular order, and introduced Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, M. Jean Vallier, and Miss Marie Hall. Mr. Mostyn Thomas created something of a sensation at the Quinlan concert on February 16, on which occasion Madame Miriam Licette also sang, and M. Moritz Rosenthal's pianoforte solos, together with Madame Guilhermina Suggia's violoncello playing, made a memorable evening.

An interesting lecture was given by Mr. Allen Gill on February 17, when Mr. B. E. Baggaley gave a reception to choir-masters, organists, and choir members of the County Congregational Union. Following Mr. Gill's address a good musical programme was filled by the Castle-gate Male Quartet and others. On the same evening the City Police Band's annual concert took place under Inspector J. H. Hewett's direction. The soloists were Miss Megan Foster, Mr. Herbert Brown, and Mr. Archie Naish. On February 28 Mr. W. Turner's Ladies' Prize Choir attracted a good audience and gave numerous part-songs with delightful effect, and solos were contributed by several members of the choir. On March 2 the last People's concert of the season brought Sir Henry Wood and the Hallé Orchestra. Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony provided the chief item of the programme, which also embraced several Wagner numbers, Brahms' 'Hungarian Dances,' and Percy Grainger's 'Mock Morris.'

The William Woolley Choral Society's annual concert was given on March 3, and provided some admirable unaccompanied part-singing. The 'Oriana' school of madrigalists was represented by Michael Este's 'Hence, stars,' and Wilbye's 'Ye that do live,' and of the moderns the chief were Bainton's 'Ballad of Semmerwater' and Bantock's 'Death of Morar.' The last-named Ossianic lay from 'The Songs of Selma' presents numerous difficulties, but the choir surmounted these brilliantly. Solos were given by Miss Ada Watson, Miss Elsie Baggaley, Mr. Ernest Carnall, and Mr. Harry Stafford.

Under Mr. W. Turner, the Nottingham Philharmonic Society gave a concert on March 5, and sang with considerable effect such favourites as Hiles' 'Hushed in Death,' Bishop's 'Now tramp o'er Moss and Fell,' and Sullivan's 'O Gladstone Light.' Dvorák's 'Now all gives way,' from 'St. Ludmila,' provided an element of novelty. Miss Florence Mellors was the solo vocalist, and Mr. and Mrs. Hodgkinson contributed violoncello and pianoforte solos acceptably.

At the final University College chamber music concert on March 10, great disappointment was experienced by Miss Cantelo's many admirers at her enforced absence through illness. The London String Quartet therefore provided the entire programme, which had to be considerably altered. Mozart's Quartet in D minor, Debussy's Quartet (Op. 10, No. 1) in G, Beethoven's Quartet (Op. 95) in F minor, Tchaikovsky's Andante Cantabile (from Op. 11), and Percy Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore' were magnificently played, and received with great enthusiasm. The Lady Bay Male-Voice Choir gave a concert on the same date at West Bridgford, when, along with the Suburban Quartet, the singers were heard in various part-songs. Mr. F. H. Parr conducted, and solos were contributed by Miss E. Richardson, Mr. J. H. Bradley, and Mr. H. Shipley.

The state of Nottingham's musical barometer is indicated by the fact that the Quinlan concert arranged for February 26 had to be abandoned for lack of adequate support, so the local concert-goers were deprived of an opportunity for hearing the Beecham Orchestra. The Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Landon Ronald, did, however, materialise on March 11. The programme was not remarkable for novelty, but the items given were played to perfection. Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 took pride of place, followed by Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture, the 'Valse Triste' of Sibelius, Järnefelt's 'Preludium,' and the Overture to 'Tannhäuser.' The vocalist was Miss Lei Megane, who contributed several songs in her own tongue, which she contrived to make mellifluous.

OTHER TOWNS

The Long Eaton Orchestral Society's second concert was held on February 24, under Mr. F. Mountney's direction when an interesting programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, Elgar's 'Bavarian Dances,' and two movements from Beethoven's Symphony No. 8. Madam Laura Evans-Williams' vocal solos met with appreciation, and did Mr. Felix Salmond's violoncello pieces. On March 1, the Long Eaton Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha.' Mr. E. Smeeton acted as honorary conductor, the principals being Miss Florence Mellors, Mr. W. Boland, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

The Grantham Philharmonic Society, on March 10, gave a performance of Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' and Goring Thomas' 'The Sun-whippers.'

On March 2, the Derby Orchestral Society's annual concert proved very successful under Dr. J. F. Staton's able direction. Interest was attached to the first performance at Derby of Dr. Staton's Overture to 'Enceladus.' An orchestral suite by Eric Coates also possessed local interest, while Dvorák's 'Carnaval Overture,' Worme's 'Prodigal Son' suite, and Delibes' Intermezzo from 'Naila' proved unhackneyed. Miss Agnes Nicholls delighted the audience with numerous songs. The Derby Orpheus Society gave a fine concert on March 4, when Dr. Claypoole conducted, and maintained the standard of excellence the Society has gained. Very popular items were the Rill's 'Waltz of Dreamland' and 'Martyrs of the Arena.' Miss Doreen Kendal contributed vocal solos, and Mr. P. Beard was appreciated as violinist.

On February 14, the fourth Leicester chamber concert took place, when the Ladies' String Quartet, Miss Constan Hardcastle, and Mr. Frank Dyson were the executors. The programme included Boccherini's Quartet in A (Op. 3, No. 6), Dvorák's Quartet in A flat (Op. 105), and the 'Laudrey's Suite' of Herbert Howells.

OXFORD

This term has indeed been a busy one. We have had visits from Her Majesty The Queen and the Prince, and abundance of music. It is possible to chronicle only of the main events. On January 20 the first concert to place at the Town Hall, and was given by the British Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boult. It opened with Elgar's Funeral March, played in memory of Gervase Elwes, who had been connected with Oxford for many years—since the time when, as an undergraduate, he played the violin in the Christ Church Musical Society. This concert was an excellent one, and especially good was the playing in the 'Flying Dutchman' Overture and Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony. Sad to relate, one of our most enlightened critics here said he hardly knew whether such a pot-pourri should be dignified by the title of a symphony! There was also clever work in the Debussy selection, notably in 'Jeux des Vagues' for harp, cello, and English horn, and brass. The concert concluded with a capital performance of Beethoven's fourth Symphony.

On February 10, at the Town Hall, Miss Myra Hess and Mr. A. Sammons gave an enjoyable concert, both artists being in splendid form.

On February 13 a concert on rather popular lines was given at the Town Hall for the benefit of the Infirmary, and was eminently successful. The programme included the 'Unfinished' Symphony, the five-four movement from the 'Pathétique,' and so forth. On March 3, also at the Town Hall, a capital programme was presented by the ford Orchestral Society assisted by London professional players. Weber's 'Oberon' Overture and Beethoven's 'Eonora' were especially well given. A feature of the concert was the playing of Miss Fanny Davies in Schumann's concerto, and she received quite an ovation. Missables very ably led the band, and Mr. Besley conducted. On March 4 Miss Lilius Mackinnon gave a pianoforte recital of modern music, in which she played beautifully throughout. On Sunday, March 6, in the Sheldonian, Hugh Allen directed an outstanding performance of Beethoven's Mass in D that musically was the great event of the term. The soloists—Miss Flora Mann, Miss Lilian Heger, Mr. Stuart Wilson, and Mr. Clive Carey—gave a general satisfaction, and the huge choir worked hard and came out well except in one or two places not worth particularising. The whole performance constituted a triumph for Oxford and for the Oxford Musical Society's untiring conductor.

The Professor of Music has given two lectures this term on the 'Life, Work, and Influence of Heinrich Schütz' (1585-1672), with illustrations. We have space to say only a few words about the illustrations revealed beautiful, and indeed, quite wonderful music for such an early date.

PORTSMOUTH

The present month brings to a close another very successful musical season at Portsmouth. Measured by the financial return some of the concerts given may not have yielded all that their promoters hoped for, but this was probably due in one or two instances to contiguity of dates, and there has been no lack of musical excellence. In fact, the past season has probably been unparalleled both in regard to the number and quality of the high-class concerts arranged. And if evidence were required of the quickening of musical appreciation in the borough it is to be found in the announcement that the subscribers' list of the Borough Portsmouth Philharmonic Society is at present full, and that already there have been applications from intending new subscribers to be placed on the waiting list.

Meeting at St. Thomas's Church on February 25, the members of the Portsmouth and District Branch of the Hampshire Association of Organists had the pleasure of listening to a recital by Mr. R. H. Turner, on the Church's organ, which has been recently restored. At the close, several members availed themselves of the opportunity of trying the instrument. The wonderful improvement effected both in tone and action was the subject of general comment.

The recently re-formed Excelsior Temperance Choral Society presented a programme of considerable merit at the Town Hall on March 3. Several well-known local artists at their assistance, but the feature of the concert was the art-songs by the choir, who gave evidence of careful training. Mr. C. Weedon conducted.

On the evening of Sunday, March 13, after the usual service at the Town Hall, the Clarion Temperance Choral Society gave a very fine interpretation of 'Hear my prayer' and 'The Holy City.' The soloists were Mrs. A. G. Hincham, Mrs. L. A. Coleman, Mr. W. Hearn, and Mr. C. Harvey. Mr. S. Martin conducted.

SOUTH WALES

Since the March issue no less than four 'celebrity' concerts have been held—all matinées—at the Cardiff Empire.

At the Quinlan concert on February 12, Madame Gatti, Miss Miriam Licette, Mr. Mostyn Thomas, and Mr. Rosenthal appeared. Increasing years have little or no effect on the eminent pianist's executive powers, as evidenced by his magnificent performance of Chopin's Sonata in B minor, and his own 'Humoresque on Themes by Johann Strauss.'

An event of potential importance to orchestral music in South Wales was the visit of the Beecham Orchestra on February 22, under the same concert direction. Conducted by Mr. Albert Coates, intimate interpretations were given of the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, the 'Cockaigne' Overture, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, and César Franck's

'Variations Symphoniques' for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo being sympathetically played by Miss Hilda Dederich, though she was overpowered at times by the orchestra. Mr. Mostyn Thomas sang with fervour excerpts from 'Pagliacci' and Borodin's 'Prince Igor.'

The fourth and fifth concerts of the Lionel Powell series were held on February 19 and March 12. At the former, an operatic programme was given by Mesdames Marie Hall, Rosina Buckman, and Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Maurice d'Oisy and Jean Vallier; at the latter, the artists were Miss Felice Lyne and Messrs. Huberman and Frederic Lamond. The concert was an outstanding event, the eminent Polish violinist, with his equally famous British confrère, giving a wonderful exposition of the 'Kreutzer' Sonata.

A French evening, greatly enjoyed, was given at the Cardiff Musical Club on March 4. Saint-Saëns was represented by a Trio and a Violoncello Concerto; Vincent d'Indy by a Lied for viola (contributed by Mlle. E. Wieniawska); and there were several vocal items by various modern French composers. Not the least delightful feature was the introductory and impromptu speech on the composers given by Dr. James Gilchrist.

The annual singing Festival of the United Congregational Churches of Dowlais and Penywyn was held at Bethania Chapel. This old established Festival is justly noted for its singing, and is eagerly looked forward to. The chapel was packed, and the lack of suitable accommodation for musical functions of any magnitude—a shortcoming prevalent throughout South Wales—was here acutely felt, as hundreds failed to get admission to the evening meeting.

The Treharris Orchestral Society of some fifty instrumentalists, under the conductorship of Mr. Oliver King, gave its fifth annual concert to a large and appreciative audience at the Public Hall, on March 9. The vocalists were Miss Alice Cappin and Mr. David Thomas. The chief orchestral items were the 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'Raymond,' 'William Tell,' and 'Poet and Peasant' Overtures, and Percy Fletcher's suite, 'Woodland Picture.' The whole programme was most acceptable, and furnishes an indication of the potentialities in instrumental music of a working-class combination with a working miner as conductor. The establishment of such orchestras in the populous mining centres of South Wales would go far to solve the question of a Welsh national orchestra.

Other performances of note were the production of 'Jephtha' by the Aberbargoed and District Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Gabriel, at Caersalem Chapel on the evenings of February 16 and 17, and of a 'Faust' selection, followed by miscellaneous items by the Heath (Cardiff) United Choral Society, with Mr. W. H. Short as conductor, at Cory Hall on February 23. On March 7, at the Paget Rooms, Penarth, Madame Elsa Tostia and her pupils delighted a large audience with a pianoforte programme (an annual concert the proceeds of which are devoted to charity). At one of the Cardiff Sunday concerts a Concerto for harp and orchestra, by Renie, was played at Park Hall on February 20, for the first time in this country. Mr. Tom Bryant, the soloist, was accompanied by the Mortimer Orchestra.

YORKSHIRE

BRADFORD

The visit of the London String Quartet on March 11, at one of the subscription chamber concerts, afforded one of the most delightful musical experiences that Bradford has enjoyed during the past month. Beethoven's second 'Rasoumovski' (E minor), Dvorák's 'Nigger,' and H. Waldo Warner's interesting 'Phantasy' on a Berkshire folk-song, were the chief features, and were brilliantly played. No less enjoyable was the concert of the same series on February 18, when the Catterall Quartet gave an admirable performance of Beethoven's great Quartet in B flat, Op. 130, coupled with a very fine example of Haydn in the Quartet in G, Op. 76, No. 1, and some short pieces. The Free chamber concerts, though they cannot attain to the same executive perfection, lack nothing in the interest of their programmes. On February 14, some chamber music was given in which the flute (Mr. J. Robinson) took part, including pieces by York Bowen, Godard, and Cui, with Violin Sonatas by Franck and Pierné, played by Miss Mabel Priestley and Mr. Midgley. Miss Nellie Judson was the vocalist. On February 28, Borodin's very pleasant Quartet in D was played by Mr. Edgar Drake's quartet party, which was joined by Mr. Midgley in Frank Bridge's brilliant Quintet in D minor. Mr. Percy Allatt sang a number of contemporary British songs. At the subscription concert on February 25 Miss Myra Hess and Miss Beatrice Harrison played Delius' poetic Violoncello Sonata, but the programme was otherwise not particularly interesting, though Miss Münthe-Kaas' singing was of a high order. At the concert of the Permanent Orchestra on February 19, Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the 'New World' Symphony and Miss Bessie Rawlins showed great executive ability in Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto. At the next concert, on March 12, Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Ida Bellerby as soloist, and Elgar's first 'Wand of Youth' Suite, were the principal things in the programme. Miss May Booth was the vocalist on the former, and Miss Alice Moxon on the latter occasion. With these concerts the Society's twenty-ninth season comes to an end, and that it feels the pinch of the times is apparent from an appeal for guarantors to make its thirtieth season secure. As the Society has done so much for the music of Bradford, there can be little doubt that the appeal will not fall on deaf ears. On February 17 the Beecham Orchestra appeared at one of the Quinlan concerts, and a programme of the type one expects at music-makings of this character (which place reliance chiefly upon familiar pieces) received ample justice under Mr. Albert Coates. Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, César Franck's Symphonic Variations, with Miss Hilda Dederich as soloist, and Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture, were the outstanding features.

LEEDS

Leeds can boast of having had during the past month two experiences of more than common interest. One was on February 15, when the Philharmonic Society gave the first performance in the county of Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' the power, and the strange but not incongruous blend of archaism and modernism, of which made an impression deep enough at any rate to inspire a wish to hear it again before it was in danger of being forgotten. Dr. Bairstow had taken very great pains in the work of preparation, and under his clear, decided beat a performance was given which, save for a certain sense of anxiety that precluded perfect ease, was of great excellence. Coupled with the Holst was Parry's 'St. Cecilia's Day,' the virile, genial quality of which made its revival very pleasant. Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. Herbert Parker were the principals, and the choir came off brilliantly in music so broadly effective. The other notable concert was the appearance of Mr. William Baines, the young Yorkshire composer, who on February 26 played before the Leeds Branch of the British Music Society twenty-two of his pianoforte compositions, that revealed a high degree of imaginative power, to which a thorough understanding of the technique of the instrument enables him to give full expression. He was introduced by Mr. Frederick Dawson, who, as a distinguished virtuoso, was able to give personal testimony to the qualities of Mr. Baines' work. The Saturday Orchestral Concert on February 26 brought Dvorák's Violoncello Concerto as its least familiar feature, the solo part being charmingly played by Miss Kathleen Moorhouse, an artist of whom Yorkshire has reason to be proud. Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations were also well played under Mr. Goossens' direction. The Leeds Symphony Society is an amateur body which has been in abeyance during the war, and has only just been revived under a new conductor, Mr. Harold Mason. Though its capacities are of course limited, its aim is high, and it does a good work in creating in its members a lively interest in orchestral music. On February 21, this Society gave Beethoven's first Symphony, and Elgar's 'Dream Children,' the last-named being made more interesting by the reading of Lamb's essay which suggested the work. On February 22, Mr. F. Blundell came over from Liverpool to give a pianoforte recital at the University, when he played Busoni's admirable transcription of Bach's Chaconne, which seems even better suited to the pianoforte than to the instrument for which it was designed. He also gave a very refined interpretation of Chopin's twenty-four Preludes (Op. 28). On March 1 Mr. Landon Ronald and the Albert Hall Orchestra appeared at the last of the 'international celebrity' concerts, and gave a brilliant performance of a rather ordinary programme, in which Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony was the chief feature. Miss Leila Megane was the vocalist, and her fine voice made a very favourable impression. The Leeds Bohemian Concerts ended on March 2, with a most interesting programme that included Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet (which loses nothing by repetition), and a similar work by Josef Suk of the famous Bohemian Quartet, which is effectively written and has attractive themes, but is not of sustained interest in development. Mr. Bensley Ghent's quartet, with Mr. Lloyd Hartley as pianist, gave a good account of the music. On March 11, Mr. Percy Richardson directed an excellent performance of Brahms' 'German Requiem' at St. Chad's Church. Miss Elsie Suddaby, Messrs. Peake and Birds were the soloists, and organ (Mr. Walter Walker) with timpani (Mr. Shaw) provided a very effective substitute for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD

The third of this season's Sheffield Promenade Concerts on February 23, was better attended than its predecessors, and proved musically a great success. The programme was exceptionally varied and interesting, and Sir Henry Wood made such good use of the time at his disposal in rehearsal that a very satisfactory standard of performance was achieved. The Brahms C minor Symphony provided the orchestra with its greatest opportunity. The Andante was, on the whole, the best played movement. Dr. Ethel Smyth's Prelude, 'On the Cliffs of Cornwall,' Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel' Pantomime music, and Moussorgsky's 'Gopak' from 'The Fair of Sorochinsk' were the other orchestral items. Miss Fanny Davies played charmingly a Mozart Concerto and César Franck's 'Les Djinns,' and was most cordially received.

Two visiting orchestras have given concerts recently in Sheffield. Mr. Albert Coates conducted the Beecham Orchestra, on February 14, at one of the Quinlan concerts with Miss Hilda Dederich, whose pianoforte playing in the 'Variations Symphoniques' of César Franck was excellent. With Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and the 'Cockaigne' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures included in the programme there was rather too much sheer noise for perfect comfort to say enjoyment. But Mr. Coates exploited the virtuosity of the famous orchestra to perfection.

Mr. Landon Ronald and the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, at the 'international celebrity' concert on March 9, gave brilliant performances of a number of popular works. The Symphony was Tchaikovsky's fifth, Järnefelt's 'Prelude' and Sibelius' 'Valse Triste' won tremendous applause, and the 'Ruy Blas' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures, with songs by Miss Leila Megane, completed the programme. Miss Megane sang delightfully and had triumph. Her Welsh folk-songs were especial favourites. This was by far the best-attended orchestral concert of the Sheffield season. A good many more people, in fact, wish to be present than Victoria Hall would hold.

At a previous 'international celebrity' concert a group of well-known operatic singers, with Miss Marie Hall as violinist, had formed the concert party. Miss Ros Buckman, Madame Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice d'Ois and M. Jean Vallier, sang various arias and concerted pieces from operas. Everything was encored, and the audience was obviously thoroughly happy.

There has been a good deal of musical activity at the University. The Edith Robinson Quartet played a marked success at the chamber concert on February 1. Mr. Arthur Hirst gave an enjoyable pianoforte recital on March 4, when he made enlightening comments on music, and preceded the recital with an entertaining discourse on 'The average Englishman's attitude towards music.' Both these events were arranged by the University Music Society, the choral branch of which gave a performance of Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' under the direction of Mr. G. E. Linfoot, at its Spring concert on March 1. The Sheffield Quartet contributed string quartets to the programme on this occasion, as well as forming the nucleus the orchestra in the cantata. The players are deservedly popular at the University.

The Eva Rich Tuesday and Foxon Five-o-Clock concerts have been continued, and have maintained their standard and popularity. Various choral organizations also have given concerts. The Y.M.C.A. Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Chisholm Jackson) in 'Hiawatha,' and the Victoria Hall Society (conductor, Mr. A. S. Burrows) in 'A Tale of Olden,' and other works, each found its season's source of inspiration in Coleridge-Taylor, and the Anston Musical Society added Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' to its excellent list of works performed. Mr. C. H. Biltcliffe's series of organ recitals have attracted good audiences to St. Augustine's Church. The Sheffield Education Committee, acting on the suggestion of its musical adviser, Mr. G. E. Linfoot, is giving concerts for the children of the elementary schools. Preliminary instruction is given and themes are sent. Mr. T. W. Hanforth recently gave an organ recital at the Cathedral to fifteen hundred scholars under this arrangement, when the intense interest of the children was a remarkable and encouraging.

OTHER TOWNS

The Halifax Choral Society brought its season to a close on March 3, with Parry's oratorio 'Judith,' which had not been heard in this district for a good many years. It is over twenty years since it was written, and it bears some marks of age, seeming 'old-fashioned' in comparison with the composer's later works. But it has power, sanity, and effectiveness, and under Mr. C. H. Moody's direction received an adequate interpretation. Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Powell were able principals. On the following day the Huddersfield Quartet was heard at one of the Halifax chamber concerts, which have suffered a severe loss in the death of an energetic and artistically enterprising lady who organized them with such good results. Quartets by Brahms (minor), Arensky, and Haydn formed the programme. The Huddersfield Choral Society gave its three hundredth concert on March 4, and celebrated the occasion by a programme of snippets from some of the most popularatorios and other choral works, e.g., 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Creation,' 'Mount of Olives,' 'Hymn of Praise,' Berlioz's 'Aust,' 'Golden Legend,' 'Hiawatha,' 'Blest Pair of Lovers,' and Bantock's 'Wilderness.' Dr. Coward conducted, and Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. John Bates were brilliant soloists. These fragments were of interest on paper than in performance, the effect of so many 'samples' being somewhat bewildering. The programme of the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, on February 22, was exceptionally strong. Only the absence of an orchestra prevented the performance of Brahms' Alto Rhapsody from being entirely satisfying, and Miss Phyllis Lett certainly added to her reputation by her artistic interpretation of the solo part. Three of Holst's 'Hymns from the Rig Veda' and some of his 'Eastern Pictures,' for female voices, Cornelius's 'Death,' and C. H. Lloyd's 'Rosy Dawn,' were among the other features. Mr. Sammons played some violin solos, and Mr. C. H. Moody conducted.

The Huddersfield Music Club is doing a good work in bringing to the town music of a type which has been somewhat neglected there, and on March 9 an excellent programme of chamber music was given by the Philharmonic String Quartet, which was heard in Quartets by Schumann, Debussy, and in shorter pieces by Herbert Howells (the 'Lady Audrey Suite'), Glazounov, and Borodin. The choir of the York Musical Society has under Mr. Bairstow made great strides in efficiency, and its powers were severely tested when, on March 8, it gave Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' and sang the very exacting music with the remarkable accuracy and ease. Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' made an effective contrast.

The village of Collingham is unique in its musical activities. On February 12 it had a chamber concert at which the César Franck Pianoforte Quintet was played by Mr. Ghent's quartet, with Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith as pianist. On February 26 Miss Marion Snowden gave a pianoforte recital, with Mrs. Alf Cooke as vocalist, and on March 5 Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Hamilton Harty joined in a vocal recital. Surely this is a very remarkable record! Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' seems to belong to a past age, and its revival by the Pudsey Choral Union on March 7 is noteworthy. The work was adequately given under Mr. H. H. Pickard's direction, but has hardly such vitality as to enable it to withstand changes of fashion. Some educational recitals given in St. Margaret's Church, Ilkley, have proved of a character that deserves imitation. The last of the series, on March 3, was happily designed to illustrate Bach. Mr. Harold Helman, who organizes these concerts, played some pianoforte pieces, including transcriptions by A. M. Henderson and the solo part in the 'Brandenburg' Concerto in D. Mr. Harvey Grace played organ solos, and Mr. Stanley Winter sang some of the bass solos from the 'St. Matthew' Passion. The programme included a brief life of Bach and explanations of some of the technical terms employed, so that listeners were greatly assisted to an intelligent appreciation of what they heard.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The invitation to be present at the reading held on the subject of Javanese music was gratefully accepted by those interested in the musical art of Oriental nations. The Amsterdam Music Pædagogic Union having secured as lecturer the Javanese music professor Soorjo Pootro, many were able to gather information from an authentic source.

Dr. Muck's sudden illness was happily of only short duration. He will, however, have felt his misfortune all the more since on the very day of his falling ill the programme contained a work of Ernest Bloch, whose cause he has advocated ever since he met the young composer at Boston. Perhaps in Muck's interpretation Bloch's 'Trois poèmes Juifs' might have scored a better success. Anyhow, I doubt whether the music possesses that merit which is claimed for it; but it cannot be denied that the works of Bloch show a decided individuality of character. Thin homophonic structure and peculiar harmonization, along with a certain rhythmic uniformity, combine to suggest a melancholy atmosphere that is typically Jewish. One of the last orchestral concerts brought us two charming novelties—an overture to an old Dutch comedy and a 'Boorish' Suite—by the nestor of Dutch composers, Julius Röntgen. I venture to say that those who have been to Holland will agree that this composer's music happily reflects both the gay and the contemplative moods of our peasantry. One really could enjoy the unassuming cleverness and the thoroughly genuine hilarity of Röntgen's new compositions. The contrast with a new work by Willem Pyper, a representative of the younger generation of Dutch composers—a Septuor for wind instruments, double-bass, and pianoforte—was very striking. It made one feel completely miserable. It is a matter for regret that so many young musicians are showing nothing but morbidity in their musical utterances. The extremely difficult work was very well played by the Concertgebouw Chamber Music Society, a body of artists who undertake the task of executing rarely heard works. A few weeks ago they made us acquainted with the beautiful chamber-symphony by Paul Juon, and a very agreeable work on the same lines by Wolf-Ferrari. Among the soloists who have appeared at the orchestral concerts I must first name Mr. Frederick Lamond, not only on account of his masterly playing but also because he was our guest during the long years of the war and had become an almost indispensable part of our musical circle. Splendid impressions were again revived by the excellent pianist M. Joseph Pembaur and the famous violinist M. Carl Flesch, who introduced here Dohnányi's new Violin Concerto. Of chamber music societies mention must be made of the wonderful Budapest String Quartet and the splendid Reinische Trio. Well-known violinists such as MM. Teemany and Burmester have appeared repeatedly—of them nothing new can be said. That wonderful, almost classical, violinist, M. Lucien Capet, gave a sonata evening in company with the pianist M. Paul Loyonnet, who, in a pianoforte recital of his own works, proved to be an unrivalled interpreter of pièces by Couperin, Debussy, and Ravel. As a pianist of no less eminent attainments, M. Carl Friedberg succeeded in arousing universal interest. Of master-violoncellists we have heard M. Gerard Hekking—who during the war fought in the ranks of the French Army—and the young M. Max Orobio de Castro, whose artistic progress is moving onwards with rapid strides. My letter would not be complete if I omitted to mention three singers who shine out brightly among their sisters in art. Of these, Madame Charles Cahier appeared at two successive symphony concerts. I had not heard her since 1913, when she represented the part of Fides in Meyerbeer's 'Le Prophète,' a performance I had the pleasure to conduct. The years have passed without making any perceptible alteration in her singing powers. Another singer, Madame Suzanne Laugée, came over from Paris. She made an exceedingly deep impression, proving that—even with a voice beyond its prime—a true artist should not fail to delight an audience. The last, though not the least, was our own Mlle. Suze Luger, of whom we all are reasonably proud. The faultless training of her beautiful mezzo-soprano voice, together with her first-rate interpretative gifts, ought to secure for her international fame could she be induced to seek it abroad.

W. HARMANS.

MILAN

The administrative commission of the Scala recently held a meeting, under the presidency of Advocate Caldara, who signified the commission's decision to make every effort towards more rapidly completing the stage alterations in order to reopen the doors of the theatre to a season of opera, 1921-22, and thus fulfil a moral obligation towards the citizens of Milan, subscribers, and box-holders, even at the cost of incurring extra expenditure. It is expected that Boito's 'Nerone' will be the opening feature of the forthcoming Scala season.

The first of a series of concerts organized to take place at the Teatro del Popolo was given on February 13, and music of Smetana, S. Magrini, Elgar, Grieg, Respighi, Bazzini, and Seligmann, was performed by the Martinotti-Foà-Pinfari trio in conjunction with Signora Ada Maria Mosca, Maestro Romolo Bartoli, the Società Corale, Vincenzo Bellini, and by pupils of the Royal Conservatorium, with Maestro Cesare Chiesa. Braccesco's 'De Profundis e Requiem' was also executed.

On February 23, Signor Ferenc de Vecsey, the violinist, gave a recital in the hall of the Royal Conservatorium before a large audience. One can only say that his playing was faultless.

E. HERBERT-CESARI.

PARIS

OPERA

Opera, as usual, is drawing all musical Paris. At the Théâtre National de l'Opéra 'Thaïs,' with M. Journet as Athanaël, and 'Paillasse,' with the same artist as Tonio, have proved attractions; and 'Die Walküre,' with Madame Demougeot as Brunnhilde, Madame Lubin as Sieglinde, M. Franz as Siegmund, and M. Delmas as Wotan, has been 'played to capacity.' It may seem strange to find M. Journet as a tenor. He will be remembered by pre-war Covent Garden habitués for his Marcel ('Les Huguenots'), Ramphis ('Aida'), and other bass parts. But since those days his voice has taken an upward tendency. Vincent d'Indy's 'La Légende de St. Christophe' has been repeated several times, the success of the work being greatly due to M. Franz's well-thought-out conception and fine interpretation of the two tenor rôles. Admirable, too, is the skill with which he manages his ample voice. Mention may also be made of M. Rouard, who is the fortunate possessor of one of those round, rich voices of the Sammarco type. This very capable baritone sings with distinction and acts with intelligence, a comparatively rare combination.

At the Opéra-Comique the course of events runs evenly and successfully. 'Manon,' 'Mignon,' 'Le Roi d'Ys,' and the rest of the répertoire, draw full houses. 'Forfaiture,' Erlanger's lurid opera, is a welcome addition, for it is something out of the common. M. Vanni-Marcoux has made a particularly clever and effective character-study of the part entrusted to him.

Many notable operas have been performed at the Théâtre Lyrique during the past few weeks, amongst them being Grétry's 'Richard Cœur de Lion,' as well as his 'Les Deux Aïeules' (the last-named may be commended to English opera companies). Paër's 'Le Maître de Chapelle' had several representations; as also has Adam's 'Si j'étais Roi.' The répertoire, in short, is a most educational one and students very properly make its acquaintance. It has lately been varied by 'Les Mousquetaires au Couvent,' 'La Mascotte,' the evergreen 'Cloches de Corneville,' and other light works, most of which were well sung. Last night, in night out, the house has been packed.

Madame Blanche Marchesi, who has been followed in Paris by several members of her school, is meeting with welcome both for her own sake and for her mother's. 'She has,' says a Paris critic, 'the knack of inspiring those who she instructs.' Two of her pupils, Mr. Eric Greenwood and Miss Lloyd-Owen, recently sang with gratifying success.

M. Huberman has reappeared at Paris, his concert at the Salle Gaveau having drawn a very large audience. His exquisite tone and exceptional virtuosity were heard at the best in a programme which included Bach, Paganini, and Smetana; and at the conclusion of the concert he received an ovation. 'Qu'il revienne' echoes the wish of all who 'assisted.'

Under the auspices of the Cercle Musical Universitaire a most interesting concert has been given, the programme consisting of the works of Lully. The Society, which exploits all that is best in French music from the moyenne à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, was fortunate in its singers Mlle. Madeleine Bonnard, Mlle. Madeleine Picard, M. Charles Sautet, and M. Narçon, the instruments used being those of the period. The eighteen items included 'Somme nous pas trop heureux?' from the 'Ballet de l'Impatience' (1661), 'Rochers vous êtes sourds,' from the 'Ballet de la Naissance de Venus' (1665), 'Bacchus veut qu'on boive' from 'Psyché' (1671), and other equally representative examples of the creator of French opera.

Another event of the month has been the musical given by Madame Blanche Marchesi, who sang with her customary skill the 'Liebstod' from 'Tristan und Isolde,' Sigurd Lieke's atmospheric 'La Neige,' and Rimsky-Korsakov's 'La Ronde et le Rossignol,' the flute part in the last-named being beautifully played by M. Louis Fleury.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

The concert season proceeds with remarkable success; indeed, it is almost to be regretted that there are so many concerts at Rome this year. Coincidence of time-tables is not always avoidable, and as the musical public, if large, is generally composed of much the same people, it occasionally happens that first-class concerts are very poorly attended. Another remarkable fact at Rome is the absolute impossibility of inducing the public to attend evening concerts. A concert for 9.0 p.m. is to court almost certain failure as regards the box office. The favourite hours are from 4.0 to 5.30, and in the case of a programme lasting later than 7.0, a general exodus at that hour takes the result.

One of the best concerts of the month was lamentably patronised on account of the lateness of the hour—9.0 p.m. This was the first concert given at the Philharmonic Society rooms by the Lehner Quartet, of Budapest. The entire audience did not amount to a hundred, but the few people who did take the trouble to attend were amply repaid by the marvellous tone-colour and perfect fusion which, un-discouraged by the scanty attendance, the four young artists produced. The programme comprised three quartets—Schubert in D minor, Ravel in F, and Haydn in D major.

The Albert Zimmer Quartet has also been heard in Rome. This organization comes from Belgium, and is named after the first violin of the party. The object of the visit was to participate in the Beethoven commemorative. In the course of six consecutive concerts at the Accademia di Sta. Cecilia, all Beethoven's quartets were performed, and evoked the highest enthusiasm from the public, who in this case crowded the hall to overflowing—but the house was 4.0 p.m.!

THE AUGUSTEUM

at the time of writing, Franz Schalk, the director of the Vienna Opera, is paying his first visit to Rome. It may be said of this artist that probably his intrinsic gifts have conferred celebrity so much as his official position and collaboration with Strauss. It may be mentioned in passing that he was at Covent Garden in 1898. Italians regard him with gratitude on account of his patronage of Italian works at Vienna, where quite recently the success of Verdi's new Trilogy was largely due to his direction. His visit to Rome is also occasioned by the Beethoven centenary. It is intended to present all the symphonies during the season. Schalk has directed the Ninth, in a programme that included also the 'Coriolanus' Overture; Strauss' 'Also sprach Zarathustra'; 'Siegfried's Ride on the Rhine'; and the 'Freischütz' Overture. On February 20 a new composition, that had raised keen expectation and not a little controversy, attracted a huge audience. The work was a series of seven Symphonies, written by Ezio Carabella, a young Roman not thirty years old, who has studied at Pesaro. Interest was naturally inspired by the fact of the young composer being chosen to imitate Elgar in an inimitable composition, in Italy—or at any rate at Rome—Elgar is justly venerated. It was feared that Carabella might have been too audacious. The presentation of the work, however, under Molinari's direction, was a splendid success, and indisputably established the composer's reputation.

NEW CLARINET SONATA

Among the extra-ordinary concerts of the month I must omit to mention one given at the Philharmonic Hall, in which a new and notable composition of Giacomo Setaccioli was its baptism. Signor Setaccioli is the director of the Philharmonic Society, and his new work, which bears the title No. 31, is a Sonata in E flat major, for clarinet and piano. The clarinet as a solo instrument is not much favoured to-day, and Setaccioli has followed the lead of Strauss in trying to restore it to its place of honour. The new work, in three movements, had a great success, and was very favourably received by all the critics, who recognize in Signor Setaccioli one of the foremost musicians of Rome has produced.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

The most interesting musical event at Vienna recently has been the production of Rimsky-Korsakov's ballet 'Sheherazade' on February 5, by the Opera Ballet. Of course it was not to be expected that the production would be up to the standard of the Russian performances, but I was agreeably surprised to note that, both in dancing and in music effects, it far exceeded anything the Ballet had previously done. The principal rôle was taken by Herr Tray, a guest from the Deutsches Theatre, Berlin, who played the part of a slave of the Harem, an addition to the ballet as performed by the Russians. The Strauss ballet 'The Legend of Joseph,' with which the Vienna Opera is already familiar, will be produced shortly under the direction of the composer. It will no doubt seem strange that this work, which contains some of the best music Strauss has written, should never have been played at the Vienna Opera of which he is Director. The reason is that up to quite recently the State Ballet has not had a male dancer capable of sustaining the principal part.

On February 10 'Tosca' was given, with Fraulein Schwarz, of the Berlin Opera, in the title-rôle. Other guests of the month who have been appearing during February with considerable success were Frau Ivögun, of the Munich Opera, Zerbinetta in 'Ariadne auf Naxos'; Gilda in 'Rigoletto'; Mimì in 'Bohème' during her stay; and Michael Bohnen, the German baritone, who appeared as Prometheus in 'Faust,' Escamillo in 'Carmen,' and Don José in 'Aida.' At the 'Faust' performance Bohnen's singing of the drinking song resulted in a burst of applause lasting over seven minutes, and the opera was only allowed to continue after a repetition had been given. On February 21 the Philharmonic Choir and Orchestra gave a notable performance of the Mozart 'Requiem' at the Musikvereinsalle.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

Four orchestral concerts are announced by Mr. Edward Clark, who was associated in turn with M. Ansermet and Mr. Adrian Boult as conductor of the Russian Ballet during its seasons at the Alhambra and Empire Theatres. They are to take place on April 8 (evening), April 20 and May 6 (afternoon), and May 20 (evening), the first and fourth at Queen's Hall, and the second and third at Aeolian Hall. The programmes promise to be of unusual interest. At the first concert there will be first performances of Arnold Bax's song-cycle with orchestra 'The Bard of Dimbovitz,' and the new suite which Stravinsky adapted in 1919 for a reduced orchestra from the music of his ballet 'The Fire-bird.'

Four works new to London were introduced by the Hampstead branch of the British Music Society at University College School on February 24. These were J. R. Heath's 'Il bosco sacro' for female voices, string quartet and harp, a string-and-harp Quintet by Arnold Bax, a Choral Nocturne by Herbert Bedford, and Arthur Bliss' 'Rout.' The choir was Mr. Herman Klein's 'Cecilia.' The programme of the Blackheath branch on March 12 contained four songs by Leigh Henry, sung by Miss Ethel Waddington, and four of his pianoforte pieces, played by the composer.

At a recent meeting of the Petersfield Literary and Debating Society, Mr. D. R. McConnell gave an account of the Festival which took place at Geneva in July, 1914, to celebrate the centenary of Geneva's entrance into the Swiss Confederation. Of particular interest was his description of the historical pageant originated by M. Jaques-Dalcroze and given in a large theatre, close to the lake, with the lake itself as a background. Some illustrations of the music were given by a juvenile choir under Mr. Basil Gimson.

Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb (34, Percy Street, London, W. 1), have organized a scheme, under the title of 'The Robert Goodwin Library of Manuscripts,' which is designed to facilitate the performance of MS. works. Composers are invited to deposit their MSS. in the Library, and Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb will give them publicity in printed lists and negotiate for the hire of copies.

The Glastonbury Festival School announces an Easter Festival to be held on March 31-April 2. The works to be performed are Rutland Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour,' Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' 'Music comes,' a ballet by P. Napier Miles to a poem by John Freeman, and Boughton's 'The Moon Maiden.' The Festival ends with a concert of old English and modern music.

The London Chamber Concert Society has arranged five evening concerts at Wigmore Hall, on April 5, 12, 19, 26, and May 3. The programmes include chamber music by Holbrooke, Ethel Smyth, Ravel, d'Erlanger, Jenkins, Bax, and others.

Dr. W. A. Hall gave a lecture on Coleridge-Taylor and his music at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Eastbourne, on March 7. Illustrations were provided by the lecturer, and by Miss Molly Curry (vocalist), and Mr. W. J. Read (violinist).

Madame Lily Payling, a contralto well-known in Australia, is giving a concert at the Royal Albert Hall on April 21, in aid of the West London Hospital.

Answers to Correspondents

CURIOSITY.—(1) So far as we know the development of pianoforte technique has never been treated exhaustively, though no doubt a good many magazine articles on the subject have appeared. Part iii. of Krehbiel's 'The Pianoforte and its Music' consists of a sketch of the subject. (2) Write to Mr. Percy Scholes, The Music Student, Montagu House, Russell Square, W.C. 1.

QUESTIONER.—We know of no books on harmony or composition of the type you mention. If you mean the Eurhythmic method, write M. Jaques-Dalcroze, 23, Store Street, W.C. 1. But no good modern primer treats either subject apart from the rhythmic basis.

UPTON.—The application of the Sol-fa system to the reading of plainsong is surely not difficult. The clef gives the doh (or the fa, which in this connection may be regarded as doh), and the reading is plain sailing on the movable doh system.

INQUIRER.—Kan-tih-be-lay is so near that you need not worry about getting nearer.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
The Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall and the Royal Choral Society. I. The Building and its Purpose. By Herman Klein ( illustrated )	229
Perry as a Song Writer. By H. C. Colles ( concluded )	235
Modern French Composers: I. How they are encouraged. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	238
The Organ Works of Bach. VII. The Choral Preludes in the 'Clavierübung.' By Harvey Grace	240
Italian Composers of To-day: III.—Victor de Sabata. By Guido M. Gatti	244
New Light on Early Tudor Composers: XVI. William Whytbrooke. By W. H. Grattan-Flood	246
Barbellion on Music. By Harold Rawlinson	247
A Modern Classicist: Roger-Ducasse. By Alfred J. Swan	250
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	252
Mr. Huneker and the Melting Pot	254
The Music of Thomas Hardy. By F. Hadland Davis	255
The Importance of Correct Placing of the Voice. By Charles Tree	258
Warring Schools in France	263
New Music	264
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	267
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	270
Choral Notes and News	270
Canon Pemberton. By J. A. Fuller-Maitland	271
Chamber Music for Amateurs	272
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	273
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	274
Church and Organ Music	275
Rhythm in Hymn-tunes. By C. F. Abdy Williams	275
Letters to the Editor	278
Sixty Years Ago	279
Obituary	280
Some Recent Tendencies in Composition	280
Royal Academy of Music	281
The Glasgow Orpheus Choir	281
The Carnegie Trust	281
British Music in Paris	282
Music in the Provinces	282
Musical Notes from Abroad	293
Miscellaneous	295
Answers to Correspondents	295
'Diaphenia.' Part-Song for Four Voices. By JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS	299

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with Number:

1. 'Peace I leave with you.' Anthem for Tenor Solo and Chorus. By J. Varley Roberts.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BAKER, A. E.—'At the Cross.' Anthem for Treble Voices. Suitable for Lent. (No. 67, Novello's Chorister Series.) 3d.

CARSE, ADAM.—'Barbara Allen.' Variations for String Orchestra. Conductor (Condensed Score or Pianoforte ad lib.) 2s. 3d.; 1st Violin, 1s. 6d.; 2nd Violin, 1s. 6d.; Viola, 1s. 6d.; Cello and Bass, 1s. 6d.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—'Eleanore.' Song. In C. For Tenor. 2s.

FARRAR, ERNEST.—'O Mistress Mine.' Song. In F and A flat. 2s. each.

JACKSON, G. BARROWS.—'Midsummer.' Song-Cycle. 2s. 6d.

JOHNSON, J. ST. A.—'Tam o' Shanter.' A Tale by Robert Burns. For Tenor Solo and Chorus. 4s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

KILBURN, N.—'The Queen's Hunting Song.' Words by Ben Jonson. For Chorus, two Trumps and Strings. 1s.

LEE, ARTHUR.—'Hester.' Song. In B flat major and D minor. 2s. 6d. each.

MAUDE, CAROLINE.—Three Dances. Pianoforte Solo. 2s.

PARRY, C. H. H.—'An English Suite.' For String Orchestra. Score, 8s. 1st Violin, 2s. 6d.; Violin, 2s.; Viola, 2s.; Violoncello, 2s.; Bass, 2s.

ROBERTS, J. VARLEY.—'Let us go forth.' For Anthems. 2d.

—'God so loved the world.' From 'The Passion' (No. 238, Novello's Short Anthems.) 3d.

—'Whosoever shall do the will of My Father.' From 'The Passion' (No. 239, Novello's Short Anthems.) 3d.

—'For a small moment.' From 'The Passion' (No. 240, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

—'Is it nothing to you.' From 'The Passion' (No. 241, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

ROBERTS, W. H.—'Praise for the Gospel.' Welsh Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa. Welsh English words. 2d.

ROWLEY, ALEC.—'Andante Religioso.' (No. 345, Original Compositions for the Organ. (C Series.) 1s. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 346) contains the following music in both notations: 'The Holy Unison Song by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS. "The children sliding on the ice." Unison Song to an old air.

SHARP, CECIL J.—Nursery Songs from the Appalachians. Mountains. Arranged with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Illustrated in Silhouette by Esther B. MacKinnon. Paper Boards. 7s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2346. 'Crucifixus and Et resurrexit.' (Mass in B minor.) J. S. BACH.

No. 2347. 'Peace I leave with you.' J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

No. 2349. 'A Shepherd in a shade.' JOHN DOWLAND.

No. 2352. 'Jesu! the very thought is sweet.' T. L. DA VITTORIA.

No. 2354. 'Sing, shepherds all.' Madrigal for five voices. RICHARD NICOLSON.

WHITE, FELIX.—'Golden Slumbers.' Song. The poem by Thomas Dekker. In F and G. 2s. each.

—'Sing, care away.' Song. The poem from Thomas Morley's Madrigals. In E flat and F. 2s. each.

—'Thou hast left me ever, Jamie.' Song. The poem by Robert Burns. In D minor and E minor. 2s. each.

WILLIAMS, JOHN GERRARD.—'Pot-Pourri.' Cycle of Fragments. 1st Violin, 8d.; 2nd Violin, 8d.; Viola, 1s.; Violoncello, 8d.; Bass, 8d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

AUDSLEY, G. A.—'Organ Stops and their Art.' Registration. Cloth.

BINGHAM, SETH.—'My true love hath my heart.' Chorus for S.S.A. 10 cents (4d.).

—'Hymn to Pan.' Chorus for S.S.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—'Spring, the sweet Spring.' Chorus for S.S.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—'The Invitation.' Chorus for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (6d.).

—'Rosalynd's Madrigal.' Chorus for S.S.A. 15 cents (8d.).

FORSYTH, CECIL.—'London Bridge is broken down.' For Solo and Chorus S.S.A. 15 cents (8d.).

FRISKIN, JAMES.—'The Principles of Pianoforte Practice.'

JAMES, PHILIP.—'The Light of God.' An 11-part Legend for Baritone Solo and Chorus.

—'Moonlight.' Song. For High Voice. 2s. 6d.

—'When thou commandest me to sing.' Song. 2s. 6d.

NEARING, H. C.—'Scenes from a Mexican Deity.' Five Pieces for the Organ. $1.50 (6s.).

ELKIN &amp; CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS

THREE PASTORAL SONGS

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

POEMS BY JOSEPH CAMPBELL.

1st Edition (Voice, Piano, Violin, and 'Cello),
7s. net.

Edition for Voice and Piano only, 4s. net.

Will go with my father a-ploughing.

Merry Valley.

I wish and I wish.

IN TWO KEYS.

FOR MEDIUM OR HIGH VOICE.

A WORLD-WIDE SUCCESS.

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT).

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

	Price Net.	s.	d.
CORONACH—Piano Solo ... ..	2	0
CORONACH—Organ ... .. (Arr. by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)	2	0
CORONACH—Full Orchestra ... .. (Including Piano Conductor.)	2	0
CORONACH—Arranged for Piano, two Violins, 'Cello, Bass ad lib.	2	6

"Pianists who love to hear their instruments sing will welcome this delightfully impressive song-without-words, not alone for its inviting subject-matter but for its unconventional harmonic dress and rich chordal colouring."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

Times, September 19, 1920. "Useful advice, clearly stated and efficiently arranged, on the subject of preparing musical MS. for the press. There is a delightful preface by Sir Edward Elgar, makes one wonder more than ever what subject there is of which he has not penetrated below the surface."

Telegraph, October 30, 1920. "A preface by Sir Edward Elgar gives additional weight to a recent publication of Novello . . . 'System in Musical Notation,' by H. Elliot Button. Chapter after chapter the author gives unflinching commonsense reasons for a revised revision of our notation. Mr. Elliot Button has systematised the thing in an admirable text-book, the value of which can only be realised by a study of the illustrations. Here you will find passages taken from Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, etc., so set out that they are infinitely easier to read. . . . But the best of the improvements is in the direction of rhythmical notation, a phenomenon apparently due to the simple device of taking the crotchet as the pulse unit."

News, September 25, 1920. "The little book should be read by all who write music, for we lack definite rules in this matter, a thing that serves to draw composer, printer, and reader apart, and establish one custom or use in presenting musical notation to the public is to be commended."

The Queen, October 9, 1920. "The book is well-conceived and planned, and the author sweeps away preconceived ideas due to long usage wherever they obscure the issue from the performer's point of view. The chapter headings do not give much indication of the immense amount of information so succinctly packed into their pages. Sir Edward Elgar has confessed his indebtedness to the author (in the preface). Mr. Button deserves every praise for his valuable contribution to a much neglected subject."

Sunday Mercury, Birmingham, September 19, 1920. "The book deals expertly with the art of musical notation, so brilliantly and so usefully illuminated by Mr. Button, who has proved himself not only a finished expert, but also a public benefactor, showing as he does how scores, apparently intricate and obscure, can be made comparatively easy to read, and therefore more understandingly played. Originals are given side by side with the author's suggestions, and in all cases with illumination, and in some cases with results that may fairly be called amazing. The price of this quite penitible book makes it worth while for the amateur to place it in his collection; to the professional player and to the composer it will be invaluable."

Western Morning News, September 17, 1920. "If all writers would adopt Mr. Button's system the reader would be spared much confusion."

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purpose of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC for EASTER and WHITSUNTIDE

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

HEUM LAUDAMUS, in F, CHANT FORM ... ..	3d.
DICITE, OMNIA OPERA, in F ... ..	2d.
DICTUS AND JUBILATE, in F ... ..	6d.
ATE DOMINO AND DEUS MISEREATUR, in F ...	6d.
NIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, in E FLAT ...	4d.
NIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, in D ... ..	4d.
UNION SERVICE, in E, with BENEDICTUS
ND AGNUS DEI ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

E BELIEVE—EASTER ... ..	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
GOOD SHEPHERD—EASTER ... ..	4d.
LOVE ME—WHIT SUNDAY ... ..	3d.
GL MAGNIFY THEE—WHIT SUNDAY ... ..	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
MARIA—in SIX VOICES. SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLO,
WITH CHORUS ... ..	6d.
MARIA—SOPRANO SOLO—FOLIO ... ..	1s. 6d.
CHORUS—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens of any of the Compositions in this advertisement.

Address: 36, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SHORT AND EASY SETTING OF
THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

IN THE KEY OF E FLAT.

1. KYRIE.
2. RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS.
3. CREDO.
4. BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT
5. AGNUS DEI.
6. GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 35.)

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only (for congregational use) price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"SHEPHERD OF MEN"

CANTATA BY JOHN S. WITTY.

A Musical Treat. Send for Sample.

Your Choir must not miss the opportunity for rendering this ractive work.

ALSO

"THE SCENE ON CALVARY"

By F. W. PEACE.

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCTION.

Staff Notation, 2s. Sol-fa, 1s.

allow 25% Discount to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

BROADWAY AVENUE, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

TO BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

SONATA I. FOR PIANO.

(Price 10s. net.)

BY

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

ld Rights:

HE LONDON AND CONTINENTAL MUSIC PUBLISHING CO., LTD.,

40 and 41, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

Phone: Gerrard 1169.

THE SINGER'S ART (just Published). By

Agnes J. Larkcom. Price 2s.

London: Novello &amp; Company, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TOCCATA AND FUGUE
("THE WANDERER")

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

CHORALE FANTASIA

ON THE TUNE "HEINLEIN"

FOR THE ORGAN.

COMPOSED BY

JAMES E. WALLACE.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH
HARPSICHORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)
2. Petit air tendre ... L. J. Saint-Amans
3. La Bourrée de Vincent ... J. P. Rameau
4. Tambourin Chinois ... E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

BY

JAMES LYON, Mus. D. (Oxon.)

CHAPTERS: I. Introductory; II. Primary Triads, Major or Minor; III. The Secondary Triads; IV. General Information; V. The Inversions of the Diatonic Triads; VI. Sequences; VII. The Dominant Seventh; VIII. Cadences; IX. Modulation Part I; X. Chromatic Triads; XI. Unessential Notes; XII. Suspensions; XIII. Secondary Chords of the Seventh; XIV. The Dominant Ninth; XV. The Dominant Eleventh; XVI. The Dominant Thirteenth; XVII. Chromatic Fundamental Discords; XVIII. The Augmented Sixth; XIX. Chromatically Altered Chords; XX. Modulation, Part 2; XXI. Pedals; XXII. General Hints.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

THE COSMOS SERIES.

1. CHORAL LEAFLETS, VESPERS, INTROITS, ETC.
2. S.S. ANNIVERSARY MUSIC, HYMNS, SOLOS, ETC.
3. CHRISTMAS CAROLS, New and Original.

Specimens sent post free for 3d. in stamps. Mention this paper.

A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

GLENHOLME, THE COMMON, HESSLE, E. YORKS.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Four Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price Two Shillings each.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Five Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 2s. ; Part II., Price 3s.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Four Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price Two Shillings each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE. A SELECTED LIST.

SONATAS AND SUITES.

EDWARD ELGAR

SONATA

Price Twelve Shillings.

ERNEST FARRAR

CELTIC SUITE

Price Six Shillings.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

TWO SUITES

No. 1, in D. No. 2, in F.

Price Seven Shillings each.

ARTHUR HINTON

SUITE

Price Ten Shillings.

A. C. MACKENZIE

PIBROCH SUITE

Price Twelve Shillings.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

SUITE PITTORESQUE

Price Twelve Shillings.

SHORT PIECES.

JOHN IRELAND

BAGATELLE

Price Three Shillings.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE

SOUVENIR DE PRINTEMPS

Price Three Shillings.

H. WALFORD DAVIES

SOLEMN MELODY

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

A. C. MACKENZIE

BENEDICTUS

From Six Pieces, Op. 37.

Price Three Shillings.

J. B. McEWEN

SIX HIGHLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings each.

HAMISH MACCUNN

ROMANCE IN G

Price Three Shillings.

H. WALDO WARNER

SCHERZO

Price Three Shillings.

JOHN E. WEST

IN THE SPRING

Price Three Shillings.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER, JUN.

SOUVENIR

Price Three Shillings.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

AIR À DANSER

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

SERENADE

From the Wand of Youth Suite, No. 1.

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE MATIN

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE NUIT

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDWARD ELGAR

PASTOURELLE

Price Three Shillings.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.

On Wings of Delight.

In C (Compass, A to C), E flat, and F.

Price 2s. each.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).

Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.

Price 1s. 6d.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.
Price 2s. each.

J. St. A. JOHNSON—

Sandy the Piper.

In E (Compass, C sharp to F sharp)

The Fiddler.

In A minor (Compass, C to F)

Price 2s. each.

W. McNAUGHT—

The Piper.

In D (Compass, D to D) E flat, and 1

Price 2s.

REGINALD STEGGALL—

Lullaby.

In E (Compass, C sharp to F sharp)

Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D

There's a pathway thro' the heather

In D flat (Compass, D flat to F), E flat, and F
Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

(SET II).

1. One golden thread.
2. The spirit of the Spring.
3. What part of dread eternity.
4. The blackbird.
5. The faithful lover.
6. If I might ride on puissant wing.
7. Why art thou slow.
8. She is my love beyond all thought.

(SET I2).

1. When the dew is falling.
2. To Blossoms.
3. Rosaline.
4. When the sun's great orb.
5. Dream pedlary.
6. O World, O Life, O Time.
7. The sound of hidden music.

The Series is now completed by the publication of the above Sets.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BROTHERHOOD

SONG, WITH CHORUS, FOR A MAÇONIC GATHERING.

Dedicated to the M.W. The Pro-Grand Master of Grand Lodge of Freemasons of England,

LORD AMPHILL.

WORDS BY

FREDERICK KEELING SCOTT.

MUSIC BY

LAWRANCE TAYLOR.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "SUN OF MY SOUL."
- "THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
- "DIVINE LOVE."
- "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
- "LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
- "THE NAZARENE."
- "THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
- "JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES)

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BARBARA ALLEN

VARIATIONS

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ADAM CARSE.

Conductor (Pianoforte) ... .. 2s. 3d.
 String Parts (Four) ... .. 6s. 0d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LAMIA

SYMPHONIC POEM

FOR

FULL ORCHESTRA.

BY

DOROTHY HOWELL.

FULL SCORE.

Price, Twenty Shillings.

String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, MS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

SUITE

FOR STRINGS.

FROM THE DRAMATIC MUSIC OF

HENRY PURCELL

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY

ALBERT COATES.

SCORE.

Price, Two Shillings.

String Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

O LOVELY MAY

A Three-part song for S.S.A., with pianoforte accompaniment.

BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

Price Fourpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOLK - SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

FIRST SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT
VOL. I.

Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES

BY

EMIL BEHNKE

Teacher of Voice Culture and Lecturer on Vocal Physiology,

AND

CHARLES W. PEARCE

Mus. Doc. Cantab.

In separate Books for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

TESTIMONIALS.

“Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility.”

“Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen.”

“I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious.”

“A personal experience enables me to speak in the highest terms of Mr. Behnke's method, which is absolutely invaluable for increasing the power, resonance, and flexibility of the voice; and I am glad to be able to recommend the exercises as being thoroughly practical and most useful.”

“May be safely and cordially recommended to vocal students, and even to practised singers.”

“The exercises are, with great skill, arranged so as to give a maximum of benefit with a minimum of fatigue. They are melodious and natural, and are consequently pleasant of performance.”

“Besides the high commendation which we can give them as voice-training exercises per se, they possess the additional merit of being very melodious throughout.”

“The combined simplicity and utility of the plan upon which these exercises have been written will commend them to the notice of professors and students alike.”

“It may be said with confidence that no better exercises for the purposes of voice cultivation are to be met with.”

CHAPPELL &amp; CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

NEW YORK.

MELBOURNE.

SYDNEY.

And may be had of all Music Sellers.

PIÈCES CLASSIQUES

TRANSCRIBED FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO

BY

ERKKI MELARTIN.

1.	GERVAIS.—Passecaille	...	...	...	...	“Hypermnestre,”	171
2.	LULLY.—Gavotte en Rondeau	...	...	...	...	“Ballet du Roy,”	165
3.	SAINT AMAN.—Tricotets	...	...	...	...	“Ninette à la Cour,”	170
4.	JEAN-JACQUES ROUSSEAU.—Menuet	...	...	...	...	“Le Devin du Village,”	174
5.	GRÉTRY.—Tambourin	...	...	...	...	“Aspasie,”	178
6.	DESTOUCHES.—Sarabande et Passepied	...	...	...	...	“Issé,”	169
7.	MOURET.—Bourrée	...	...	...	...	“Les Amours de Ragonde,”	174
8.	LULLY.—Pavane et Gavotte	...	...	...	...	“La Noce du Village,”	168
9.	DESMARETS.—Rigaudons	...	...	...	...	“L'Amour malade,”	165
10.	GRÉTRY.—Gigue	...	...	...	...	“Circé,”	169
						“Denys le Tyran,”	179

Price, 2s. net cash each number.

These transcriptions of a series of delightful pieces chosen with excellent taste from various French 17th and 18th century operas, will rapidly become favourites with all violinists. They range over approximately a century and a half, and are surprisingly varied within the confines set by the style of the period with its characteristic old-world fragrance and grace. The arrangements are admirably violinistic and it may safely be predicted that they will take their place without disadvantage side by side with the famous Kreisler transcriptions.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

This Supplement is part also of the April issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 153.

THE LONDON MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL.

March 3-5 and 7-12.

In passing under review in these pages the London Festival of a twelvemonth ago the hope was expressed that our musical competitions were about to enter upon a new lease, not only of life, but of vigour. The event of 1921 must have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of all those interested. In fact, there were signs that the sudden swelling of the list of individual entrants from five thousand to ten thousand had brought embarrassments of its own to adjudicators and competitors alike.

The mere size of this year's London Musical Competition Festival (with which is incorporated the South and West London Musical Festival, founded in 1905) necessitated judges being kept hard at work from 10.30 in the morning till 11.0 or later at night. Their task was to deal with the hundred and nineteen separate classes in three different concert-rooms at Central Hall, Westminster. The splitting up of many of these classes—in which the number of examinees approached or exceeded three figures—into separate sessions not always held on the same day, in the same room, or before the same judge, made the duty more onerous. The task of the enthusiastic onlooker bent on following the course of each competition was rendered the reverse of simple in such circumstances.

And the participants found themselves in worse case. After listening to 'Orpheus with his lute' sung a hundred and thirty-five times, the adjudicator might well have been pardoned for 'bowing the head' from causes not strictly Orphean; and after waiting about for many tedious hours, the unfortunate competitor who fell an easy prey to nervous apprehension might well have been excused some absence of freshness when at last summoned, or resummoned, to the platform. Both are human. Despite the rarity of obvious betrayals of human infirmity the authorities would be well advised in future years to reconsider the time-table, so that fewer of the important classes come up for final adjudication so late in the evening, particularly in view of the tender years of many of those engaged. For the Festival is essentially an affair of youth.

With these reservations, however, the undertaking was well managed, and the hon. secretary and his staff certainly won admiration for immense labours carried out with unfailing courtesy.

So much for the undoubted life of the Festival. What about its vigour? It may at once be said that this stands beyond question. From the purely artistic point of view—that with which we are concerned—the average of achievement has never been so high. Every festival constitutes a record in another sense, a record of the progress of musical education at large, and it is possible to draw the gratifying conclusion in this instance that, so far as the Metropolis is concerned, this progress is phenomenal. The teaching of the rising generation is in safe hands.

Temperament ultimately decides the media which a community finds most congenial for the expression of its musical sympathies. For us they are the pianoforte, the voice, and (a poor third) the violin. Taken in the mass, youthful Londoners are pre-eminently devotees of the pianoforte. The merits of no less than sixteen hundred pianists—the vast majority of the fair sex—were considered. The classes being for the most part divided according to age, the number of entries in each throws an interesting sidelight on development. There were more twelve-year-olds than any others, though the tots of eight ran them close. But at nine there was a marked fall, then a consistent rise up to the age of twelve, followed by another heavy drop at thirteen, and a subsequent gradual falling away until the Open Class (eighteen years and over) was reached. The quality of the performances coincided remarkably with this curve. Allowing for the difference of age, some of the most natural, and therefore most captivating, essays in expression came from girls not yet in their teens. But in all classes the level maintained was generally acknowledged to be unprecedented.

Next to the pianoforte, the voice. Over eleven hundred solo vocalists entered the lists, and though the foremost among them would have been hard to beat, the average—an infallible tell-tale—was not nearly so good. When concerted vocal work is considered it becomes clear that in everything but sheer beauty of tone southern singers can challenge comparison with any. In both solo and choral singers the influence of deplorable habits of pronunciation was conspicuous.

The entries for the violin and its kindred string instruments were disappointing in numbers, and again showed wide disparity in proficiency. The apprenticeship exacted is here admittedly long and arduous, and is not a matter lightly to be undertaken. Yet when served it confers the ability—not open to the pianist or the singer—to participate in the expression of the highest known form of music—the symphony. The Festival produced several solo violinists of exceptional merit; indeed, the silver cup offered by the Federation of British Music Industries to the best of the three gold medallists—pianoforte, voice, and violin—was awarded to the violinist, it being held, and justly, that where there was practically nothing to choose between the three rivals, violin-playing represented the greatest feat. But there was only one entry for string quartet and, apart from the elementary school orchestras, only one string band put in an appearance, a fact surprising in view of the unrivalled quality of British orchestras, both professional and amateur.

Among the mass of valuable comments on details of technique offered by the judges one broad principle was reiterated. Time and again they expressed themselves chiefly concerned with the degree to which the competitors showed ability to assign a meaning to the test-pieces. Technical facility was regarded as essential to just interpretation, but did not of itself carry weight. Dr. Vaughan Williams put the matter in a nutshell: 'Why,' he asked, 'do you play or sing music? To get your imaginations to work.' In this connection it may be inferred that the committee selecting the tests was of similar mind on this important question, for, with few exceptions, the matter set bore in itself the seeds of imaginative significance. What finer test of a pianist's ability in this direction could be found than Chopin's G minor Ballade, set for the gold medal? Or of a singer's than Dr. Williams's own 'Silent Noon,' set for contraltos?

The extent to which young executants in all the solo classes exhibited the cultivation of this chief sense of the musician bore gratifying testimony to the sound lines of their teaching. In particular, the piano-forte gold medal competition provoked a brilliant display of poetic capacity. Unfortunately the same favourable comment cannot justly be made as regards the general run of the children's choral work.

The criticisms which must be put on record should be read with this cardinal point well in mind. Among pianists an occasional tendency to hit the keys rather than to set them in motion by legitimate pressure of the fingers, came in for censure, and the importance of encouraging a loose wrist was urged. It is the only method by which the last ounce of tone may be extracted from the instrument without making it distressingly harsh. Another comment was concerned with the subtle distinction between 'beat and natural rhythm, a realisation of which is indispensable to just phrasing. And the uses and abuses of the sostenuto pedal were at times the subject of notice.

The faults of the singers were more obvious and included, first and foremost, an uncertainty of diction mainly traceable to slipshod methods of speech. Final consonants were often dropped or telescoped into the next word, and liberties were taken with vowels, not always so unconsciously, but sometimes in order the more easily to obtain a good round tone—'Hah-py' for 'Happy'—and sometimes, as in the case of the Girls' Choirs—'Dishing away with the smu-thing iron'—in a misguided effort to appear genteel. Then there was the abominable habit of 'scooping' when intervals had to be negotiated. And, of course, the vexed question of breath-control. Many vocal aspirants did not hesitate irretrievably to crack a phrase by taking breath in the middle, or to prejudice their 'attack' by waiting till just after the last possible moment for taking in an initial supply of air. But there was a notable freedom from 'wobble' or artificial vibrato, and it has evidently long since been realised that the foundation of finished singing is even tone-emission.

The evidences that tone is receiving such careful consideration were gratifying, but the process has its pitfalls. A choir which has been trained to vocalise 'loo,' for instance, as being a favourable syllable for acquiring forward tone, is apt to tincture all its vowels with woolly sound, quite without intention or the perception of the conductor, unless a sharp watch is kept. The English tongue is not ideal for vocalisation, but that is no excuse for changing its proper sound values. The matter of tempo should never have been in doubt to the extent noticed; every composition of any musical value sets its own time to the experienced musician—and if doubt should exist metronome markings are usually given, though it is not necessary or intended that these should be slavishly observed.

The reading tests, both instrumental and vocal, elicit some remarks on procedure. The note-to-note method is to be condemned, and competitors should be urged to read at least a complete musical phrase at a time before attempting to reproduce it. This mode has the added advantage of conducting from the very beginning to the long phrasing which denotes work of artistic value.

It would appear that the question of ensuring the services of an efficient accompanist does not invariably receive the consideration it deserves. In quite a number of cases candidates lost marks through the shortcomings of the accompanists they had brought with them. If there is difficulty in finding a proficient accompanist, candidates would be better advised to leave this office in the capable hands of the professionals who attend the Festival.

Probably one of the most significant features of the Festival—as of other musical events of to-day—was the enormous preponderance of the feminine element. Nor was the day carried by sheer weight of numbers. Two of the three senior gold medals fell to ladies in open competition with men. If any mere male in attendance cherished delusions as to the superiority of his sex in music he must have retired in chastened mood. Time was when the lady conductor, in particular, was almost an object of ridicule. This year she fairly won her spurs. Obviously it will be only a matter of years before we have ladies directing symphony concerts in London.

It remains to congratulate the judges on the admirably patient and impartial manner in which they carried out their heavy duties, and to deplore the absence of the general public, though an attitude of apathy is only to be expected when the press, with few exceptions, ignores the occurrence of what is an event of high consequence from more than the purely musical standpoint.

HUBERT FITCHEW.

The following were the chief choral results:

THE Daily Telegraph CHORAL CHAMPIONSHIP (Open).

- Tests: 'Trust not too much' (Orlando Gibbons).
Unaccompanied part-song chosen by choir.
- 1st. Mansfield House Choral Society, Canning Town (Mr. C. E. Coward).
  - 2nd. S. Suburban Choral Society (Mr. A. Fairbairn).
Miss Graham's Mixed Choir, Salisbury.

CHORAL SOCIETIES.

- Tests: 'Woodmen, shepherds, come away' (West).
'The Boy' (Brewer).
- 1st. Gypsy Choir, North Finchley (Mr. T. J. Crawford).
  - 2nd. S. Suburban Co-operative Society (Mr. A. Fairbairn).
  - 3rd. Ware and District Choral Society (Mr. W. N. Govier).
Brixton and District Musical Society (Mr. F. Williams).
Willesden District Choir (Mr. W. Basford).

LADIES' CHOIRS (forty voices).

- Tests: 'O Happy Fair' (Shield).
'The Cloud' (H. Walford Davies).
- 1st. Bedford Ladies' Choral Society (Mr. P. Burke).
  - 2nd. Chamberlain Ladies' Choir, Winchmore Hill (Miss Chamberlain).
Miss Graham's Ladies' Choir, Salisbury.
  - 3rd. Mrs. Harrison's M.A.M. Choir, Wanstead.

MUSICIANS' COMPANY COMPETITION FOR CHURCH AND CHAPEL CHOIRS.

- Tests: 'O God, Who hast prepared' (J. Mudd).
'Wash me thoroughly' (S. S. Wesley).
Queen's Park Congregational (Mr. L. Huws).
London Road Wesleyan, Thornton Heath (Miss I. S. Burr).
- 1st. Streatham Congregational (Mr. F. C. Haggis).
St. Luke's, Paddington (Mr. E. Dartry).

CHURCH CHOIRS, MALE (forty voices).

- Tests: 'Save us, O Lord' (E. C. Bairstow).
Benedicite in F (M. Shaw).
- 1st. Holy Trinity, Beckenham (Mr. A. B. Garrard).
  - 2nd. St. Saviour's, Brockley (Mr. E. Gooding).
  - 3rd. St. Barnabas, Woodside Park (Dr. C. Hazelhurst).
St. Paul's, Wembleton (Mr. G. H. Dean).

CHOIRS OF EQUAL VOICES (Senior Choirs).
(Eight entries.)

- Tests: 'Changes of the Moon' (H. Farjeon).
'The Sailor's Song' (J. L. Hatton).

Sheen School of Music (Miss E. Hays).

JUNIOR CHOIRS. (Seven entries.)

- Tests: 'The lark's awake' (R. B. Elliott).
'The Snowflake' (H. Grace).

Sheen School of Music (Miss E. Hays).

1. Mary Datchelor Girls' Choir (Miss Donington).

Reay Central School (Mr. C. B. Byford).

BOYS' CHOIRS. (Five entries.)

- Tests: 'The Cloud' (E. L. Bainton).
'Doubt not thy Father's care' (Elgar).

Holy Trinity, Canning Town (Mrs. Rushby Smith).

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHOIRS (Boys).
(Seven entries.)

- Tests: 'England' (C. H. H. Parry).
'When young leaves are springing' (C. Wood).
Ear and Sight-Test.

Wornington Road, North Kensington (Mr. F. W. Tyler).

d. Mitcham Lane (Mr. W. Mealon).

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHOIRS (Girls).
(Twenty-one entries.)

- Tests: 'Dashing away with the smoothing iron' (arr. C. J. Sharp).

'Twelve by the clock' (C. H. Lloyd).
Ear and Sight-Test.

t. Keeton's Road Higher Grade, East Dulwich (Miss M. Gibson).

id. (Stillness Road (Miss N. Pellew).
(Battersea Park Road (Miss M. Forsey).

CHOIRS FROM GIRLS' CLUBS. (Ten entries.)

- Tests: 'The Throstle' (King Hall).
'The Night Bird' (E. L. Bainton).

u. Battersea Park Road Evening School (Miss Forsey).

STRING ORCHESTRAS (twelve amateurs).
(Three entries, two of which withdrew.)

- Tests: 'Lett never crueltie' (A. Mackenzie).
'Honest luckie' (A. Mackenzie).

st. Sheen School of Music (Miss C. Martin).

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL ORCHESTRAS.

Test: 'Marche Militaire' (Schubert).

Lavender Hill (Girls) (Miss E. Harrison).

Brandlehow Road (Mr. V. S. Evans).

Telferscot Road L.C.C. (Miss A. Wilton).

Lavender Hill (Boys) (Miss E. Morgan).

st. Kilmorie Road L.C.C. (Boys) (Mr. O. Roberts).

Brackenbury Road L.C.C. (Mr. F. Peters).

Swaffield Road L.C.C. (Miss Parlett).

TRINITY COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIP.

Mr. Horace Bate (winner in Organ Class).

BEDFORDSHIRE EISTEDDFOD.

This new competitive Festival, held on February 14-19, achieved a success that many long-established events of the kind might well envy. There were over three thousand competitors, representing practically every town and village in the county. The Festival was generously supported in all quarters, and the attendance at the contests in the Corn Exchange, Town Hall, and Institute drew crowded audiences. The receipts from all sources amounted to nearly thousand pounds.

The syllabus contained sixty-five classes, among them being section for bands (brass, and brass and reed) which drew capital entry of a dozen. Bandsmen were also catered for in classes for trombone, cornet, euphonium, and clarinet solos. A notable feature was the splendid response of the school choirs. Six choirs of junior boys, nine of junior girls, nine of combined juniors, and no less than fifteen village school choirs made up a crowded and exhilarating session, the Corn Exchange being packed with youngsters, parents, and friends. The organization throughout was admirable, and did the utmost credit to Dr. H. A. Harding (chairman), Captain Gedge, M.B.E. (hon. secretary), and the executive.

The adjudicators were Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. Frank Bridge, Dr. P. C. Buck, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, Mr. Walter Reynolds (bands), Dr. F. G. Shinn, and Mrs. Edith Walker (elocution).

We give below the tests and first-prize winners in the principal choral sections:

Senior Choirs (mixed).—'How calmly the evening' (Elgar), Howard Congregational Church.

Male-Voice Choirs.—'Down in a summer vale' (Charles Wood), Liberal Club.

Village Choirs (fifteen entries).—'Playtime's golden hours' (A. W. Ketelbey), Westoning.

Senior Choirs (female voices).—'Beauteous Morn' (German), Bedford Ladies' Choral Society.

Senior Choirs (mixed), Open class.—'The long day closes' (Sullivan), Kempston Musical Society.

Primary Classes (under ten), Unison.—'Sweet Nightingale' (Folk-Song), Pottton Council School.

Junior Choirs (boys).—'In praise of May' (John Ireland), Amptill Road School.

Junior Choirs (girls).—'Like the lark' (Franz Abt), Luton Co-operative.

Girl Guides.—'I know a bank' (C. E. Horn), Bedford High School.

Sunday Schools.—'Eye hath not seen' (M. B. Foster), St. Paul's Church.

Of the fifty-eight works selected for the tests, fifty-one were by British composers.

PEOPLE'S PALACE (EAST LONDON).

The first two days of this Festival—on February 22 and 26—were as usual devoted to schools and other junior choirs. The entries from the schools were the highest on record, and the adjudicator (Mr. T. F. Dunhill) reported that 'the singing throughout showed not only intelligence, keenness, and musical perception, but in most cases extreme refinement of tone and style.' The winning school in the class for girls' schools gained the unprecedented award of full marks. This school also won the banner which is awarded to the school gaining the highest aggregate both in the prepared pieces and in sight-singing. The Festival will be continued from May 7 to 21. The following is a list of the principal prize-winners:

EVENING INSTITUTES.

Mixed Voices and Female Voices (Advanced).—Millfields Institute (Mr. A. Morgan). Female Voices.—Daniel Street Institute (Mr. G. Dunn).

VARIOUS CLASSES.

Bands of Hope, &c. (four entries), and Singing Games.—St. Simon's, Bethnal Green (the Rev. A. L. Wyldie).

Wolf Cubs (six entries).—18th Poplar (East London Tabernacle (Miss D. M. Oakley).

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

Girls (fourteen entries):

1st. Hague Street, Bethnal Green (Miss E. E. M. Willis).

2nd. St. Thomas's, Upper Clapton (Miss C. Mordall).

3rd. St. Thomas's (Colet), Stepney (Miss A. Connor).

Mowlem Street, Bethnal Green (Miss E. Bartlett).

Boys (five entries):

1st. Hague Street, Bethnal Green (Mr. W. G. Woodgate).

2nd. Dingle Lane, Poplar (Mr. S. J. Parrett).

Mixed (four entries):

1st. St. Peter's, Bethnal Green (Mr. C. T. Pratt).

2nd. Sir John Cass Foundation (Mr. F. Poulton).

Jewish (six entries):

1st. Cable Street Central (Mr. L. Wretts Smith).

2nd. Christian Street Girls' (Mrs. A. Esdaile).

Sight-Singing (twenty-nine entries):

1st. Cable Street Central (Mr. L. Wretts Smith).

2nd. Portman Place Girls' (Miss G. E. Bowes).

3rd. Hague Street Boys' (Mr. W. G. Woodgate).

Violin Bands (one entry):

Hugh Myddelton Central School (Miss J. Wilkie).

HASTINGS.

One of those competitive meetings whose activities were not terminated by the war, the Hastings Competition is now reaping some reward for its courage in 'carrying on' through some difficult years. The moving spirits are still Lady Isham, and Mr. John Lockey, her co-secretary, to whom the competition first owed its being. This year it continued for four days, starting on March 14, and achieved a record number of entries, having four hundred more than last year. There were fifty-five classes.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Dr. Harold Darke, Mr. W. H. Reed, and Miss Katie Thomas were admirable adjudicators, and their sound and kindly criticism gave most of the candidates food for profitable reflection.

The solo singing hardly reached more than a dull level of merit, though the occasion had clearly inspired ambitions in the local vocalists that will undoubtedly bear good fruit. The chief exceptions occurred in the case of two girls who tied for the Scholarship Prize which is granted to enable the winner to study at the Guildhall School of Music. At the time of writing the decision between them had not been made.

School singing reached a praiseworthy standard, and in the High School Senior Class Hastings Secondary School (Mr. Allan Biggs) came out first for the fifth year in succession, the choir's ringing tone and live rhythm being conspicuous.

A sensation was made by the Maidstone Choral Union, whose singing, whether in the Ladies', Male-Voice, or Mixed Classes, was truly remarkable. The conductor, Mr. Wilson Parish, has proved that there is at least one choir in the home counties which has revived the neglected art of madrigal singing. In Benet's 'All creatures now are merry minded' the singers produced that indefinable shiver of delight that is well-known farther North, and the ladies of the choir furnished a perfect example of ensemble in Fletcher's 'Zephyr among the flowers' and Colin Taylor's 'Sleep, little baby.' They also went through the sight-singing test with an intelligence and security worthy of a body of professional musicians. Excellent as were the efforts of the Hastings and Crowborough Societies, they must have felt spurred to future successes by listening to their neighbours from Maidstone.

Only six church choirs appeared, but there was some good singing in West's 'The Primrose,' Martin's 'Save us, O Lord,' Brewer's 'Blessing, glory,' and Geoffrey Shaw's 'I live not where I love.'

There were a hundred and forty-one solo singers, sixty-six pianists, nineteen violinists, five 'cellists, and one organist.

String trios and three string quartets competed in chamber music by Haydn, Mozart, and Frank Bridge. A special prize for string quartet was offered by Mr. T. S. Henderson, an enthusiastic viola-player and propagator of chamber music, for which he set part of Beethoven's ninth Quartet. This was played with uncommonly good ensemble by four amateurs whom Miss Annie Kenwood had carefully trained. The remaining classes were vocal duets and quartets, pianoforte accompaniment, amateur composition, girl guides, ear-tests, action-songs, and elocution.

On the first day Mr. Ernest Fowles lectured on 'Great British Composers,' to the considerable entertainment and instruction of his hearers.

BLACKPOOL.—October 17-22.

The following have been chosen as test-pieces in the principal choral competitions:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Twenty to thirty-five voices).

'The Rhinemaidens' (arranged from 'Rheingold' and 'Götterdämmerung') (Wagner).

Choral Song, 'Impromptu' (Op. 14) (Sibelius).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Tenor Lead).

'Ballade' (after Villon) (Bantock).

'Cargoes' (Balfour Gardiner).

'My love is like a red, red rose' (Bantock).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Alto Lead).

Glee, 'The Mighty Conqueror' (Webbe).

'The land of little people' (E. W. Naylor).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (A).

'Sing ye to the Lord' (Bach).

(Two movements will be selected for the preliminary competition, and the four selected choirs will sing the whole Motet in the final competition at the evening session.)

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (B).

Madrigal, 'A shepherd in a shade' (Dowland).

'The Fountain' (Op. 71, No. 2) (Elgar).

PLYMOUTH.

Plymouth Music Competition Festival occupied five days in the week beginning March 7, this being its seventh year of existence. The entries numbered 2,750, as against 2,22 last year and 222 in its first year. Chief increase was made in the solo violin classes. The adjudicators in the music classes were Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Dr. Vaughn Thomas, and Mr. Ernest Fowles.

The chief awards in the choral classes were as follows:

Church and Chapel Choirs.—Peverell Wesleyan.

Schools (under 12).—Royal United Services Orphanage.

Schools (over 12).—Ivybridge Council School.

Secondary Schools.—St. Dunstan's Abbey.

Sunday Schools (Junior).—Plymouth Co-operative Society.

Sunday Schools (Senior).—Royal United Service.

Orphanage.

Mixed Choirs.—Peverell Wesleyan Choir.

Male Choirs.—Constructive Draughtsmen's Choir.

Ladies' Choirs.—King Street Ladies' Choir.

GREENOCK.

The third Renfrewshire Musical Festival, held at Greenock on February 23-26, was one of the most inspiring events in the musical history of the town. Compared with last year there were double the number of entries, and the adjudicators, Dr. E. C. Bairstow and Dr. F. W. Wadely were busily occupied for four days.

In the Church Choirs (Class A) section, Gourrock Parish Church (Mr. Cuthbert Forster) gained highest marks of any choir in the Festival, viz., eighty-nine and ninety-four. In Class B, St. Andrew's U.F. Church (Mr. J. Calder) was first and in Class C, Greenbank U.F. Church (Mr. Robert Love) secured first place.

In the Female-Voice Choir section (Class A) Greenock Festival Choir (Mr. J. Calder) gained the Challenge trophy. In Class B, Greenock High School Ladies' Choir (Mr. Cuthbert Forster) secured the gold medal.

In the School Choir Section, Greenock was represented by nine choirs. All these choirs were specially commended for their beautiful tone. The following won special trophies and gold medals: Greenock High School (Miss L. M. Mayhew), Hillend School (Miss McKichan), and Glebe School (Miss Gordon).

With a view to stimulating interest in music in general and British music in particular, the Federation of British Music Industries offers a number of challenge cups for competition at such musical festivals as are held for purely musical as opposed to charitable purposes. So far six cups have been offered to the Perthshire, London, North London, Hazel Grove, Kent, and Aberdeenshire Competition Festivals. The cup in each case is awarded to the competitor who, in the opinion of the adjudicators, reaches the highest individual standard, instrumental or vocal, the sole condition being that the winner shall be British by birth or naturalisation. At the recent London festival Mr. Darke Price awarded the Federation cup to a violinist, Miss K. Reed.

Peace leave with you

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

charge to keep I have ... King	3d.	554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts	4d.	989. Come and let us ... A. Hollins	3d crown of grace for man Brahms	4d.	587. Behold My servant ... J. F. Bridge	3d.	52. Come, and let us return ... J. Goss	3d.
few more years shall roll H. Blair	3d.	65. Behold now, praise ... J. B. Calkin	3d.	95. Ditto ... W. Jackson	3d.
prayer for peace ... Crotch	3d.	631. Ditto ... F. Iliffe	3d.	805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann	4d.
solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer	2d.	912. Ditto ... John E. West	3d.	283. Come, Holy Ghost ... G. Elvey	4d.
song of joy ... John E. West	3d.	315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird	4d.	201. Ditto ... J. L. Hatton	2d.
side with me ... Ivor Atkins	3d.	524. Behold, the days come ... Woodward	4d.	829. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams	2d.
Ditto ... R. Dunstan	3d.	1045. Behold the Heaven ... A. R. Gaul	3d.	717. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.
Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann	4d.	652. Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt	4d.	881. Come, let us join our ... G. C. Martin	4d.
All go unto one place ... Wesley	3d.	502. Behold, two blind men ... J. Stainer	3d.	293. Come, my soul ... H. W. Wareing	4d.
All nations whom ... B. Luard-Selby	4d.	938. Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod	3d.	314. Come unto Him ... H. Leslie	3d.
All they that trust ... Hiller	8d.	378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingdon	4d.	946. Ditto ... G. J. Elvey	3d.
All Thy works ... T. Adams	3d.	796. Bless the Lord, O my soul ... Hailing	3d.	635. Ditto (Bach) ... J. Stainer	3d.
Ditto ... J. Barnby	4d.	855. Bless the Lord thy God ... Roberts	3d.	103. Ditto ... J. Stainer	3d.
Ditto ... G. H. Ely	4d.	450. Bless thou the Lord ... C. Bayley	4d.	922. Come with high and holy ... Blair	3d.
Ditto ... E. H. Thorne	3d.	374. Ditto ... Oliver King	3d.	1005. Come ye, and let us ... Macfarren	3d.
All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs	3d.	693. Blessed are the dead ... B. L. Selby	2d.	748. Come, ye children and ... J. Booth	3d.
All ye who weep ... Gounod	3d.	667. Blessed are the pure ... A. D. Arnott	3d.	324. Ditto ... H. J. King	3d.
Alleluia! now is Christ ... T. Adams	3d.	390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson	3d.	924. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall	3d.
Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris	3d.	616. Ditto ... H. Blair	3d.	92. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain ... 3d.
Almighty Father ... B. Steane	3d.	112. Ditto ... W. H. Monk	3d.	1079. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button	2d.
Almighty God, give us ... Wesley	3d.	15. Blessed be the God ... S. S. Wesley	2d.	951. Come, ye sin-defiled ... B. Steane	2d.
And all the people saw ... J. Stainer	6d.	755. Blessed be the Lord ... J. F. Bridge	6d.	931. Come, ye thankful ... Woodward	3d.
And God shall wipe ... Greenish	3d.	370. Ditto ... O. Gibbons	2d.	1008. Ditto ... H. Oakley	2d.
And in that day ... F. R. Rickman	3d.	895. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	994. Coronation Offertorium ... Elgar	2d.
And it was the third hour ... Elvey	3d.	183. Ditto ... Markham Lee	3d.	622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry	3d.
And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer	3d.	770. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams	4d.	688. Crown Him the ... B. Luard-Selby	2d.
And Jesus entered ... H. W. Davies	3d.	331. Ditto ... Macfarren	4d.	356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King	3d.
And suddenly there came H. J. Wood	3d.	1006. Blessed be the Name ... E. C. Baird	4d.	449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge	3d.
And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson	3d.	724. Blessed be Thou ... J. Kent	4d.	683. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart	6d.
And the wall of the city Oliver King	3d.	838. Ditto ... A. C. Fisher	4d.	682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer	2d.
And there shall be signs ... C. W. Smith	4d.	400. Blessed City ... F. E. Gladstone	2d.	968. Death and life ... Walter Parratt	3d.
And when the day ... F. Tchaikovsky	2d.	284. Blessed is He ... C. H. Lloyd	8d.	968. Death is swallowed up in ... Hollins	3d.
Angel Spirits ... E. V. Hall	3d.	262. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie	3d.	849. Deliver us, O Lord ... Gibbons	3d.
Angels from the realms ... Coven	3d.	292. Ditto ... John Goss	3d.	90. Distracted with care ... H. Blair	3d.
Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher	3d.	206. Blessed is the man ... H. W. Wareing	3d.	887. Do not I fill heaven ... D. S. Smith	3d.
Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	64. Ditto ... Macfarren	3d.	737. Drop down, ye heavens ... Sciner	2d.
Arise, shine ... T. Adams	3d.	769. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	2d.	277. Enter not into Judgment ... F. Brandeis	2d.
Art thou weary ... G. F. Cobb	4d.	1004. Blessed is the soul (s.b.) ... Clarke	2d.	1008. Evening and Morning ... Oakley	2d.
As Christ was raised ... Wareing	3d.	286. Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorak	3d.	854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot	3d.
As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp	3d.	943. Blessed Lord ... B. Tours	4d.	764. Except the Lord build ... Edwards	3d.
As it began to dawn ... Ch. Vincent	3d.	5. Blessing, glory, wisdom ... A. H. Brewer	4d.	771. Ditto ... Eaton Fanning	4d.
As Moses lifted up ... F. Gostelow	3d.	652. Blow up the trumpet ... F. Iliffe	3d.	628. Ditto ... H. Gadsby	4d.
As the earth bringeth ... A. H. Brewer	4d.	97. Blow ye the trumpet ... Henry Leslie	3d.	470. Eye hath not seen (s.a.) ... Foster	3d.
As the hart pants (s.s.t.b.) Gounod	4d.	961. Born to-day ... J. P. Sweetlinc	3d.	534. Ditto (s.a.t.b.) M. B. Foster	3d.
Ascribe unto the Lord ... Travers	3d.	118. Bow Thine ear ... E. German	3d.	625. Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall	3d.
Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	4d.	939. Bread of Heaven ... W. G. Alcock	3d.	672. Far from the world ... H. W. Parker	3d.
At the Lamb's High ... E. V. Hall	4d.	774. Ditto ... H. E. Button	3d.	329. Far from their home ... Woodward	2d.
At the Sepulchre ... H. W. Wareing	3d.	415. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews	3d.	364. Father, hear the prayer F. Brandeis	2d.
Author of Life Divine ... Button	3d.	92. Ditto ... R. Prentice	3d.	363. Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen	3d.
Awake, awake ... John E. West	3d.	491. Ditto ... B. Steane	3d.	46. Father of Heaven ... Walmisley	3d.
Awake, awake, put on ... Greenish	3d.	323. Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall	3d.	384. Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert	3d.
Ditto ... J. Stainer	6d.	340. Bring unto the Lord ... Gladstone	3d.	768. Father of mercies ... E. V. Hall	3d.
Ditto ... Stephenson	4d.	98. Brother, thou art gone ... J. Goss	3d.	1065. Ditto ... S. P. Waddington	3d.
Ditto ... M. Wise	3d.	279. By Babylon's wave ... Gounod	2d.	670. Fear not, O land ... John E. West	3d.
Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester	3d.	197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson	4d.	28. Ditto ... E. Elgar	3d.
Awake, thou that sleepest ... Stainer	6d.	121. By the waters of Babylon ... Boyce	4d.	916. Ditto ... John Goss	3d.
Awake up, my glory ... M. Wise	3d.	644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.	472. Ditto ... W. Jordan	3d.
Be glad and rejoice ... M. B. Foster	3d.	511. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs	3d.	876. Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth	1d.
Be glad, O ye righteous ... B. Steane	3d.	853. Ditto ... E. W. Naylor	3d.	442. Flee from evil ... W. J. Clarke	3d.
Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart	3d.	742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak	3d.	553. For a small moment ... J. Stainer	2d.
Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins	3d.	116. Call to remembrance ... J. Battisbill	6d.	254. For ever blessed ... Mendelssohn	3d.
Be merciful ... H. Purcell	6d.	954. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	198. For the mountains ... L. Samson	3d.
Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham	3d.	680. Calm on the list'ning ear ... Parker	3d.	901. For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley	3d.
Be peace on earth ... Crotch	3d.	841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams	2d.	728. Forsake me not ... J. Goss	4d.
Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley	3d.	975. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	3d.	273. From the deep I called ... Spohr	6d.
Be ye all of one mind A. E. Gouffrey	3d.	497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor	3d.	227. Give ear, O Lord ... T. M. Pattison	2d.
Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker	3d.	454. Christ is risen ... G. E. J. Aitken	3d.	437. Give ear, O Shepherd ... A. Whiting	3d.
Before the heavens ... H. W. Parker	3d.	368. Ditto ... J. M. Crament	3d.	88. Give ear, O ye heavens ... Armes	3d.
Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley	3d.	666. Ditto ... W. Jordan	3d.	956. Ditto ... W. G. Alcock	3d.
Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor	3d.	533. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	634. Give thanks, O Israel ... Ouseley	4d.
Behold, God is my John E. West	3d.	814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham	3d.	741. Give the King thy ... W. G. Alcock	6d.
Ditto ... F. C. Woods	4d.	307. Christ our Passover ... E. V. Hall	3d.	990. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd	8d.
Behold, how good ... J. Battisbill	3d.	783. Christ the Lord is risen again ... 3d.		383. Give unto the Lord H. W. Parker	4d.
Ditto ... (Male) Caldicott	3d.	370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day ... 3d.		933. Glorious and powerful God Gibbons	3d.
Ditto ... (s.a.t.b.) Caldicott	3d.	488. Christians, awake ... J. Barnby	3d.	1039. Glorious in Heaven ... Vittoria	3d.
Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke	3d.	648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs	4d.	2. Glory be to God ... S. S. Wesley	2d.
Behold, I bring you ... J. Barnby	3d.	983. Christmas Day ... G. von Holst	4d.	779. Glory to God in the ... E. M. Lee	3d.
Ditto ... J. Maude Crament	3d.	445. Cleanse me, Lord ... G. F. Wrigley	3d.
Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.
Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins	3d.
Behold, I have given you C. Harris	3d.

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS

341	God be merciful ... A. H. Mann	4d.	412	Honour the Lord...	J. Stainer	4d.	519.	I will open rivers	E. Pettman
49	Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	3d.	129.	Hosanna (in C) ...	O. Gibbons	3d.	371.	I will set His dominion	H. W. Parker
236	God be merciful unto us C. F. Lloyd	6d.	1015.	Ditto (in E flat)	O. Gibbons	3d.	100.	I will sing a new song ...	Armes
105	God came from Teman Steggall	4d.	43	Ditto ...	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	608.	I will sing of the mercies J. Booth
967.	God is a Spirit ... W. S. Bennett	1d.	657.	Hosanna to the Lord W. Jordan	4d.	134.	I will sing of Thy power	Greene
128.	God is gone up ... Croft	4d.	646.	Ditto ...	Luard-Selby	3d.	192.	I will sing unto the Lord Wareing
892.	Ditto ... O. Gibbons	3d.	1021.	Hosanna we sing John E. West	3d.	6.	I will wash my hands	Hopkins
864.	Ditto ... Walter B. Gilbert	2d.	260.	How beautiful are the feet Handel	3d.	710.	If any man hath not H. W. Davies
605.	God is my salvation C. F. Bowes	3d.	691.	How blest are they Tschaiowsky	4d.	819.	If Christ be not raised Macpherson
1068.	God is our hope ... A. H. Brewer	3d.	321.	How excellent is Thy ... Cowen	6d.	979.	If the Lord had not E. C. Bairstow
131.	Ditto ... Greene	6d.	615.	How great is the loving West	3d.	825.	If the Lord Himself W. Child
532.	God is our refuge ... A. Foote	4d.	373.	How long wilt Thou Oliver King	2d.	758.	Ditto ...	Walmisley
101.	Ditto ... H. Hiles	6d.	867.	Ditto ... Jeremiah Clarke	3d.	53.	If we believe that Jesus died Goss
75.	God said, Behold G. Macfarren	4d.	647.	How lovely are ... C. Salaman	3d.	544.	If ye love Me ... B. Steane
969.	God so loved the world H. Moore	3d.	104.	Ditto ... Spohr	8d.	453.	Ditto ... H. W. Wareing
1012.	Ditto ... E. G. Monk	4d.	988.	Ditto ... J. Brahms	2d.	732.	Ditto ... H. J. Wood
473.	Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	766.	I am Alpha ... Ch. Gounod	3d.	789.	If ye then be risen Ivor Atkins
342.	God, that madest earth A. C. Fisher	2d.	539.	Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	469.	Ditto (s.a.) M. B. Foster
1056.	God the All-fatherly A. Hollins	3d.	623.	I am He that liveth T. Adams	4d.	58.	Ditto ...	Naylor
344.	God, Who at sundry times J. H. Mee	4d.	664.	I am the Resurrection ... Croft	3d.	61.	In Christ dwelleth John Goss
715.	God's peace is peace eternal Griege	3d.	662.	Ditto ... R. Rogers	3d.	913.	In divers tongues Palestine
1070.	Grant us Thy peace G. Bullivant	3d.	263.	I am well pleased J. Rheinberger	3d.	619.	In every place incense John E. West
550.	Grant, we beseech Thee M. Elvey	2d.	120.	I beheld, and lo ... Blow	6d.	655.	In heavenly love ... H. Parker
388.	Ditto ... R. Roberts	3d.	280.	Ditto ... Elvey	6d.	403.	In my Father's house Crament
517.	Great and marvellous J. F. Bridge	4d.	496.	I came not to call... C. Vincent	3d.	777.	Ditto ... H. Elliot Button
187.	Ditto ... Monk	3d.	207.	I cried unto the Lord ... Heap	4d.	102.	In sweet consent E. H. Thorne
848.	Ditto ... T. Tomkins	3d.	537.	I declare to you Cruickshank	4d.	802.	In that day (Christmas) Bridge
223.	Great is Jehovah (Male) Schubert	4d.	168.	I desired wisdom J. Stainer	6d.	278.	Ditto ... G. Elvey
987.	Ditto ... Schubert	4d.	230.	I did call upon the Lord Pattison	3d.	720.	In the beginning C. Macpherson
602.	Great is our Lord M. B. Foster	4d.	515.	I do not ask, O Lord ... Roberts	3d.	582.	Ditto ... F. Tozer
136.	Great is the Lord ... Hayes	4d.	117.	I have set God ... Blake	6d.	890.	In the day shalt ... H. W. Wareing
708.	Ditto ... A. W. Marchant	3d.	423.	Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke	3d.	338.	In the fear of the Lord J. V. Roberts
237.	Ditto ... F. Ouseley	6d.	130.	Ditto ... J. Goldwin	3d.	980.	In the hour of my ... Davies
81.	Ditto ... B. Steane	3d.	122.	I have surely built ... Boyce	4d.	659.	In the Lord ... C. Macpherson
813.	Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham	3d.	219.	Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell	4d.	282.	Ditto ... R. Stewart
620.	Grieve not the Holy Spirit Stainer	3d.	590.	I heard a great voice G. F. Cobb	3d.	385.	In Thee, O Lord... S. C. Taylor
229.	Guide me, O Thou H. Blair	3d.	396.	I heard a voice ... John Goss	2d.	33.	Ditto ... B. Tours
447.	Hail! gladdening Light J. T. Field	2d.	903.	I looked, and behold H. Willan	3d.	148.	Ditto ... J. Weldon
545.	Ditto ... Martin	4d.	1029.	I love to hear ... M. B. Foster	3d.	725.	Is it not wheat-harvest T. Adams
563.	Hail, thou that art A. Carnall	4d.	1022.	I saw the Lord ... C. Harris	3d.	467.	Is it nothing (s.a.) M. B. Foster
945.	Hail, true Body ... H. Willan	2d.	171.	Ditto ... J. Stainer	6d.	571.	Ditto (4 voices) M. B. Foster
499.	Hallelujah, Christ is risen Steane	3d.	993.	I was glad ... T. Attwood	4d.	91.	It came even to pass ... Ouseley
382.	Hallelujah! the Light Oliver King	3d.	32.	Ditto ... A. H. Brewer	3d.	180.	It is a good thing J. Barnby
173.	Happy is the man ... E. Prout	8d.	79.	Ditto ... G. Elvey	3d.	231.	Ditto ... T. M. Pattison
681.	Hark, the glad sound M. B. Foster	3d.	743.	Ditto ... C. E. Horsley	6d.	215.	It shall come to pass ... Garrett
909.	Ditto ... A. R. Gaul	3d.	379.	Ditto ... C. H. H. Parry	4d.	908.	Jesu, Lord of life and glory Elgar
487.	Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	119.	Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell	6d.	937.	Jesu, lover of my soul (Male) F. Iliffe
345.	Hark, the herald angels E. V. Hall	3d.	205.	I was in the spirit ... Blow	6d.	907.	Jesu, meek and lowly ... Elgar
444.	Hark! what news Oliver King	3d.	1064.	I will always give thanks Clarke	3d.	1031.	Jesu, our Lord ... Ch. Gounod
404.	Harvest Hymn ... F. Tozer	3d.	874.	I will cause the shower Naylor	3d.	54.	Jesu, Thou joy ... E. H. Davies
820.	Haste Thee, O God John Shepherd	3d.	73.	I will cry unto God H. J. King	3d.	844.	Jesu, Thou sweetness H. J. King
784.	Have mercy upon me J. Barnby	3d.	502.	Ditto ... Steggall	3d.	904.	Jesu, word of God incarnate Elgar
533.	Ditto ... F. J. Goss	4d.	1068.	I will extol Thee ... C. M. Hudson	4d.	455.	Jesu, Christ is risen Oliver King
1013.	Ditto ... E. Minshall	3d.	29.	Ditto ... John E. West	4d.	788.	Jesu, Christ is risen to-day Gaul
377.	Ditto ... Kellow J. Pye	3d.	156.	I will give thanks J. Barnby	6d.	971.	Jesu, lives! no longer now Foster
401.	Ditto ... J. Shaw	3d.	568.	Ditto ... E. J. Hopkins	3d.	618.	Jesu, of Nazareth ... G. Byrd
794.	He sendeth the springs Wareing	4d.	915.	I will give unto him ... H. Blair	2d.	548.	Joy in harvest ... B. Steane
701.	He shall swallow up ... Greenish	3d.	674.	I will give you rain H. W. Wareing	3d.	7.	Judge me, O God Mendelssohn
707.	He that dwelleth... J. Booth	4d.	225.	I will go unto ... Gauntlett	2d.	677.	Just Judge of Heaven Garrett
877.	He that shall endure Mendelssohn	2d.	591.	I will go unto the altar C. Harris	3d.	614.	Justorum animæ J. Barnby
898.	He that spared not His Gladstone	3d.	437.	I will greatly rejoice Cruickshank	4d.	997.	King all glorious ... J. Barnby
900.	He will swallow up death Wesley	1d.	1037.	Ditto ... E. C. Bairstow	3d.	581.	Kings shall be thy G. C. Martin
389.	Hear me when I call (Male) Distir	4d.	495.	I will lay me down A. C. Edwards	3d.	894.	Kings shall see and arise Bridge
339.	Hear my prayer Mendelssohn	4d.	195.	Ditto ... H. Gadsby	2d.	423.	Lead, kindly Light R. Dunstan
1001.	Ditto ... H. Purcell	2d.	209.	Ditto ... H. Hiles	3d.	528.	Ditto ... C. L. Naylor
146.	Ditto ... C. Stroud	4d.	958.	I will lift up mine eyes J. V. Roberts	3d.	589.	Ditto ... D. Pughe-Evans
442.	Hear my words C. H. H. Parry	8d.	739.	Ditto ... D. S. Smith	3d.	1067.	Ditto ... B. Smith
310.	Hear, O God ... A. Friedländer	6d.	126.	I will love Thee ... J. Clark	4d.	705.	Ditto ... J. Stainer
138.	Hear, O heavens P. Humphreys	3d.	1058.	Ditto ... Oliver King	3d.	376.	Let all the world ... W. Jordan
94.	Hear, O Lord ... John Goss	2d.	394.	Ditto ... Kingston	4d.	132.	Let God arise ... Greene
139.	Ditto ... C. King	2d.	760.	I will magnify Thee W. H. Bell	4d.	375.	Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell
162.	Ditto ... F. Ouseley	2d.	78.	Ditto ... J. B. Calkin	3d.	857.	Let my complaint Arthur Batten
831.	Hear, O My people J. Holbrooke	3d.	27.	Ditto ... John Goss	3d.	346.	Ditto (Male) Thorne
203.	Hear, O Thou Shepherd Clarke	4d.	633.	Ditto ... F. Iliffe	3d.	509.	Let not thine hand J. Stainer
522.	Ditto ... T. A. Walmisley	4d.	405.	Ditto ... Oliver King	4d.	807.	Let not your heart Eaton Fanning
776.	Hear the voice and prayer Tallis	3d.	780.	Ditto ... E. M. Lee	3d.	438.	Ditto ... M. B. Foster
773.	Hearken unto Me W. H. Bell	3d.	1010.	Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd	3d.	438*	Ditto (8 v.) M. B. Foster
376.	Hide not Thy face Kellow J. Pye	2d.	929.	Ditto ... A. W. Marchant	3d.	795.	Let the heavens be glad M. Higgs
366.	Ho! every one ... J. M. Crament	4d.	886.	Ditto ... Palestrina	3d.	225.	Let the peace of God J. Stainer
246.	Ditto ... G. C. Martin	4d.	153.	Ditto ... J. Shaw	3d.	565.	Let the righteous ... R. F. Lloyd
330.	Holy Ghost, to earth ... Dvorák	4d.	154.	I will mention ... A. Sullivan	6d.	328.	Let the words of my A. D. Culley
111.	Holy, holy, holy ... Crotch	3d.	799.	I will not leave you W. Byrd	3d.	494.	Let Thy merciful ears W. B. Bell
842.	Holy, Lord God ... T. Bateson	4d.	575.	Ditto ... B. Steane	2d.	1066.	Let us now fear A. W. Goodhart

Peace I leave with you.

ANTHEM FOR TENOR SOLO AND CHORUS.

St. John xiv. 27; xvi. 6, 33.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS, Magdalen College, Oxford.

Largo. TENOR SOLO. espressivo.

CHOR.

Largo.

Sw. Diap.

Ped. Bourd.

Org.

66.

Peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to you, Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un - to you:

cres. not as the world giv - eth, give I un - to you, not as the pp world giv - eth, give I un - to you. p Peace I leave with you, . . My

pp p

PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU.

cres.

peace I give un - to you: not as the world giv-eth, give I un-to

cres.

f

you. Let not your heart be trou-bled, nei-ther let it

mf

RECIT. ad lib. espressivo.

p be a-fraid. Be-cause I have said these things un-to you, sor-row, sor-row, pp Voix celeste, colla voce.

f sor-row hath fill-ed your heart. But be of good cheer; I have o-ver-ff rall.

Sw. Diaps. and Oboe. f Gt. Diaps. to Swell.

a tempo. pp

- come the world. Peace I leave with you, Peace I leave with

a tempo.

rall. e dim. pp Sw.

PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU.

rall. ppp a tempo.

you, My peace I give un - to you.

ppp colla voce. mp

senza ped. Ped.

CHORUS. SOPRANO. pp

Peace, peace, peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to

ALTO. pp

Peace, peace, peace I leave with you, My peace I give un - to

TENOR. pp

Peace, peace, peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to

BASS. pp

Peace, peace, peace I leave with you, My peace I give un - to you, Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un - to you:

you, Peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to you:

you, Peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to you:

you, Peace I leave with you, . . My peace I give un - to you:

pp

PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU.

f not as the world giv - eth, pp give I un - to you, f not as the
f not as the world giv - eth, pp give I . . un - to you, f not as the
f not as the world giv - eth, pp give I . . un - to you, f not as the
f not as the world giv - eth, pp give I un - to you, f not as the

pp world giv - eth, give I un - to you. pp Peace I leave with you, . . My pp world giv - eth, give I un - to you. pp Peace I leave with you, My pp world giv - eth, give I un - to you. pp Peace I leave with you, . . My pp world giv - eth, give I un - to you. pp Peace I leave with you, My

mf peace I give un - to you: pp not as the world giv - eth, give I un - to
mf peace I give un - to you: pp not as the world giv - eth, give I un - to
mf peace I give un - to you: pp not as the world giv - eth, give I un - to
mf peace I give un - to you: pp not as the world giv - eth, give I un - to

PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU.

you. mf Let not your heart be trou - bled, mp nei - ther let it be a - fraid.

you. mf Let not your heart be trou - bled, mp nei - ther let it be a - fraid.

you. mf Let not your heart be trou - bled, mp nei - ther let it be a - fraid.

you. mf Let not your heart be trou - bled, mp nei - ther let it be a - fraid.

Be of good cheer; ff I, I, rall. e dim. pp I have o - ver - come the world. rall.

Be of good cheer; ff I, I, rall. e dim. pp I have o - ver - come the world.

Be of good cheer; ff I, I, rall. e dim. pp I have o - ver - come the world.

Be of good cheer; ff I, I, rall. e dim. pp I have o - ver - come the world.

f Gl. Org. ff rall. e dim. pp rall. e

pp ppp

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un-to you.

pp ppp

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un-to you.

pp ppp

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un-to you.

pp ppp

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give un-to you.

dim. pp ppp

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

793. The Lord is my Shepherd (S.A.T.B.)	414. There was war in Cruickshank	363. To bless Thy chosen F. Brandeis
738. Ditto H. Smart	466. There were shepherds (S.A.) Foster	980. To the Holy Spirit H. W. Davies
305. Ditto D. S. Smith	516. Ditto ... E. Pettman	322. To Thee, O Lord C. L. Williams
662. The Lord is my strength Booth	817. Ditto E. A. Sydenham	443. Try me, O God (Male) A. D. Culley
398. Ditto S. Coleridge-Taylor	324. Ditto ... C. Vincent	618. Turbarum voces... G. Byrd
243. Ditto J. Goss	447. Ditto H. W. Wareing	275. Turn Thy face ... Steggall
947. Ditto Bruce Steane	871. Ditto Healey Willan	626. Turn ye (Rend your)... Godfrey
422. The Lord is risen G. M. Garrett	19. Therefore with angels V. Novello	160. Unto Thee have I cried G. Elvey
1020. Ditto B. Luard-Selby	93. These are they which came Dykes	601. Unto Thee, O God, do we B. Steane
1028. The Lord is very great Beckwith	966. They are at rest ... E. Elgar	555. Unto us a Child is born F. Adlam
596. The Lord liveth A. W. Marchant	157. They that go down T. Attwood	1003. Unto us was born (S.B.) Macfarren
731. The Lord Omnipotent T. Adams	709. Ditto ... H. Clarke	186. Wash me thoroughly S. S. Wesley
873. The Lord our Righteousness Blair	546. Ditto ... G. Elvey	386. We beseech Thee John E. West
304. The Lord preserveth ... Armes	432. They that sow ... A. W. Batson	76. We give Thee thanks Macfarren
474. The Lord shall be J. V. Roberts	705. They were lovely ... Stainer	74. We have heard ... A. Sullivan
84. The Lord that made J. Turle	1926. Thine for ever H. Elliot Button	888. We sent unto thee ... A. Hollins
112. The Lord will comfort ... Hiles	221. Think, good Jesu ... Mozart	387. We shall not hunger A. Mackenzie
86. The morning stars ... J. Stainer	359. Think not that they F. Brandeis	127. We will rejoice ... Croft
767. Ditto G. A. A. West	161. This is the day ... S. C. Cooke	757. Weary of earth ... E. V. Hall
1057. The Name of the Lord A. Hollins	422. Ditto ... G. M. Garrett	610. Weary pilgrims ... F. Leoni
749. The New-born King P. E. Fletcher	327. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	57. What are these ... J. Stainer
465. The night is far spent (S.A.) Foster	949. Ditto ... B. Harwood	965. What sweeter music H. W. Davies
607. Ditto (S.A.T.B.) Foster	621. Ditto E. H. Lemare	974. Whate'er the blossom'd ... Haydn
640. The Parable of the F. J. Sawyer	462. Ditto A. W. Marchant	245. Whatsoever is born of God Oakeley
766. The people that ... C. F. Bowes	1046. Ditto ... J. H. Maunder	606. When Christ was born ... Davies
762. The promise which was Bairstow	1059. Ditto ... R. W. Robson	538. When Christ, Who J. V. Roberts
941. The radiant morn ... B. Steane	13. Ditto ... John Sewell	337. When God of old ... E. V. Hall
736. The reproaches ... J. B. Dykes	735. Ditto ... B. Steane	786. When Israel came out of Wesley
1064. Ditto ... W. S. Hoyte	4. Ditto ... J. Turle	489. When Jesus was born Cruickshank
1044. Ditto ... ... Palestrina	851. This is the record of John Gibbons	1014. When the Lord turned
174. The righteous live ... J. Stainer	828. Thou art a Priest for S. Wesley	791. Ditto ... E. Fanning
255. The righteous living Mendelssohn	678. Thou art gone to the ... Williams	372. Ditto ... E. Prout
155. The righteous shall flourish Calkin	934. Thou art My Son ... T. Adams	563. Where Thou reignest Schubert
977. The secret of the Lord ... West	1000. Thou art worthy F. E. Gladstone	69. Wherewithal shall ... G. Elvey
614. The souls of the righteous Byrd	265. Thou Judge of quick and dead	26. Ditto ... H. Hiles
559. Ditto ... ... Elvey	259. Thou, Lord, art merciful Mozart	659. While all things ... H. J. King
249. Ditto Myles B. Foster	553. Thou, Lord, in the ... J. Stainer	889. Ditto Healey Willan
140. Ditto ... Nares	354. Thou, O God, art praised E. V. Hall	529. While shepherds watched Barnby
294. Ditto ... Wm. Rea	930. Ditto J. W. Elliott	541. Ditto ... Elvey
285. Ditto H. H. Woodward	579. Ditto B. Luard-Selby	910. Ditto ... E. V. Hall
755. The stars in their silent ... West	281. Ditto ... R. Stewart	637. While the earth remaineth Gaul
457. The Story of the Cross M. B. Foster	62. Ditto ... S. Wesley	175. Ditto ... Heap
557. Ditto J. V. Roberts	747. Ditto W. Wolstenholme	640. Ditto ... Sawyer
531. Ditto A. Somervell	826. Thou shalt keep the feast Cowen	578. Ditto Bruce Steane
452. Ditto ... J. Stainer	476. Thou shalt shew me C. Bowdler	954. Ditto H. W. Wareing
360. The strong foundations F. Brandeis	634. Thou that sittest between F. Iliffe	463. Ditto C. L. Williams
834. The surrender of the ... Cornelius	480. Thou visitest the earth J. Barnby	361. While with ceaseless F. Brandeis
925. The Vineyard of the Lord Wareing	244. Ditto ... J. B. Calkin	695. Who are these ... R. Redhead
493. The whole earth ... J. V. Roberts	191. Ditto ... Calcott	787. Who can comprehend Thee Mozart
31. The wilderness ... John Goss	549. Ditto ... Elliott	264. Who is like unto Thee A. Sullivan
110. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	866. Thou who art for ever A. Dvorak	836. Who is this? H. Elliot Button
649. The Word is made ... T. Adams	484. Thou wilt keep him ... P. Armes	417. Ditto Fred. Rayner
576. There is a green hill ... Gounod	714. Ditto ... J. B. Calkin	115. Who is this that cometh Arnold
302. There is no condemnation Irons	72. Ditto ... Gauntlett	181. Whoso dwelleth... G. C. Martin
882. There is no sorrow A. E. Godfrey	107. Ditto S. S. Wesley	269. Why assemble the Rheinberger
245. There is none like unto ... Goss	276. Ditto C. L. Williams	299. Why do the heathen Gardner
809. There is none that can ... Atkins	515. Through peace ... J. H. Roberts	23. Why rage fiercely Mendelssohn
85. There shall a star Mendelssohn	902. Through the day... Luard-Selby	218. Why seek ye the living Alexander
600. There shall be an heap F. Tozer	1040. Ditto John E. West	468. Ditto (S.A.) M. B. Foster
670. Ditto Cuthbert Harris	622. Thus saith the Lord ... P. J. Fry	918. Ditto ... A. Hollins
685. There shall come a star C. Harris	216. Ditto ... Garrett	423. Ditto ... F. Peel
574. There shall come forth Mansfield	1052. Ditto G. C. Martin	645. Why standest Thou M. B. Foster
750. Ditto ... F. Tozer	441. Thy mercy, O Lord ... Garrett	661. Wisdom shall praise herself West
1061. Ditto F. W. Wadely	320. Ditto E. J. Hopkins	20. With angels... J. L. Hopkins
953. There was a marriage J. Stainer	514. Thy word is a lantern H. Purcell	821. Withdraw not Thou Thy Attwood
		22. Word of God incarnate Gounod
		785. Worthy is the Lamb E. H. Thorne
		572. Ye holy Angels bright Richards
		352. Ye shall go out with joy J. Barnby
		1036. Ditto Oliver King

(To be continued.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 939.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

MAY 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

PATRON - H.M. THE KING.

SATURDAY, 7th MAY, 1921, at 3.

GRAND

JUBILEE CONCERT

IN THE PRESENCE OF

THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN.

In Commemoration of the Opening of the Royal Albert Hall and the Formation of the Royal Choral Society in 1871

MISS CARRIE TUBB.

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.

MR. BEN DAVIES.

MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

THE COMBINED FORCES OF

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA

Conductor - LANDON RONALD.

AND

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY'S ORCHESTRA.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

Conductor - - SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

BAND AND CHORUS - ONE THOUSAND.

At the Organ - MR. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

Doors open at 2 p.m.

PRICES OF SEATS (including Tax): Boxes: Grand Tier, £6; Loggias, £4 10s.; 2nd Tier, £2 12s. 6d. Stalls, 15s. and 12s. Arena, 1r. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Balcony (all numbered and reserved), 5s. 9d. Organ Gallery (unreserved), 5s. 9d. Gallery (Promenade), 2s. 4d. Tickets may be obtained at the Hall and of the Usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy has been quite full for the past year, no intending students whose names are not already on the waiting list can be admitted before September.

MIDSUMMER TERM begins Monday, May 2.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

LECTURE-LESSONS in PIANOFORTE TEACHING, by Mr. OBAS MATTHAY, on alternate Wednesdays, at 6.45 p.m., commencing May 4; and by Mr. OSCAR BERINGER on alternate Saturdays, 2 p.m., commencing May 7.

LECTURES by Mr. FREDERICK CORDER, on the "Life and Works of Wagner" will be given on Wednesdays, May 4, 11, 18, and 25, 4.30.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, May 14 and 28, at 8.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Thursday, May 26, at 3.

L.R.A.M. Exam. Syllabus is now ready.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The MIDSUMMER TERM commences on MONDAY, MAY 2.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... .. LANDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

Sullivan's Opera, "Mikado," in rehearsal. Performance early in July.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:—

CHORAL PRELUDE, "Jesus Christ our Saviour," J. S. BACH. (Novello & Co., Book 17, p. 74; Augener & Co., p. 900; Peters, Vol. 6, No. 31.)

THREE PRELUDES founded on Welsh Hymn Tunes. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS. (Stainer & Bell.)

AIR AND VARIATIONS (Serenade), BEETHOVEN, Op. 25. Arrangements for the Organ by W. T. BEST, No. 68, p. 895. (Novello & Co.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July A.R.C.O. Examination are the same as those set for January, 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their Names for FELLOWSHIP by June 9th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by June 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before June 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

N.B.—The College will be closed on Thursday, May 12th, at 4 until Monday, May 23rd, at 10.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.
Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS. LTD.

1, CENTRAL BUILDINGS, WESTMINSTER, S.W.
(formerly of 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C. 2.)

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Viol Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held Scotland and Ireland in JUNE, and at all other Local Centres JULY. Last days of entry, May 9th and June 8th respectively.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretar Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associ (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, Ju and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. M L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellows (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresent either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on applicat SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thorough trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moder fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 38

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.
Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.
Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.
REV. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.
Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, includ the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teache Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and Decembe Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition. Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Count point, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Wardens:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman (Board of Examination):
DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.)
FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

May 12th, 1921.—LECTURE: "Reminiscences of Musicians I ha met." By Dr. T. J. SALWEY, J.P., LL.D.

COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM, TE DEUM and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBL CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacat Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

BISHOPSGATE INSTITUTE

(Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station).

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

will give a CONCERT of

Unaccompanied Choral Music

ON TUESDAY, MAY 10TH, AT 8 P.M.

The Programme will include:

MADRIGALS, PART-SONGS,

AND THE

Totet - JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE - Bach

Songs will be sung by

MISS CAROLINE HATCHARD

AND

MR. JOHN BUCKLEY.

Conductor - - MR. HAROLD BROOKE.

At the Piano - Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

Tickets (including Tax): Reserved, 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 4d.
 To be obtained from Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1; The Reference Library, Bishopsgate Institute, and
 on the

Hon. Sec., Novello Choir, Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

NOTTINGHAM

Musical Competition Festival.

28th and 29th OCTOBER, 1921.

Adjudicators:

PROF. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., Mus. D. (Ed.).

E. MARKHAM LEE, M.A., Mus. D. (Cantab.).

GEOFFREY SHAW, Mus. B.

MADAME EDITH HANDS, A.R.A.M.

CECIL J. SHARP, B.A. (Folk-Dancing).

Syllabus may be obtained from the Hon. Sec.,

WILFRED ROBINSON, King's Walk, Nottingham.

Price 6d., post free.

LONDON

GRAND CHAIR EISTEDDFOD.

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,

THURSDAY, 17th NOVEMBER, 1921.

MALE-VOICE CHOIR - - - PRIZE £75.

MIXED CHOIRS - - - PRIZE £25.

SOLOS, ETC.

Syllabus (two penny stamps) of Hon. Secs.:

J. DAVIES, 107, Falmouth Road, London, S.E. 1.

D. B. JONES, 24, Distin Street, Lambeth, London, S.E. 11.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICA-TION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
 WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
 Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

MR. JAMES BATES will give a Saturday morning Course of TWELVE LECTURE-LESSONS to Teachers and Choir-Trainers, commencing May 7, in preparation for the
 A.M. July Examination, for the Class-Singing Teachers' Diploma.
 For full particulars, address, Royal Academy of Music, N.W.1.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Editor of "Musical Courier," March, 1921, says: "Mr. Tree has rendered the world a great and timely service by publishing his book,
 'How to acquire ease of Voice-production.' The work is certainly a classic. Mr. Tree fully justifies his authority in lecturing on this vital subject by the exemplary use he makes of his own voice after thirty years of public work, and he is continually enlarging the circle of his beneficent influence by those lectures on voice-production which have become so popular throughout the country."

Cheltenham Echo, February 28, 1921.—"The presence of the famous baritone was a great pleasure to all who could appreciate the extraordinarily high quality of his art. He combines in a unique manner the qualities of a noble voice, perfectly produced, with both power and charm of interpretation, and to hear him is a lesson of the highest value in these important matters."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.).

(If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &amp;c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE
 LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Terms, &c., address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
 c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
 Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
 How it feels to Sing."
 3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music
 teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
 Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE TECHNIQUER

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL
INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

The Techniquer commended and used by numerous musicians of eminence among whom are—

OSCAR BERINGER, Esq., Hon. R.A.M.

AMBROSE COVIELLO, Esq., A.R.A.M. SPENCER DYKE, Esq., F.R.A.M.

HERBERT ELLINGFORD, Esq., Mus. Bac.

HERBERT FRYER, Esq., A.R.C.M. FREDERIC LAMOND, Esq.

CHARLES REDDIE, Esq., F.R.A.M. KALMAN RONAY, Esq.

HERBERT WALENN, Esq., F.R.A.M. M. ZACHAREWITSCH, Esq.

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

B. Cooper, Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

PEDALIER (Pleyel Wolff), for grand or upright piano. Fine tone: excellent condition. Cost £40. Going abroad.
 Accept £15. Harris, Ellangowan, Crief, Perthshire.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

GUARANTEE COURSES.

(Tuition until successful).

£40	-	-	Mus. Bac. and B.A.
£30	-	-	Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.
£20	-	-	Mus. Bac.
£10	-	-	A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
£6	-	-	Any Diploma.
£3	-	-	20 Lessons any Diploma.
	1.		Easy Instalments.
	2.		No time limit.

MATRIC . . . 20 Lessons . . . £4
Guarantee Course, £6

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CONCERTO

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 85).

FULL SCORE.

Price Forty-Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION

RECITALS, CONCERTS, ORATORIOS,

arranged and managed under the personal direction of A. E. MILGROM.

OVER 400 VOCALISTS AND INSTRUMENTALISTS ON BOOKS.

Mr. MILGROM can arrange the ENTIRE PROGRAMME for WEEK-ENDS at any country place or seaside resort.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W. 1 (NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Mr. MILGROM will shortly visit Vienna. Artists wishing to be represented kindly communicate with above Agency.

JOHN KEY

BASS BARITONE.

Specialises in Oratorio. Extensive Répertoire of Choral Works.

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

VERA SUTHERLAND

CONTRALTO.

CONCERTS, RECITALS,

.. AT HOMES, ETC. ..

For terms, vacant dates, apply, MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

BORNSTEIN

Era, March 31.—"Bornstein, a new prodigy violinist who played at Queen's Hall on Monday night, gave ample tokens of considerable gifts. He produces a full flow tone, his execution is remarkably neat and fluent, double stopping adroit and accurate. . . . Altogether he made a favourable impression."

For terms and vacant dates, apply MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

PERCIVAL GARRATT

PIANIST, ACCOMPANIST, AND COMPOSER

CAN ASSIST AT

RECITALS, CONCERTS, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

A. E. MILGROM CONCERT PARTY

IN COSTUME OR EVENING DRESS.

AT HOMES, GARDEN PARTIES,

CONCERTS, ETC.

Nominal terms to Hospitals and Charities.

For vacant dates apply as above.

MARY ARMSTRONG

OPERATIC SOPRANO.

CONCERTS, RECITALS, AT HOMES, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

NEWFIELD PIANOS

(VERTICAL AND OVERSTRUNG)

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION.

Can be seen at

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(near Queen's Hall).

AGENTS AND REPRESENTATIVES WANTED.

PIANO SALE.

170 PIANOS—MOSTLY VERTICALS

TO BE SOLD

at greatly reduced Prices.

Good Modern Pianos, with best tape action,

FROM £34 NET CASH.

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION.

Seen at MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, Regent Street, W.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).
Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

FRANK LE PLA

BASS-BARITONE.
Oratorio, Concerts, &c. 35, Villiers Road, Southall, W.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).
Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

RALPH WILLIAMS (L.R.A.M.)

(TENOR).
Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W.1.

JOHN SANDBROOK (A.R.C.M.)

BARITONE.
For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.
Lessons given in Singing.
91, Akerman Road, S.W. 9.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).
8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.
ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.
Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

GIVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

ROMAN FRIEDLAENDER

Violinist Virtuoso to the Royal Court of Spain, 1st Prize Paris Conservatoire, 1st Diploma Leipzig Conservatoire. Pupil of Alfred Brun, Henri Berthelier, and Hans Sitt, has vacancy for a few pupils.
Special method. 182, Clapham Road, S.W. 5.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.

* * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear,
along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly
permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),
c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C. 2.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLIN

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

DIPLOMA PAPER WORK.

Mus.Doc., Mus.Bac., A. and F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. and L.T.C.L.

PERSONAL COACHING

IN

PRACTICAL WORK.

COURSES ALSO IN

MUSICAL APPRECIATION,

GENERAL MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE,

SINGLE SUBJECTS

(HARMONY, FORM, TEACHING, Etc.).

For Terms, List of Successes, &c.—

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory
Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.

(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work

(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.

(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.
Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Corresp. And a
FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

M.R. J. D. HANDS, Mus. B. (Trin. Coll., Dublin),
prepares, by post, for Theoretical Exams. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters Road, Bideford.

D.R. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 380 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., will resume her Private Lessons in Singing in September. Studio, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incor- porated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally
or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland
Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
- COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
- DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
- FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
- ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
- DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
- PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
- IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
Form and Teaching, &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes.
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and
R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c.
Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

- |                         |                          |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. | 11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.  |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915. | 9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.  |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.  |
- "Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
L. Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F."
Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 93, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.
Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.
Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College in April last.
FELLOW (F.T.C.L.).—Edwin Arthur Crusha, F.R.C.O.

LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus. T.C.L.).
THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Jules Adolphus
Shaw, Mus. B.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).
PIANOFORTE.—Doris E. Bilbe, Frances A. Butler, Violet R.
Cleverly, Dorothy A. Dell, Edith W. Fry, Dorothy Hill, Ethel Humphries, Harold Hutson, Harold H. Johnson (including Scientific Principles of Teaching), Sydney W. Jones, William B. Jones, Olive
M. Lee, Cyril A. Marks, Archibald E. Noon, Clarice H. Sear, Osborne E. Weare.

SINGING.—Malcolm M. Thompson.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).
PIANOFORTE.—Doris E. Baker, Gladys A. Brown, Percy C.
Chambers, Louisa M. Dodd, Ruby Escott, Ena M. Figgins, Eva
Halliwell, Ida Johnson, Emily L. Maltby, Frances W. Mansley, Gwendoline M. Martyn, Gwendolyn L. Masters, Gladys I. Perriton, Monica Picken, Vera Snare, Sarah O. Surtees.

SINGING.—Florence I. Anderson, Dorothy Drury.

CERTIFICATES.
PIANOFORTE.—Gladys M. Adams, Elizabeth L. M. Thomas,
Hilda M. W. Wharmby.

The following SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES were examined in the Dominions, South America, and India, in 1920.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).
PIANOFORTE.—Rose Abrams, Gladys L. Anderson, Kathleen M.
Asquith, Mona G. Baile, Beatrice L. Barber, Jean E. Barker,
Josephine E. Beedison, Eleanor F. Beling, Kathleen Bennie, Lettice
H. Besanko, Vera M. Billing, Lilian M. Bradman, Blandina Bremer,
Isabel H. Browne, Margaret E. Burcham, Eileen M. Burns, Eileen
Byrne (of New Norcia), Aloysius Cavaliere, Veronica Chambers,
Doreen Clark, Nora H. Coalstead, Adeline M. Colledge, Elsie M.
Cooke, Adelaide Corbitt, Florence E. Cox, Laura M. Crisp, Florence
A. Dalton, Gladys M. de Grant, Mary Delaney, Olive Diver, Jessie
E. Dodd, Mary Donald, Eunice R. Dorling, Estelle Down, Annie Drew, Catherine Duff, Sarah L. Duff-Small, Phyllis Dük, Mary E.
Duke, Mabel A. Edmiston, Reka Edwards, Rose M. Edwards,
Winifred D. Edwards, Norman A. Elfverson, Elsie Enright,
Robert J. Erskine, Mavis Falconer, Mabel B. Fallon, Mary E. Feeny, Edgar H. Fewkes, Marguerite Fleming, Annie Gard, Evelyn F.
Garrett, Victoria A. Gill, Aileen M. Gleeson, Nellie Gray, Noreen V.
Green, Nonie Griffen, Olive Griffin, Florence M. Grout, Edna F.
Hamley, Effie M. Hannah, Dorothy J. Harper, Kathleen M.
Harrison, Gladys Heindol, Doris C. M. Hems, Constance C.
Henderson (1918), Esme F. Hetherington, Winifred P. Hill, Jessie M.
Hirst, Ivy L. Hoare, Mary E. Hoare, Mary A. Holman, Doris E.
Hunnybun, Elsie M. Ives, Helen H. Jack, Easter Jacobs, Reenie
Jenkins, Alice O. Johnson, Edna E. A. Johnston, Gertrude M.
Johnston, Ada C. Joyce, Eileen Kennedy, Veronica E. Kenniwell, Ruby E. A. Kerr, Edith M. Lall, Jenny Lambert, Grace V. Lane, Emily Leahy, Marguerite E. Leech, Mona K. Lette, Ilene W.
Longbottom, Lilian G. Lonsdale, Maisie Loughnan, Doreen A.
Lowther, Beatrice M. Luxton, Ethel E. McDonagh, Mary I. McDonald,
Alexandra A. McGruer, Dorothy R. MacJohn, Theodora V. Madsen,
May L. Marlor, Grace E. Marriott, Nora Maryatt, Linda M. Mathers-
Warner, Thomas H. Matthews, Isabel F. Maxwell, Margaret M.
Mearney, Grace Miller, Vera B. Moody, Mona Neale, Dorothy Neylan, Hermiona Notten, Mary O'Byrne, Eileen O'Loughlin, Clarice P.
Palmer, Maurice B. Parrot, Edith M. Pearson, Florence J. Peris, Constance V. Peters, Phyllis A. Phillips, Alice M. Price, Frances I.
Pushong, Doris B. Ramsay, Lucy E. P. Rein, Miriam R. Riley, Adelaide P. Ringer, Dorothy Rooker-Smith, Emmie Rope, Ivy L.
Rose, Elsie M. Sellars, Irene M. Short, Olive Simpson, Elva Skinner, Maidie Slack, Bessie A. Smith, Gladys E. Smith, Irene D. Stanwix, Ella G. Stay, Molly Stuart, Margaret M. Stoddart, Eileen M. Strong
(1918), Beryl L. Sullivan, Rose M. E. Swan, Hilda A. L. Taylor, Leila
Taylor, Muriel I. Taylor, Daisy W. Thomas, Marguerite M. Vance, Frances M. Van der Burgh, Elsie Walker, Ernest F. Warbrick,
Wilfreda Ward, Velma C. Webbe, Dorothy White (1919), Kitty
Williams, Madeline A. Wright.

VIOLIN.—Behman J. Cursetji, Florence A. McDonnell, Miriam
Stein, Ina G. Sutherland, Clara H. Tatham, Mary V. Thompson.

SINGING.—Minnetta A. Cleworth, Lucretia J. Collard, Gladys
Colville, Philomena Connolly, Khorshed N. Cooper, Laura M. Crisp, Honoria Fitzgibbon, Margaret Z. Flynn, Ivy D. Haarhoff, Alice C. G.
Hill, Mary A. Holman, Dorothea R. M. Horrigan, Myra Johnston, Edith E. Womersley.

ELOCUTION.—Lily I. Aslin, Marguerite R. N. Barrett, Enid E.
Cockerell, Lisle E. Decent, James B. Gibb, Edna M. Hatton, Eileen
G. Laverty, Jessie H. Perkin, Joan E. Salomon, P. Spence, Noelly
Thomas, Vera C. Tregoweth, Rhoda M. Williams.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A.Mus.T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Thomas K. E.
Phillips, Evelyn Robson, Katie Vogt.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Hazel Alford, Ethel M. Allen, Margaret R.
Anderson, Lina E. Arias, Eunice L. Astbury, Ruth E. Atkinson, Rheady Austin, Doris I. J. Baikie, Joseph Banner, Ella C. Beresford.
(Continued on page 312.)

(Continued from page 311.)

Hazel B. Bock, Muriel J. Bonamour, Elizabeth R. Bridges, Queenie L. Broekman, Alice E. Broughan, Evelyn P. Bunyan, Elizabeth Butters, Ethel M. Caldwell, Lily Carroll, Annette V. G. Carter, Phyllis M. Chiazari, Catherine Christian, May V. Clark, Gertrude C. Cock, Sarah L. Cohen, Mabelle L. Coombs, Winifred E. Cooper, Elsie M. Coyle, Nellie Crimmins, Catherine P. Croke, Margery G. Davie, Dorothy I. Davies, Muriel A. Deane, Constance Deare, Annie A. Dehle Rita Duhig, Beryl Dunstan, Ethel Easton, May I. Edgar, Edie Edmonds, Molly B. Evans, Constance M. Field, Mary B. Fortune, Lily Fredman, Ruby Frost, Gladys E. Galbraith, Kathleen Galbraith, Doris Mary Gardner, Minnie L. Gataker, Dorothy Geaney, Elsie V. Gedge, Una C. Gibson, Betty Gilbert, Marie Gilbert, Marjorie Gilshenen, Edyth G. Glass, Adeline M. Goodman, Teresa M. Green, Elsie Greig, Gladys Griffin, Coralie I. Haagner, Dorothy I. Hall, Lillian E. Hall, Moyah L. Halpin, Gladys de W. Hamer, Phyllis Hamley, Gertrude Hammer, Thelma M. Harger, Dora M. S. Harris, Venus O. Hartnell, Madge Higgins, Marie Himmel, Hilda Hirschmann, Frances M. Hirst, Margaret E. Hodgson, Elsie M. Honnor, Anna Margaret Hope, Gertrude Hoppe, Millicent M. Hubbard, Dulcie Jackson, Etha James, Rebecca Javen, Audrey Jones, Mary D. Jones, Fanny Kaplan (Grahamstown), Phyllis M. Keedwell, Honoria M. Keenan, Ursula Kennedy, Odie R. Kerr, Ivon O. Lambert, Marjorie C. Leach, Madge Leyden, Nellie Lowe, Ida Lungley, Elsie Lynch, Maud A. Lynch, Maude E. McCormick, Kathleen J. McDevitt, George A. McDonald, Barbara McFerran, Josephine McGettigan, Beryl M. D. Mackay, Eileen Mackenzie, Mary McKenzie, Eva Mackle, Marie McMahon, Eileen H. Manners, Zenobia Manson, Doris Manson, Myra A. Mathias, Marie A. Meeking, Elsie Moore, Eveline More, Gwendoline A. Morgan, Jessie Morgan, Phyllis B. Morton, Mary Murphy, Nita M. Murray, Mabel K. Musa, Doris L. Nara, Ruby Nicholas, Eileen Nolan, Nellie Nolan, Kathleen O'Brien, Nora E. O'Callaghan, Frances O'Donnell, Muriel O'Sullivan, Agnes May Paterson, Edith E. Pearce, Nancy Power, Mary M. Quinn, Herbert L. Richardson, Doris Rose, Jean E. Rowe, Flossie Sanderson, Vera T. Schacht, Elsie Seale, Minnie Shapiro, Kathleen Sheridan, Annie Silber, Edith Sinclair, Marjorie E. Sinclair, Bessie A. Smith, Dulcie M. Smith, Edith F. Smith, Freni Sorabji, Taylor E. S. Speak, Agnes Spiers, Claudia J. Sutherland, Laurel E. Taylor, May Terlier, Mary E. Thomson, Rona R. Thomson, Ethel H. Todd, Kathleen Townsend, Kathleen Tuck, Lucile B. Tuttle, Grace Vallé, Dorothy N. Van Duyker, Louisa J. Van Niekirk, Gertrude J. Van Rij, Gwin J. Waterworth, Melba Weatherill, Annie M. Whitelaw, Hilda Whidock, Natalie J. Wilkins, Doris Wilkinson, Annie D. Willcocks, Ellinor A. Wills, Gladys M. Wilson, Ida L. Wilson.

VIOLIN.—Gladys K. Barton, Gwendoline Bearsley, Martha N. Clement, Leila Greig, Dorothy M. E. Hawker, Marion M. Healy, Maida H. Provan, Edna Ryan, Madge Samuel, Margaret J. Tappenden.

SINGING.—Nellie M. Barton, Harriet Coleman, Olive R. Handley, Cathleen Scallan.

ORGAN.—James M. Niven, Winifred Proctor.

ELOCUTION.—Thelma A. Baulderstone, Dorothy E. Beckett, Ruth M. M. Blaine, Amy G. Bowden, Constance B. Brown, Doris P. Cooper, Anne Dias, Monica J. Dolphin, Hermione S. L. Faure, Dorothy C. Free, Enid S. Gillson, Sylvia I. Harrison, Elsie Higgins, Gladys E. P. Hunter, Pernie Kholhoff, Charlotte W. Knapman, Kathleen E. McCarthy, Eugenie McDowell, Edna Maclean, Kathleen M. Malumby, Elizabeth M. Mason, Nina B. Morgan, Hilda Oldfield, Alice Pearce, Marie ter B. Preis, Jean T. Steel, Beryl Watts.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Hope D. Asher, Annie S. Aslin, Eunice Bastiaensz, Winifred H. Bawden, Mary Becker, Ivy T. Bell, Oscar H. Biggs, Aimai R. Bilimoria (Hons.), Hazel M. Bird, Doris Bodeker (Hons.), Stella Bradshaw (Hons.), Doris Brophy (Hons.), Cora Broughton, Muriel E. Burke, Monica M. Byrne, Doris Caddy, Madge Carew, Edith E. Carter, Kathleen Cavanagh, Ruth G. Christie, Jessie D. Clingan, Adeline D. Cobham, Freda Cohen (Hons.), Mary E. Creely, Vida G. Dahlenburg, Florrie de Mamiel (Hons.), Alma J. Dickens, Clara D. Dierks, Edwin P. Derrington, Anna Eapen, Beryl J. Embleton, Alice V. Faulkner, Dorothy M. Fitzpatrick, Thelma Forbes (Hons.), Dorrie A. Francis (Hons.), Minnie R. Frapwell, Muriel M. G. Frazier, Ada E. Frye, Kathleen A. Gallagher, Minnie Gallyot, Flora R. Gavronsky, Juanita V. Grose, Phyllis T. Halpin, Sylvia R. Harrison, Enid G. Hart (Hons.), Margaret Hayman (Hons.), Gladys E. N. Henley, Margaret M. Hill (1918), Pearl Hookway (Hons.), Ruby L. Hudson (Hons.), Lottie Hutton, Gladys D. Jacoby, Dorothy Johnson (Te Aroha), Dorothy D. Johnson, Mary Kavanagh, Margaret Lawson, Vera F. C. Leicester (Hons.), Patricia C. Lynch (Hons.), Pearl E. McIntosh, Jean M. H. McKenzie, Muriel A. I. MacLaren (Hons.), Josephine MacNamara, Charles L. Martin, Kathleen M. McMullen, Florence Mayberry, Alma Meyer, Vera E. Miller, Edith Milnes, Mabel Möller, Lucy Molloy, Eva E. Mompilé, Ruby E. Munro, Amelia L. Newson, Teresa O'Hara, Thelma M. Omant, Mary C. Pauley, Muriel Pearson, Thelma P. Perkins, Reabie V. Phoenix (Hons.), Nellie Scanlan, Fanny R. Silpert, Maud Simmons (Hons.), Annie P. Skewes, Marjorie Smith, Sadie Smith, Henrietta A. Tait, Veda Townsend, Mary Vandeleur, Jessie M. Webster, Gavina Whitefield, Mary V. Wilkinson, Doris M. Wilson, Edna Wise, Grace E. Wood, Eileen Woodfield (Hons.), Edna M. M. Wright.

SINGING.—Cyril A. Bradley, Annie Henry (Hons.), Marie Jones, Aileen M. S. McDade, Catherine McGreevy.

VIOLIN.—Stephanie Lampka, Grace A. Austin, Norberto de L. Vidal. EXAMINERS.—Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Percy C. Buck, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Sir Frederic Cowen, C. E. Ford, Mus. D., Dawson Freer, Edward d'Evry, E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Thomas Keighley, Mus. D., C. H. Kitson, Mus. D., E. Burritt Lane, Mus. B., C. Egerton Lowe, A. Mallinson, A. Mistowski, Mus. B., C. W. Pearce, Mus. D., L. Pecska, Alec Rowley, Charles Schilsky, A. J. Slocombe, G. F. Vincent, J. Warriner, Mus. D.

The next Examinations for Diplomas and Certificates will take place in July next at the College in London, and at certain Centres; last day of entry, June 25 next.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

STUDENTS' DAILY BREAD

A SERIES OF USEFUL HANDBOOKS FOR ALL
KEEN STUDENTS OF MUSIC.

SECRET OF SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE (SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIQUE). TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF ACQUIRING A BEAUTIFUL VOICE
LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

HOW TO SING A SONG. LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION. TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF OBTAINING A BEAUTIFUL TONE ON THE VIOLIN. SASS. 9d.

VIOLIN TEXT-BOOK. M. S. WICKINS. 9d.

WHAT VIOLINISTS OUGHT TO KNOW. STOEVIING. 9d.

HOW TO LEARN TO READ MUSIC. SEPPINGS. 1s. 3d.

COLLEGIATE MUSIC DICTIONARY. MOORE. 3d.

EXAMINATION TEST-QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
MARCHANT. 9d.

SIMPLE THEORY OF MUSIC. BATES. 6d.

RUDIMENTS AND THEORY OF MUSIC. WICKINS. 9d.

RUDIMENTS OF MUSICAL NOTATION. WESTBROOK. 6d.

MUSICAL SOUND. EDWARD WATSON. 1s. 3d.

SKETCHES OF THE LIVES OF GREAT MUSICIANS
KRAUSS. 6d.

Of any Music Seller.

FREE! 100 GRADED VIOLIN PIECES. POSTAGE 2d.

PULVER, AIDS TO THE STUDY OF SEVCIK.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR', 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR', 'HEMY'S TUTOR', 'WICKINS RAPID TUTOR', 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD', 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES', 'MACFARRREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS', 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD', ETC.

THE FIRST EDITION IN ENGLISH.

THAYER'S LIFE OF BEETHOVEN

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY

H. E. KREHBIEL.

(See page 336.)

To be published in December next in Three Volumes at £5 5s. net.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co., Ltd., will shortly open

A SUBSCRIPTION LIST

For a Limited number of Copies at £3 13s. 6d. net.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MAY 1 1921

THE JUBILEE OF THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL AND THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

By HERMAN KLEIN

(Continued from April number, page 235)

II.—THE PERIOD OF EXPERIMENT AND NON-SUCCESS

It will be convenient for the purposes of this narrative to divide the Jubilee period (1871-1921) broadly into, say, two unequal parts—the first, those thirty years of strenuous effort and struggle which brought the chequered history of the Royal Albert Hall down to the beginning of the present century; the second, two pleasant decades of smooth, easy working and comparative all-round success. The story of an uphill fight generally provides the most interesting reading, and it will not be the writer's fault should the climax be followed by a rather lengthy diminuendo.

But the Albert Hall is an exceptional case. Its story, like the place itself, is somewhat akin to the tales of fairy palaces in the 'Arabian Nights.' It was mysterious from the beginning. Few people could tell you off-hand how or whence it came, what kept it 'going,' or precisely what it was there for. Nor did its mysteriousness end altogether when the institution had escaped from the dangers of an impecunious childhood, and grown strong (as it was certainly big) enough to support itself. From first to last its fifty years have furnished more or less exciting examples of the unexpected; and now has come the present Jubilee celebration, with its remarkable testimonies of national pride in a national institution which has achieved a destiny and a success rather different from what the original designer had imagined.

E pur si muove, as Galileo remarked of something even bigger than the Albert Hall. But if the affairs of the latter are moving to-day, it is precisely because they are not being carried on 'according to plan'—the original plan. The magnificent scheme described last month in these columns was in reality too Utopian for the advancing mid-Victorian age in which it was launched. It was well-meant; nay, it was even grandiose, noble, superb in intention. But it was not feasible—it could not be successfully worked. And we know this, because the whole of the vast experiment, practically every feature of which was tried—tried faithfully, conscientiously, perseveringly, regardless of every commercial consideration—was in too many instances found wanting. It will now be our business to follow, as briefly as may be, the course of this singular and instructive record of endeavour.

THE MISTAKES OF THE OPENING YEAR

In the year of the opening very little was done, and that little was unsatisfactory. Things went badly from the start. People did not take kindly to the new building, much less to the music they heard in it when they visited the International Exhibition in the adjacent grounds. Her Majesty's Commissioners had put up a huge and imposing edifice, but neither they nor the Executive Council of the Hall seemed at first to know what to do with it. The opening of the Exhibition in June, 1871, provided the initial opportunity; and a beautiful thing they made of it. The Franco-Prussian war was just ending, and among the French refugees in London was the musician who wrote 'Faust.' Since the death of Mendelssohn he had been the Queen's favourite composer. Why not associate Gounod with the beginning of a new dawn for British music? Accordingly, Gounod completed his cantata, 'Gallia,' and, having formed a large choir, conducted it in the Albert Hall on the opening day in the presence of Her Majesty; while, just to show there was no ill-feeling on the part of a neutral State, a 'Grand Triumphant March' by the German professor, Ferdinand Hiller, and a new cantata, entitled 'On Shore and Sea,' by Arthur Sullivan (also conducted by their composers), were included in the programme.

The choir just referred to was to supply the nucleus for the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, which was duly formed in the following season and gave altogether four concerts—the first on May 8, 1872—under the direction of Gounod, these being part of the ambitious scheme (for eighteen concerts from May to July, 1872) already detailed in our earlier article. But all of that was after the initial bad impression had been created—an impression whereof the Press was not slow to take notice. For music at the new Hall in 1871 was obviously an afterthought, a minor attraction tacked on to the others; in short, as one journal described it, a 'Daily Exhibition of Musical Art, chiefly represented by well-worn overtures, arrangements of songs [mostly those of Gounod], and scraps from the popular operas, performed by military bands to a few stragglers.' And among the more youthful stragglers on one occasion, just dropping in to 'listen to the band,' was the writer of these lines. On July 18, the last touches having been put to the new organ, the huge instrument was formally inaugurated by William T. Best, the official organist of the Hall, with a recital that was really worthy of its object.

SOME RESULTS OF THE GOUNOD REGIME

To the 'errors and omissions' of that opening year many unlucky consequences may be laid; but among the temporary beneficial results was the spate of rather more decent music that came in 1872, of which, nevertheless, only six operatic concerts (out of eighteen) proved financially successful. H.M. Commissioners were now becoming slightly alarmed. They had guaranteed the Hall against loss, and here was a deficit of £3,140, due mainly to the heavy expenses incurred by the formation and management of the new Choral Society. Gounod's appointment as conductor was openly criticized in strong terms. Said the Musical Times, June, 1872:

That M. Gounod should have been appointed director of an English choir in a building under Royal patronage is of itself a sufficient grievance to those who see around them a number of native professors thoroughly qualified by talent and experience for the task.

And such programmes!—nearly every piece harmonized or arranged by the conductor; miscellaneous selections from the works of Palestrina, Bach, Mozart, and others, including a Te Deum by Gounod himself—all performed without orchestra, to the accompaniment of the pianoforte and organ, 'played by Mr. William Carter and his son George.' No wonder there were small audiences.

Obviously this kind of thing could not last long. With the departing summer Gounod 'went' too; not as yet to his native land, but to the retirement of Tavistock Square, whence he emerged only to give some choral subscription concerts at St. James's Hall, in 1873, before finally returning to Paris. Meanwhile, 'struggling against its acoustical defects and its amateur management,' the scene of his labours at South Kensington happily came under artistic direction of a better description. Ignoring their previous loss, H.M. Commissioners offered to guarantee another £600 to keep the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society going for the season 1872-73. With this guarantee in hand the Council called in Messrs. Novello—who had shown great interest in the new Society, Alfred H. Littleton being its first secretary—and the suggestion was promptly taken up. It was arranged that, in conjunction with that firm (Mr. Littleton being also a member of the Council), a series of six concerts should be given under the conductorship of Joseph Barnby, who at once abandoned the Oratorio Concerts at Exeter Hall and amalgamated his choir with the new one at the Albert Hall.

THE NEW CHOIR UNDER BARNBY

In December the rehearsals began, and on February 12, 1873, the first season of the R.A.H.C.S., under Barnby, opened with a fine performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. The principal soloists were Madame Florence Lancia, Miss Julia Elton, W. H. Cummings, and Foli, with Stainer at the organ. Heard under such extraordinary conditions, the sublime work, then but slightly known in London, created a profound impression; moreover, mirabile dictu! it was performed on no fewer than four consecutive evenings during that same Holy Week, the Hall being better and better filled each time.* The audiences would join in the chorales, and with no little spirit, being considerably aided in their efforts by the support of a trumpet played at each entrance to the amphitheatre stalls.

Its excessive beauties were so thoroughly revealed to the audience at the Albert Hall that we have every hope, considering the aristocratic nature of the assembly, of real and lasting benefit to the art accruing from its performance.—Musical Times, March, 1873.

Later on, in April, 'The Messiah' was given, and after that an interesting revival of Handel's 'Belshazzar.'

That was not all. The Exhibition of 1873 was devoted not only to Inventions, Industries, and Art, but in a special degree to Music. It opened on Easter Monday, and from the first there began a series of daily concerts, orchestral and vocal, with Barnby as conductor, quite different in character from those of two years previously. The programmes contained a goodly proportion of 'classical' items, and improved in quality as the season went on. Altogether, between April and October, no less than two hundred concerts were given, with an orchestra of at least fifty, and sometimes more. When Barnby did not conduct his place was taken by Mr. Deichmann, a well known and respected orchestral player; and Mr. Oliver King was the official accompanist throughout.

Here, again, as in the organization of the new choir, we trace the valuable influence of Alfred Littleton, to whose firm the whole of the arrangements for these concerts had been entrusted. They were to lead, as we shall see directly, to a still more important undertaking. Meantime it had been a novel experience to read in an Exhibition announcement such sentences as these:

The performances will be limited to music of a high class. . . . The production of music unknown or unfamiliar in England, will be kept steadily in view. . . . With a special view to the encouragement of musical composition in this country, prominence will be given to the works of English composers. Advantage will be taken of these concerts to bring forward young English artists whose ability may entitle them to the privilege of a public appearance.

It is well, perhaps, to add that daily concerts of this type had never been given in London before.

Unfortunately the balance-sheet issued to the members of the Corporation of the Hall in July, 1873, showed a clean deficit of £5,726, which rose in the following year to £6,115. The loss would have been heavier still but for the substantial profits derived from two State concerts, one given in 1873 in honour of the Shah of Persia, the other

* In the Council's Report for 1872-73 appeared the following paragraph: The experiment of having the Passion music of Sebastian Bach for four evenings in succession—an experiment which the Council believe had never been tried before with music of this nature—was eminently successful. The audiences increased nightly, and by their manner of joining in the Chorales showed their interest in the subject. The Council consider it only right to record their thanks to Mr. Alfred Littleton, who has acted as manager on behalf of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., for the spirited manner in which he has undertaken this business. Without the co-operation of this eminent firm the Council could not have been in a position to give the Seatholders these advantages.

1874 to celebrate the visit of the Emperor of Russia. 'Experience has shown,' said the Council in its Report, 'that but on such exceptional occasions incidental concerts are too costly to be remunerative.' Verb. sap.

On the other hand, if entrepreneurs had refused to come forward in sufficient numbers, the Hall had been used for the first time for a large public meeting; the Choral Society was increasing its reputation; the newly-formed Amateur Orchestral Society (its smoking-concerts regularly attended by its President, the Prince of Wales) was doing well; and various series of concerts were being given by Mr. William Carter's Choir, by Mr. Mapleson, by Mr. Frederic Cowen, and even one concert by Mr. Sims Reeves. Slowly and surely, if imperceptibly, the artistic situation began to improve.

A CHANGE OF POLICY

It was not, however, the plethora of concerts of mixed types that was to bring salvation. In the first two years, down to July, 1873, a total of a hundred and twenty-six concerts had taken place in the Hall,* exclusive of the daily organ recitals and exhibition performances. During the next twelve months, besides the twenty-five comprised in the different series mentioned above, the Council itself, in conjunction with Messrs. Novello, was responsible for seventeen oratorio concerts in which the Albert Hall Choral Society took part. The main anxieties of the Council at this period were to hit upon the right kind of entertainment to attract the public and to provide the seatholders with their money's worth. The latter point was especially important, in view of the fact that the executive was now proposing to levy a 'seat-rate' of £3 a year (reduced to £2, at which sum it was fixed for several years in succession) to help to reduce the growing deficit.

There was another and still more urgent reason for imposing this seat-rate. H.M. patient and generous Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 were at last growing tired of their burden. They decided first to relinquish the business of giving musical exhibitions; in the second instance, at the end of 1874, they withdrew their support for the maintenance of the Hall, which had been equivalent to a yearly subsidy of about £3,000. This was serious, and when the blow fell the Council was far from being in a position to bear it. On the contrary, its status was weak on every side.

Before beginning to pay a penny for maintenance, its balance-sheet had again shown a heavy excess of expenditure over revenue, and it had been compelled to obtain an advance in cash to carry on the undertaking.

Finally, at this crucial moment, the Executive Council was in the midst of a highly interesting and creditable experiment, which, by the consent of its Corporation, it had undertaken in partnership with Messrs. Novello during the autumn of 1874. That experiment, the story of which shall now be related, had been the logical outcome of the experiences gained during the so-called Music Exhibition of the previous year, and represented the culmination of the efforts of Alfred Littleton to discover a practical solution for the musical problems that beset the South Kensington scheme.

THE GREAT 'NIGHTLY CONCERT' CAMPAIGN

The old axiom 'In for a penny, in for a pound,' tacked on to the advice given by Polonius to his son, may well have been in the minds of Mr. Littleton and his colleagues when they set about organizing their new campaign, which aimed at nothing less than to give concerts every night of the week for as many months in the year as they could be carried on. The prospectus issued by Messrs. Novello, conceived in the broadest possible artistic spirit and couched in the language made familiar by the operatic manifestoes of the period, evidently cherished the idea that the centre of London musical life either had been or was about to be transferred from the neighbourhood of the St. James's and Exeter Halls to a mile or so west of Piccadilly Circus.

Well, they were only a little in advance of their time, that was all. The soil was not quite so ready to be tilled as they imagined. The word 'decentralization' had not yet been invented; neither had motor-cars, motor omnibuses, nor taxicabs—the modern means of transport which have since brought the Albert Hall to within a few minutes of our doors. The nearest point then for rapid access was the South Kensington Station of the Metropolitan District Railway, shortly afterwards to be linked to the Hall by a subway that was never completely 'joined up' at either end. In short, the trip to and from the Royal Albert Hall, in November, 1874, still amounted to a veritable journey. Notwithstanding, on the 7th of that month—the month of fogs, and a Saturday evening—it opened its doors for a series of concerts of indefinite but elastic proportions, to be given 'on a scale of completeness and efficiency [to quote the prospectus] hitherto unattempted in this or any other country.' The following prices were charged: amphitheatre stalls, 5s.; arena, 4s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; admission (gallery), one shilling; with private boxes at 1, 2, and 3 guineas each.

To dwell at length on the prospectus would occupy columns of space. It was a notable document of several pages, wherein were rehearsed with refreshing emphasis the attributes of the whole gigantic undertaking, and the classification of its varied features under their different leaders—the 'Classical, Orchestral, and Vocal Music' under Mr. Barnby; the 'English Music' under Mr. John Francis Barnett; the 'Modern Orchestral Music' (including the fearful and wonderful compositions of Herr Richard Wagner) under Mr. Edward Dannreuther; the 'Songs, Ballads, * Made up as follows: 40 People's Concerts, 29 Oratorio, 11 Operatic, 3 Operatic and Military, 12 Instrumental, 28 Miscellaneous, and 3 connected with the London Musical Festival.

Madrigals, &c., the 'Ballet and other Popular Music,' again under the versatile Mr. Barnby; and, lastly, the 'Analytical Programmes' from the pen of Mr. Joseph Bennett. The orchestra was to consist of seventy performers, while the madrigals were to be sung by a new choir and the oratorios, of course, by the members of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society 'a body of amateurs now in the highest state of efficiency' (which it certainly was), with Mr. Barnby as conductor-in-chief and Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. Randegger to assist Mr. Barnett and Mr. Dannreuther.

The works to be performed? None were mentioned by name; they lay, so to speak, 'in the lap of the gods' of South Kensington and Berners Street. But in the active mentality of the tutelary genius of the whole business there were germinating ideas which were to prove in execution the precursors of valuable methods and attractive customs which concert-givers of to-day would fain regard as their own. For this was some time before the revival of Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden under Arditi; and never previously had the London musical public read its weekly programme as thus:

Monday	...	...	...	Ballad Night
Tuesday	...	...	...	English Night
Wednesday	...	...	...	Classical Night
Thursday	...	...	...	Oratorio Night
Friday	...	...	...	Wagner Night
Saturday	...	...	...	Popular Night

Here, indeed, was a system of concert-giving so new that, as the sequel proved, only a small percentage of Metropolitan music-lovers were capable of realising its educational value. Fancy such a thing as a 'Wagner Night' at this epoch, when very few amateurs knew a note of Wagner's music, and his name and works were virtually anathema maranatha to every leading musical writer in the country! Even the bold Mr. Barnby, strongly backed up as he was, did not dare devote an entire programme to the Master who was just building his Festspielhaus at Bayreuth. Nevertheless, the term 'Wagner Night' was sufficiently justified—on the first occasion that it was ever utilised—by a selection that comprised the Overture to 'Tannhäuser,' 'Elizabeth's Greeting,' the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Die Meistersinger,' and the 'Kaisermarsch.' The dose was thought a sensational one, but it proved a hit when little else did; and therewith was established a precedent that dozens of conductors have since imitated.

Remember, this was 1874. The 'musical young man' of to-day was not yet born. The term 'British Music' was unknown, or at least not in use. The chief protagonists of the home-made article were Sterndale Bennett (who died in the following year), G. A. Macfarren, J. F. Barnett, J. L. Hatton, H. S. Oakeley, Barnby, and others whose names are still less recollected now. Sullivan had not yet come into his own; 'The Rose Maiden' had not yet made Frederic Cowen; Edward German was still a boy at school in Shropshire. Musical progress in this country was 'going slow,' and none knew better than Messrs. Novello that everything in the shape of innovation or novelty was being scrutinised with a careful and jealous eye.

But they were in deadly earnest with these concerts. 'Recognizing the many legitimate forms of music, and appreciating their relative value, the directors have determined to make the concert representative in the widest sense.' And they were as good as their word. Even on the Ballads and Popular Nights something 'superior' was included—'not only works of the recognized "great masters," but also the compositions of those who stand next in order of merit, and whose undoubted genius has not yet met with adequate appreciation.' The 'Popular' programme on the opening night actually had in it, inter alia Beethoven's Choral Fantasia and the Overture and March from 'Tannhäuser.'

The soloists comprised every artist of eminence in the kingdom and several from abroad. Among them—names worth recalling—were Lemmens Sherrington, Edith Wynne, Anna Williams, Patey Antoinette Sterling, Sims Reeves, Edward Lloyd Cummings, Vernon Rigby, Lewis Thomas, and Foli; Agnes Zimmermann, Walter Bache, Norman Néruda, August Wilhelmj, Prosper Sainton, Oscar Beringer, Pollitzer, and Charles Hallé; with, as organists, Stainer, George Martin, Stevenson Hoyte, and Alexandre Guilmant. The director of the whole undertaking was the late Alfred H. Littleton, with whom was associated as manager his firm's able and energetic lieutenant, Mr. Charles Fry.

AN ARTISTIC TRIUMPH AND A DISAPPOINTING RESPONSE

Attempted anywhere within easy reach, anywhere in London almost but at the then out-of-the-way, inaccessible Albert Hall, such a large, broad-minded scheme as that just described might conceivably have 'made good,' even if it could not wholly snatch success out of the jaws of failure. But at Kensington Gore, as was quickly proved, it did not stand the remotest chance. The attendance, although it marked an average of three thousand, grew smaller as night succeeded night and week followed week. After the experiment had been given a fair trial, the number of concerts was reduced, first to two per week, ultimately to occasional concerts only. Altogether sixty-two concerts were given under the joint undertaking between Messrs. Novello and the Corporation. The receipts averaged £138, and the expenditure £236; a loss of £100 per concert. To be exact, the total deficit amounted to £6,100, despite the fact that no fewer than two hundred thousand persons attended (by payment or right of admission) the whole of the sixty-two concerts.

In every way this remarkable series of concerts constituted a record. The present writer went to several of them and heard some splendid performances—notably, those contributed by the Choral Society under Barnby's animated leadership.

here will be an opportunity later on to deal more minutely with the admirable achievements of this society under its famous conductor; but it will be proposed to recall now that the Novello Concerts originated amid a blaze of glory with the memorable production of Verdi's Manzoni 'Requiem' on May 15, 1875, when it was conducted in person by the illustrious composer. Never to be forgotten as the absorbing interest, the brilliancy, the artistic delight of that glorious Saturday afternoon; the pleasure of listening to music so astonishingly new and beautiful; the joy of hearing incomparable voices like those of Madame Stolz, Madame Waldemann, the great tenor, Masini, and the basso, Medini; the experience of seeing Verdi conduct; and the feeling of pride in the ringing of our magnificent English choristers.

That performance of the 'Requiem,' under Verdi himself, was never afterwards to be equalled. What is more, it may now be singled out as the artistic clou of the whole fifty years' musical history of the Royal Albert Hall.

So much, then, had been accomplished through the enterprise of the firm of Novello. The pity was that, although the value and repute of the Hall for music on an imposing scale had been sensibly augmented, nothing had been really done to establish its utility as a metropolitan musical centre or its suitability for the various other æsthetic projects that its founders had had in view. The latter, recognizing that they had partially failed, were now retiring gracefully, leaving the entire maintenance and government of the place to its Corporation and Council, whose financial difficulties were troubling them far more than questions of art and science. They proposed an Endowment Fund; they levied a seat-rate of £2 a year, lest the property should 'inevitably fall into dilapidation'; in short, they feared the worst. Happily, the worst did not happen—thanks neither to their wisdom nor their foresight. They began tardily (1876) to perceive that the 'difficulty of access' was a serious obstacle; but though they laid plans for extending their rights and privileges (a necessary proceeding, for that matter), it never seemed to occur to them that the wisest course to pursue, in order to bring people to South Kensington for musical culture, would be to provide them with some good music free of charge.

The 'Cheap Concerts for the People' had been a financial failure, but the loss on them had only amounted to £750. They should have been continued in spite of that. The organ recitals had been well attended, but a charge was always made for admission, and on Sundays that charge was always too high. The original plan had contemplated imitating the municipal methods of Liverpool and Birmingham. The highest price charged for admission to an organ recital in 1873-74 at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, given by the Corporation organist, William T. Best, was, as the present writer can vouch, exactly threepence! But what of orchestral music for the people? No one seems to have thought of such a thing, much less of endowing an orchestra as a permanent institution. It never occurred to the aristocratic Amateur Orchestral Society to perform before any but its own (subscribing) members. Yet what new vein might not have been struck a quarter of a century before Queen's Hall was built, had these exclusive entertainments, or the Sunday afternoon concerts of Zaverthal's Royal Artillery Band, or the organ recitals from first to last been available for the public at a trifling charge for the best seats?

No; no one thought of it; for, as has been said, the monetary question was at this period the main obsession of those who held the reins of government,*—how to make the place pay and prove that it was not the 'white elephant' the world declared it to be. At length, after the crisis of 1876, when the constitution of the Corporation was altered by the Queen's consent and the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society reorganized, signs of improvement began to be noted. The Hall was let for more varied purposes—bazaars, needlework exhibitions, and even the Cambridge higher local examinations for women. There was a rather better balance-sheet. Thanks to H.M. Commissioners, a debt of £4,000 was wiped off the capital account.

THE FAMOUS WAGNER FESTIVAL

Then, in 1877, came another musical event of the first importance in the shape of the Wagner Festival, which was destined in many ways to exercise a stimulating and unsuspected influence upon musical progress in this (artistically) backward land. Looking back to it as we now can, it is not difficult to perceive in this curious undertaking the birth of many things that were to become salient features in the subsequent development of music in our midst. First of all the Wagner 'craze' itself, which lasted well over thirty years—kindled largely, of course, by the presence of the master in propria personâ, though not instantly enough to ensure crowded audiences or pecuniary success for a novel and expensive type of concert entertainment. In that respect, had the craze existed in advance of its hero's coming, there might have been a different tale to tell. As it was, the attitude of the British public towards the Wagner Festival was benign, but distinctly hesitant.

Far more important in its after-effects than the concours of the master was that of Hans Richter, who came with a reputation just earned at the initial Bayreuth Festival and left us with a much larger one. When he returned here in the following year and started his concerts at St. James's Hall, the London Germans and their musical following were ready for him. Success came then as a matter of course. It was Richter who enacted the rôle of high-priest at our leading Wagnerian temples, and for a couple of decades at east he was never known to beat the tom-tom in vain. But it would fill a book to tell the whole story of his achievements in this country, beginning with the historic moment when Wagner, nervous and upset, lost control alike of himself and his huge orchestra of two hundred and fifty (with Wilhelmj as principal first violin), resigned his baton to Richter, and subsided into an armchair. After that, save when he conducted an occasional piece, he sat facing the Albert Hall auditorium for the remainder of the Festival, a sphinx-like but somewhat pitiful figure for his admirers to gaze upon.

* Apart from the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, the leading men in the Council during the 'seventies and 'eighties included Lord Clarence Paget, the Rt. Hon. Lord Playfair, the Earl of Feversham, the Duke of St. Albans, the Earl of Lathom, Sir Dudley Coutts Majoribanks, Mr. Warren de la Rue, Mr. C. J. Freake, Mr. H. C. Rothery, Mr. C. McL. McHardy, and Major-General C. E. Webber.

Here, again, we have to date the adoption of the large modern orchestra which to-day some of us are inclined to regard in the light of an artistic juggernaut. It would be a little unfair perhaps if this mistake were wholly charged to the Albert Hall. Yet it is an unquestionable fact that the enormous proportions of the orchestral 'pit,' as the Americans call it, so disturbed Messrs. Hodge and Essex and Herr Hermann Franke, the London organizers of the Wagner Festival, that they could arrive at only one conclusion—it would need to be filled with players. Hans Richter was delighted with the sonority of this huge band (he had had a big one at Bayreuth also), and thenceforth saw to it that every orchestra he conducted in England was relatively on the same numerical scale. The Philharmonic followed suit, and since then symphony orchestras of the old Beethoven size have been out of fashion.*

The entire Festival comprised no more than eight concerts, and there was a loss on all but the last two or three, for which lower prices of admission were charged. It was so contrived, however, that Wagner did not have to go home without a few hundred British pounds in his pocket to swell the funds then being raised to pay for the new Bayreuth Theatre. But, as has been shown, his visit did something more. It contributed a memorable chapter to the history of the Albert Hall; also it drew increased attention to the building by demonstrating its possibilities as a locale for orchestral performances on an extensive scale, and by attracting a few thousand people who had never before been there for the purpose of listening to anything but oratorios and organ recitals.

USES OF THE AUDITORIUM EXTENDED

Leaving for future review the career of the choir which Joseph Barnby had now brought to so high a degree of perfection, and merely noting that the season of 1876-77 was the first in which it became self-supporting, let us go on to the economic and other developments that followed closely upon the heels of this remarkable Festival. The National Training School for Music—now in running order, yet rather inclined to halt in its stride—was sufficiently dealt with in our previous article.

One of the best features of the year 1878 was an Exhibition of Fine Arts held in the gallery. So successful was it, alike as regards the quality of the pictures and the facilities for viewing them consecutively in a favourable light, that everyone wondered why the show did not become a regular fixture. The Council was very sanguine about the future, and hoped that it would take a permanent place amongst the recognized salons of the metropolis. But after a few seasons' trial the Exhibition was dropped, and therewith was wasted a golden opportunity for realising one of the great objects—second only, perhaps, to that of music—for which the Hall had been designed. It was in 1878 also that the question of electric lighting was first broached. Prof. Tyndall and Dr. W. Siemens went into it thoroughly, and certain experiments were made. But they did not prove satisfactory. The whole system was just then too much in a transition state, and for some time longer audiences had to put up with the inadequate illumination afforded by a circle of gas-jets that seemed to be suspended in the heavens miles away. Yet even in this matter the Albert Hall contributed its share towards reform; for the Exhibition of Electric Lighting Apparatus inaugurated by the Prince of Wales in the following year was not only the first ever held, but lent an undoubted impetus to the growth of the new industry.

Followed on this innovation the first military 'assault-at-arms' and the inauguration of the long succession of 'benefit concerts' that has extended from those of Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. William Kuhe (1880) down to the Melbas and Tetrazzini and Clara Butts of the present day. The initial 'assault-at-arms' had peculiar importance, because it opened up the arena of the Hall for what seemed to be its natural purpose, and led to its utilisation for all those gymnastic displays and celebrations which were to lead in turn to the bazaars, balls, and boxing entertainments favoured by a later generation. The vogue of these things was, however, to grow slowly; and it was only made practicable when it did come by the fact that the Council purchased the temporary floor constructed (in 1904) to cover the whole arena and amphitheatre for a bazaar held in aid of the Victoria Hospital. But for this ingenious process of 'levelling up,' which would have made that worthy architect, General Scott, open his eyes wide with astonishment, it may be taken for granted that nothing would ever have been heard of the magnificent charity and other costume balls for which people are now wont to troop in thousands to the Albert Hall, there to dance and gaze and sup their fill from midnight until early dawn.

For some ten years it had been the custom to hold fancy-dress balls in the arena, the level of which had already been permanently raised two or three feet above its original height. The first was * The tendency to use big orchestras arose in France with the growing popularity of Berlioz, as we had occasion to learn when Paderloup and Lamoureux first brought theirs to London, not long after Wagner's visit. We could beat them all, of course, with our Handel Festival orchestra of five hundred, which stood however in quite a separate category.

ball organized by the Savage Club in 1883—year of the Fisheries Exhibition—on behalf of funds of the Royal College of Music, when Prince and Princess of Wales were present. Encouraged by the ephemeral success of these fairs, annual Exhibitions as well as dances and bazaars on a big scale became of frequent recurrence, and gradually financial conditions began to improve so that for a couple of years (1885-86) no seat-rate was levied. Subsequently, however, this tax, always extremely unpopular with the members of the Corporation, had to be reimposed and has never since been removed. Nor, with the cost of maintenance at its present level, does there seem to be much likelihood that it ever can be. The fairness or unfairness of the seat-rate has given rise at times to much heated discussion, but in the opinion of the present writer it ought never to have provoked either complaint or opposition. At the initial price of £100 the seatholders of the Royal Albert Hall have had their money's worth over and over again. Even during the worst of the experimental seasons they enjoyed some enviable privileges, not half a quarter of which could they have purchased for the amount of the ordinary interest on their capital, while the property is still theirs and will remain so for the next nine hundred and forty-nine years. In other words, they have much the best of the bargain, and though the purposes for which the Hall is used may not equally appeal to all—how could they except in ideal circumstances?—they have no real justification for grumbling.

The Supplemental Charter granted in 1887 certainly did not realise to the full extent all that the Council expected (few of their sanguine anticipations ever completely came to pass), but it proved a valuable instrument for enabling them to launch out in new directions. It also legalised their right to exclude the seatholders on certain special occasions so many times in the year—a perfectly reasonable provision, seeing that the right in question was only likely to be exercised when it was to the general advantage of the institution. Further improvements were secured by the completion of one of the theatres, a partial installation of the electric light, and the opening of the subway connecting the Hall with the South Kensington Station of the Underground Railway. The use of the subway was, however, soon interrupted by the preparations for building the Imperial Institute. The long efforts subsequently made to secure more direct access to the Hall from the railways proved fruitless. The difficulty thus remained a persistent item of disappointment and regret in the annual reports of the Council.

PATTI CONCERTS: NATIONAL AND MASONIC FESTIVALS

What were called 'Operatic Concerts' appear to have filled a prominent place in the Albert Hall calendar almost from the beginning. Plenty of reasons might be adduced to excuse a fact that is something of a humiliation to the artistic mind.

One will suffice: they paid better than any other class of concerts given during the first thirty years of the building's existence—or perhaps the last twenty either. There is a public, as we all know, for every possible description of musical entertainment; and the entrepreneurs who have rented or run the Albert Hall have tried the whole gamut. But when everything has been said, the form of musical entertainment that has brought the largest and most reliable receipts to the place has been neither of the two best suited to its size and shape, but the efforts of the individual artist, the singer, or the pianist with a big name, or else a combination of smaller personalities of similar type capable of going upon the platform and pleasing their audience one at a time. In short, it has been a paradise and a gold-mine for every illustrious exponent of the 'star system'!

It need hardly be said that the most successful pioneer, and also the most lastingly brilliant 'shining light' of this celestial throng, was the adored and adorable diva, Adelina Patti. But the term 'Patti Concert,' when she began in June, 1886, had yet to be invented. All such miscellaneous affairs had still to be called 'Grand Operatic Concerts'—probably because they attracted large numbers of people who never went inside an opera-house. As a matter of fact, this preliminary venture consisted of four concerts, under the management of Ambrose Austin, of St. James's Hall, and at each the famous prima donna was supported by an orchestra—quite an unnecessary expense, as was quickly perceived.

The writer remembers the occasion well. The crush was quite unprecedented. Only a month before, Christine Nilsson and Albani—both great favourites—had sung together at an 'Operatic Concert,' and the combination had just comfortably filled the Hall—no more. The magic name of Patti simply crammed it from the arena to the farthest recesses of the gallery; and, as it was now, so was it to be for the sixty-four concerts at which the same distinguished singer appeared here during the next twenty years—that is to say, until she took formal leave of the public on December 1, 1906. Never was there a greater certainty in musical enterprise; and yet, curiously enough, Patti never once shared in the profits of an Albert Hall 'spec.' She was always content to take her eight hundred guinea fee from her manager, and leave him to pay expenses and pocket the balance. The thing is done differently to-day.

The psychology of a Patti audience was unlike that of any other which has been drawn to this vast concert-room by her many imitators. Its sole interest, so far as this retrospect is concerned, lies in the phenomenon of the solo artist's magnetic power, i.e., in the exercise of that extraordinary fascination which superinduced—for example when Patti was singing 'Home, sweet home'—a stranger, deeper silence, a more complete stillness, than any other single performer has ever created here. Occasionally, but very rarely, we have noted the same degree of stillness during a pianissimo in the execution of a choral piece: for instance, when the unaccompanied Evening Hymn in Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was being sung under Barnby; and again, only last month, when the splendid Glasgow Orpheus Choir was singing Elgar's 'Death on the Hills.' These experiences have helped one to form conclusions as to the form of musical sounds that impress the listener most deeply in this huge auditorium. There can be no question, to our thinking, that it is a case of the human voice first, and the rest—not precisely nowhere, but certainly a long way behind. Speaking personally, we consider that relative beauty of musical effect at the Albert Hall, or, in other words, the suitability of its acoustic qualities for the kind of music that is being performed, should be classified in the following order: (1) Choir; (2) solo voice; (3) organ; (4) solo instrument; (5) orchestra; with (6) military band, quite in the rear.

It should be remembered, nevertheless, that when in the 'nineties the 'free' Sunday concerts (free to a few square feet of the gallery) were gradually becoming established, the sole attraction was either an organ recital by Mr. Bending or Mr. Statham, or else the excellent performances of a string military band—that of the Royal Artillery—under Cavaliere Zaverthal, who happily, unlike some musicians of a later day, had a wholesome dislike for the noise of percussion instruments.

To round off this chronicle of the closing years of the century and of the management of Mr. Wentworth Cole (who died in 1901), there is very little to add. Memorable farewell concerts include those of:

Prosper Sainton, June 25, 1883.

Christine Nilsson, June 20, 1888.

(Also at Balfe Memorial Concert, June 10, 1885.)

Sims Reeves, May 11, 1891.

Edward Lloyd, December 12, 1900.

And, later,

Adelina Patti, December 1, 1906.

Charles Santley, May 1, 1907.

Emma Albani, October 14, 1911.

Among other great artists who have given concerts here, may be named:

Theresa Tietjens.

Nordica.

Trebelli-Bettini.

Paderewski.

Melba.

Jean and Edouard de Reszke.

Tetrazzini.

Caruso.

Lemmens-Sherrington.

Kubelik.

Patey.

Kreisler.

Clara Butt.

Pachman.

For many years, too, during the lifetime of William Carter and Ambrose Austin, all the National Saints'-day Anniversaries used to be celebrated by Festival concerts, which invariably drew large crowds. They belonged to the ballad order, it is true, but they gave opportunity for hearing the more familiar of our national melodies and aroused the right kind of spirit. There is room for them now if they could be revived in a better kind of way. Meanwhile the grandest and most spectacular Festivals held at the Albert Hall are those connected with Freemasonry. The most noteworthy have been the following:

Installation of the Prince of Wales as Grand Master of the Freemasons (1875).

Installation of the Duke of Connaught as Grand Master of the Freemasons (1901)—when the rank of Past Assist. Grand Director of Ceremonies was conferred upon the new Manager of the Hall, Mr. Hilton Carter.

Bi-Centenary of the Grand Lodge of England (1917).

(To be continued.)

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF VINCENT D'INDY

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

I.—'LE CHANT DE LA CLOCHE'

Vincent d'Indy has written four dramatic works: 'Le Chant de la Cloche' (1885); 'Fervaa' (1895); 'L'Etranger' (1902); and 'La Légende de Saint Christophe' (1915). The first is intended for concert performance only, the other three for the stage. The fact that he has always written his own poems has afforded a foundation for one of the many specious arguments put forward in order to brand him as a mere imitator of Wagner—all of which are founded upon some superficial analogies, and ignore essential points—such as the quality of his motives, of his scoring; his methods of construction and working out; the idiosyncrasies of his harmonies and rhythms—short, all that constitutes the substance of his music and determines its form and colour.

To the influence of Wagner d'Indy certainly owes a good deal: as much, perhaps, as to that of his own master, César Franck. Indeed, he is one of the very few composers upon whom Wagner's influence, generally dangerous in proportion as it is more direct, has proved beneficial. From all that Wagner teaches he has disengaged the vital principle of organic structure in dramatic music—extending it, and applying it to his own purposes: to the utterance of an artistic message which owes nothing to Wagner nor to any other composer, and is expressed in an idiom which always free from any tendency to imitativeness, grows with the progress of d'Indy's evolution more and more typically his own.

As may be expected, it is in 'Le Chant de la Cloche,' a comparatively early work, that we find the most direct evidence of Wagner's influence—chiefly manifest in a few general characteristics of colour and movement. But the score evinces sufficient originality and vitality to justify in full the verdict by which it was awarded the Grand Prize of the City of Paris in the year 1885.

'Le Chant de la Cloche,' a dramatised version of Schiller's 'Lied von der Glocke,' consists of a prologue and seven scenes. The action takes place in an old city of Germany. Wilhelm, a under, is nearing the end of his life. His last labour—his magnum opus—will be the casting of the huge bell. Before proceeding with his task he calls up the vision of all the occasions on which bells have played a part in his life, from his baptism to a devastating fire which he helped to suppress, from the sweet hours of his love and betrothal to the lonely night in the bell-tower, during which, amid many fantastic visions, he beheld the wraith of his lost fiancée. After all those scenes have loomed and vanished, the bell is cast, and Wilhelm dies. The day comes when the bell is to ring for the first time. Experts have congregated to examine Wilhelm's work, and pompously pronounce it faulty. The bell, they say, will never give forth a sound. The people, noticing the absence of Wilhelm, and thinking that he shirks the result of the test, grow angry and prepare to loot his house. But from the door emerges the funereal procession, and suddenly the bell begins to ring. The pedants are confounded, and the voices of the people join in a hymn of praise to the departed master-bunder.

The poem, as one sees, affords ample occasion for emotion as well as picturesqueness. Vincent d'Indy's musical treatment, broad, simple, and forcible, does full justice to all its possibilities. In all its essentials—tonal structure, harmony and polyphony, conduct of modulations, configuration and treatment of motive—the work conforms most strictly to classical principles; and one can hardly understand how the composer at the time when he wrote it could have been described as a remorseless ultra-modernist, eager to accumulate harsh discords and laboured complications. There are certain earlier works of d'Indy—for instance, the orchestral triptych 'Wallenstein'—in which he asserts his temperamental idiosyncrasies more fully, and treads a far bolder path. His Symphonie sur un thème montagnard français, which bears the Opus No. 21 (that of 'Le Chant de la Cloche' being No. 18), marks a far more advanced stage of his evolution—especially from the point of view of harmonic and rhythmic invention. It would be difficult to point to any trait of technique or of style differentiating the music of 'Le Chant de la Cloche' in a manner that calls for special attention, or may provoke special reactions in certain listeners—traits which are to be found in almost every page of 'Fervaal' or of 'Saint Christophe.' Here it is in the spirit of the music rather than in this or that actual peculiarity that the characteristics of d'Indy's individuality are to be found; and in the directness of his utterance, the terseness and plasticity of his motives, his avoidance of ready-made formulæ and ornamentation, of rhetorical commonplaces, d'Indy reveals a dislike for ambiguity that is shown as well in his clear-cut, strictly definite harmonizations (in which the elaborate chromaticism so dear to Wagner plays a negligible part, if any) as in the predilection for pure timbres which characterises his method of scoring.

The music of 'Le Chant de la Cloche' reaches its highest level in the fourth scene (the vision in the bell-tower). Wilhelm hears the mysterious chant of the bells; the gargoyles and sculptured figures that surround him come to life, a pageant of elves, gnomes, and will-o'-the-wisps heralds the appearance of his lost sweetheart. The chorus blending with the orchestra gives more than a foretaste of the wonderful effects that abound in 'Fervaal' and in 'Saint Christophe.' Rhythms and colours come as the direct expression of perfectly untrammelled and genuinely poetic imagination. This scene is all the more interesting as it affords one of the very few instances in which d'Indy's music devotes itself to evocations of fairyland, the only other two that I can recall being his tone-poems 'La Forêt Enchantée' and 'Saugefleurie.'

The same legendary, dreamy quality permeates the atmosphere of the more intimate scenes, accounting perhaps for the calm, contemplative colour of the love-scene, endowing that of the baptism with subtle charm, alleviating the grim moment of Wilhelm's death. The forcible scenes of the conflagration and the village feast (whose resemblances to the similar scenes in the 'Meistersinger' have often been mentioned) naturally stand in strong contrast, affording fine instances of picturesque music, never over-laden, and telling without condescension to cheap effects.

As a whole, 'Le Chant de la Cloche' is a lofty and delightful work, original enough in conception and in execution to be worthy of being included in the number of works made available to concert-goers. It need not arrest the attention of the investigator to the same extent as the composer's later works. But that point has nothing to do with its value as a work of art.

II.—THE LATER WORKS

'Fervaal,' 'L'Etranger,' and 'La Légende de Saint Christophe' mark three stages in the composer's purposeful, unswerving evolution. Considered severally, they enable us to ascertain beyond the shadow of a doubt—even without the help of the very characteristic 'Treatise of Composition,' in which d'Indy reveals not only his æsthetic creed, but the principles underlying his own practical methods—the influences that really determined his evolution, influences affecting both the elements of his musical style and the process of their co-ordination. The study of those three works will show the essential difference between the influence of Wagner on him—which is general, and manifest only so far as the common principle of deriving practically the whole of the musical substance from leading motives is concerned—and two influences that are specifically musical, both deep and far-reaching in their effects—that of Church music and that of folk-music.

Before dealing with this point, it is well to note that those works, in their chronological sequence, show the progress of d'Indy's dramatic ideal towards mysticism. In 'Fervaal' a strong undercurrent of religious ideality asserts itself, predominating at times over the purely human elements of the drama, a conflict between love and duty. In 'L'Etranger' the human element is contingent upon a religious mission that the principal character has to fulfil. 'La Légende de Saint Christophe' illustrates the life of the saint as described in the 'Legenda Aurea' of Jacques de Voragine—his long quest for the Supreme power, his errors, the revelation of God, his repentance, and his martyrdom. Therefore the intervention in the music of elements derived from Church music (plain-song and the works of the early contrapuntists) is natural and necessary.

But the question of the influence of Church music (and likewise of folk-music, which has similar consequences), raises a more general and far more important problem, whose terms and solution may be stated here, but only in the briefest and roughest manner. Their full discussion, which I hope to attempt at an early date,* would call for more space than should be taken up in an article upon one composer's works.

There is no lack of good authorities in support of the view that the modal and tonal system founded on the use of the tempered scales, major and minor, with their fixed harmonic tripod of tonic, dominant, and subdominant, their secondary diatonic harmonies, extensible only by chromatic ornamentation or by modulation—a system arrived at after a long and laborious process of evolution—constitutes not only an improvement, but a permanent and inviolable law of musical art; that this system, with the conditions, obligations, and restrictions that it implies—the system whose possibilities were illustrated by the masterpieces of many generations before the ulterior course of evolution indicated a swerving—is final, may and must suffice to all genuine creative artists; that the reversion to the less uniform elements of Church music or of folk-music is a mere regression. That, however, is a question not of theories or of opinions, but of facts. We must consider not whether given that system (and it should be remembered that its consequences, direct and indirect, are far-reaching enough to affect not only the melodic and harmonic texture of music, but its very rhythmical structure, and thence the whole vexata questio of form) music could and will progress constantly in one given direction. The question is, Have the art and technique of music actually acquired, under the influence of Church music and folk-music, not only a wider range of expressiveness, but, as regards texture and structure, greater freedom and power than has yet been achieved through ceaseless elaboration and re-elaboration—unavoidably along the line of increasing complexity and artificiality—of the limited range of fundamental elements to which most theorists and law-givers would restrict the composer of 'good' music? It is no matter of arrogant imperatives, but one of criticism pure and simple; perhaps one of mere preference. The works of many composers of the 19th and 20th centuries are there to show the number and extent of the acquisitions. What remains to be done is merely to decide what is the æsthetic value of those acquisitions.

In connection with that highly controversial point, it is interesting to note that d'Indy, in his 'Treatise of Composition' and in other writings, adopts a most uncompromising attitude toward the composers or critics who deny or ignore tradition. Nothing but error and evil, he says, can result from revolution; nothing good and lasting can be achieved by an artist not instinctive with knowledge of and respect for tradition. The introduction to the 'Treatise of Composition' (vol. ii.) warns the student against originality for originality's sake. In 'La Légende de Saint Christophe' a curious episode is, following in the wake of the Evil Spirit, a pageant of 'bogus artists' who sing: 'Down with rules and with study, down with tradition, let us be original! Even without the signs afforded by such passage it is impossible to consider d'Indy's personality without becoming aware that all he does is carefully thought out in accordance with an ideal that is the reverse of revolutionary; and that he is the last person in the world whom one might suspect of bringing before the public mere experiments or results not weighed and tested with the utmost care. His knowledge of music and musical science is all-embracing, and coupled with profound understanding: so that there can be no question of finding reasons of principle for challenging the way in which he adapts the teaching of tradition to his own purposes. And if we find in 'Fervaa', in 'L'Etranger', or in 'La Légende de Saint Christophe,' formations that appear baffling, written in defiance of custom, we cannot without stopping to inquire 'What custom?'—reassured that it is impossible to dispose of those formations as many critics do of Debussy's, for instance, by describing them as anomalies or exceptions: the problem raised remains entire, and there is no word of appearing to solve it whilst actually eluding it.

Although very different in substance and in style from any other of the modern works that have given rise to controversy or to theories (from Richard Strauss' to Bartók's or from Debussy's to Schönberg's), 'Fervaa' and 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe,' more perhaps than 'L'Etranger,' teem with daring innovations, the description of which will be started in next month's issue. Whether any investigator would be tempted to describe them as baffling I do not know. Indeed, I think that since the days of 'Le Chant de Cloche'—when the accusation of Wagnerism, which was taken to mean very much what Futurism means to-day, was launched under the flimsiest of pretexts—hardly any writer has included d'Indy among the creators whose originality deserves special mention. I hope to show that 'Fervaa' affords an ample field for those who might care to take up the matter more thoroughly.

(To be continued.)

* I had started it in an article entitled, 'Programme Music, Folk-Tune, and Progress' (Musical Times, October, 1913, page 643).

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from April number, page 246)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

IV.—RICCARDO PICK-MANGIAGALLI

When examining the essence and form of Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli's work, the critic who does not take into consideration the lengthy residence of the composer at Vienna and the influence of the artistic and social surroundings of that city on the development of his personality, can hardly succeed in making clear the ego of the artist. Moreover, we Italians need have no patriotic objection to recognizing clearly the Viennese 'forming' of the composer, when at the same time we discern the features which make Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli a real Italian at heart—and this not only because he is a naturalised Italian subject though born in Bohemia about thirty-nine years ago.

Our composer was influenced in the Austrian capital by early assimilation of musical forms and styles (permanently consecrated by the chief musical stars gravitating in the Viennese firmament in the last twenty years of the 19th century, Brahms being all-powerful) and also, to an even greater degree, by an absorption of those essences and characteristics that I might almost call Viennese, so distinct are they, and which give to Vienna (or at least gave to her in the pre-war period) an original physiognomy strangely Southern, and made of her almost a Latin oasis in the centre of the Teuton-Magyar life and culture which flourished just outside her gates.

The most marked features of this life are a noisy but never vulgar exuberance; a levity in the consideration of life's problems which is never empty frivolity but which is almost identical with an epicurean optimism of decided Mediterranean origin; a humour free from bitterness, and nearly always tending to the grotesque, the caricature, and the masque, rather than the philosophy of life (as, e.g., is the case with English humour); lastly, for the other side of the medal, a facile melancholy, lovers' nostalgia, languid sighs making echo to a moonlight serenade proceeding from a boat borne on the fateful waters of the stately Danube, and inevitably gliding into the rhythm of a slow waltz.

If Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli has freed himself almost entirely from the scholastic influence of the great masters (we no longer perceive traces of this influence except in the Violin Sonata and, very lightly, in the String Quartet), he has certainly mastered the Viennese influence, which was obviously more deeply ingrained. And he has mastered it by making of it almost a second nature for himself, i.e., incorporating it and individualising it to such an extent that one can no longer describe it as a mere influence.

Pick-Mangiagalli's earliest compositions for the pianoforte (1904-10), including the Verlainian lyrics for voice and pianoforte, must not be overlooked, both for their own sake and for the way in which they prepare us for the later works. Certainly the most notable qualities of these early pages are the elegance of the lines and the delicacy of the harmony—both not very varied, but well adapted for creating that image which the poet desires to express. From the very first notes of the composer we find ourselves in the kingdom of masquerade; of the joyous sentimental masks of the Italian Commedia dell'arte. Small and great well-loved names make their reappearance here in vividly coloured imagination; comic and languishing personages of mannered or rigid gesture, in grotesque or sentimental attitudes.

The heroes of Pick-Mangiagalli's world do not possess complicated souls, and do not desire to make themselves the centre of the universe. They are called simply Colombine, Rosaura, Pierrot, Harlequin, Florindo, and are nothing but masks.

After all, having known the sorrows of Beethoven's personages, and having suffered with them the anguish of misunderstood passion and unrealisable dreams, it is pleasant to live for a little while near these charming figures, masked, painted, and powdered, who have only little griefs and little joys—both quite ordinary—which they reveal by gesture and word.

As already said, not all these pages are of equal purity of style. There are some which seem carelessly composed, and written with more regard to the pianist's hand than to musical logic. But they contain some characteristic traits, such as a peculiar sinuosity of melodic outline. A tendency to the rhythm of the waltz which appears in works both early and late, though frequently disguised in such a way as to seem unrecognizable at first sight, is a characteristic which justifies insistence on the Viennese origins of Pick-Mangiagalli's art.

Together with the compositions for the pianoforte must be considered the String Quartet written about 1909, but belonging to the composer's youthful period. Although showing no very marked individuality either in technique or invention, it still strikes us as one of Pick-Mangiagalli's most successful works. It consists not so much of a real quartet (in the classical sense of the word) as of three pictures for the four strings, united by a slender psychological thread, and all three enfolded in the same rather remote and evanescent atmosphere. And it is in this atmosphere created by the dialogue of the four strings that, for us, the value of the work consists. Woven together lightly and finely—save for some abuse of the unisons—with charming effects of sonority, it reveals a soul full of dreams, a poet (even if it be a minor poet) who abandons himself to the fascination of a moonlight night—a musician, in short, who succeeds in translating into sounds the murmur of the water, the rustling of the trees, and that sad, yet sweet, languor which permeates his being. This Quartet was the first step towards the realisation of that sonority and atmosphere which the composer was to find only in the entire orchestral phalanx, after having sought it, however, once again on the pianoforte—that is, on the instrument which, after the orchestra, is most capable of expressing sonority and atmosphere. (We must not forget that Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli is an excellent pianist, and that he cherishes a lively affection for his instrument.) The compositions for pianoforte which immediately precede, and are contemporaries with, the most important symphonic pages, are a proof of this research, especially the two 'Lunaires,' Op. 33, of which the first, 'Colloquio al chiaro di luna,' tends to amplify the sonority of the instrument, and the second is full of echoes of the spirit and orchestral technique of the 'Rondo fantastico.'

In 1911 was written 'Salice d'oro,' called by the author a 'musical fable,' a title which naturally refers to the subject that inspires it, and is therefore useless to us in classifying the work—unless we hazard a guess that the musician wished to create a form of mimo-dance action responding to the demands of the modern stage, and taking the place of the complicated, old-fashioned dances of the last century. Even if this was not his intention, the production would authorise us to presume it to be so. (It is significant that the work was written soon after the Russian Ballet first appeared at the Châtelet in 1909-10.) The action of 'Salice d'oro' turns on a delicate plot—transparent and fine as a spider's web—and leads to some fanciful scenes pervaded by a fine blend of lyricism and sentiment. Although the fable is mainly for miming, dance scenes are not wanting, in which the tried skill of Pick-Mangiagalli as a master of instrumentation and as a producer of restless, characteristic, rhythmic life, stands fully revealed.

'Carillon Magico' follows in the track opened up by 'Salice,' and it undoubtedly represents a noteworthy advance, if not from the point of view of musical substance—for it has a good deal in common with the first ballet—certainly from that of scenic and instrumental interest. The characters in this charming curtain-raiser are those masks which we have already seen moving in some compositions for the pianoforte—Colombine, Pierrot, Harlequin—and there is, moreover, the carillon which plays the rôle of deus ex machina. The comedy, distinctive in action, in gesture, and scene (one of the finest creations of the painter Brunelleschi), has given rise to equally distinctive music with clear lines and decided movements: music melodiously constructed and solidly built, with fine rhythmic and instrumental effects following each other with lavish prodigality. But there is something else in this mimo-symphonic comedy—the characterisation, which is none the less important and noteworthy because it concerns personages whose manner and monolineal psychology are almost unchangeable. The musician has designed each type so that it is unforgettable; he follows them lovingly on every occasion, never losing sight of their physiognomy; sentimental and mellifluous in Pierrot, playful and roguish in Colombine, lively and fantastic in Harlequin. Every detail helps to complete the picture. A refined sense of caricature and a measured grotesqueness in this same automatic character of the personages give a delicious savour to the scene. It would be sufficient to recall the 'Serenade' begun by the Pierrots, continued in quite a different style by the Harlequins, and carried on in the happiest manner to the end with interlacing of the parts and addition of sonority.

But to mention the successful pages of this score would mean quoting it almost entirely, for there is not an uninteresting passage nor one which does not bear the marks of delicate fantasy. Moreover, to quote examples from the pianoforte arrangement would be misleading, in view of the continual noteworthy contribution of the orchestra to the musical expression, of which it is at times an essential part.

The undeniable mastery that Pick-Mangiagalli possesses of orchestral means—a mastery which, though largely intuitive, has been also acquired by the study of the scores of Wagner and Strauss rather than those of modern French composers—has urged him to express himself in the pure symphonic form, and in this field we have three works: 'Notturmo e rondo fantastico,' the symphonic poem, 'Sortilegi,' and the two Preludes, Op. 42. The first of these preceded 'Carillon Magico,' and is a very effective work loved by the public for that touch of the grotesque and unreal which the musician has succeeded in expressing so admirably. Toscanini, who is a great friend and admirer of Pick-Mangiagalli, delights in giving this fine score—a score so full of character that it takes its place beside the 'Apprenti sorcier' of Dukas or the 'Feux d'artifice' of Stravinsky, or some of Grieg's works, for the skill with which certain effects of almost brutal chiaroscuro are produced. We must, on the other hand, confess our scant liking for the other two symphonic works, to which the composer attaches an importance that perhaps is hardly warranted. The musical substance of 'Sortilegi' is somewhat trite, and instrumental effects are frequently repeated, creating an evident lack of proportion between that which the musician wishes to say and the language he uses for expressing it. This defect is just as visible—perhaps even more so—in the two Preludes, and is especially the case with the second, 'Marosi,' which is intended to describe 'la mer immense, tumultueuse, et verte . . . l'eau informe et multiforme . . . '—according to Baudelaire's expression. The fact is that here we find ourselves really outside the world of the musician, who, from wishing to attempt the grand panoramic fresco has ended with the colours on his palette faded and his lines vague and indefinite. The ample and powerful breath of the sea is not here, in spite of there being many, too many, onomatopœic sounds, together with effects now stereotyped, or at any rate wanting in originality. It is not here, because the musician has not felt it in himself. He has merely had the acoustic sensation of it, which, reduced to the relatively narrow limits of the sonority of the orchestra, is far from producing adequately the natural picture. It is needless to add that if, as we believe, the above defects may be found in these symphonic pages, we must not at the same time neglect to notice the good taste and elegance of the composition—features which are never lacking in Pick-Mangiagalli's works. We must note also the opportune and original use of the pianoforte in the orchestra in 'Sortilegi' and 'Marosi.' In the former especially it plays a part of first-rate importance, without being the protagonist—now contributing to the whole its characteristic sonority, now imposing its own personality, with highly original results.

Pick-Mangiagalli's orchestra (both that of the purely symphonic works and that which serves for designing and colouring the scenic attitudes of his theatrical conceptions) has its origin, as we have observed, in that of Richard Strauss rather than that of Debussy or of the Stravinsky of 'Petrouchka,' although perhaps it sometimes reminds us of the latter. Despite the tendency, common to the modernists, to give predominance to the wind and percussion instruments and to make too great use of certain effects which remind us of the pianoforte, the clear polyphonic tissue, the economy of sonority, the dynamic play, and especially the predilection for the mixed instrumental effects in preference to the particular one of each instrument, make the scores of Pick-Mangiagalli akin to the best work of Strauss. Naturally the Italian composer has not been uninfluenced by the recent movements of impressionism and anti-romanticism, the result of which has been to simplify and make more clear the symphonic page, rendering the lines more vigorous and incisive and the design more simple and restrained. Hence in his later scores the characteristics, so to say, of an etching rather than of an oil-painting—agility, vivacity, elegance, together with a firmness of line that reminds us of certain drawings by Chahine, a Parisianised Viennese-Armenian, or Umberto Brunelleschi. (The meeting of these two artists, Pick-Mangiagalli and Brunelleschi, was most happy: it is really difficult to say if the music of 'Carillon' was written as a comment on the exquisite, animated scenes of the Florentine painter, or if the latter were inspired—as in truth they were—by the musician's work: so entirely are the two creations the expression of the same vision in two kindred temperaments.) Certain elementary predominant colours, the blues of the sky or the emerald greens of the meadows, certain decorative arabesques, slender lines which seem to bring the figures in close proximity within an airy but tenacious net, are translated into the music of 'Carillon Magico' with admirable precision.

The pleasure with which we have lingered over this mimo-symphonic comedy in preference to the other more recent works clearly reveals our thought. We think, in fact, that the best qualities of our musician are to be found in the 'Carillon,' and that it is in this field that he will gather, as he has already gathered, the most ample harvest of approval. When Pick-Mangiagalli is in his own world—and we have seen what world that is—his music has a conspicuous and original character which distinguishes it from all others: we feel that the musician is sincere, that he creates without effort, that his speech flows on uninteruptedly. Besides, the proof that he is convinced of this is given us by his latest work, still unpublished and not yet performed: the comedy 'Basi e Bote,' on the delightful libretto of Arrigo Boito. (Between 'Carillon' and 'Basi e Bote' there is a sort of mimed symphonic poem with a chorus of unseen voices that the author of the plot, Carlo Clausetti—musician, musical publisher, and man of letters—has called with a curious neologism—'Indian monomimic legend.' It is the legend of Sumitra, an apsara of the Paradise of India. We do not feel able to pass an opinion on this work, judging only from the pianoforte reduction, as too many elements—not only orchestral, but technical and scenic—contribute to its realisation.)

The libretto of 'Basi e Bote' was written about ten years ago by the poet and composer of 'Mephistopheles' and 'Nero,' and published in a popular Milanese review. The scene is laid at Venice, and well-known figures from the Commedia dell'arte take part in it: some speak Italian, others the dialect of Goldoni. Boito's libretto is a little jewel of finesse, wit, and poetry. Keen observation and subtle irony are here expressed in a language which is at times wittily affected, at times adorably fresh, such as the poet must have gathered straight from the mouths of the Venetian women in the 'Campielli.' Pick-Mangiagalli had Boito's permission to set 'Basi e Bote' to music (a unique case, as after Verdi's death the poet of 'Falstaff' had never conceded his illustrious collaboration to any composer); and the work was finished last year to the author's satisfaction. Here, then, we find ourselves once more among the figures dear to the musician; but there is, moreover, a new element, and this element is the voice. Till now these masks capered and gesticulated without opening their mouths: in 'Basi e Bote' they sing like characters in a lyric opera. Will this further means of expression bring a new contribution—as, conceivably, it should—to the characterisation of each type, a new note added to those furnished by the orchestral comment?

This is what we fervently desire, and our hope is justified by the many proofs of seriousness, conscientiousness, and talent that our composer has given us in his former works—works which place him among the most important and individual of modern Italian composers.

The following is an almost complete list of his published compositions:

- 1904. 'En fermant les yeux,' danse lente for pianoforte . . . . . Ricordi (Milan)
- 1905. 'Silhouettes de Carnaval,' four pieces for pianoforte . . . Ricordi (Milan)

1905. 'Chanson Violette,' for pianoforte ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1905. 'Trois Miniatures,' for pianoforte (duet) ... Universal-Edit. (Vienna)
 1906. Three Intermezzi, for pianoforte Ricordi (Milan)
 1906. 'Lunaire,' for pianoforte ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1906. Sonata, for violin and pianoforte Universal-Edit. (Vienna)
 1906. 'Mignardises,' for pianoforte... Ricordi (Milan)
 1908. Quatre Chansons, for pianoforte and for voice Universal-Edit. (Vienna)
 1908. 'Fêtes Galantes' (Verlaine), for pianoforte ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1909. Quartetto in G minor, for strings ... Universal-Edit. (Vienna)
 1910. 'La Berceuse,' mimo-symphonic poem ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1911. 'Il Salice d'Oro' ('The Golden Willow-tree'), musical fable Ricordi (Milan)
 1914. 'Notturmo e Rondo Fantastico,' for orchestra ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1915. 'Il Carillon Magico,' mimo-symphonic comedy ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1915. 'Preludio e Toccata,' for pianoforte Ricordi (Milan)
 1915. 'Deux Lunaires,' for pianoforte Ricordi (Milan)
 1916. 'Burlesca,' for pianoforte ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1917. 'Cortèges,' for pianoforte ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1917. 'Sumitra,' monomimic legend Ricordi (Milan)
 1917. 'Sortilegi' (Sortileges), symphonic poem ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1918. Two Preludes, for orchestra ... Ricordi (Milan)
 1919-20. 'Basi e Bote' ('Kiss and Blows'), lyric comedy ... Ricordi (Milan)

NOTE.—Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli was born at Strakonitz (Bohemia) on July 10, 1882. He studied at the Milan Conservatorio—pianoforte under Appiani and composition under Ferroni. As a pianist he has often performed in public both in Italy and abroad.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from April number, page 244.)

Before discussing the small group of preludes and fugues written (or rewritten) in Bach's last years, we must spend a moment on the Fugue in D minor (ix., 151) originally composed for violin solo. Seeing that so much of it is clearly in the idiom of the violin, we are surprised to find that some authorities long held the view that the transcription was from keyboard to strings. Griepenkerl says:

It is remarkable that the Fugue was likewise arranged for the violin by Bach himself. It is found in this form in the first of the well-known six Sonatas for violin alone, and is transposed into G minor, as it could not be played on the violin in D minor. . . . All passages were altered which were not applicable for the violin.

But is it conceivable that Bach, at a time when he had almost reached his prime as a composer, should have written an organ fugue in which the subject is frequently accompanied by mere detached chords instead of by counterpoints? The first dozen bars are enough to prove that the Fugue was originally written for violin solo.

As an arranger Bach seems to have been very capricious, leaving some passages in a comparatively ineffective form from a keyboard point of view, and richly amplifying others. Thus, he was content to support the long, single-voice passage of the original in bars 7-10 by quaver chords, while elsewhere he adds new and melodious counterpoints, with a result that is a good deal more than a mere arrangement. Readers who have the Violin Sonatas or the Peters edition of the organ works (in which the violin form is given as a variant) will do well to compare the two versions. For the benefit of those who cannot make such comparison, I append two of the most striking passages:

EX. 1.

(a)

These extracts are typical of the charm of the Fugue as a whole. It has a slender character and a lyric expressiveness that make it an excellent fugue for propaganda purposes. People who dismiss the form as dry and mechanical usually succumb to this specimen, because it has qualities that are often lacking in finer and bigger fugues—tunefulness and sentiment. The Prelude is comparatively unimportant. It appears to be a little clavichord piece transferred bodily to the organ manuals.

As we have seen, the Prelude and Fugue in E flat (vi., 28) appeared in Part 3 of the 'Clavierübung,' the two movements being separated by twenty-one chorale preludes. One would have thought that the fact of Bach's publishing the two pieces in this way would have shown clearly that they had no connection. Griepenkerl seems to have been the first to print them together, 'not arbitrarily,' he says, 'but following an old tradition which Forkel communicated forty years ago, as the two pieces are so nearly allied in spirit and form that every connoisseur, even without this tradition, will immediately recognize them as one whole.' Spitta also discovers 'an inward connection, which may be seen in the quiet stateliness common to both,' and goes on to say that Forkel 'expressly testifies to their connection on the authority of Bach's sons.' Bach's sons showed so little respect for their father's memory and works that we may be forgiven for holding their testimony lightly. No doubt some players from the first felt that the Fugue needed a kind of introduction, and naturally tacked on the Prelude—the only suitable organ piece of Bach in print at the time. The pieces having thus been joined together, no subsequent editor dares put them asunder. We may leave them together, but it is high time we gave up pretending to see any 'inward connection' or alliance 'in spirit and form.' The Prelude is obviously much the earlier in date, and even more obviously inferior in inspiration and workmanship. Its main theme is stately enough to compel and hold attention, but a good deal of the remaining material shows Bach for once in a way lacking in resource. There is far too much mere repetition in the case of the second subject, and in the fugal passages the harmonization of the subject is almost invariably the same, with monotonous result. This is not like Bach at his ripest and best. Nor can this short cut back to the opening key and theme:

be regarded as a good piece of joinery. There is plenty of fine music in the Prelude, despite these faults, and, played at a good pace, with well-planned registration, it is effective. At the sedate tempo usually indicated, it seems (like a badly-delivered sermon) even longer than it is, and desperately dull, especially if the registration be almost uniformly loud. The Novello and Peters editions suggest  $\text{♩} = 76$ , the Augener edition  $\text{♩} = 100$ , the latter being not a bit too quick.

The Fugue is one of the most perfect of all

Bach's essays, and one of the most popular of organ solos. The fact is worth noting, because the work makes no concessions to the gallery. It has not the brilliance of the D major Fugue or the D minor Toccata, nor the buoyant tunefulness of the 'great' G minor Fugue, and it gives little scope for technical display, either on manuals or pedals. There is not much the matter with the musical taste of a public that seems ever ready to hear such a work. The sources of popularity, however, are as curiously mixed as human motives, and it is probable that this Fugue owes much of its vogue to its apparent connection with Croft's hymn tune, as well as to the fact of its having been one of the first of Bach's organ works to become well known in this country. A title is a great help to a piece of music, and undoubtedly 'St. Anne's Fugue' is far more appealing than 'Fugue in E flat.' There is no need to-day to point out that Bach could hardly have heard Croft's tune. The character of the subject, however, suggests that Bach had a hymn tune at the back of his mind. It is perhaps daring to surmise that the Fugue is really a chorale prelude based on the opening phrase of the melody of 'Was mein Gott will':

Yet there may be something in it. True, the first two notes are transposed, but they may have appeared thus in a variant of the tune. The text is just the kind of thing Bach might have chosen wherewith to round off a collection of preludes:

What my God wills be done alway,
His purpose is the best;
He still abides my strength and stay,
The Rock whereon I rest.

Prout, in his analysis of this Fugue, after dismissing the 'St. Anne' theory, says that 'It seems more probable that the melody is that of an old German chorale, especially as it is also employed by Handel in his Chandos anthem, "O praise the Lord with one consent." It is this evident connection with a chorale melody that makes the Fugue a fitting close to the 'Clavierübung' collection of chorale preludes, and no less certainly shows it to be independent of the Prelude to which it is now joined on such slender grounds. Moreover, a chorale basis would support the theory of Schweitzer and others that the threefold structure has reference to the Trinity. Failing such basis the theory is far-fetched. If the work is an ordinary fugue, it is merely a development of the form as used by the early Italian organ composers—a series of fugal movements on a theme which undergoes metamorphoses. Or it may be a return to Buxtehude, whose fugues usually consist of three or four sections. In either case Bach has taken an unsatisfactory model, and from it evolved a perfect work. The early German and Italian examples almost invariably fail on either one of two grounds. In some cases the connection between the sections is so slight that the result lacks unity. (Occasionally there is no connection whatever, especially in some of Buxtehude's fugues.) In others the use of one subject for all the movements tends to monotony, despite the metamorphoses. It was left for Bach to apply the method in such a way as to obtain at once variety and unity—variety by three short sections of diverse character, unity in the total effect of one long and logical movement. The result is a type of fugue answering to none of the ordinary classifications. It is sometimes called a triple fugue—incorrectly, because the subjects which open the three sections are not heard together. Prout says: 'In spite of its sounding like an Irish bull, the most accurate description of this fugue would be to call it "a double fugue, with three subjects."' Or, if we wish to avoid the bull, we may say that it consists of a double and single fugue, the first subject of the former being used as a counter-subject in the latter. Here is the formula:

- A.
- B.
- B and A combined.
- C.
- C and A combined.

The feeling of unity that results from this unusual scheme is remarkable, seeing that A in its combination with B and C undergoes such rhythmical changes and is opposed by such animated matter that it might easily pass unobserved by a listener unaware of its presence. Perhaps the secret of the Fugue's success is to be found chiefly in its splendid growth from the broad, calm opening through the quaver middle section for manuals only to the five-voiced third section, with its increase of animation and rhythmic intensity and its splendid pedal part. Is there a finer pedal entry in all Bach (or anywhere else) than the final one?

Ex. 4.

Even on a small organ the A flat is fine; on an organ with a big pedal it is tremendous. This closing entry of the main theme clinches the whole lengthy argument in the most convincing way. Subjects B and C have made such brilliant play that A, with its simple gravity, has been almost pushed aside. Now it sails grandly in, with a 'By your leave, there! I am the real god in the machine!' Mr. Heathcote Statham, in the book already quoted in these articles, says that one of our old musicians (Dr. Crotch?) remarked of this pedal entry of the subject that it sounded 'as if it ought to be fired off with cannon.' Berlioz, we know, hated organ fugues. 'St. Anne's,' registered on Crotch's sound lines, would probably have converted him. For normal people the registration of the Fugue almost settles itself. The opening calls for diapason tone, the middle section is well suited to the full Swell most players use for it, and the final portion is just as naturally an affair for full organ, with the Great reeds reserved for the closing bars.

In the three works remaining for consideration in this chapter the preludes have so much in common with their respective fugues, not only in their lofty spirit and consummate workmanship, but also in some of the thematic details, that, putting it colloquially, we may say they were made for one another—which, as we have seen, some other preludes and fugues certainly were not.

The qualities we missed in the E flat Prelude—continuity and growth—are present in the E minor Prelude to a degree remarkable even in Bach at his best. The various subjects are so connected that they appear and reappear almost without noting the point of transition. Revelling in its nobly sustained flow, one wonders at the average classical sonata movement, with its pull-up, padding and circumstantial ushering in of the second subject being regarded as an advance on the form of such a piece as this. The student of composition will do well to note that there are few cadences in this movement, and that all have their cadential effect neutralised by being made points of departure for fresh or recapitulated material, so that the music never sticks. This uninterrupted march of the music is one of the signs by which we may know the mature Bach. If we want to see how even he had to learn this lesson, we may turn to the early double fugue in C minor (x., 230) wherein the cadences are not only numerous, but aggressive as well, nothing being done to tone down their effect of finality.

Perhaps some day a fascinating book will be written showing what great composers have done with such material as the scale, the arpeggio of the common chord, and such unconsidered trifles as leaps of a fourth, octave skips, &c. The author of such a book will find in this Prelude an outstanding example of the scale in excelsis. In the Dorian Toccata and the G minor Fantasia Bach gives the pedals a scale so lengthy that, the limits of the keyboard being reached, it harks back for a series of fresh starts. In the E minor Prelude he gives us an even finer example of the extended use of a scale—a passage so far-reaching and so spacious as to make both the keyboard and the human ear seem puny. One chafes at their restrictions and wants the scale to go travelling down, saying its say in one vast stretch, and plumbing depths that no ear has yet reached. This sense of bigness prevails throughout the movement. No subtleties in registration are called for. The main point is to avoid too continuous piling of heavy tone on music that is already so mighty in itself. A few too many seconds of full organ are likely to make the work oppressive instead of impressive. This magnificent Prelude should be heard more frequently as a separate movement. The Fugue is so long that the two pieces can rarely be played together, with the result that as a rule the Fugue is taken and the Prelude left.

Fugue subjects with rocking motion have always been fairly common, e.g., that of the D minor Toccata, C major (Toccata), G major (Prelude in G), but the motion is usually oblique. The subject of the E minor Fugue works outwards by contrary motion from a single note to an octave, the result suggesting a wedge, to ear as well as eye:

As the second half is a mere return, by conventional means, to the tonic, the main interest of the subject is harmonic, with the augmented sixth as the chief point. But as Bach knew—what so many modern composers do not—that a harmonic high-light is a poor thing to lean on, he gives us one of his finest counter-subjects to make up for the theme's melodic weakness:

Pirro goes so far as to say that the subject proper counts for little in this Fugue; 'It is a mere pretext for a singularly pathetic counter-subject, which assumes the importance of a symphonic theme freely treated.'* And it is a fact that the subject gives rise to no development, all the free matter in the fugal portion of the work being derived from the counter-subject. At first sight the expression 'all the fugal portion' seems absurd when used in connection with a fugue. But this example is far from being a fugue in the accepted sense of the term. What business has a fugue with a long middle section, the irrelevance of which is only accentuated by the haling in of the subject from time to time? Parry regards this section as a problem, and suggests that Bach began it with the intention of providing some relief from the striking theme, and that, being pleased with the effect of the subject thrown up at intervals against the decorative passages, he followed up the idea at greater length than he originally intended. Certainly the proportions of the Fugue are wrong, the opening expository section being only fifty-nine bars in length, and the free middle part about a hundred and twenty. As the final portion is an exact repetition of the first, the actual fugal treatment of the subject is barely one-half of the whole work. Parry looks on this da capo as a good method of consolidating a movement that had become too loose. But Bach had used the method before, in cases where there was no need for tightening up the music, i.e., the middle-period C minor Fugue (III., 79) and the fine Fugue that forms the Finale of the second Trio-sonata.* (In the latter the repetition is less marked, owing to the two manual voices being transposed.) Clearly Bach felt that although in a normal fugue the interest should be cumulative, mere repetition being contrary to the spirit of the form, yet something might be done on the lines of the aria, with its A-B-A construction. Here surely is the explanation of the free middle section. A da capo, to be effective, must be preceded by a considerable stretch having little or no connection with the main subject, and it is worth noting that in the three organ fugues wherein Bach has used the device the middle section is unusually free.

It was said above that in these latest works of Bach the preludes seem at times to have a textual as well as a spiritual connection with their fugues. In the case of the E minor pair, we find both equally powerful in a somewhat harsh way, and in both long-spun scale-passages are a prominent feature. The middle section of the Fugue has much of the character of an improvisation, the subject appearing from time to time in a way that suggests the player's saying, 'Here it is! I haven't forgotten it, despite my going so far afield.' As to registration, the possibilities are too numerous to discuss. The one point that perhaps needs urging is that the first and third sections should not be treated in the same way. Plain diapason tone for the first, and full organ for the third, will modify the effect of the repetition. The middle section gives an opportunity for some fiery use of the full swell. Despite its discursiveness and its unduly large proportion of free matter, this Fugue is a worthy pendant to the Prelude. The two pieces, with their huge design and elemental strength, make up one of the most stupendous things in music.

In the C major Prelude and Fugue (vii.) the atmosphere is one of unbroken serenity. Only at the end of each—note, again, a point in common—does Bach interrupt the genial and thoughtful

* In view of this fact, the note in the preface to the Novello Edition should surely be modified. The da capo in the E minor Fugue is not unique among Bach's organ fugues.

* L'Orgue de Jean-Sébastien Bach, p. 104.

flow by a series of detached chords, like impatient ejaculations. The Prelude is one of his happiest works, full of the mellow simplicity belonging to wise old age. The harmonic scheme is largely based on the common chord, and the liberal use of passages in thirds and sixths gives a pastoral flavour. The other chief constituent is a leaping common-chord figure, delivered usually by the pedals with something of the effect of an ostinato. Was this movement written during Christmas or Epiphany-tide? The pastoral idiom suggests it, and there is, moreover, a remarkable similarity between the Prelude and the first chorus of the Epiphany cantata, 'The Sages of Sheba shall come.'

Like many other organ pieces of Bach, the C major Prelude may be played loudly or quietly with equally good effect. The only passages that call for at least a fair amount of power are the detached chords in the last page and the emphatic octaves of the closing bars. But, loud or soft, the music demands above all neatness and a full perception of its beautiful springing rhythm.

The Fugue is one of the most closely-knit of all Bach's works. The subject is extraordinarily terse (one bar of 4-4 time is big enough to hold it), but, short as it is, it plays a part in almost every one of the seventy bars that make up the fugue. Perhaps the result of this intensive working is 'musician's music'; nevertheless, dull must be the lay ear that is not impressed when the pedals, silent during the first forty-eight bars, come on the scene with an augmented version of the subject. Most composers—perhaps Bach himself in his earlier days—would have been content to give this entry a more or less free background. But Bach, instead of relaxing the tension, increases it by making the three manual parts a stretto by inversion. Later he varies the process by giving the pedals two more augmented statements of the subject, this time inverted, accompanied by fragments of the theme right side up. Yet another stretto takes place over the tonic pedal at the end. The Fugue is a remarkably fine specimen of a ricercare.

A doubtful point in the matter of text is in bars 4 and 5 on page 166:

Ex. 7.

The Peters edition omits the optional flats; Augener gives the first only. The unsatisfactory effect of the left-hand part (with or without the second of the suggested flats) must be admitted; nor does it improve on acquaintance. Probably the solution is to be found by flattening all the three E's in the left-hand part, in which case the

E natural in the right hand comes out with fine bright effect. Against this we have the fact that the preceding and following bars are unmistakably in C major, so that it is almost certain that the E flat got in by mistake. After all, the A flat must not be taken to imply a modulation to C minor. The use side by side of the minor sixth and the major third:

Ex. 8.

has long been a convention, especially in the final cadences of organ music. In Ex. 7, therefore, we may be sure that there should be either three flats in the tenor, or none at all—with a strong bias in favour of the latter version. Two interesting melodic features are the 'British Grenadier' cadence at the seventh bar before the end, and the anticipation of the 'Meistersinger' Overture by the subject:

Ex. 9.

This masterly Fugue is best suited by broad playing, with good diapason tone, and an ample pedal organ for the final section.

One likes to think, with Parry, that the B minor Prelude and Fugue (vii.) may have been Bach's last work of that type. Certainly his activities in the field of large organ works could not be more fittingly rounded off than by this noble example. No other Prelude approaches the B minor in expressive quality, or surpasses it in beauty of texture and harmony. If we want to see at a glance Bach's development as an organ composer, we cannot do better than compare this movement with the Prelude in A minor that precedes it in Book VI. The latter is quite a good specimen of Bach's preludes, and its alternation of ornamental passages and more solid material is an effective, though conventional, method of leading up to so strict a form as a fugue. 'There was sound reason in the early organ composers' preparing the hearer for the rigours of a fugue by giving him a few moments of rhapsodical flourishes. What was beyond them, and beyond Bach until his later-middle period, was the writing of an introductory movement which should provide contrast to the fugue, without being less well knit or less able to claim consideration for its intrinsic value as music. In the B minor the ornamentation is profuse, but there is not a bar that does not play an important part in the structure. In the A minor Prelude we may remove several groups of bars without doing more than shortening the piece, or we may exchange some of its material with that of other movements of the type with no loss. Take away a bar of the B minor and the edifice comes to the ground.

The writing for the pedals is of special interest, its melodic passages being suggestive of strings.

and its octave leaps during the pedal-points heightening the effect of the chain of discords. This is perhaps the finest pedal point in all organ music, because it contains so many elements of interest—melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic:

The movement lends itself to very elaborate registration, though it is hardly less effective with straightforward scheme. On an organ with plenty of accessories one may well treat it as a piece of chamber music, or as a series of gradually developed climaxes, always provided that the flow of the music is unbroken.

The Fugue sticks to its text almost as closely as the C major. Like that fugue it has a very short and simple subject—merely an ornamental version of the series of notes that have served generations of pianists as a five-finger exercise:

The movement falls naturally into three sections—a group of entries, a freer portion for manuals only, and a final section with the interest heightened by some fresh material, including a new counter-subject.

The interest declines a little in the middle section, but only for a few bars. The two last entries are magnificent. The fresh counter-subject is a kind of frank gesture—adds a pointed rhythmic element at a moment when the long-continued semiquaver motion might have become monotonous. Instead of a stretto we have three consecutive statements of the subject by the manuals, rolling up the keyboard from F sharp major, through B minor, to E minor, and opening the way for a final entry by the treble, during which the bass emphatically delivers the new counter-subject.

The three-fold pedal statement of the subject is sometimes played in octaves. This method, of course, adds emphasis and increases the rolling splendour of the passage, but it has two defects. It reduces the mounting effect of the bass, because of the need for dodging down for fresh starts in order to keep the octaves within the compass of the pedal board, and it kills all the fine manual polyphony except the top part. On the whole the passage is best left simple.

Which is the finest of Bach's organ works in this form? We shall differ on the point, but there will be agreement as to the B minor being second to none. From the first note of the Prelude to the cadence of the Fugue is a long flight, but the level of inspiration remains high and steady throughout. Many a popular symphony says less at far greater length. Rarely do we find music for any medium expressing so much thought and emotion with so complete a freedom from rhetoric.

(To be continued.)

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XVII.—THOMAS KNIGHT

In the course of an interesting article on 'The Early Harmonized Chants of the Church of England,' by Mr. Royle Shore (Musical Times, September, October, and November, 1912), the statement is made that 'nothing is apparently known of Whytbrooke and Knight,' whose settings of the Evening Canticles were published by John Day in his 'Certain Notes' (1560). This statement merely echoes the information to be found in most works of reference, and although Knight's compositions are known to students of the Tudor period, no memoir of him has previously appeared. Not even his Christian name has been determined, and, as a fact, his beautiful Magnificat has recently been published merely with the surname 'Knight,' as a Nunc dimittis.

The late Dr. Jebb, in his interesting Catalogue of the Peterhouse musical MSS., published in the Ecclesiologist (vol. xx., 1859), called attention to the compositions by Knight, but was unable to differentiate between Robert Knight and Thomas Knight. As will be seen later on, it is a mistake to suppose that Thomas Knight lived as late as 1559, and, so far as can be ascertained, all his creative work may safely be assigned to the second quarter of the 16th century. As to his relationship with Robert Knight, whose Latin Motet for five voices, 'Propterea mæstum,' is in the musical library of Peterhouse (Cambridge), I have not been able to trace any connection, though probably they were contemporary.

In the previous article I have shown that William Whytbrooke's period of creative activity was between the years 1525 and 1535; but Thomas Knight was of slightly later date, probably between 1530 and 1540. The appearance of his Magnificat in Day's 'Certain Notes' (1560) has been regarded as a proof that Thomas Knight was still alive at that date (1560); yet, as has been shown previously, many of the settings in this rare collection were merely English adaptations of the original Latin texts, and, as a matter of fact, his name is included in Day's publication of 1565.

Without further prelude we may proceed to give some definite facts in the career of Thomas Knight. His date of birth and his early training have not been placed on record, and we first meet with him in 1535 as organist and vicar-choral of Salisbury Cathedral. One thing is certain, that in 1536, among the varied items of the Treasurer's Accounts, there is a sum of 6s. 8d. entered as paid to Thomas Knight for a quarter's salary as organist. The next entry runs as follows: 'Paid Thos. Knyght for playing the Organ, his salary for the quarter, 6s. 8d.' This would be at the munificent rate of £1 6s. 8d. a year! Yet, as is well known, this yearly salary would be equal to about £20 a year of our present computation. However, it is only fair to point out that this yearly stipend was only a sort of bonus given to Knight in addition to his salary as vicar-choral. As a matter of fact, there was not then—nor for some years later—any recognized organist as such, as the vicars-choral had long been accustomed to take their turn in playing the organ, receiving a certain honorarium.

The next definite item of information concerning Thomas Knight is in 1539, in which year he received a honorarium for acting as organist during Whit-week. The wording of the entry from the Treasurer's Accounts is sufficiently definite: 'Thos. Knyght for playing the Organ in the week of Pentecost, 2s.' Thus we are tolerably certain in describing Knight as vicar-choral and acting-organist of Salisbury Cathedral* from 1535 to 1540, and probably till 1545.

Strange to say, the earliest name on the list of official organists of Salisbury Cathedral in Mr. John E. West's valuable book, 'Cathedral Organists,' is that of John Farrant, in 1598; but it may be noted that Richard Fuller had been organist from 1595 to 1598. No doubt lay-clerks acted as organists up to or about the year 1590.

Nicholas Shaxton, who had been schismatic Bishop of Salisbury from 1535 to 1538, fell into disgrace, but was pardoned by the King on July 13, 1546, having recanted his errors and dismissed his wife. It is not known whether Thomas Knight continued at Salisbury after the year 1540, but I have found no further mention of his name. The Pope appointed Cardinal Contarini as Bishop on July 23, 1539, but the King's nominee, John Salcot, alias Capon, held the temporalities till 1554.

I am strongly of opinion that the Thomas Knight who was granted an annuity out of the dissolved monastery of Spalding in 1546, may be identified as the composer of that name. He is still credited as an annuitant of the said monastery in the accounts of 1547, as appears from the 'Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII.' (vol. xxi., Part 2, p. 443).

With this entry of 1547 Thomas Knight disappears from history, although further research may bring to light other biographical data concerning him. It is gratifying to add that Mr. Royle Shore has popularised Knight's beautiful Magnificat in his adapted version, issued as No. 898 of Novello's Parish Choir Book.

* During this period 'Sir' Beckwith also acted as organist, and received 26s. 8d. for playing the organ for the whole year.

The Kingston String Quartet, which consists of Miss Yvonne Mont-Clar, Mr. Oakley Parrott, Mr. Bernard Dudding and Mr. Francis Hill, is proceeding with its task of inducing a love of chamber music among its neighbours. A large audience attended its most recent concert, to hear Mozart's Quartet, No. 13, in D minor, the Variations from Haydn's Quartet, Op. 76, and the Schumann Pianoforte Quintet. The pianist was Mr. B. J. Harrison.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

The rationale of applause has long been constantly recurring topic. Until very recent time its discussion seemed profitless, because after handful of critics and others had decided the applause at certain moments—e.g., between the movements of a work or during an oratorio—was objectionable, the public came along and smote their hands together and beat the carpet with their feet as if the decisions of critics were not among the things that mattered. The subject has cropped up again lately, owing to an article in the Performer (the organ of the Variety Artists' Federation) lamenting that the patrons of the theatre are less lavish of applause than they were a few years ago:

'Applause always has been the measure by which the performers gauge the value placed on their work by the public' [says the Performer] 'and so it comes about that many artists, particularly those blessed—or cursed—with sensitive natures, feel keenly this lack of appreciation on the part of the public.'

The 'pictures' are held responsible for this, as for most other things that go wrong nowadays. Naturally people see little reason in applauding the performance of an actor who is probably thousands of miles away. The most they feel called on to do is to show appreciation of the picture as a whole to a mild demonstration at its close. Whether the comparative absence of applause at the cinema is responsible for waning enthusiasm at performance elsewhere is a point that can hardly be settled until the test of time has been applied a little longer. Meanwhile we musicians are interested in the subject, because we have lately seen in our concert rooms unmistakable signs that the public attitude is rapidly changing. A few years ago it seemed hopeless to suggest that the various movements of suite or symphony (especially in cases where the movements were connected thematically) should be played without interruption. In vain did conductors hold forth a silencing hand. In vain did superior folk as you and I add to the noise by pained 'sssh!' The same thing happened to performances of oratorio. Programmes often contained a request that no applause should be given during the progress of the work, but the appeal was fruitless. And yet to-day you may sometimes see the Queen's Hall audience easily keeping its demonstration until the end of a long work, or even until the close of the evening. We had a striking example of the latter case at the L.S.O. concert on April 1, when, save for a brief moment, the B minor Mass was allowed to go its way from beginning to end without disturbing noises from the audience. The exception was at the end of the opening chorus when a few people put their hands up ready for business, and one or two palms actually met, but determined protest from their neighbours applied a closure with a promptitude and completeness that would have been impossible a few years ago. So we really are getting on, for the programme on that occasion bore no request for silence.

Now if a longish and noisy break is out of place between the movements of a work it is hardly less so between the items of a programme. For the component parts of a well-built programme are not where they are by mere chance. They were put there by a skilful designer, in the one order calculated ing out most fully the beauty of each. Sometimes result is obtained by contrast, sometimes by one carrying on and developing the impression made by its predecessor. Occasionally we find a group of short pieces that can make their full effect only when performers (and hearers) treat them as one work. More than a moment's gap between the numbers especially if the gap be damaged by a handclap or a hush—breaks the spell. The more educated our audiences are beginning to see this, and a conductor who remains posed for action at the end of a piece can count on being allowed to proceed without interruption. Thus, at Queen's Hall a few weeks ago, when the L.S.O. gave the first performance of Gerrard Williams' 'Pot-Pourri,' a set of ten miniatures, all but a few of the audience realised at once that the pieces were like beads on a chain; a labaloo after any one of them, and the string is cut. And this very day as ever is, I have heard the Oriana Choir sing a set of Holst's 'Rig Veda' Hymns with a sound from the audience until the group was washed. Clearly the time is not far distant when it will be an established rule that applause shall be given only at (a) the end of a group of pieces, suite or symphony, (b) at the interval, or (c) at the close of the concert when the programme consists of a long choral work with Biblical or liturgical text.

At present tradition counts for much. As we have seen, Queen's Hall is rapidly establishing a tradition of restricted applause, whereas at the Albert Hall it seems impossible to make the audience realise that for such items as 'He was despised' or 'He trusted God' applause makes sensitive people writhe. I know a good handful of folk who avoid Royal Choral Society performances of oratorio because they know that such edification as the music gives them will be negated by the jarring sounds of enthusiasm pressed in the wrong way and at the wrong time. A section of the public badly needs educating in this matter. Surely a firm attitude on the part of conductors and soloists would put things right in a few months.

There are occasions too when an audience looks for some kind of direction. For example, it is generally understood that when a funeral march is played in memoriam there should be no applause. But how when the musical tribute is not a recognized funeral march? The audience were caught in two minds the other evening when the L.S.O. began its programme with an Elegy by W. H. Reed, played in memory of the Orchestra's chairman, who had died during the previous week. The Elegy was announced as an in memoriam piece, and was treated on the programme in such a way as to show it was outside the regular scheme. At its close most of us kept quiet from an instinctive feeling that applause in the circumstance would be as offensive as it would be after a vote of condolence at a meeting. The minority applauded because they had a similarly instinctive feeling that Mr. Reed would think his expressive little piece had failed unless it was succeeded by a loud and noisy noise of smacks and thumps. The result of this division of views was applause so half-hearted that a composer who didn't know the real reason for it would conclude the audience was abusing his music with unusually faint damns. Our annotated programmes give audiences all sorts of unnecessary information concerning the music they are about to hear. (Isn't it high time, by the way, we gave up wasting money on pages of notes about such hackneyed works as the C minor Symphony and Overtures of Beethoven, for example?) A few homely hints on the audience's share in the proceedings would be a useful departure. Here are a few Hints to Hearers for a start:

(1.) As you are not allowed to enter the Hall during the progress of an item, you cannot very well make yourself a nuisance when you arrive. But you can and frequently do when you depart. No one blames you for being unable to wait until the end of the concert. But you put yourself in the wrong if you choose to disturb your neighbours a few minutes after a piece has begun. You should get a move on a bit earlier. It is astounding how inconsiderate people are in this matter. Once upon a time I was at a prize-giving concert at a large girls' school, the function being further graced by the presence of the Lord Mayor of London and Sheriffs. His Lordship, having bestowed the prizes, could not wait for the whole of the subsequent programme. That wouldn't have mattered if he had gone out during one of the longish intervals. But when he did go, he waited until a nervous damsel had taken up her position on the platform to sing. He and his then rose, and made their way with due pomp and circumstance down the hall. No; nobody said or threw anything, but some of us thought a lot, and the young singer had a delightful five minutes on the platform, trying to recollect the tips she had been given as to the overcoming of stage-fright.

(2.) Applause after a piece of music performed in memoriam is a gross blunder. Properly speaking it is almost as bad manners to remain seated. But such cases frequently take five whole minutes to get through, and we can hardly expect you to stand for so long a time, can we? You may be tired from having stood outside a theatre for several hours the day before. Besides, he's dead anyhow, and your standing up won't help him, will it? So remain seated, and above all go on resting when the piece is over. The moment the last chord is sounded see that your arms are hanging loosely, with the hands resting lightly on the lap—your own, as a rule. Remain thus until the next piece has started.

(3.) Get rid of the idea that applause is a reliable gauge of the value of a piece of music or its performance. Very often it is merely a proof that the audience has been diddled. A work dull on the whole but ending brilliantly will always evoke far more approval than it deserves, or even than the applauders honestly feel. Many an orchestral piece has been saved by its lively Coda—an equivalent to a singer's final top note, which, as we know, is able to blot out all the previous faults and leave a balance on the right side. On the other hand, some of the finest things in music end in such a way that if you have really grasped the work the last thing you will want to do will be to make a noise. Our habit of estimating the success of a composition by its crop of applause, recalls, encores, bouquets, and laurel wreaths is hopelessly wrong. It encourages all the vices that are comprehended in the word 'top-note-ism,' and it is largely responsible for the twin curses of the concert-room—showmanship and swank.

(3.) Don't worship the soloist. He or she—especially she—rarely deserves it. When the ninth Symphony is performed don't be led astray by the fact that just before the choral section begins the proceedings are held up and the firmament stands still while the conductor goes off and returns with the soloists, the tenor and bass handing on the soprano and contralto, and the four lapping up the anticipatory applause as they come on. Don't be led astray, I repeat. They really matter less than the chorus, and very much less than the orchestra. The latter body contains many men who are finer all-round musicians than the soloists, though nobody throws them bouquets, and their fee is small. Indeed, as a certain balance-sheet has lately shown us, their pay is sometimes mere honour and glory—a poor aid to the domestic budget in these hard times. If all the applause went to the orchestra it would be better bestowed than it usually is at present. I was thinking about this at Queen's Hall the other night when a certain threadbare Symphony failed to keep me awake. (Never mind the composer's name; at the first whiff of lese majesté I can see Mr. Ashton unsheathing his pen and looking round for a twopenny stamp.) . . . I wanted but five minutes to eight. The conductor sat on the floor of his rostrum, unnoticed save by a few of his personal friends in the stalls. A stir among the audience, and the orchestra streamed in from four entrances, gracefully acknowledging the hearty roar of welcome from the audience. Having settled themselves, the leader, reaching forward with his bow, stirred up the conductor, and the concert began. . . . At the close of a magnificent performance the players had to rise again and again in response to the enthusiasm of the packed hall. After they had, for the seventh time, bowed to S., S.E., S.W., and W., they waved the conductor to his feet, saying, as plainly as action could say, 'Mostly to us be the praise, of course, but not solely. To this good fellow also let at least one laurel leaf be cast. He gave us a splendid push-off, and answered every call we made on him afterwards. Of all the conductors who beat under us he alone seems to be able to suppress his personality entirely. We play upon him as upon a splendid instrument . . .' Then I woke up, just in time to see the scene acted in real life, with the characters changing parts.

(4.) Don't press for encores. Extra items are rarely demanded by the majority of an audience, and it is one of the absurdities of the concert-room that a hundred insistent and noisy people can get their way at the expense of the nine hundred who want to go on with the programme but have no means of saying so short of committing a breach of the peace. Sometimes, however, the hundred are badly dished. When Siloti played the 'Totentanz' a few months ago the audience was enthusiastic about his playing, and many of you kept on expressing your enthusiasm for such a long time that Siloti evidently thought you wanted to hear the work again. You didn't, of course. You wanted just one little solo. However, it is sometimes wholesome for us to get not what we

